Judge Horton has perhaps forgotten his statement that he postponed the trial of the other youths because of alleged radical statements of Samuel S. Leibowitz, defense counsel. It appears now that Judge Horton was actuated to postpone further hearing because his conscience told him that Victoria Price lied and that the entire case was framed from start to finish.

Public Interest Wanes

Another conviction in the grotesque Scottsboro case involving nine negroes and two white women is hardly likely in view of the statements of the judge in granting Heywood Peterson, one of the group of defendants, a new trial, which were:

"History, sacred and profane and the common experience teaches that women of the character shown in this case are prone for selfish reasons to make false accusations both of assault and of insult upon the slightest provocation or even without provocation for ulterior purposes.

"These women (meaning the prosecuting witnesses) are shown by the great weight of evidence on the very day before leaving Chattanooga to have falsely accused two negroes of insulting them . . . The tendency on the part of the women shows they are pre-disposed to make false accusations upon any occasion whereby their selfish ends may be gained.

X

From this distance one may not accurately determine what Alabama's reaction to the court's ruling in granting Patterson a new trial will be but we believe outside interest was dissipated when one of the young women who traveled all the way from New York to deny her original story of the assault on the occasion of a subsequent trial was shown parading with a group of negresses and communists in pictures released to newspapers by their feature services.

Our opinion, however, that Alabama is competent to handle its own affairs and that justice may be had as readily there as elsewhere remains unchanged and we still think the error of the New York lawyer representing the defendants in seeking to influence opinion by statements made for publication in New York a grievous one, unethical and without a scintilla of justification.

Our guess is that the new trial that has been granted the negro, Patterson, will be largely perfunctory and that in all probability the charges will be dismissed or if conviction is obtained the punishment imposed will be light. This would doubtless be in line with public thought since if the women who claimed to have been injured were not concerned with the punishment of the alleged culprits there is no real reason why the public should be aroused.

SCOTTSBORO DEFLATED.

The Scottsboro cases involving the lives of seven Alabama negroes who made the mistake of bumming their way on the same freight train with two white girls, had been laboriously built up into one of those causes celebres that the agitators feed upon.

It was to be the perfect demonstration of Southern injustice, the proof of the failure of the Southern jury system in the face of race prejudice. And like the Sacco-Vannetti case in Massachusetts, it would be grade A propaganda. Resolutions could be passed and there could be May day parades in which "Remember Scottsboro" banners could be flaunted in the face of a capitalistic civilization.

The seven negroes, again like Sacco and Vanzetti, possibly if not probably would have gone to their deaths in the process. The defendants in these propaganda cases have way of getting lost in the shuffle. If the" escape what is there to protest about? When there is obviously no injustice there can be little heat and passion, and there is no cause celebre without heat and passion.

And the Scottsboro cases in their earlier phases served the propagandists' purposes well enough, following the procedure established in such causes celebres. Nine negroes were arrested and eight of them were convicted; seven of them—the supreme court of Alabama freed one—were to die for assaulting the two white girls, whose story an Alabama jury, impanneled immediately, chose to believe, there being no particular reason perhaps then to doubt it.

Before the sentence was carried out however doubts had grown and the cases were appealed. Eventually the controversy reached the supreme court of the United States which reversed the Alabama conviction on the ground that the defendants had not been adequately represented by counsel and had not therefore received the fair trial to which they were entitled. The cases were remanded to Alabama for retrial.

And the second trials, with Haywood Patterson's case as the first to be called, were begun. There had been a lot of loose talk between the two trials, a lot of useless agitation and foolish recriminations. The trial, though a change of venue had been allowed, was conducted in an atmosphere of heat and passion, generated largely by ill-judged interference from the outside.

A second conviction was probably inevitable—Alabama jurors, like New York and Massachusetts jurors, are human and susceptible to influences that ought not perhaps to affect them. There were mistakes made by attorneys for both sides. The prosecution resorted to appeals to prejudice; the defense, having laid the groundwork for an attack before the United States supreme court on the Alabama jury system which permits no negroes to serve as jurors, conducted its case so as to incite prejudices. Patterson was convicted and Samuel S. Leibowitz, the distinguished New York attorney, who had conducted the defense, lost his sense of balance and turned loose from New York a tirade of personal abuse against the jurors who had decided the case against him. Whatever its purpose—and The Record refrains from sitting in judgment on Mr. Leibowitz's purposes and intentions—it made a fair trial for the six other defendants impossible; they had to be tried, if tried at all, by such men as the twelve subjects of Mr. Leibowitz's abuse, men who would resent, as they had a right to resent, the defense attorney's words.

Judge James E. Horton, presiding for the trial, continued the other cases to protect the defendants from the results of their attorney's foolish error and then a few days ago, to the surprise af defense counsel, he handed down an order setting aside the verdict of conviction in Patterson's case and ordering a new trial. The jury's verdict, he held, was against the weight of evidence. The unsupported word of one of the negroes' supposed victims, contradicted by the word of the other, was insufficient testimony upon which to condemn a man to death.

And all persons interested in seeing justice done and especially those concerned about the maintenance of local responsibility and authority in law enforcement will applaud Judge Horton's decision. It is evidence that Alabama courts, in accord with Alabama law, can safeguard themselves against error; it is a demonstration that Alabama can rise not only above prejudice but beyond provocation to see to it that it works no injustice. And it leaves the propagandists frustrate and defeated. Judge Horton has done what seemed impossible; he has deflated the Scottsboro case. The agitators will have to look elsewhere for other victims.

Southern Justice

Southern justice, so much in the limelight of late, makes a notable gain in the new ruling setting aside the conviction and death penalty imposed on Heywood Patterson, one of the nine youthful negro defendants in the Scottsboro case.

By his action Judge Horton revives hope for better handling of cases in southern courts where race is a factor.

In his ruling he says: "The testimony of the prosecution in this case is not only uncorroborated, it also bears on its face indications of improbability, and is contradicted by other evidence."

But in spite of the weakness of the case against them, Patterson and the eight other negroes were railroaded through a Scottsboro court to death sentences two years ago. The Supreme Court of the United States ordered new trials and a change of venue, on the ground of local prejudice.

It was at his new trial, in April, that Patterson was again convicted, after a trial marked by the most disgraceful bigotry on the part of the state's attorney.

Intelligent southerners should thank Judge Horton for his protection of their good name. Discrimination against the negro in their court-rooms should end.

Rebukes Race Prejudice

JUDGE James E. Horton has risen above the race prejudices of the people in some localities in the southern states and in a scathing decision rebuked the idea still prevalent that white supremacy must be maintained through the acceptance at all times of the testimony of a white person as true as against Negro evidence to the contrary.

Judge Horton has set aside the verdict of a jury convicting Heywood Patterson, one of the nine Negroes indicted at Scottsboro on the charge of having committed criminal assaults upon white women.

The decision of Judge Horton is that the testimony in the case did not warrant the conviction of the Negro. He points out that the law is that a defendant should not be convicted of the crime with which Patterson was charged on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecuting witness where there is any indication that such testimony may be of an unreliable character. He unhesitatingly declares the testimony of Victoria Price, the prosecutrix in Patterson's case, on its face bore indications of improbability. He further says that the preponderance of the evidence was greatly in favor of the defendant.

It is to be hoped that the judgment of Judge Horton overturning the verdict in one of the Scottsboro cases will end this cause celebre. Seemingly, a decision of the supreme court of the United States overturning a previous conviction in a Scottsboro case and the present order of Judge Horton should be sufficient to stop further proceedings against the Negroes who have been placed in jeopardy because of unreliable white women's charges.

Race prejudice has gone to an unreasonable extreme in the Scottsboro incident. The people of that vicinity should learn from Judge Horton's opinion that the time has come when even the south must accord Negroes their rights before the law.

A COURAGEOUS SOUTHERN JUDGE

Northern lawyers who returned from Decatur, Ala., after defending the so-called Scottsboro Negroes, had only contempt for the jury which found the defendant guilty, but the highest praise for Judge James E. Horton who presided. In a court room where the hate for the Negroes was only too apparent, Judge Horton ~~had held~~ the scales of justice even.

After having sentenced Howard Patterson, Negro, to death on the verdict finding him guilty of assault upon Mrs. Victoria Price, white hobo, Judge Horton last week set aside the verdict and ordered a new trial, thus taking the case out of the hands of the state supreme court to which it had been appealed.

It is evident that Judge Horton follows his conscience and the law. The testimony of Mrs. Price was wholly unsupported. Not only that but her companion on the freight train where the attack is alleged to have occurred, came into court to denounce the story and declare it a fake. Testimony of physicians had wholly failed to confirm Mrs. Price's narrative. Her own testimony left no doubt as to her loose morals, and Judge Horton drawing upon his own experience and the findings of psychologists declared her to be the sort of person who would make false accusation upon the slightest provocation or without any provocation.

This case has attracted national attention. The Communists bore the burden of the defense, for some reason not wholly clear, since between Virginia Price and the boys who stood accused, there was precious little class difference. As a test of Southern justice, it ranked with the Leo Frank case in Georgia in which an intelligent and inoffensive Jewish youth was persecuted to his death for the suspected murder of a white girl.

Judge Horton has demonstrated that there is in Alabama a court courageous enough to accord justice even to a Negro tramp.

A New Trial For Heywood Patterson

THE ACTION of Judge Horton in setting aside the verdict of death for Heywood Patterson, one of the nine defendants in the Scottsboro case, was wise, proper and entirely justified. The testimony in the case was highly contradictory. It seemed to us that as much of it was as favorable to the defense as to the prosecution. It is impossible to see how the jury was able to reach the conclusion that Patterson was guilty beyond reasonable doubt.

Unfortunately, there seems to be foundation for the belief that the courts, especially in the Deep South, are not always particular to render the same justice to colored defenders that is meted out to whites. Judge Horton's decision should do much to dissipate such opinion.

An Alabama Decision

Those who hold that no state has the right to deprive a citizen of his life for a capital offense until all reasonable doubt of his guilt has been removed will find satisfaction in the ruling of an Alabama trial judge that the Negro youth convicted for the second time for a criminal assault on a white woman is to have a new trial. In making his decision Judge James E. Horton, who presided over the second trial of the Negro, said that the preponderance of the evidence was in the favor of Heywood Patterson, the accused, and that the testimony of the prosecutrix, at best of a doubtful nature, had been contradicted.

The case is familar to the reading public. Two white women, hoboing on a freight train, alleged they were attacked by a group of nine Negroes. Seven of the Negroes were tried, convicted and sentenced to die. The jury disagreed on the evidence offered against the eighth and the ninth was remanded to juvenile court for trial. After the Alabama Supreme Court upheld the conviction, the case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States and a new trial was ordered.

In the second trial of Patterson the prosecutrix repeated the testimony offered in the first trial, but her companion, who first testified that she suffered humiliation at the hands of the Negroes, testified that she had not told the truth in the first instance and that the Negroes were not guilty. Sectional prejudice was aroused because of the statements and the tactics of defending counsel, volunteers to defend the group of eight.

In setting aside the conviction of Patterson on the grounds that his conviction was patently unfair to him, Judge Horton removes any doubt that a colored man in Alabama cannot, if he has a defense, obtain justice. Evidence in this case leaves a strong doubt of the guilt of the nine Negroes and where there is a strong doubt the accused is entitled to such benefits. But if there had been no sentiment against the wholesale execution of the group, they would have been put to death long ago in an Alabama prison. For two years now they have lain in prison. They are ignorant, defenseless against the processes of the courts. Another and a speedy trail should be granted them and some final decision made in the case.

Editorial Viewpoints

Justice.

Judge Horton, of Athens, Ala., has granted a new and third trial to Haywood Patterson, the first of the Scottsboro defendants.

The second trial was obtained through intervention by the United States supreme court, which found the first mob-dominated trial unfair and in violation of the Fourteenth amendment of the constitution preventing states from depriving "any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law."

In the second trial the jury law was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel, and the state attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent impartial consideration of evidence by the jury.

Despite the testimony of two of the three major witnesses that the criminal assault case was a frame-up, and despite repudiation of her testimony by one of the alleged victims, Patterson was sentenced to death on the questionable testimony of a woman witness.

In granting a third trial Judge Horton held that the second conviction was on "insufficient evidence."

The Judge Horton and the supreme court rulings and others of that type go far in restoring confidence in American courts.—New York World-Telegram.

Entry of Defense Lawyer Signal for Mob Rush to Court

By JOHN L. SPIVAK
(Special Correspondent of the Daily Worker)

Daily Worker
11-24-33
N.Y.

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 22.—Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan of Moran County, who has been practicing law for 42 years and never saw a Negro on a southern jury, today ruled that there was no evidence before him that Negroes were discriminated against for jury services.

The ruling came after hearing testimony in support of the motion made by Joseph Brodsky, International Labor Defense Attorney, to quash the Morgan County venire from which the Jury to try Heywood Patterson is to be chosen.

The defense contended that Negroes were deliberately discriminated against and consequently the venire was illegal.

Court reconvened this morning with fewer than a score of blue overalled farmers in the spectator's seats. The courthouse grounds were deserted.

J. A. Tidwell, Morgan County Jury Commissioner, took the stand to answer the one question that Judge Horton had refused to let him answer at the trial this Spring.

Why the name of [illegible] Sykes, (a Decatur Negro) was not on the Morgan County Jury Roll.

"He was badly crippled," the Jury Commissioner said, "in addition we had information reflecting on his character."

Joseph R. Brodsky, International Labor Defense attorney, asked just what is was about Sykes' character that made him unfit for jury duty, but Judge Callahan refused to permit the defense attorney to probe into that.

Excepts from Ruling

Brodsky took an exception to the judge's ruling. According to Judge Callahan's view, as expressed in his subsequent labored decision on the motion to quash the venire on grounds that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury rolls in Morgan County, when an official stated that he has considered a Negro and for various reasons found him unfit for jury duty, that is sufficient so far as Alabama is concerned.

That Judge Callahan was fully aware that his decision on the motion to quash the venire was watched by the whole county, was evident from his carefully chosen, though forced words. Callahan began delivery of his decision slowly, watching his words carefully, fully aware that it was a record that would go to the U. S. Supreme Court, and that his words would be carefully weighed.

The judge decided that the defense had proven to his satisfaction by the evidence presented, that Negroes had been excluded from the Morgan County Jury Roll, and the fact that Negroes had not been seen to sit on juries, received weighty consideration from him.

"If that were all," he said, "he would deem it sufficient proof that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury service."

However, he continued, it was his opinion that the State had overcome the defense testimony by proving that responsible officials had taken into consideration qualified Negro citizens when they made their selections for the Jury Rolls.

Tries to Justify Decision

"The United States Supreme Court has said in one decision," he continued, "that if officers fairly and honestly endeavored to discharge their duty, then the Constitution of the United States has not been violated.

"In view of the evidence before me I am not prepared to say that the officers of Morgan County, in selecting the jury list, have so administered the law as to violate the Constitution of the United States. Therefore I over-rule the action to quash the venire."

This means that whenever a jury commissioner says that he considered a Negro for jury duty, but found something about his character that made him unfit, that Negro was eliminated and the jury commissioner did not have to explain what it was about the Negro's character that was discreditable.

In other words, a jury commissioner's statement that he considered a Negro and discovered a reason why he was unfit, is sufficient evidence that the law is "fairly" enforced.

Immediately after he had overruled the defense motion to quash the venire, Judge Callahan took up the motion to quash the Jackson County indictments against the Scottsboro boys on the grounds that the Jackson County Grand Jury was composed wholly of whites and that Negroes were systematically excluded from Grand Jury service.

"Well, where are the new witnesses supoenaed by the defense?" The Court asked irritably. "No one of the witnesses, which includes Judge Hawkins, who presided over the original Scottsboro trials was in court. "If they are not here on the next train, I'll issue attachments," Judge Callahan told the clerk irritably. Attachments are usually followed by citations for contempt of Court and jail.

Leibowitz Enters

While the Court was irritably demanding the whereabouts of the subpoenaed witnesses, Samuel Leibowitz, defense counsel, quietly walked into the courtroom, flanked as before by the two men who seem to be his bodyguards, and two deputy sheriffs, who had been instructed to "stay with him everywhere in Morgan County." He had just arrived from New Orleans, where he had been for the past two days.

The moment Leibowitz entered the courtroom the whole atmosphere changed. The score of yawning spectators in the almost empty room, sat up. Word spread through the town that Leibowitz was in court again, and singly and in pairs residents began to dribble in. In twenty minutes the courtroom was half filled, with the deputy on duty at the door "frisking" those who entered more thoroughly than yesterday.

Both Leibowitz and Judge Callahan seemed to be "on edge."

This became evident when, with the calling of the first witnesses on the defense motion to quash the indictment, Jackson County Jury Commissioner J. E. Moody, the judge kept turning from defense to prosecution or standing up with his hands deep in his pockets. The jury commissioner was being asked questions about how he chose his jurors. It was the old questions, by which the defense was seeking to prove that Negroes were being systematically discriminated against and in Morgan County, as throughout the South, it was a subject filled with dynamite. It was when Leibowitz quizzed witnesses at the Patterson trial on this question, that most of the hate that seethed through Morgan County was aroused.

Demands Answer

Leibowitz persisted in pressing for an answer whether the Jackson County jurors kept minutes of their official acts. Moody repeated twice that he "could not remember."

"Who gave you authority to select the names?" Leibowitz asked.

Attorney General Knight interrupted with an appeal to the court to prevent the witness from answering.

"The question, as put, is unsound and illegal," the judge ruled. Then it became evident that Leibowitz, too was on edge. "Did you say "illiterate?" he demanded.

"No, illegal," said the Court.

Court Shields Official

"Did you receive certain instructions about how to select the jurors when you were appointed?" Leibowitz asked. "Yes."

"From whom?" A long silence followed, then, "I don't remember. We got a pamphlet that tells all about it."

"Is there anything in the act that gave you authority to select the jurors?" The judge interrupted. "You needn't answer that. The law speaks for itself."

Moody finally said that he was not familiar with the manner in which jurors were chosen before his appointment as jury commissioner.

During Leibowitz' persistent questioning Moody admitted that he had never brought any person before him to inquire into their qualifications as jurors.

"Do you know whether any of the persons on that jury roll are not white?" Leibowitz flung at him. "No." "Then will you please go through that jury roll and pick out the names of those persons whom you know and tell us whether they are white or black."

Moody thereupon commenced going through the big "Domesday Book" and reading off the names of those he knew. All were white.

Gilley Brought to Decatur

Orville Gilley, a white boy, who was supposed to have been present on the train at the time of the alleged rape of Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, was brought into Decatur this afternoon, by an investigator from the Attorney General's office. Gilley, according to Knight, will testify in the trial of Heywood Patterson, scheduled to start Monday.

According to statements made at the preceding trial this Spring, Gilley was in the hands of the prosecution both at the first trial in Scottsboro, and at the second trial this Spring, but was not used because the State feared his testimony might not be helpful to their case.

Reports Of Four I. L. D. Investigators Claim Fair Trial There Is Impossible

Negroes Arraigned

Judge To Hear Evidence Thursday On Motion To Kill Attack Indictment

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. [illegible]—(AP)—The reports of four investigators employed by the defense [illegible] were in the record of the "Scottsboro case" to bolster defense contentions that the seven negro defendants couldn't obtain a fair trial in Morgan County.

Also in the record were two score rebuttal affidavits from residents of the county who contended that the people of this district had only one interest—a "fair and impartial trial."

The seven negroes were arraigned today on charges of having attacked Mrs. Victoria Price on a Southern Railway freight train between Chattanooga and Huntsville, Ala., in March, 1931. They also are under indictment for alleged attacks on Ruby Bates at the same time and place, but the Bates indictments were not included at today's hearing.

More Affidavits Today

Through the long afternoon session, the affidavits were placed in the record, first a voluminous file of statements obtained by the investigators, and then the State's file. More will be submitted tomorrow.

Only two witnesses were called during the day on the three motions. The first was a move to quash the indictment, the next a motion for an interrogatory for the testimony of Ruby Bates, now in New York, and the third the motion for a change of venue.

For more than two hours the defense petition for the change of venue and the supporting affidavits were read into the record, first by Joseph R. Brodsky, one of the defense attorneys, and then by Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding.

With their completion, Atty. Gen Thomas E. Knight, Jr., asked that Mr Brodsky take the stand, and questioned him concerning the affidavits of the defense investigators. Brodsky said he had employed David Schriftman, New York attorney, to arrange for the investigators.

"I told him," Brodsky testified, "to get the investigators and have them submit their findings after a thorough investigation, either for or against, that we wanted the whole truth."

On cross examination, Brodsky replied to his own question that his testimony was all that he knew about the matter, in the affirmative.

Attorney Testifies

With the spectators still apparently taking little interest in the proceedings, Schriftman was called to the stand and, under Knight's questioning, identified the investigators as Jim Jones, a negro; Victor Elwood, and Charles Williams, all of Birmingham.

Schriftman, who said he lived in New York, testified that he had spent four or five hours in crossing Morgan County, asking people about their opinion in the Scottsboro case. He recalled the name of only one person he questioned, a Mr. Lee, merchant of the Danville community.

The affidavits gathered by the investigators, about 500 in all, quoted some of the persons interviewed by name, some only by occupation, and some by street addresses.

In one of the defense affidavits, the name of a Mrs. Callahan, was given as that of a woman who said she did not believe the negroes could obtain a fair trial in this county. Questions by Judge Callahan brought out that the woman resided at another address than where she lived.

Venireman Excused

The defense affidavits included the name of Floyd Roberts, a venireman, and Judge Callahan said that Roberts would be excused from the case. The State and defense tomorrow will submit additional affidavits and probably oral testimony on the question.

Today's hearings were held in a courtroom moderately filled and Decatur apparently was going about its usual business unruffled.

The petition for change of venue, a bulky document containing many affidavits, was offered this afternoon. It was the second motion made today after the defendants had been arraigned that would, if granted, result in postponement of the first of the retrials that of Heywood Patterson, which was set for Monday, Nov 27.

In the forenoon, before arraignment Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defens counsel, moved to quash the indictmen on the grounds that absence of negroe in the Grand Jury reporting the tru bills constituted a violation of the Constitutional rights of the defendants.

Judge Callahan this afternoon fixe Thursday to hear evidence in addition t that offered on a similar motion i March when the cases were first calle here under a change of venue from Jackson County. Atty. Gen. Knight and Leibowitz agreed to admission of the evidence offered on that motion, which Judge James E. Horton overruled, with the privilege of submitting additional testimony.

Leibowitz Guarded

Although the spectators were orderly and there appeared a lack of interest in the proceedings, Judge Callahan and other authorities took no chances on any untoward happening.

A guard was assigned to Leibowitz day and night, inside the court and out, by Judge Callahan, and every spectator entering was searched for weapons.

One would-be spectator was found armed with a .22 calibre target pistol which he said he had brought to town to have the sight repaired. Sheriff Bud Davis declined to divulge his name.

Brodsky objected to the petition and the accompanying affidavits being read in court and, when Judge Callahan overruled him, asked "will the court instruct the stenographer to note in the record that the courtroom was crowded when the affidavits were read?"

Judge Callahan declined the request and added, "this is a public trial." Brodsky entered an exception and began reading the bulky document.

His voice was barely audible and at times words could not be distinguished on the first row of seats where spectators leaned forward eagerly to catch occasional words.

Refers to Former Trial

The petition cited incidents in the Patterson trial here last April, which, it was contended, created prejudice that would prevent a fair trial here. The allegations mostly were based on "racial prejudice" and called attention to the remarks of Solicitor Wade Wright, in his argument for the State in the Patterson trial, regarding "Jew money from New York, buying Alabama justice."

Only occasional words of affidavits could be heard on the press bench and Judge Callahan frequently asked Brodsky to raise his voice.

Reading the petition and accompanying affidavits consumed two hours of the afternoon session.

The return of Ruby Bates, one of the Advising that local authorities had informed him there was no necessity for a military guard at arraignment yesterday at Decatur of the seven negro defendants in the so-called "Scottsboro" cases, Gov. Miller yesterday wired George George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, Tenn., general counsel for the negroes, that if the necessity should arise he would provide them. The telegram was in response to a telegram from Mr. Chamlee asking for troops.

Text of the Chief Executive's telegram in which he made it known he had authorized the trial judge to employ any additional deputies that might be needed at the State's expense, follows:

"Your wire. Have kept in close touch with trial judge at Decatur and with State and county officials there. They advise there is no indication of mob violence. Have authorized trial judge to appoint necessary additional deputies at expense of the State. Investigation has been made in all portions of Morgan County and local officials base their judgment on this investigation and state that in their opinion no military guard is necessary.

"I am keeping in close touch with officials of Morgan County in charge of these cases and should they advise any change in sentiment or any necessity for military guard I will provide such immediately. I have confidence in the judgment of civil authorities in charge of these cases and I have an abiding alleged victims of the attack, to Decatur to testify in these trials today apparently was definitely off, since Leibowitz entered a motion for interrogatories, and was informed by the court that it was within his power to have a commission take her depositions.

Transfer of the negroes, Patterson, Willie Roberson, Olen Montgomery, Charlie Weems, Andy Wright, Clarence Norris, and Ozie Powell, before dawn this morning was without incident.

Moved By Automobile

A cavalcade of seven motorcars sped over the highway from Birmingham in slightly more than two hours and arrived before the little city was awake. Only two newspapermen were present when the cars loaded with heavily armed deputies, and Sheriff J. F. Hawkins of Jefferson County, and Sheriff Davis arrived.

Judge Callahan, too, took precautions to preserve order and to protect the prisoners by swearing in a score of special deputies sheriff, 15 of them from Jefferson County, and instructing them to protect the principals and their attorneys on the streets as well as in the courthouse.

"You are men chosen for experience, courage and faithfulness to duty," he said, and added he would be extremely severe on any person attempting to molest any one connected with the trial.

The venire of 100 from which a jury to try Patterson will be selected, was drawn in the forenoon. At Leibowitz's motion for severance in each case, after a plea of not guilty had been entered, Atty. Gen. Knight elected to try Patterson, twice under entence of death, first.

The defense affidavits largely were the same, with persons quoted for whom no initials were given. Most of them said that a fair trial could not be obtained and that the defendants should be lynched.

Birmingham Negro Involved

In the affidavits obtained by investigator Jim Jones, names and addresses of a number of persons living in Decatur were given. Jones was identified as a Birmingham negro, and the identity of the persons quoted were not established in court.

Shriftman's affidavit did not quote names, but he mentioned persons in several towns and communities in the State, informing him that a fair trial could not be obtained in Morgan County.

In one of the affidavits, the investigator said "more than 50 young men of Hartselle" had informed him that they would "like to see the niggers lynched" and would be glad to join them. No names were mentioned.

Predict Riots When Scottsboro Youths Get Retrial; Say Knight Allies Himself With K. K. K.

Age 11-18-33
New York Age

A motion for change of venue to some other Alabama county for the nine defendants in the Scottsboro case which is scheduled for retrial in Decatur, Ala., on Monday, November 20, will be made by Attorney Samuel S. Liebowitz, chief of Counsel for the defense. Attorney Leibowitz, it is said, will submit to Circuit Court Judge Callahan, affidavits that mob violence against the nine accused Negro youths and their counsel are apt to result if the case is retried in Decatur.

Three private detectives and a lawyer posing as brush and soap salesmen went to Decatur and surrounding territory and interviewed more than 500 resdients of Decatur and Morgan Counties to ascertain prevailing sentiment. The investigators reported that violence against "those interfering New York lawyers" as well as the Negroes and representatives of the International Labor Defense, was certain to accompany the retrial of the case at Decatur.

The investigators reported the existence of bitter and intense resentment against Mr. Leibowitz, chief of the defense counsel, who took the case at the request of the I. L. D. Leibowitz, it was said here, will use the affidavits prepared by the investigators in support of his motion for a change of venue to some other Alabama county.

To Submit Affidavits

The affidavits prepared by Victor Elwood, John Williams and Jim Jones, private detectives and David Schriftman, lawyer, all of New York, will be presented by Mr. Leibowitz to Circuit Court Judge W. W. Callahan in Decatur on November 20, when seven of the youths plead to a charge of attacking two white girls, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, on a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., on March 25, 1931.

Heywood Patterson, another of the youths, will be retried on November 27. His conviction last spring, when Leibowitz entered the case to defend him, was reversed by Circuit Court Judge James E. Horton. The United States Supreme Court reversed the original conviction of all nine in Scottsboro, Jackson County. Leibowitz obtained a change of venue to adjacent Morgan County for the second trial on his plea that feeling ran high against the youths, preventing the selection of an impartial jury.

Mr. Leibowitz, it is understood, will challenge the Alabama law providing for only one change of venue as contrary to provisions for fair trial given in the United States Constitution.

K. K. K. In Tuscoloosa

While this statement on the Scottsboro case was being released, the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners reported that the Ku Klux Klan massed and in full regalia, and a full one hundred strong, rode the streets of Tuscaloosa, Ala., as the group sent by the Committee to investigate recent lynchings approached the city.

Age 11-18-33

Simultaneously Attorney General Knight, Scottsboro prosecutor, issued a statement which may mean that person who give information to the investigators of the lynch situation will face prosecution. This assertion came when the National Committee requested that Grand Jury records be opened to them for examination. In his reply, Knight said:

New York Age

"I refuse that request. Moreover, if any person permits you to see those records, or gives any information concerning the records, it will be my duty to prosecute him."

In reply to this statement, the National Committee issued a statement which said in part:

"This is a plain attempt to intimidate anyone from giving information to the committee on the outrages and terror against the Negro people which are sweeping the South and which had a climax in the shocking Pippen and Harden murders .... Consciously or unconsciously, the Attorney General of the State of Alabama is allying himself with the Klu Kluxers of Tuscaloosa, with the lynchers who are hampered in their ghastly work by such publicity as it is our purpose to throw upon them."

Troop Threat To Scottsboro Boys Bared

By TOM CASSIDY.

THREATS by Alabama National Guard officers and privates to deliver the nine Scottsboro case colored youths to a lynch mob were bared in a series of affidavits made by private detectives here yesterday.

The testimony, identifying the makers of the threats, and naming some of the mob planning the hangings, will be used by Defense Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz in an effort to have a retrial of the cases shifted from Decatur, Ala.

Samuel S. Leibowitz

Leibowitz, who will journey south with legal associates for the arraignment of the youths at Decatur on Nov. 20, will argue that his clients, charged at two previous trials with attacking two white girl hobos on a freight car in 1929, will be unable to get a fair trial or protection for their lives at Decatur.

Affidavit Shown.

Victor Ellwood, a detective, in one affidavit swears that "——— ———, in the National Guard and on duty as such at the last trial of Haywood Patterson, at Decatur, said that 'If they bring them damn Scottsboro niggers up here again, why, the mob can have them.'"

Ellwood added that the same Guardsman told him that he would not try to stop the mob and that other Guardsmen felt the same way, but that they planned to "put up a bluff to fool everybody."

Another Guardsman named stated that he and his fellows "would have to put up a sham," but that he favored what would-be members of the mob termed "the big necktie party" in their talks with investigators.

Feeling Is Bitter.

Feeling, which ran high in the Decatur sector since Haywood Patterson, one of the nine accused youths, was convicted and sentenced to the electric chair a second time on last Palm Sunday morning, became intensified by the recent reversal of the verdict and the granting of a new trial by the Decatur jurist, James E. Horton.

"The recent lynching of a Negro by the name of Royal on Aug. 25, 1933, in Decatur, and the twice threatened lynching of Thomas Brown, a Negro charged with attacking a white woman, has thrown the entire Morgan County, where Decatur is located, into an uproar," another affidavit states, "and the cry for blood against Negroes charged with any crimes involving white persons has overreached all bounds."

Another investigator, under oath, lists the names of thirty-two of the mob which attempted to kill Brown as given to him by one of the mob, who said that he and others in the group were willing to serve in a similar capacity in the Scottsboro cases next week.

Hostile Blasts.

Here are some quotes from citizens and troopers of Morgan County as specified by the detectives:

"If that New York lawyer, Leibowitz, ever puts his foot in this place again there will be a lynching."

"Ruby Bates (who recanted her testimony of attack at the second trial) ought to be swung up herself, just like those niggers."

"They ought to get next to the Guardsmen and get them niggers like they did in Tuscaloosa."

"They ought to burn Ruby Bates and them niggers all together. I'm a good shot with a pistol and I would like to kill all of them."

"We guardsmen would have to give them up and would be damned glad to do it. I'd like to see them taken out and killed."

Lawyers Threatened.

"The Jew lawyers from New York were the cause of the niggers not getting what they deserved, the chair, and these lawyers ought to be killed for saying that a nigger is as good as a white man."

Leibowitz, seen at his office at 225 Broadway, said he and Joseph Brodsky, associate counsel of the International Labor Defense, planned to seek the removal of the trial to Mobile, Ala., although more than one change of venue is not allowed under Alabama law.

"I will carry to the United States Supreme Court if necessary," he said "my contention that this law in the present case violates the due process provision of the Federal Constitution, which holds that no man's right to life or property may be taken away without due process of law."

THE DECATUR ARRAIGNMENT AND THE RESPONSIBILITY OF ALABAMIANS

Defendants in the celebrated Alabama drama known popularly as the "Scottsboro" case, will be arraigned in the circuit court at Decatur Monday. Trials will begin a week later.

Advertiser

The Advertiser trusts and believes that the arraignment and the subsequent trials will not be accompanied by any untoward incident.

11-19-33

The Advertiser is frank to say that in its opinion if counsel for the defence will but deport themselves with dignity and good taste, this will be just another court trial, and not a great circus.

Montgomery, Ala.

Alabama is sick of circuses staged by agitators professing an interest in "political" prisoners—as if mass rape were a "political" crime.

The Advertiser is hopeful that counsel for the defense have learned their lesson and will deport themselves Monday and subsequently in a manner not calculated to arouse unnecessary antagonisms.

Having said as much The Advertiser begs leave to direct a sober word to Alabamians.

The Advertiser is assured that ample provision has been made for the physical protection of the defendants and their counsel.

It believes that Judge Callahan, who is to preside, is correct in his opinion that military protection is not required.

It is devoutly to be hoped that it will not be necessary to place a uniformed soldier on duty in Decatur; if Judge Callahan believed that such precaution were necessary, naturally he would so advise the Governor of Alabama, for his own reputation is at stake.

The prisoners are entitled to and will undoubtedly receive physical protection in their transit from Birmingham to Decatur.

Naturally Judge Callahan will see that no harm befalls counsel for the defense.

It is the desire of all responsible Alabamians, and we believe that it is the desire particularly of citizens of Morgan county, that these men shall be tried in a fair and orderly manner, and that their counsel shall receive consideration and courtesy.

The reputation of Alabama is at stake, and the responsibility of all concerned, especially oathbound officials, is large and inescapable.

Let all concerned on both sides deport themselves with restraint and dignity. Let them be just and fair, and above all decent at every turn.

Let all Alabamians especially be upon their good behavior!

Their reputation before the world is at stake.

That being true, The Advertiser trusts them.

HEYWOOD PATTERSON GOES ON TRIAL FOR THIRD TIME IN DECATUR, ALA., TODAY

Expert's Testimony on Forged Jury Roll Ruled Out by Judge

Prosecution Plans to Railroad Negro in Three Days

By JOHN L. SPIVAK

(Special Correspondent of the Daily Worker.)

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 26. — With an allowance of only three days for the trial in which Alabama seeks his life, Heywood Patterson goes on trial tomorrow in the Morgan County Courthouse for the third time on the charge of attacking two white girls in a freight car.

Three days—Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday—that is all the time the State of Alabama and Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan, who is presidng will give to a Negro when his life is at stake.

And while the jury is "deliberating," Judge Callahan will rush Clarence Norris, another of the Scottsboro Boys, to trial on Thursday morning.

"Too Much Publicity"

Alabama does not want to spend any more time on the Scottsboro cases. They have attracted too much attention already. "It has been over-publicized" in the opinion of Judge Callahan, so the jurist intends to "debunk" the internationally famous Scottsboro cases.

Judge Callahan is determined to rush these cases through even if he has to continue with the late night sessions which marked the past two days of court. It is reported that if he tries to force the International Labor Defense attorneys into night sessions, they will refuse to attend on the grounds that their health is being impaired and that they will not be rushed in a matter where a man's life is at stake.

Frame-up Carefully Planned

Callahan's plan to "debunk" the Scottsboro cases, from a publicty point of view, is well planned. The Clarence Norris case, scheduled to start immediately after the Patterson case, will be a repetition of the evidence taken in the Patterson case. Newspapers throughout the country will give much less space.

Immediately after the verdict is brought in the Norris case, probably by next Sunday, Judge Callahan will adjourn court for one week. During that time the news interest in the case will have died down, and when more Scottsboro Boys are put on trial for their lives the repetition of evidence will probably receive even less space than the Norris trial.

Newspapermen May Leave

It is doubtful whether the New York newspapermen who are here will remain over the week' adjournment.

It is also doubtful whether the I. L. D. chief defense counsel, Samuel Leibowitz will even make a summation to jury. Summations are not recorded in the record that goes to higher courts and in view of the sentiment in Morgan County against "Jew lawyers from New York" and the Scottsboro boys, a verdict of guilty is almost a foregone conclusion. To make a summation would only be a waste of time and energy.

Decatur is still chuckling over the way Judge Callahan overruled the defense's motion to quash the Jackson County indictments against the Scottsboro boys on the grounds that systematically excluded from jury service.

Names on Jury Forged

The defense proved conclusively by the testimony of John V. Haring, a nationally known handwriting expert, that the Jackson County jury rolls had been tampered with. The names of Negroes used by the defense at the trial this spring had been forged on the jury roll.

The handwriting, according to the expert, was that of Kelly Morgan, a Jackson County jury commissioner. The names had been forged on the roll after the roll had been completed. The superimposing of names over red lines which had been drawn across the pages of the jury roll, was clear even to spectators who peered through Haring's magnifying glass.

In one case a letter of one of the forged names was superimposed over the writing of another name written before the Negro's name had been forged. Nevertheless Judge Callahan held that the defense had not proved that there was any fraud connected with the jury roll.

Judge Silent on Important Point

In utering his decision overruling the defense's motion to quash the indictments, the jurist chose his words with care. When he concluded he had left out the most important part of the testimony presented by the defense; that of the sworn testimony of Kelly Morgan, who said that there were no red lines drawn through the jury roll book when he wrote in the names of the jurors. Since the Negroes' names were written over the red lines, it was clear that these names had been added since the roll was completed. This Judge Callahan did not touch upon. When Leibowitz tried to call his attention to it, Judge Callahan said irritably: "My mind is made up. I will not listen to arguments."

THE DECATUR VERDICT

Efforts of attorneys for the defense in the "Scottsboro case" to seize every opportunity to arouse sectional and racial prejudice are strongly condemned by the press. On this subject The Montgomery Advertiser says:

Once more an Alabama jury, hearing all the testimony has said that Heywood Patterson is guilty of a capital offense against the laws of Alabama and once more he has been sentenced to the electric chair.

The state of Alabama gave this man a fair trial. When the defense asked for a change of venue from Jackson county, the request was granted. When Morgan county was selected the defense squawked. Having lost a case before a Morgan county jury the defense will ask for a change of venue for the remaining defendants.

The state provided the utmost protection to the person of Heywood Patterson.

The trial judge, (an Alabamian!) presided with such impressive fairness that even the chief of the defense counsel while denouncing the jury in scandalous terms, pays Judge Horton the tribute of saying that he would have been "delighted" to leave the case in the Judge's hands!

That is to say, he would have been willing for this lone Alabama judge to decide whether his client should live or die.

Twelve jurors, friends and neighbors of Judge Horton, sat in judgment on the facts in this case. They heard the whole sordid story, including the highly suspicious testimony of La Bates whose staged appearance at the eleventh hour with her avowal of perjured testimony in the previous trial, proved a dud.

These twelve jurors did not go out, smoke a round of cigarettes and return with a hasty verdict. They deliberated for 21 hours. In the end they agreed that Victoria Price had told the truth and that Ruby Bates had not.

Mr. Samuel Leibowitz wanted to be the hero of this unpleasant drama and emerge from it with an enhanced professional reputation. He says that he acted without remuneration, even without expense money. No doubt he did, but if Leibowitz had succeeded in his natural ambition to set his man free, he would have had ample compensation in his enlarged fame. He is perhaps less of an altruist than he represents himself.

But he lost, in spite of his device of using the Lord's prayer as a peroration.

He lost because the jury believed the facts did not support his fervid oratory.

Did Leibowitz accept the verdict with becoming grace, after the manner of lawyers everywhere? Not at all. His answer was a brutal attack upon the jury. Said he:

The chief of all the bigots at Decatur was Mr. Leibowitz himself.

He left little if anything undone to arouse the resentment if not the bitterness of everyone in the courtroom including members of the jury.

He was not content to try his client on the facts, as other clients in Alabama are tried.

His purpose was to put the state itself on trial.

From the beginning of the trial he was arrogant, contemptuous and domineering.

Anyone of 100 Alabama lawyers would have handled Heywood Patterson's case far more effectively.

Mr. Leibowitz came into Alabama as the voice of bigotry and arrogance. Instead of seeking to make the way easy for his client he exercised his talents to make the way as difficult as possible.

What a stupid lawyer poor Patterson had!

Solicitor Wade Wright, of Morgan was unfortunate in his reference to "Jew money" in the case. This was an appeal to prejudice and Judge Horton asked the jury to disregard it, as he should have done.

But even Mr. Leibowitz refrains from accusing the attorney-general of Alabama to whom he lost after a long and bitter struggle, of any improper remarks.

Mr. Knight was chief counsel for the prosecution, for whom it should be said by the way, that he managed the case with fine ability and a coolness which must have been difficult to maintain at times.

Mr. Leibowitz bestows high praise upon the presiding judge, he is silent on the conduct of his opponents, Mr. Knight.

But he denounces the jury in savage terms.

Mr. Leibowitz is a poor sportsman.

A good lawyer should know when he has a bad case, and hope for better luck next time.

SCOTTSBORO AGAIN

For months the state's chief witnesses, on whose testimony the Scottsboro boys were twice convicted, have been telling that the accused are victims of a frame-up. The prosecution has little evidence left, not enough to convict any other defendants than these. For that reason the new Scottsboro trial will decide not the guilt or innocence of the Negro boys accused of rape, but whether or not Alabama can do as it pleases with Negroes.

That a great state would try to kill seven humble boys seems incredible, but Alabama is capable of doing just that. The proof is that for sixty years it has done its best to crucify the souls of its black citizens. It has kept them in ignorance and poverty. It has denied them even hope. To take their lives calls for nothing new either in its attitude or resolve.

The Scottsboro case once was described in the daily press as the trial of Negroes for rape. It now is treated in its true light, a case wherein law and custom, rather than persons, are on trial.

The American people, our white neighbors, have a stake in this Scottsboro trial now in progress greater than Negroes have, even those whose lives hang in the balance. Shall law and customs evolved after hundreds of years of sweat and sacrifice, be simply a means of doing what a caveman accomplished with a rock? Shall justice be forgotten and only passion be heeded? Can a sovereign state wallow in blood because its dominant group is prejudiced against a minority, and still be a respected unit in the United States? Can a trial in Alabama have an entirely different verdict from what the same facts would produce in New York?

Scottsboro is a symbol. The interpretation of old laws is far more humanitarian today than ever in this country's history, and new laws are adding to the progress made. The Scottsboro trial is yesterday making a stand on an old battle ground. Machines are improved, laws are amended, business evolves new methods. But southern prejudice remains unaltered. It will continue as long as that section feels the need of an excuse for its conscienceless inhumanity to Negroes.

Roosevelt Asked to Intervene To Protect Scottsboro Negroes

Warning of 'Massacre' of Seven Prisoners and Their Lawyers at Decatur (Ala.) Court Today, Defense Counsel Wire President a Plea to Obtain State Troops.

11-20-33
N.Y.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 19.—President Roosevelt was urged today to intervene and avert the danger of mob violence tomorrow when seven of the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case are to be arraigned here in the Morgan County Court House.

Attorneys for the accused men, who have been in prison for nearly three years, telegraphey the President at Warm Springs, Ga., urging him to use his good offices with Governor Miller of Alabama to insure military protection for themselves and their clients.

Times

N.Y.

In the message sent from Birmingham and signed by Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel; G. W. Chamlee and Joseph Brodsky, his associates, Mr. Roosevelt was informed that "the probability of a massacre of the defendants and their attorneys is extremely grave."

The tentative decision of Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan, who is to preside at the third trial of Heywood Patterson, opening a week from tomorrow, to dispense with the militia, occasioned the despatch of the telegram after a direct appeal to Governor Miller, who is ill, failed to bring the desired result.

The telegram to the President, as made public by Mr. Leibowitz in Birmingham, where he is staying pending the opening of court tomorrow, was as follows:

"We earnestly ask your good offices to persuade Governor Miller of Alabama to order out sufficient National Guardsmen to provide adequate protection for the nine Scottsboro boys and their attorneys who are to appear at Decatur tomorrow for arraignment of the defendants and for trial Nov. 27.

"At the previous trial this Spring, Circuit Judge Horton, presiding, took judicial notice of incipient mob action to Lynch defendants and attorneys by ordering soldiers in open court to shoot if necessary to preserve the peace. Shortly after the trial, Judge Horton, who has since been supplanted, adjourned court on his own motion because of temper of citizens.

"Since last trial, two Negroes in custody of Sheriff were recently lynched in Tuscaloosa cases, a Negro named Royal was lynched in very city of Decatur in August and a mob visited the Decatur jail to lynch a Negro prisoner named Brown. Only removal to Huntsville jail before mob arrived prevented his assassination.

"Situation now infinitely more tense. Have affidavits naming many persons in Decatur and neighboring towns who have openly voiced intention of 'getting' the niggers and their attorneys.

Times
11-20-33
New York

"Editorials today in Birmingham Age Herald and Post show their appreciation of imminence of danger and urge officials to call out millitia. Despite this situation, the Governor has rejected plea for State troops to guard prisoners and attorneys. The robability of massacre of defendants and attorneys is extremely grave. We urge your intervention."

Prepare to Transfer Negroes.

Despite the concern of the defense attorneys, there were no indications here today that Judgge Callahan contemplated the summoning of troops, and officials and townsfolk insisted that there was no need for his doing so.

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who is to prosecute the Negrgoes on charges of attacking two white girls in a freight car in March, 1931, indicated that he regarded the presence of millitiamen at the last trial as a needless expense.

Sheriff Bud Davis left here with one deputy this afternoon with an order on the Sheriff of Jefferson County for a transfer of the prisoners from Birmingham, where they have been held for safe-keeping since last Spring.

Birmingham police and deputy sheriffs of Jefferson County will help gguard the prisoners on the ninety-six mile automobile trip from Birmingham to Decatur. The time of their rarrival is being kept secret, but the arraignment si set for 9 A. M.

Mr. Chamlee, the only Southern lawyer associated with the defense, which is financed by the International Labor Defense, visited the prisoners in the jail this afternoon and said he found them in a state of panic.

Fearing that they would be lynched en route to Decatur, they said at first that they would resist any attempt to remove them from the Birmingham jail and it took a great deal of persuasion by Mr. Chamlee to induce them to sign the motion papers for a change of venue. Finally they agreed.

Girl's Deposition Sought.

In addition to the motion for a change of venue Mr. Leibowitz said he itnended to move to quash the indictments against the defendants and to petition the court for permission to take a deposition from Ruby Bates outside the State of Alabama.

The Bates girl, who charged at the first trial in Scottsboro that the Negroes had attacked her and Victoria Price, recanted publicly at Patterson's second trial here last Spring. Recently she reaffirmed her exoneration of the prisoners, but said that she did not dare return to Decatur to repeat her testimony in court.

Times
11-20-33
New York

The motion for a change of venue will be supported by affidavits alleging violent prejudice in Morgan County against the defendants and their lawyers. Although the Alabama law limits defendants in criminal trials to one change of venue, which in this case already has been granted, Mr. Leibowitz will undertake to prove that the statute is unconstitutional.

The battle to quash the indictments was fought and lost by Mr. Leibowitz before Judge James E. Horton last Spring. The motion was predicated upon the theory that exclusion of Negroes from grand jury service violated the Fourteenth Amendment and invalidated the indictments.

A similar motion to quash the venire from which the all-white jury was drawn to try Patterson likewise was lost after Mr. Leibowitz spent several days attempting to show that there were Negroes in Morgan County qualified to serve as jurors except for their color.

Judge Horton, however, reversed the verdict of the jury which found Patterson guilty and set aside the death sentence which he was compelled by law to pronounce upon the Negro defendant. In an opinion accompanying his decision Judge Horton said the verdict was against the weight of evidence and expressed the opinion that the testimony of Mrs. Price was unreliable.

Plot Rushing Trial of Scottsboro Boys Before K.K.K. Judge

NEW YORK.—Every effort is being made by Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., of Alabama, to bring the Scottsboro boys to a quick lynch-trial before Judga W. W. Callahan, notorious Ku Klux Klanner, in Decatur, Ala., it was learned today by the International Labor Defense, William L. Patterson, national secretary, announced.

Judge Horton, Patterson pointed out, is aiding in this effort by refusing to set a date for hearing on writs of habeas corpus filed by the I. L. D. lawyers demanding that he set bail for the Scottsboro boys, as he is legally obliged to do by his own ruling in the decision granting Heywood Patterson a new trial.

Besides going up to Decatur to confer with Judge Horton and Judge Callahan, Knight has written a formal letter to the Ku Klux Klan judge asking that he take over the cases, the I. L. D. learned.

An attempt is being made to force the boys to face a lynch-court again in the beginning of December, in the town of Decatur, which is being prepared for the new "trial" by a wave of lynching, terror and frame-up of Negroes.

Patterson issued a call today to all districts and branches of the I.L.D., to all friends of the Scottsboro Boys and the oppressed Negro People, to immediately intensify the wave of protests from every part of the country, to President Roosevelt, to Judge Horton, at Decatur, to Attorney General Knight and Governor B. M. Miller, at Montgomery, Ala., demanding the immediate, unconditional release of the innocent Scottsboro boys, and protesting against attempts to bring them to lynch-trial before Ku Klux Klan Callahan.

At the same time, Patterson issued an appeal for funds to carry on the heavy expenses of the campaign and legal steps to save the Scottsboro boys, to be sent to the I.L.D., Room 430, 80 East 11th St., New York, N. Y.

The Scottsboro Case

It is highly unfortunate that in every cause celebre the original matter at issue gets out of hand, and men summoned merely to do justice in the case of one individual find themselves rendering a decision on a whole social system. And it is to be expected that under our present system of society judges, juries, and prosecuting attorneys will affirm their belief in the established order. The conviction for the second time of one of the negroes accused in the "Scottsboro case" is simply one proof more of a fact that must be reckoned with by all who would protest.

Alabama, of course, was "on trial" before the nation. And that was precisely the trouble. San Francisco was on trial, and with her California, in the Tom Mooney case. Massachusetts was on trial in the Sacco-Vanzetti case. Georgia was on trial in the conviction of Angelo Herndon, young negro Communist. Mooney has stayed in jail these long years because of his alleged complicity in the Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco in 1916—and because he was known as a radical and had been charged with other bombings sponsored by them. Sacco and Vanzetti went to their deaths after the prosecuting attorney had quite unnecessarily waved the Stars and Stripes and called them reds in an attempt to prove to a jury that they were guilty of a hold-up slaying.

Those three may have been guilty, again they may not. Angelo Herndon undoubtedly was guilty. But the punishment given him, eighteen years under Georgia's carpet-bag law punishing "attempts at insurrection" with as much as death, was and remains an unqualified reflection upon our state. He was a Communist, and he was attempting to organize Communist meetings. But year after year we have had Communist candidates for president, and a Fulton county jury barely avoided disgracing the name of Georgia beyond redemption by bringing a sentence of death.

A young negro lawyer, handling his first case, muddied the waters in the Herndon case by making the matter one of negro persecution, rather than radical persecution, and to a degree the death sentence imposed at Decatur upon Heywood Patterson, 19-year-old negro, may be blamed upon a conduct of the case out of touch with conditions in the South. Samuel S. Leibowitz, the chief counsel for Patterson, elected to challenge the supremacy of the white race in Alabama. That was not at issue. What was at issue was whether two young white women, hoboing their way on a freight train, could be believed in their story that the nine negroes attacked them.

These women, as Judge James E. Horton declared in his charge to the jury, were of easy virtue. One of them, Ruby Bates, repudiated her testimony given in the trials two years ago, and declared that the other, Victoria Price, was "framing" the negroes. The jury presumably had the opportunity to decide which to believe. In its deliberations perhaps it recalled the inexcusable statement of a prosecutor, that the witnesses had been "bought." It was true, lamentably true as far as Heywood Patterson was concerned, that Ruby Bates appeared in court comparatively well dressed, in clothes bought during her recent visit to New York.

The fact that the International Labor Defense had its attorneys present, that the mother of one of the accused negroes has toured Europe in an attempt to arouse the sympathy of radicals there for the condemned; that the people of Alabama have felt rightly or wrongly that the rest of the country has been unjust in its condemnation, and that Communists have made no secret of their attempt to organize the negro population of the South through the notoriety that the case has attained—these are facts which Northern as well as Southern liberals must face as they consider this glaring miscarriage of justice.

Whether a second appeal to the United States Supreme court will lie open to Patterson on the grounds that as negroes were not on the jury rolls the verdict was contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment, or because of the statements of the prosecutors, is a matter for lawyers. Meanwhile thousands of negroes are signing petitions to the president or anyone they think may be influential, and the south once more has come in for abuse as bigoted and oppressive to the negro.

It must be said now, and with all emphasis, that attempts to coerce Southerners, or Americans of any section, do more harm than good. Had local attorneys handled the case, had radicals over the country and the world kept out of it, especially had the International Labor Defense remained silent, the case could have been tried on the pertinent issues. Counsel for Patterson elected to try it on the issue of "justice" for the negro, and "justice" for Communists. Both appeals were ill-directed. The South feels that it is doing the best job possible with a racial problem far surpassing in difficulty that of other sections. And all juries, under stress of appeals by prosecuting attorneys, become prejudiced against reds, even in states where an anachronistic law does not encourage them.

The liberal elements of the South for years have fought against lynch law, against injustice and oppression. They are dissatisfied with this first verdict in the re-trial of the negroes. But a calm consideration of the circumstances makes understandable the verdict of the jury. It is to be hoped that when next Florida torture barrels or Georgia chain-gangs, North Carolina strikes or Alabama prosecution for attack, engage the rest of America liberals elsewhere will consider the matter in the light of what Southerners are attempting to do toward righting these wrongs. The Scottsboro-Decatur cases are ample cause for regret that the accused's own friends did him grievous injury.

I. L. D. METHODS IN TRIAL CRITICIZED BY NEGRO GROUP

Mass Meeting Will Be Held Here In Interest Of Scottsboro Negroes

BY RALPH E. HURST

An attempt to have the International Labor Defense conduct the Scottsboro cases with "sane and dignified methods in the future" will be made by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, according to Dr. Charles A. J. McPherson, secretary of the Birmingham branch, who announced his organization's entry into the cases in cooperation with the forces now handling the defense.

Dr. McPherson's statement opposing the injection of communism, racial issues, and mob action into the cases, was issued here Saturday on the eve of a mass meeting to be held at the First Baptist Church in Graymont at 3 p.m. Sunday.

Persons sponsoring the meeting had announced that Samuel Liebowitz, chief defense attorney for the Negroes, would attend the meeting but press dispatches from New York Saturday night said Liebowitz was the principal speaker at a meeting there during the evening.

At the same time Atty. Gen. Knight, who Saturday received a death threat at Decatur where he has gone to prepare for the next trial beginning Monday, announced the following:

"A statement in the New York Herald-Tribune quoting Samuel Liebowitz as reflecting upon the people of Morgan County and members of the Heywood Patterson jury has been called to my attention.

"Liebowitz is quoted as stating when asked how the jury could find a verdict as it did that: 'If you ever saw those creatures; those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs,' whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"If this statement was made by Liebowitz, it can be taken only as a wail of a contemptible loser, particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies. Referring to members of the jury he characterized them as highly intelligent, painstaking and honorable men. That was before the jury returned a verdict sentencing Heywood Patterson to death for raping Mrs. Victoria Price.

"I, like every other Southerner, resent his despicable slurs. However, we must remember that whatever excitement his forensic discourse causes in Harlem, it cannot and will not cause the citizens of Morgan County and Alabama to deviate from the orderly and dignified course which was followed in the Patterson trial.

"I was very glad indeed, that Liebowitz's insincere flattery of the court, myself and the jury could not swerve the jury from a verdict in this case, when they believed, as I do, that Heywood Patterson was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

"Liebowitz, having borne his gifts of compliments, now wants to take it back."

Dr. McPherson's statement was as follows:

"Following the receipt of the action of the national office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in reference to its reentering the Scottsboro cases and the many inquiries as to our position in the matter, we submit the following:

"1. We are unalterably opposed to any organization raising communistic or revolutionary issues in the Scottsboro cases—we are American citizens, red, white and blue.

"2. We are bitterly opposed to bringing into these cases racial issue of whatever sort. We are for the upholding of all of the amendments of the United States constitution.

"3. We are opposed to the silly practice of some organizations sending threatening messages to the governor, judges and other officers which, in our opinion, created an atmosphere for the verdict rendered. These officers and the courts are human, not gods."

"4. We believed that enlightened citizens of Alabama regardless of class or color should come forward and assert themselves in behalf of sober and humane justice in the Scottsboro cases. The courage of your convictions only is needed to wipe out the unpleasing spectacle from before your eyes and the world at large.

"5. The Birmingham branch of the N. A. A. C. P. is not composed of hot-headed radicals who believe in the overthrowing of our present form of government. Like Lincoln, we believe in the preservation of our government by sane and peaceful methods. We regard any other method as treason.

"6. The Birmingham branch of the N. A. A. C. P. is interested in a variable local program which will of necessity force us to divide our attention, energies and resources in the promotion of the same. This branch is interested in easier registration of Negroes in Alabama, reduction in the homicide rate in Birmingham and Jefferson County, a clean, fully equipped municipal park for Negroes, another High School to relieve the congested and overcrowded Industrial High School in another section of the city, improved housing conditions and many other problems vital to the welfare of the Negro.

"7. In the very heart of the Scottsboro cases this branch will pledge itself to aid an intelligent and dignified handling of the Scottsboro cases in the future. To that end we respectfully insist, and more, we demand, that our board of directors go immediately into conference with the I. L. D. authorities for the purpose of controlling and restricting their activities and propaganda to sane and dignified methods in the future. We disdain mob action because we oppose it. We are sure you appreciate our position which we hold is identical with other social organizations. This is paramount to concerted action. We also demand that an account of all monies raised for this purpose by all organizations be given as was done by the N. A. A. C. P. in 1932."

Charge Of Jury Tampering Heard

NEW YORK—(AP)—The News says Samuel S. Liebowitz, chief of the Scottsboro defense counsel, will charge jury tampering in the retrial of Haywood Patterson, one of seven Negro youths once sentenced to die for an alleged attack on two white girls in Alabama.

The jury tampering, The News says, will be averred in a motion for a change of venue from Decatur, Ala., in the retrial next week of Charles Weems.

Liebowitz, reached at his Brooklyn home before he went to a mass meeting at Arcadia Hall to speak in behalf of the Scottsboro defense, refused to affairm or deny the tampering charge.

"I don't know where the information came from. I cannot say until we make our motion for a change of venue just what we will include," the attorney said.

"I do know that we will charge our lives were threatened, that during the trial it was necessary to have military protection and that this surely indicates without doubt that we cannot obtain fair trials in Decatur, which is a hotbed of intolerance and open prejudice."

Liebowitz said he would move to have the cases transferred to "a more cosmopolitan city—such as Mobile."

"We do not want our change of venue motion, however, to be taken as a reflection upon the presiding judge, James E. Horton, who was the acme of fairness throughout the case."

RACIAL PREJUDICE

BACKED UP AGAINST THE WALL

Alabama and her courts have been subjected to a vast amount of ridicule and censure from press, pulpit and forum in all parts of the nation as result of last week's trial at Decatur in which one of nine negroes, charged with the capital crime of assault on two white women, was for the second time found guilty.

In the first trial in which the nine were convicted and found guilty there was such strong evidence that there had been no fair trial, that international opinion was aroused and a fight was conducted which led to the highest tribunal in the land before a new trial was secured.

In this second trial one of the two women went through again with her story of the alleged attack by the nine young negro men after they had forced a group of white boys from the freight train in which it was said the wholesale attack was made. But the other girl, one Ruby Bates, dramatically appeared as a witness for the defense, repudiated her previous story about the Scottsboro assault, and declared that she and her woman companion were in an entirely different part of the train from that in which the two groups of boys had their racial clash. Evidence showed that both Ruby Bates and her companion were underworld characters but the testimony of the Bates girl was worth just as much as that of the other woman.

The presiding judge took full liberty in his charge to instruct the jury that the good name of Alabama justice was on trial as much as was the negro youth. It was a masterly plea for justice to prevail instead of hatred and prejudice, but it was a plea that was ignored by the jury.

The verdict was not surprising to those who know inter-racial problems in the southern states. If the defense of the nine negroes had been handled by southern lawyers, the best that could be found, if there had been no effort to discredit the first findings of the court, and if the trial had been conducted in a calm and dispassionate manner, The Patriot is convinced that this jury of Alabama citizens would have seen this case in its true lights.

But true to its traditions, the International Labor Defense, which had eagerly assumed the burden of defending these negroes as its chance to advance its cause through promoting race hatreds and class prejudices, sacrificed its clients for the sake of publicity and Samuel Liebowitz, the chief defense counsel, from the first minute of the trial until the verdict was brought in seemed to devote himself chiefly to antagonizing the people of Alabama through his insinuations that justice for a negro is not possible in that state's courts. He deliberately brought down on himself the contempt of the jury and the court by pushing his own race and his own personality into the picture.

The trial started out as the state of Alabama against this negro defendant but it soon became in the minds of the jury as the state of Alabama against insolent and interloping outsiders, and of course Alabama won the verdict.

If anyone is caught unjustly in the toils of the law, let him avoid the International Labor Defense as he would the plague, for here is a crowd that will summons the world judice to fight on the other side, and no man or group of men can hope to win against a whole society.

Third Trial of Negroes Brings Misgivings of Racial Antagonisms.

10-29-33

NEW JUDGE APPOINTED

New York, N.Y.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES 2d.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 25.—With the third trial of the Scottsboro Negroes scheduled for Nov. 27 at Decatur, and with Judge W. W. Callahan assigned to preside in place of Judge James E. Horton who conducted the second trials last April, Alabama approaches with profound misgivings a probable resurrection of the antagonism and dispute attendant upon this now famous case.

When Haywood Patterson, the only one of the Negroes to be tried last April, received a jury verdict of guilty Judge Horton set the verdict aside on grounds of insufficient evidence. Shortly thereafter he ordered the trials of the other Negroes postponed until local feeling aroused by statements of counsel on both sides should have become more calm. The withdrawal of Judge Horton now is said to have been brought about at the instance of Attorney General Knight. It is approved by Chief Justice Anderson the only member of the State Supreme Court to favor a retrial of the case after the first convictions at Scottsboro.

Although Judge Horton's expressions of opinion in setting aside the verdict against Patterson last April provide legal and ethical grounds for his withdrawal, dissatisfaction with the removal is being voiced among certain groups here, and The Birmingham Post has warned the new judge, Callahan, that "critics of our courts will now charge, inevitably, that the State Supreme Court permitted Attorney General Knight to shop around until he found a judge who combined some of the qualities of a prosecutor with those of a jurist." The situation, warns The Post, "makes it doubly obligatory upon Judge Callahan to proceed with strict judicial impartiality. Nothing more can be asked of him than that he handle the matter equally as well as did his preceding judge."

Racial Feelings Stirred.

Meanwhile, circumstances have done more to augment than allay the local feeling that caused Judge Horton to postpone the trials last Spring. Attempted interference by International Labor Defense attorneys in other cases involving Negroes, a number of criminal assaults or attempted assaults on white women by Negroes, and the lynching of three Negroes charged with assault in Tuscaloosa County (of whom two are generally believed to have been guilty but the third was patently not guilty), have served to intensify the racial consciousness and feeling that Judge Horton hoped might be allayed.

The only promising thing about the situation is that many of the Alabamians who have been bitterly demanding the right to settle their affairs without outside interference are now going about the business of really settling those affairs. Thanks largely to an enlightened and understanding attitude on the part of important elements of the Alabama press, public opinion in both races is being inspired to an examination and elimination of the bases of interracial hostility and crime. One evidence of this is the fact that even though the interference of the International Labor Defense and its alleged efforts to exploit the Negro for its own political ends are undoubtedly the partial source of feelings responsible for the recent lynchings, the initial tendency to excuse the lynchings on that account has given way to an encouragingly widespread protest against lynchings on any account. Another is the growing demand that the legal machinery of the State be vindicated by the apprehension and punishment of parties involved in the recent mob murders.

Other interesting evidence of this counter-tide against lawlessness and racial antagonism is to be found in the activities of Negro leaders. A group of them in Mobile lately have adopted a set of resolutions which have been published with editorial praise in the Mobile newspapers and The Montgomery Advertiser. Deploring the "ignorance, passion, prejudice and poverty" that threaten to destroy "the fine work of the past years which has been done by white leaders and Negro leaders" in the direction of "tolerance and friendship between the races," these resolutions denounce "crime among our people, whether perpetrated within the race or upon members of other races," and go on record as "disapproving of any person who shields, or helps to hide, such criminals."

The resolutions ask, on the other hand, that Negroes accused of crime be given a fair trial and the protection of the law. "We believe that every guilty person should be punished, but that they should be given a fair trial and punished according to law. * * * We are calling upon the Negro citizens of Alabama to obey the laws and we are pleading with the law-enforcement officers of Alabama to protect the lives of all persons, regardless of race, by rigidly upholding the law."

Used by Agitators.

Special significance is attached to what this group of Negro leaders has to say of International Labor Defense activities among their race. "Some of the present unrest and friction," the resolutions declare, "is due to the influence of certain outsiders under the name of Communists—or some other high-sounding name. We believe that paid agents are circulating literature among the Negroes in certain sections and inciting them to commit crime by spreading unwise, inflammatory doctrines among our people. Negroes have nothing to gain by following foolish propaganda; we have everything to lose. We do not believe that the Negroes should be led astray by unsound, alien influences. The Negro, as a race, is not criminally inclined, but he has been used as a tool by evil designers and has been unduly influenced" * * *

Enlightened Alabamians who are honest with themselves realize that "outside interference" in the race question here may have been of some initial benefit in bringing about the soul-searching upon which the State is now rather hopefully engaged. But they are of one mind in their conviction that this outside interference is as harmful now as it may have been beneficial originally and that any more of it at this particular time would tend merely to tip the scales adversely in the trembling balance between darkness and light which characterizes existing race relations.

Appeal Patterson Verdict; Seek Trial Delay, Change of Venue, Pending Appeal

Daily Worker 4-11-33
New York, N.Y.

TRIAL OF WEEMS SET FOR MONDAY

Negro Boy to Be Tried at Same Lynch Scene

Daily Worker

DECATUR, Ala., April 10.—As reverberations of the tempest of fury which swept the country following the verdict of "guilty" in the case of Haywood Patterson reached this little Southern Alabama town, lawyers for the International Labor Defense mapped out the next moves to thwart the executioners.

Immediate appeals are being planned to the state Supreme Court and ultimately to the U. S. Supreme Court, which, on November 7 last, turned the case back for a second trial, lawyers for the ILD announced here yesterday, just before their departure for New York, where they will confer with leaders of the labor defense organization regarding further moves.

Fight for Vanue Change

Side by side with the taking of an immediate appeal against the lynch verdict rendered against Patterson, the 19-year-old Negro boy, is a demand for a change of venue to Birmingham for the trials of the remaining Scottsboro boys. On Saturday, while the jury in the Patterson case was still "deliberating," Judge Horton flatly denied a motion made by Jos. R. Brodsky, defense counsel, for the change of venue. This fight will be pushed more energetically than ever, however, the ILD declares.

At the same time—while mass protest against the murderous verdict rages throughout the country—the defense is calling for a postponement of the trials of the remaining Negro boys until after the appeal in the Patterson case is heard in the higher courts.

It is doubtful, however, whether the prosecution—eager to take advantage of the lynch atmosphere which it has succeeded in creating during the past weeks of the trial—will permit this delay.

May bar Press At Next Trials

An indication of the rope-and-faggot spirit which has been whipped up here by the prosecution is found in the report which gained credence today that Judge Horton may exclude newspapermen from the remainder of the trials, giving as his reason the "intense feeling" which exists.

Unless the defense wins its fight to postpone the remaining trials until after the appeal in the Patterson case is heard, Charlie Weems, second of the innocent Scottsboro boys, will go on trial in Decatur next Monday before Judge Horton.

Yesterday the condemned Negro boy was taken to the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham, to which the other Scottsboro boys were removed Saturday night when Decatur became filled with klansmen ready for lynch action in the event that an acquittal verdict would be returned in the Patterson case.

Although the jury in the Patterson case was out for nearly 20 hours, it actually arrived at a verdict of "guilty" in exactly 21 minutes—a slightly longer time than it took the frame-up jury in the original Scottsboro trial to doom the nine innocent Negro boys to the electric chair in the Spring of 1931.

On the first ballot the jury, it became known today, was unanimous for conviction. On the second ballot, which was to determine the degree of punishment, the vote was 11 for electrocution and one for life imprisonment. It was the foreman of the jury, an architectural draftsman, who held up his associates for nearly 20 hours, with his insistence that the young Negro be sentenced to life imprisonment instead of to the electric chair.

NEW YORK CITY JOURNAL

Heywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes for whom the Supreme Court ordered a new trial, ~~is sentenced~~ to death after the jury had deliberated nearly 24 hours. He and the eight other Negroes are accused of a crime against two white women, a crime punished by death in Alabama.

One of the women who formerly accused the men swore at Patterson's recent trial that he and the other Negroes were innocent, had never molested her or the second woman. The Rev. Dr. Fosdick, of New York, she said, persuaded her to tell the truth. The second woman swore that the nine men, Patterson included, were guilty, as she had sworn at the first trial.

Seven of the other Negroes will be tried, one at a time, with one woman, presumably, swearing to their guilt, the other swearing to their innocence. The ninth is a minor. The strange thing, which makes the case unusual, is that the Southern Judge, in his jury charge, describes both women as "women of the underworld." They were traveling in a freight car with white hoboes at the time the crime is alleged to have been committed.

With one woman swearing one way, the other swearing the other, and the judge describing both as unworthy of belief because of moral turpitude, there would seem to be considerable possibility of "reasonable doubt" in the case.

I.L.D. TO FIGHT MOVE TO RUSH THRU OTHER TRIALS

Defense Will Demand Postponement Pending Appeal; Weems Trial Set for Monday

DECATUR, Ala., April 12.—Gen. George W. Chamlee, attorney for the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro frame-up, will move for a postponement of the trial of Charlie Weems pending the appeal of the case of Haywood Patterson to the higher courts, when Judge Horton orders the commencement of the Weems trial here on Monday.

Meanwhile the ILD, backed by international protest, is demanding a change of venue to Birmingham for the remaining trials.

4-13-33. New York Daily

NEW YORK.—"I am glad to be in New York. I am glad to be with the workers and the I.L.D. who are fighting for my boy," Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, framed-up Scottsboro youth, told the Daily Worker reporter who interviewed her before she stepped off the train at Pennsylvania depot where 700 Negro and white workers waited to greet her. Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz was among those greeting her.

The train was half an hour late. Fifty police deployed themselves around the steps at the south end of the station. They could not hold the ranks back, however, when Mrs. Patterson mounted the steps escorted by the reception committee of the International Labor Defense.

"Long live the Scottsboro boys. Three cheers for Mother Patterson," some one called out and the roof of the station echoed a thunderous response of the hundreds of workers present. Workers who had come from Harlem and other parts of New York in spite of the snow outside.

Mrs. Patterson was escorted to a cab that was waiting to take her to the I.L.D. office. The crowd pushed the police aside and ran after her. They surrounded the cab, cheering and shouting. Hundreds immediately started marching to Union Square for the Scottsboro protest meeting.

The Negro and white workers of the world have swung into their most intensified action in the fight to save the Scottsboro boys, following the pronouncement by an all-white jury in Decatur, Ala., of a lynch verdict of death against Haywood Patterson, first of the boys to be retried.

It is estimated that at least a million workers throughout the country took part in protest demonstrations and meetings in the last three days, with the tempo of protest constantly rising.

On Chicago's South Side the Negro workers are up in arms against the Decatur verdict. Large contingents of Negro workers are expected to join the parade and demonstration on Saturday. The mobilization point is 33rd and State Sts.

A national movement was launched by the International Labor Defense, to obtain a million signatures to a petition addressed to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, demanding that he step in and prevent the legal lynching of Haywood Patterson and of the other boys.

Protests Pour In.

It was announced from Alabama that Governor B. M. Miller, Judge James E. Horton and Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., special prosecutor in the case, had received at least 25,000 telegrams each, protesting the lynch verdict. At least as many are believed to have been sent to President Roosevelt.

In Santiago, Cuba, a demonstration of workers was held before the American consulate in protest against the lynch verdict.

In Harlem hundreds of meetings were held day and night, on the streets and in churches and clubs, at which International Labor Defense and other speakers spoke on the case.

The Amsterdam News, New York Negro weekly, announced that 50,000 signatures to its Scottsboro protest had been obtained by Monday morning, with thousands more pouring in hourly.

Plans for a march of Negro and white workers to Washington to present the petition were announced with thousands volunteering to join it.

A tremendous demonstration of Negro and white workers took place at Union Square, New York, Wednesday evening, while Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Akron, Indianapolis and Birmingham, and the Pacific Coast cities reported huge mass protest meetings in preparation.

Millions of leaflets calling for protest, linked with specific local meetings, have been issued throughout the United States.

In Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 12.—Mrs. Janie Patterson will be the main speaker at a huge Scottsboro protest meet called for Reyburn Plaza at one o'clock Saturday, April 15, it was announced today. The meeting will be preceded by a protest parade. Thousands are expected to greet her when she arrives at the station Saturday at 12 o'clock.

A band and a workers' chorus will accompany the parade. On Saturday evening she will be the guest of honor and speak at a bazaar of the I.L.D. at 1710 No. Broad St.

Cleveland Demonstration

CLEVELAND, April 12.—Plans for a monster Scottsboro protest demonstration under the auspices of the International Labor Defense, Saturday, April 15, in Public Square, were announced today. Similar meetings are being arranged in Cincinnati and every other large city in Ohio.

IMPORTANT SCOTTSBORO NOTICE!

Workers, party and non-party, are urged to call at the various headquarters tonight for leaflets for the Second Scottsboro demonstration to be held in Union Sq. Friday at 5 p. m. Section organizers and heads of workers' clubs should come to District Office of Party today for the leaflets.

Pittsburgh Protest

PITTSBURGH, Pa., April 12.—A demonstration against the Scottsboro decision will take place on Saturday, April 15, at 7:30 p.m., corner of Kirkpatrick and Wylie Avenues.

NEGROES' TRIAL IS CARROUSEL TO LEIBOWITZ

Will Carry Defense on Appeals to Highest Court and Back "ad Infinitum."

MIGHT BE SHOT, HE SAYS

Lawyer Avers Issue in Scottsboro Case Now Is Sociological and Political.

By MARGUERITE YOUNG,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Samuel S. Leibowitz sat in his Brooklyn home today and announced he will carry the defense of the Scottsboro negroes on appeals to the United States Supreme Court and, if successful there, back through the Alabama Courts "ad infinitum."

"It'll be a merry-go-round," he asserted, "and if some Ku Kluxer doesn't put a bullet through my head I'll go right along until they let the passengers off. In the end, of course, the verdict must come from an Alabama jury, and, frankly, I don't know when we can get one there to acquit these innocent boys. But we can make them mighty tired. The fight is just beginning."

Acting Without Pay.

A moment earlier he had turned to his wife and said, "I'll tell you right now, Belle, I couldn't leave this case now if it meant the loss of all my practice." He is to be representing without pay the Negroes accused of assaulting two white women in a freight car two years ago.

"The last trial we fought on technical, legal grounds," he said. "From now on every sociological, religious and political issue will be dragged right out into the open. We'll hold those bigots right up to the mirror of public opinion.

"I am not a Communist, but I want to say this for the International Labor Defense—had it not been for the International Labor Defense, those nine Negro boys would be in their coffins now, buried back of the county jail.

White Against Negro.

"To get justice in the South, the Negro will have to go out and take it, the same as the Americans took their freedom from Great Britain. Mind you, I'm not a 'Red.' I'm not advocating revolution. But unless the whites leave a little slack in the chain they're holding taut around the Negro's neck, the creatures at the other end . . . well, once they break loose, heaven help Alabama!"

On behalf of Haywood Patterson, convicted on a second trial ordered by the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Leibowitz will ask the State Supreme Court to pass on "three vital questions."

Questions He'll Ask.

They are:—Whether the right to sit on juries had not been systematically denied to Negroes? Whether the weight of evidence in the case is not "overwhelmingly" in favor of the defendant? And whether the conduct of the case was not such as to be "a mockery" of a fair trial?

He expects to hear whether the second trial must begin next Monday, as tentatively set. If it does he will go to Alabama, regardless of threats.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

That Scottsboro case from Alabama invites nation-wide—yes, to some extent, world-wide—attention. As far as political radicals are concerned, it has stirred up as much discussion as that Vanzetti case from up Boston way. Once again there was a trial, this time in another county, far from the scene of the original crime. The United States Supreme court found the first trial a miscarriage of justice. Now the second jury declares that the negro on trial is guilty of serious assault upon two women and that, in Alabama means death.

No one following the trial and taking note of the tense feeling in evidence, with militia surrounding the court house to prevent the execution of the threats plainly in the air, can feel assured that justice has been allowed unimpeded action.

The conduct of counsel on both sides has been such that prejudice was aroused. The words of one state prosecutor were bound to invite hard feelings. Although the trial judge charged the jury not to heed what was said yet the spoken words clearly hampered fair decision by the twelve men. The fact that the jury took twenty-one hours to reach a verdict indicates that some jurors were doubtful.

That the character of the state's witnesses is of such a nature as to raise a reasonable doubt is certain. At the same time, there were also signs that perjury was not absent.

Another unfortunate factor is that counsel for the accused are from New York, one at least with manifest evidence of not only radical tendencies, but of some Communist support as well.

All this, together with the inability of negroes to gain recognition for jury service and the known attitude of so many persons in the southland against black men accused of the crime involved in this case, make it next to impossible to secure that even justice in the trial that the constitution guarantees to all, whatever their color,

Mayor Offers Moral Support In Negro Trial

Leader McCooey Among Speakers Encouraging Scottsboro Case Lawyer

Mayor O'Brien and Democratic National Committeeman McCooey have pledged their moral support to Samuel S. Leibowitz in hi fight against "Southern Hitlerism" as defense counsel in the Scottsboro case.

The retrial of the first defendant, Heywood Patterson, 19, resulted in a verdict of guilty on April 19. Eight more defendants are to be given second trials for an alleged attack on two white women two years ago.

The pledges of the Mayor and McCooey were given last night before aa gathering of about 4,000 persons under the auspices of the National Afro-Protective League. The Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Harten, pastor Holy Trinity Baptist Church and president of the league, was chairman.

The last speaker of the evening was Mr. Leibowitz. He was introduced by Sheriff Jacoby and as the attorney rose to his feet the crowd rose with him and for ten minutes the hall reverberated with the ovation given the champion of the Negro youths on trial for their lives in Alabama.

Mr. Leibowitz reviewed the case as far as it has gone, stating that it would be the turning point toward the better in the life of the American Negro and asserting that the nine youths themselves were not the only ones on trial, but America herself was on trial. He concluded his address dramatically with:

"These nine Negro boys shall not die."

'For Fair Play'

McCooey said: "I speak not as a statesman, as Dr. Harten would have you believe; not as a political leader, but just as an ordinary citizen. I am talking as one of those Brooklynites who is interested in fair play.

"Sam Leibowitz," continued McCooey, "is one of the best criminal lawyers at our bar, and I think those young men are perfectly safe with Sam in charge.

"But when he's way down in Alabama we want him to know he's got friends way back here, and whenever it's time for us to go in we'll be ready."

O'Brien Wins Applause

O'Brien preceded McCooey on the list of speakers. He outlined his own relations with colored New Yorkers in political life and was applauded by his audience, mainly Negro.

He then posed for a photograph with McCooey, Leibowitz, Magistrate Salvatore Sabbatina, Exalted Ruler of Brooklyn Lodge of Elks, and Dr. Harten.

While photographers were maneuvering O'Brien and the others into position, a shout arose from members of the International Labor Defense attending the meeting.

Irritation was noticeable on O'Brien's features, but Leibowitz seized his right hand in a friendly clasp and, grinning amiably, brought a smile to O'Brien's lips just in time for the flashlight.

All resumed their seats and the Rev. Dr. Harten arose to welcome Rabbi Lyons of the Eighth-Avenue Temple and to acknowledge William Patterson's presence on the speaker's platform.

Mayor Leaves Hurriedly

Applause greeted mention of Patterson's name, and cries of, "We want to hear Patterson! Let Patterson speak!" O'Brien's face was noticeably tense, as he arose, briskly shook hands with those about him and almost ran across the wide stage to his waiting police escort.

He left the hall to the strains of "Salutation," played by the Colored Elks Band, present at the request of their Exalted Ruler, Thomas Higgins.

McCooey then spoke.

Is Native of Alabama

Rabbi Lyons astonished many of his listeners when he recalled that he is himself a native of Alabama. He resented the Southern prosecutor's recent reference to "Jew money" raised for the defense of Patterson, Weems and their fellow prisoners.

"I want to see you, and all other Christians," he said, "interpret the Resurrection properly. I am tired of a religion of mere pretense or theory.

"As sure as there is a God of Israel, who neither slumbers nor sleeps, there must be justice for the relatives of your Saviour."

He compared Southern race hatreds to Hitlerism and urged justice for all—Jew, colored, white, Gentile—on grounds of common humanity.

Among Other Speakers

Among other speakers were:

Register Aaron Jacoby.

Sanitation Commissioner Edward F. Cadley, Democratic leader of the 17th A. D.

Tax Commissioner John R. Crews, Republican leader of the 5th A. D.

Transfer Tax Appraiser David F. Soden.

Dr. G. M. Hinkson, president Providence Medical Association

William H. Davis managing editor N. Y. Amsterdam News, colored weekly.

A SERVICE TO ALABAMA

Decision of Judge Horton in ordering indefinite postponement of the trials of eight defendants in the Scottsboro case that it is "impossible at the present time to fulfill the high purpose of a court of justice" in proceeding with these cases accords with opinion prevailing outside of Alabama based on observation of the circumstances surrounding the trial of the one defendant already convicted. It would be more serviceable to the cause of justice if the present opinion of the Judge could have been retroactive in its application and the initial case could have been carried over to a more judicial situation.

The Scottsboro cases present extreme difficulties, because, unfortunately, the only pertinent issue, guilt or innocence of the accused, has been inextricably tangled with and largely overshadowed by extraneous controversies. Despite the desires and efforts of a conscientious Judge, the lives of these Negroes accused of a capital crime have become pawns in a contest between local prejudice and outside intervention. The fact that without such intervention the accused, innocent or guilty, would by now be dead and buried justifies "foreign" defense of the prisoners, but does not mitigate the rancor it has aroused.

It is possible that when the heat generated by the Patterson trial has cooled and bitter words spoken by both sides have ceased to echo the Scottsboro Negroes may be tried in an atmosphere more conducive to calm deliberation and honest weighing of the credibility of witnesses. The conduct of the recent case indicates that fair trial now, as Judge Horton finds, is out of the question. That jurist has rendered his State a service which in calmer moments it may appreciate.

Huntsville, Ala., Times

Judge Horton Right

Judge Horton, in our opinion as a layman, pursued exactly the right course in delaying trial yesterday of the second of the so-called Scottsboro cases at Decatur.

"No court, regardful of its duty to see that trials must be fair and impartial," said the Athens jurist, after reading the interchange of recriminatory statements of Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for the defense, and Attorney General Knight, for the state, "could under such baneful influences permit the trial of this case to proceed at the present time. The case will be continued, therefore, until such time when, in the opinion of the court, a fair and impartial trial may be had."

Judge Horton, throughout the course of the first trial, that of Heywood Patterson, displayed judicial temper and judgment of the highest quality.

Despite efforts to inject extraneous influences to sway the jury, he maintained the trial on a high judicial plane.

His charge, after all the evidence was in, was in the finest judicial vein.

We regret the state's attorneys allowed themselves to be drawn into a controversy with the propagandist attorney of the International Labor Defense, to whom the lives of those whom he is supposed to represent are but a secondary consideration.

We regret that one of them was so tactless as to refer in his speech to "Jew money from New York." It was plain to everybody that an abundance of it from some outside undisclosed source had been sent down here to influence the trial. There is none so guileless as not to believe that two of the defense's witnesses had been tampered with with.

But this was not in the record. It was not a part of the trial. It added not one whit in the conviction of the negro defendant. Its introduction by one of the state's at-

[illegible] put an instrument in the hands of Leibowitz to go back to New York and fan the fires of racial hatred still higher, and to raise more money with which to smear the courts and the people of Alabama.

Attorney General Knight, in our opinion, displayed poor judgment in answering the vile, filthy, lying interview of Leibowitz in a New York newspaper.

The best way to handle an opponent of that kind is to let him rave, not engage him in a controversy. The best place to try a lawsuit is in the courtroom, not in the newspapers.

The tactics of Leibowitz, Chamlee and Brodsky have been unspeakably contemptible.

They have not tried to conduct the case to acquit their clients or to prove their innocence.

Their whole effort has been directed toward making them appear in the role of martyrs before the people of the North and East.

No sooner had Leibowitz landed back in New York, after conclusion of the first trial in Decatur than he took the stump in Harlem, Manhattan proper, Brooklyn and other places in the metropolitan era to defame and abuse the jury, courts and people of this state.

He essayed the role of defender and savior of a persecuted race. He tore his hair, beat his breast and swore to high heaven that he would not let his clients be massacred by a vile, ignorant, prejudiced jury, composed of "nigger haters."

He intentionally tried to goad judge and prosecutor, so that he could make capital for consumption by the radicals and the uninformed, the reds and the "parlor pinks" of another section of the country.

Judge Horton held him in bounds by his strict judicial rulings in the first trial, but the state's prosecutors let down the bars during their arguments by reference to Jew money and alleged bribery of witnesses.

Judge Horton, by his action yesterday in postponing the second trial, merely attempted to restore [illegible] semblance of judicial atmos[illegible] [illegible]ere to the case, and to provide a setting whereby the accused negro may have a fair trial—something that his own attorneys do not desire. The literal fact is they would crucify him for the sake of publicity and dirty money for themselves.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., April 23.—More than 600 persons attended a meeting here today called by the Montclair branch of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People to raise funds for the Negro youths facing their second trials in the Scottsboro case in Alabama. The speakers included C. R. Spector, representing the International Labor Defense Committee; the Rev. J. C. Love, Negro pastor of the Union Baptist Church here, and Mrs. W. P. Allen, president of the Montclair branch of the association. Donations totaling about $100 were contributed.

The fact that Samuel S. Leibowitz attorney for the defense, has entered the race question in the trial of the seven negroes who attacked two white women in Jackson county, allegedly will not make it any milder.

If the fact that no negroes served on the juries which billed an convicted these defendants were upheld it would also be reasonable to nullify other cases where all juriors were white.

All jurors are sworn to decide the guilt or innocense of the individual on trial according to law and evidence, regardless of race, color or sex, and if these sworn obligations are not fulfilled the juror responsible for the failure is subject to a purjure charge, regardless of race or color. Therefore, the race agitation brought into the Patterson trial will only be considered a point of argument between the attorneys and not a question of justice or injustice by the law abiding people of either race. There are thousands of white men and women in Alabama who have never been called on for jury duty and the fact that the race question has been entered into the trials of these negroes to our opinion will only serve to prolong the court proceedure, and not wave the rights of justice.

ALABAMA IN DEFEAT

(Pittsburgh Courier)

Regardless of what Alabama may think or do, the nation and the world know that it has already suffered defeat in the Scottsboro case. With the retrial of only one of the young colored men concluded, the credibility of the prosecution witnesses has been so seriously impaired by the brilliant defense of Atty. Leibowitz that no fair-minded person any longer believes the defendants are guilty as charged.

Alabama senses her defeat. With the establishment conclusively that her system of selecting juries is grossly unfair and discriminatory, she began to feel herself slipping. Now that the clever defense has clearly demonstrated the almost farcical character of the State's case, the old mob spirit, latent at first because of confidence that the result of the second trial would be like that of the first, now begins to manifest itself. Alabama is indignant and bitter in defeat and wishes to revenge herself by using extra-legal methods of execution so beloved by the mobbocratic South. An attempt to lynch the boys has been nipped in time only by the alertness of the authorities. The court is trying hard to be fair.

CLAIMS SCOTTSBORO NEGROES NOT GIVEN IMPARTIAL VERDICTS

"International exposure and pressure was what made the United States supreme court call the first trial of the Scottsboro Negro boys unconstitutional," Mrs. Gertrude Welsh, secretary of the Buffalo branch of the International Labor Defense, declared last night. She was the principal speaker at the meeting of the Falls branch of that organization, held in St. John's A. M. E. church, 155 Thirteenth street. The Rev. Harvey L. Gault, pastor of the church, presided. David Wagner, secretary of the Falls branch of the I. L. D., was chairman of the arrangements. About 100 persons were present.

Asserting that the Scottsboro "boys" accused of assaulting the two white girls riding on the freight train with them are entirely innocent, that they were "framed" in both the Scottsboro trial and the Decatur trial, that the juries in both cases were entirely white and so unfairly chosen, Mrs. Welsh asked concerted pressure from all labor organizations to save from the electric chair the lately convicted Haywood Patterson. She declared that all the courts in this country are constructed for the benefit of capitalists and that only through such pressure as she called for could the "workers" hope for fair dispositions of their affairs

The minds of the white people of the South have been "poisoned" with the idea of suppressing the Negro and the poor white, she said. The jury that convicted Haywood Patterson at Decatur was "not a workers' jury; it was a farmers' jury," she declared, condemning the means which, she said, made it contain not a single Negro.

She condemned the President's program for work camps as a measure preparatory for war and for the low wages paid the workers in the "army."

There will be a march on Washington, April 28, she said, composed of black and white workers. Under the auspices of labor organizations thousands of persons already have been enlisted in this, the speaker said. The marchers will demand a greater fairness for the working classes in this country."

In conclusion a resolution condemning the "lynch verdict" in the trial of Haywood Patterson and his fellow prisoners in the Alabama case, and demanding a fresh and fairer trial was read and adopted by acclamation.

CARRY IT UP AGAIN.

The second trial of the "Scottsboro cases" confirmed all the suspicions aroused by the first hearing. One of the women who had appeared against the Negro boys went on the stand, admitted that she had lied at the first trial, and testified that the accused youths had not molested her. In the face of this, the jury brought in a verdict of guilty for the first of the seven boys brought to the bar.

By what process of reasoning that verdict was reached it will be impossible for anyone to say who does not know in what spirit trials of this sort are usually conducted. There is in some parts of the South, even now, an "unwritten law" that when a white woman accuses a white man, she must prove his guilt, but that when she accuses a Negro, he must prove his innocence. This is what happened in Decatur. The men are being sentenced to death primarily because they are black. They are being sentenced, but they will not be electrocuted. The case must be carried to the supreme court a[illegible]n and must be remanded, and this must [illegible] on until the Negroes are released. It i[illegible]ot merely a question of "[illegible]asonable do[illegible]"; it is a question of unreasonable co[illegible]tion.

The Scottsboro Verdict

The conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the Negro defendants in the second trials of the Scottsboro cases, will be appealed. It should be.

Among other things prejudicial to a fair trial, the defense attorney was able to show that the jury law apparently was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel for this case. On more than one occasion during the trial the state attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent orderly and judicious consideration of evidence by the jury.

In repudiating her testimony at the earlier trial, Ruby Bates swore that the other girl in the case, Victoria Price, had framed the Negro youths. Lester Carter, a white friend of the two girls, confirmed the testimony of Ruby Bates.

To execute boys on the discredited evidence of a woman of Victoria Price's character, and following a trial in which racial discrimination seemed to operate in the jury panel, would be unthinkable. Just as the chief justice of Alabama dissented from the first Scottboro conviction, and just as the United States supreme court threw out that conviction as a violation of the 14th amendment of the constitution preventing states from depriving "any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law," so the latest Decatur verdict appears certain to be set aside by a higher court.

Legal Punishment for Rape

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The nation, if not the entire world, has manifested great, if not undue, interest in the trial of eight negroes charged with committing rape on two Alabama girl hoboes on a freight train as it rumbled through the hills of the Sand Mountain section of this state over two years ago.

It is plain now to enlightened public opinion that publicity on these cases was not in the interest of justice and for the protection of eight defendants from the wrath and prejudices of a Southern moronic citizenship, but by self-seeking organizations whose ends do not promise justice to those it would aid, but subtlety to destroy the fundamental fabric of American jurisprudence; while not the most perfect system it has withstood the thrusts of alien darts and schemes of years and remains yet as the bulwark of protection to the humblest of American citizens and a haven for those who must seek redress at the bar for wrongs committed. It is probably evident now to the man in black, who has heard for the second time within two years the cold words of a superior demanding his life in expiation in the name of society for a crime heinously committed, that the International Labor Defense is more of an enemy than a friend.

Written into the fundamental fabric of our laws and into the consciousness of every true white there is an ever present spirit of protection of womanhood. In many a nation woman has her inferior place in the affairs of men, but in the South her people, glorying in the traditions of an ancestry untouched and unsurpassed, exalts to the highest pinnacle and defends at any cost the mothers, sisters and wives of men. If the South is prejudiced it is prejudiced and jealous of its womanhood. Words of condemnation from organizations and nations cannot separate the natures and consciences of men in whose fabric and make-up there is indelibly forged and fused the idea of protection of womanhood. In the South, as it should be everywhere, woman is guaranteed this protection, and there is none who do not know when they once get their consent to commit a crime against her what awaits them at the bars of justice.

In the Scottsboro cases it has been different. Sympathy and pity has existed in the hearts of all fair-minded persons for those who were consigned to death for a crime. The characters of those against whom the crimes were committed have been a mitigating circumstance in the formulation of public opinion. That these two women were of low order cannot be denied. The evidence and every circumstance and detail of all conditions establish this fact but because they are of such character there is no loophope or provision in the law to allow rape to be committed against them. The standards of womanhood are established in many instances by the least responsible of women, but a crime against a woman is considered, as it should be, by the courts in the light of the most perfect of them. The courts of this state protect its subjects in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness. Some of them may be misguided and on the road to neither, but the protection remains the same. Those who invade the rights of others in the same degree as in this case may as well get their consent to accept similar verdicts at the bars of justice.

Two juries in two different counties have passed the same judgment on the character and extent of the crime. It is not for this newspaper to decide its gravity; the juries and courts have done this in these two instances. We stand by the organized tribunals.

The trial judge who sentenced one of the defendants to death included in his remarks the following, which shows the seriousness and gravity of the occasion:

"We are a white race and a negro race here together—we are here to live together—our interests are together. The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because the great things in life, no matter what they are, it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that."

Unjustified Presumption

No verdict in the grotesquely revolting Scottsboro, Alabama, case will be based on justice unless it liberates, in the opinion of the eminent New York Herald-Tribune which while condemning the findings of the trial jury presumes to pass on the merits of the case without having heard the evidence. We can recall no previous case of such far fetched ego. Its comment follows:

"It is useless for any one, either in or out of Alabama, to pretend that the verdict of guilty rendered against the first of the nine negroes to stand retrial in the Scottsboro cases will not be received with a profund sense of shock by justice-loving Americans.

"The case admittedly presented an extraordinarily difficult problem to the small northern Alabama community into whose hands it was confided. It had become involved, over a period of two years, with nearly every kind of racial and political prejudice; its history had developed in such a way as to entangle it accidentally in all sorts of extraneous considerations which might interfere with a fair verdict, and the evidence itself was not the sort through which it would be easy to find the straight path of justice.

"The presiding judge did find that pathway, nevertheless. Though evidently feeling himself under strong local pressure to do otherwise, Judge Horton made every effort to see that the accused was given a fair trial; he emphatically repressed any hint of mob action and guaranteed the protection of the prisoner and his counsel with the lives, if necessary, of the court officers. His charge to the jury was eminently fair in dealing with the evidence, and in its appeal to put aside every consideration save the merits of the case it reflected honor upon the standards of the Alabama bench.

"Its effect, unfortunately, has now been destroyed by the verdict. On the basis of the evidence, as reported it is simply impossible to believe that the guilt of the accused was established 'beyond reasonable doubt.' Outside observers cannot tell the state of Alabama or the people of Alabamo what they ought to do. One may, however, revert to the attorney general's declaration that the new trial would demonstrate to the world the impartiality of Alabama justice; and to those Alabamans who are interested in outside opinion it seems legitimate to point out that the actual result has been the precise opposite. The fairness with which the trial itself was conducted only throws into higher relief the astonishing finding—as it will be universally regarded outside of Alabama—of the jury. Whatever the real merits of the case may have been, the fact is that national opinion everywhere will accept this outcome as proof of the impossibility of securing a really just verdict in Alabama in a case of this kind.

"We shall still hope that this conclusion is unwarranted. There are countless high-minded men and women in the state of Alabama sincerely desirous—as was Judge Horton— of seeing justice done, and sensitive of the regard in which their state is held by national opinion. The right of appeal offers one source of hope, especially in view of the courageous dissent of the chief justice of the state upon the appeal from the verdict in the last trial. The governor's power of commutation and pardon offers a second method of correcting the verdict. Mo[illegible] over, the present trial concerned only o[illegible] nine defendants. It does not seem too m[illegible] ask of Alabama opinion that it insist of its own accord that the venue for the remaining trials be changed from the northern counties where the public psychology has been so, desperately embittered. We believe that it is possible for Alabama to conduct the remaining trials in an atmosphere which will be free from the threats of lynching, the intensity of local issues and local fear and anger which marred the present case, and to arrive, with no outside help, at a verdict which the nation at large will receive as just and honorable to the state."

The Herald has been unconcerned with the outcome of the trial which involves nine negroes who were charged with assaulting two white girls whom they encountered during the course of a hobo holiday, on the assumption that Alabama was qualified to handle its own affairs.

But the Herald-Tribune entertains no such opinion. It would sit as judge and jury in the case with its sharpened darts pointed at the jury and the people of northern Alabama without attention paid the slanderous utterances of imported counsel which have indicted a people on the flimsiest of all grounds, uninformed opinion.

The Morning Herald's Eye Opener

Questionable Justice

NEW YORK CITY'S teeming Harlem has a new hero in the person of Samuel Leibowitz, recently returned from Decatur, Alabama, where he defended the first of nine Negroes being retried in the notorious Scottsboro case. Leibowitz, well known lawyer, who gave his services free to the accused youths because, he says, he believes them innocent, was met at the train by a big crowd of Negroes. He was carried aloft on their shoulders to his waiting taxicab, and later 3,000 of them staged a parade in his honor, battling police when they tried to end the demonstration.

. Back in Alabama another lawyer was being honored, too. He is Solicitor Wade Wright, who prosecuted the Negroes and won a verdict of guilty against Heywood Patterson, key man in the two-year old attack case. But those who feted Wright were Whites, and they commended him for "upholding the dignity of the White race" and "resisting outside influences."

Here are two incidents which illustrate how badly racial issues beclouded the Scottsboro case. And difficult as it was to find the path of justice through evidence that was years old, through racial and political prejudice, through stories that were contradictory and dubious, it is hard for most of us to accept the verdict that has come out of Decatur as a just one. It is hard indeed to believe that Patterson and his eight companions are "guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." And it is a terrible thing to put nine youths to death for a crime of which they may be innocent.

Most of all, it is lamentable that such a trial could not be held without the iniection of race intolerance. of bigotry and unfairness. When Solicitor Wright charged that witnesses were being bought "with New York Jew money" he unquestionably overstepped the bounds of fairness. When he declared again that "there isn't much difference between these Jews and the Niggers they are defending" he went far out of his way to insult two great races, races that have contributed fully their share to the world's poets and musicians, statesmen and scientists. Again, when he ridiculed an Alabama white youth for testifying for the defense and for coming forward to help Leibowitz, he appealed directly to the racial prejudices of the jurors. "We'll call him Carterinsky after this," he said, sneering at the witness, whose name is Carter.

Such evidences of intolerance sicken and saddend Americans who like to believe their country is educated and advanced enough to be above race hatreds. Certainly we can't look down upon Hitler and his Nazis so long as our own Southland demonstrates that it can be just as shortsighed, just as unfair.

No one is trying to tell Alabama how to conduct its affairs; what the real merits of the case are we do not know, but the methods used in gaining a conviction were certainly unjust. If these nine youths are guilty of assault, and if under Alabama law the penalty for such assault is death, let them suffer that penalty. But how can it be determined that they are guilty unlesss they are given a trial free of blind racial prejudices, of appeals to hate instead of to reason? It can't, and the world will never accept such a guilty verdict so long as conditions that prevailed at Decatur continue to hold sway in the South.

ALABAMA AND CONSTITUTION

Supreme Court Rulings Against Exclusion of Negroes From Jury Service

To the Editor of The Republican:—

That the exclusion by the prosecution and the presiding judge of Negroes from the jury box in the re[illegible]r criminal assault at Decatur, Ala., resulting in the conviction of Patterson for first-degree murder, constitutes a clear and open violation of the 14th amendment to the federal constitution is most convincingly proved by a New York Times correspondent, Wilbur Stammler of New York, who quotes the following decisions by the supreme court of the United States in substantiation of his claim that "the supreme court has held in several cases that the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury duty deprives a Negro tried, convicted and sentenced to death (as was Patterson at Decatur) by such jury of his life without due process of law."

Prominent among the high court's decisions on the point of Negro-exclusion from jury service, Mr Stammler quotes from the subjoined rulings: Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, a case in which a Virginia judge was convicted of violating a federal statute which provided that "no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any state, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." This statute is still in force and is now section 44 of title 8 of the United States code annotated. Likewise, in Strauder against West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, one Strauder, a Negro, was convicted of murder in West Virginia and duly sentenced to death. He appealed to the supreme court of the United States on the ground that by the laws of West Virginia no Negroes were eligible for jury service. The supreme court of the United States reversed Strauder's conviction and declared that the 14th amendment to the constitution of the United States prohibited racial discrimination in the selection of jurors. And again, in the case of Carter against Texas, 177 U. S. 442, an identical ruling was made by the high court with respect to Negro exclusion from the jury box.

Thus it will be seen, as the Times's correspondent has so abundantly and exhaustively demonstrated, that the supreme court of the United States cannot fail to reverse the Patterson verdict, order a retrial and doubtless even a change of venue to some other county in Alabama, where Negroes are not excluded from the jury and where the 14th amendment is obeyed, instead of openly violated and flouted as in Decatur.

NEGRO TRIALS IMPROVED IN SOUTH, Dr. ASKEW SAYS

Scottsboro Case Not All It Should Be, But At Least It Is Not Lynching, Hackensack Negro Leader Cites, Hopefully

By JOSEPH A. WALSH JR.

In spite of the result, thus far, in the Scottsboro, Ala., case, involving 7 negroes, conditions are improving in the Southern states' handling of trials of Negroes involved in crimes against white women, believes Dr. E. F. Askew colored Hackensack dentist.

"In Alabama where the trial of the seven Negroes is taking place white justice is taking a formal course instead of the usual lynching which follows in a case of this sort in other southern states", Dr. Askew said.

Although a Negro himself, Dr. Askew has assumed a rather liberal attitude in the case. In all fairness to his own race he said he believes that the prosecuting attorney was set to send the seven men to the gallows by disregarding the statement made by one of the white girls involved in the case at the second trial.

"Of course there are circumstances upon which I base my conclusion," he said, "the Northern press stories which I have been reading lead me to such conclusions.

"One man has been sentenced to death. The Negro populace of the country plans to take the case to the Supreme Court, but I doubt if the men would go free if that body should act favorably.

"The white man in the south hates the Negro. Education handed down through generations has inflamed his hatred, but, if you were to ask him why he hates the colored race, he could not answer you.

"This hatred must persist until the South can be persuaded by liberal-minded people to lay aside their predujices and treat the working Negro class the same as any other human being."

Reactionary Negro Paper Falsifies Criticism on South

Daily Worker 6-10-33 New York

N. Y. "Age" Distorts Daily Worker Article to Knife Scottsboro Defense

By SENDER GARLIN.

THE New York "Age", a reactionary Negro weekly, in its issue of June 10, quotes from an article which appeared in the Party Life column of the Daily Worker on May 31 under the head, "Errors of the Party in the South on the Negro Question."

The "Age" is owned by Fred R. Moore, reactionary republican leader in Harlem and former New York Alderman. It was Moore who several months ago told a workers' committee which asked him to protest the Scottsboro lynch verdict that "I am quite comfortably situated and have no fear of lynch mobs coming to my office in Harlem." Cynically, he told the committee that "he wasn't interested."

Written by Jim Mallory, editor of the Southern Worker, the article in the "Daily" had called attention to serious opportunistic mistakes which had been made in the South, and told of the energetic fight being made by the Communist Party against these tendencies.

Crude Distortions

A comparison of the original article in the Daily Worker with the article in the "Age" shows the dastardly method used to poison the minds of the readers of this Negro paper against the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense, outstanding fighters for the rights of the Negro people.

What is the method?

It is simply to quote the "damaging" references made by Comrade Mallory to the opportunist errors which had been made in the work in the South, and omitting the sharp, categorical criticism of these errors.

For example, the "Age" quotes this paragraph from Comrade Mallory's article:

"In the preparation of leaflets in Birmingham for May Day, 1933, the demands for Negro rights were deliberately omitted from certain leaflets. It was explained that these leaflets were for the eyes of the white workers."

"The Agitprop Commission of the Central Committee condemned these leaflets in the sharpest terms."

The "Age" quotes a paragraph from Comrade Mallory's article, as follows:

"Some white non-Party members in Birmingham suggested a united front ticket for the October, 1933, city elections. They believed that such a ticket would be highly successful, on condition that all nominees be white. It is neither surprising nor scandalous that white workers in the heart of the South, without previous contact with our movement, should make such a suggestion. What is highly scandalous, is that many of the leading comrades in the district favored the concession."

The "Age," in line with its determination to distort this Communist criticism of inexcusably wrong actions into a justification of these actions, fails to quote the sentence which follows immediately after:

Finally, the "Age" deliberately omits Comrade Mallory's statement that "race prejudice and the oppression of the Negroes have been among the chief factors in making the Southern working class, white and Negro, the most oppressed group in the country. To bow before this prejudice is the most terrible treachery, not only to the Southern Negroes, but also to the Southern white workers."

Hinder Boys' Defense

The purpose of the New York "Age" in reprinting this article—and in garbled form at that—is made clear in the very first paragraph which says:

"The Communists, who are making so much capital out of the Scottsboro Case in the hope of recruiting Negroes in cities and towns above the Mason-Dixon line are at the same time guilty of racial discrimination."

Knifing the Scottsboro defense—this is the reason for this vicious article.

LENIN, the great leader of the Proletarian Revolution, in discussing the question of self-criticism, wrote:

"The attitude of a political party towards its errors is one of the most important and surest criterions of the party, and of how it fulfills in practice its obligations towards its class and towards the laboring masses. To admit a mistake openly, to disclose its reasons, to analyze the surroundings, which created it, to study attentively the means of correcting this mistake—these are the signs of a serious party, this means a performance of its duties, this means educating and training the class and consequently the masses."

VICTORIA PRICE MAY CHANGE TESTIMONY

Afro-American

Alabama Rumor Now Is that She Will Follow Ruby Bates.

6-17-33

NO ONE WOULD BE LEFT TO ACCUSE

Baltimore, Md.

The Trial Could Go on Just the Same.

Staff Correspondence

HUNTSVILLE, Ala.—The AFRO-AMERICAN learned this week on what is regarded as good authority that when the seven Scottsboro boys charged with attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on an Alabama train near Paint Rock, are again put on trial, neither Miss Bates nor Victoria Price will appear against them.

Victoria Price, the informant says, may follow the example of Ruby Bates and recant her former testimony that six of these boys criminally assaulted her. Ruby Bates, it will be recalled, has already testified that the whole story was a frame-up concocted by Victoria Price to keep them from spending a term in Alabama jails.

State's Last Prop

If Victoria Price fails to appear against the boys or goes on the stand and changes her testimony, it will knock the last prop from under the Alabama prosecution's case.

In all of the testimony produced by the prosecution there were but three eye witnesses to the alleged crime. They were the two girls, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, and a white boy companion, named Ovilie Gillis. It was Gillis whom Victoria Price testified sat in the car while the twelve men assaulted her and Miss Bates. It was he who, she said, was going to remain there with them or die.

In none of the cases has Gillis appeared to corroborate the story of Victoria Price, while Miss Bates has repudiated the whole thing as a fabrication. If, therefore, Victoria Price drops out of the picture or comes back a changed witness as did Ruby Bates, the seven boys yet to be tried will face court without a principal prosecuting witness.

Afro-American 6-17-33 Baltimore, Md.

Important Effect

That repudiation of her own story told in the two trials by Victoria Price would have an important effect on the case of the eight boys yet to be tried, is certain.

Those who have studied Attorney-General Thomas J. Knight's attitude towards the recent Ruby Bates testimony are of the opinion, however, that it will not cause that Dixie prosecutor to abandon his effort to send the Scottsboro boys to the electric chair.

The attitude of the prosecution at the Decatur trial was that the rape had been committed and that there was enough testimony in the record of the Scottsboro trial to convict the boys without further testimony. Even if Victoria Price repudiates her story now they will probably attempt to establish the guilt of the boys by a cross-examination designed to show that "Jew money from New York" has tried to buy more Alabama justice.

If this position is taken and paraded before an Alabama jury it is still within the realm of possibility that such a jury would again bring in a verdict of guilty despite any change in testimony Victoria Price might make.

May Grasp Chance

On the other hand there are those close to the Alabama situation who believe that the governor and other officials in that state would grasp a chance to drop the "hot brick" which the case has become. Nothing has happened to the prestige of the South since the Civil War that had pricked so deeply into their flesh as the Scottsboro case.

Bankrupt

In addition to this, the state is pratically bankrupt and the possibility of having to spend thousands of dollars on cases which they know may be sent back and back again for retrial is galling. At the Decatur trial nothing seemed more in evidence than that Alabama prosecution, as long as it is headed by Thomas J. Knight, would never consent to square that state's jury system with the U. S. Constitution by including colored citizens on its panels.

They fear the formidable spirit of organization that is making itself felt and that if ever the South recedes one inch on the race question, the whole Dixie structure will crumble. At the Decatur trial Knight could have easily circumvented the Supreme Court fight by including one colored citizen on the jury panel and striking him off if he were drawn for service. But this was unthinkable to him.

The Present Status

That there are at least two well defined moves to bring about a compromise disposition of the Scottsboro case, the AFRO-AMERICAN also learned this week. One of these movements is to persuade the International Labor Defense to co-operate with a plan to secure a new defense personnel.

Some of the most influential men and organizations in the country are now at work on an effort to bring this about, it is learned, and William L. Patterson, secretary of the International Labor Defense will be approached, if he has not already been, by a formidable proposition of this kind this week.

Another group, either representing the Interracial Commission or leaders of this trend of leadership, are advocating giving Alabama a chance to pull her own self out of the hole in which this case has gotten her. They say that with an Alabama lawyer, or a lawyer acceptable to Alabama, there would be a good chance of freeing the boys.

I.L.D. Sitting Tight

The International Labor Defense leaders, however, are not disposed to turn the defense of the boys, in its present stage, over to any other group. It may be possible, it is said, to work out the question of counsel personnel, but they regard the collateral issues too important to stop the fight along the broad front they have launched.

Another fact which disinterested observers see, and which may scotch any compromise movement, is that the main objective of the I. L. D. is to solidify and widen its organization throughout the country. This case has given them an excellent opportunity to do this. They are not now likely to fade, of their own accord, out of the pic-

BLOW AT RACIAL PEACE

(Chattanooga News)

Interference by the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro case has had other bad effects than that of substituting the hysteria of propagandists for the calm consideration of justice. It has hampered considerably, the work of Southern men and women who are working for better relations between the races.

From the very first of the Scottsboro case, the Alabama Interracial Commission has sought to secure justice. After the first trial the Commission passed a resolution saying in part: "We hope to see a careful review of these cases in the courts, that all lingering doubts may be cleared up, if possible, and each of the accused may be dealt with on the basis of ascertained guilt or innocense." Such men as Dr. Henry M. Edmonds, pastor of the Independent Presbyterian church, of Birmingham; Dr. C. B. Glenn, superintendent of the public schools of Birmingham; Mr. Robert M. Jemison, Jr., banker, of Birmingham; Prof. Robinson Brown, of the University of Alabama, and the Rt. Rev. William G. McDowell, bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Alabama, signed the resolution.

Then the I. L. D. began inflaming Northern opinion against the South and began working to make a cause celebre of the case. James D. Burton, former secretary of the Inter-racial Commission of Alabama and Tennessee, and now secretary of the Tennessee Commission, has summed up, in the Christian Century, the bad effects of I. L. D. action on race relations in the South.

1. Alien influences now overshadow the local leaders interested in racial justice, and thereby have put these leaders in an embarrasing position. This applies particularly to the situation confronting white leaders of the better class who have not only the difficulty of handling race prejudice, but criticism, misunderstanding and interference from other parts of the country.

2. This outside influence is working hard to discredit the natural Negro leadership, by which I mean the ministers, teachers and professional people of that race.

3. More serious than it appears on the surface is the unhappy position in which Southern Jews are placed by the fact that the defense is employing almost exclusively New York Jews with Russian names to handle their cases here in the South. This is beinning to accomplish what certain groups here could never accomplish, but which they now have the satisfaction of seeing accomplished, namely, the irritation of the better class of Southern people and the consequent arousing of all the latent anti-Semitism which Gentiles potentially have.

4. This is not only giving the radical group a perfect chance to serve their purposes and spread their propaganda, but also plays directly into the hands of Southern political demagogues who make the position of the best people in the South, both white and negro, extremely uncomfortable.

5. There is a breaking out afresh of intersectional bitterness which is to be deplored.

For fourteen years, the Alabama inter-racial Commission, like those of other Southern States, has worked on education, health, child welfare, law and order, and in other lines to foster amicable relations between the races. Southern white men, of the educated type, understand the problems arising between the races better than do men of the North.

For the good of inter-racial relatins as well as for the cause of justice in the Scottsboro case, we again express the hope that the I. L. D. will be forced to withdraw from the picture.

SCOTTSBORO BOYS FLOGGED IN CELL, I.L.D. IS TOLD

Daily Worker 6-10-33

NEW YORK.—A report that the nine Scottsboro boys now confined in the Jefferson county jail in Birmingham, Ala., are "being flogged daily" has reached the national office of the International Labor Defense. The source of the information cannot be divulged for obvious reasons.

The report said that they are kept in a small cell and not permitted to see visitors, or even communicate with the outside world. Every device is used by the prison authorities to prevent any intimation of their ill-treatment from leaking out.

Protest Wired.

Immediate demand that this vicious mistreatment of the Negro boys be stopped at once, and they cease being held incommunicado were made in a telegram to the warden of the prison by Frank Spector, assistant national secretary of the I. L. D.

The telegram follows:

Learn prison guards torture, flog otherwise brutally mistreat Scottsboro boys continued Birminghm jail International Labor Defense demands you immediately order vicious illegal attacks these nine innocent boys stopped stop Demand remove punish guards guilty these inhuman cruelties stop Holding you responsible well being health lives these nine boys."

A similar demand was sent to Gov. B. M. Miller of Alabama.

Spector also instructed Gen. George Chamleee, chief of the I. L. D. Scottsboro legal defense corps to make an immediate demand he be allowed to visit the boys.

At the same time, all I. L. D. districts and branches, liberal organizations, trade unions and others were called upon to rush telegrams of protest to Governor B. M. Miller, Montgomery, Ala., and to the warden of the jail at Birmingham.

Hearings Approach.

News of the vicious persecution of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys was revealed as preparations are under way for arguments on a motion for a new trial June 22 on behalf of Haywood Patterson, convicted and sentenced to death again after his recent Decatur, Ala., retrial. Judge James E. Horton, who presided over the retrial which resulted in the lynch-verdict, will hear the arguments at Athens, Ala.

The next day, at Decatur, Judge B. L. Malone is scheduled to conduct juvenile court hearings in the case of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, the two youngest of the Scottsboro boys. These proceedings will take place at Decatur.

Scottsboro March In Washington Today; To Present Demands

New York N.Y.

2,000 from Washington Alone Expected to Join Parade; Delegates Arriving

Fight for Scottsboro Boys, "Bill of Civil Rights," Chief Demands of Marchers

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Two thousand Negro and white workers living in Washington will tomorrow take part in the parade, through the capital, of the "Free the Scottsboro Boys Marchers", it was announced here today by the Washington Scottsboro Action Committee.

The largest section of the marchers is expected to leave Monday morning from Baltimore in trucks and buses, and arrive in Washington in the afternoon. Several thousand are expected from Baltimore alone.

Meanwhile, a caravan of trucks and automobiles are converging on Washington in preparation for the demonstration and march here tomorrow, when a committee will demand the release of the Scottsboro boys and seek to present President Roosevelt and congress with the "Bill of Civil Rights", aimed to compel the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the U. S. constitution.

Strong Local Support.

The local support behind the march is indicated by the fact that between 2,500 and 3,000 heard Ruby Bates at an overflow meeting at the Mt. Carmel Baptist Church here today. So large was the crowd that an overflow meeting was necessary. Ruby Bates spoke at both meetings, which were held under the auspices of the Washington Scottsboro Action Committee.

NORFOLK, Va.—Thirty delegates from this city will join the Free the Scottsboro Boys March in Washington.

NEW YORK.—Delegations from Chicago, Seattle, El Paso, Cleveland, Atlantic City, Atlanta and many other points, east, west, north and south, will join the mass march to Washington to demand the freedom of the Scottsboro boys according to information received here by the International Labor Defense.

Marchers Leave New York.

NEW YORK.—In 17 large buses, 13 of which were from Harlem, several trucks and a number of private automobiles, nearly 1,000 New York workers left Union Square late Saturday afternoon for the Scottsboro March to Washington.

Due to difficulties in getting sufficient buses and trucks to convey them to the capital, many did not depart until early evening.

More than half of the marchers were unregistered workers who came into Union Square with the necessary funds to pay their share of the trip. This influx of unexpected workers caused the delay of more than five hours, which everyone cheerfully accepted however, seeing that New York was sending a real representation in the fight for the rights of the Negro people.

Arrive Early.

Several hundred workers were in the square two hours before the Harlem contingent was due to arrive. Workers from all over Greater New York, 15 from South Brooklyn, including three Negro women delegates from Women's Council Nos. 45 and 35 from Jamaica and Richmond. The Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union sent 25 representatives and the Food Workers Industrial Union sent seven. The union had been very active in raising food for the march. Bristol, Conn., sent two Negro delegates, and Schenectady, N. Y., sent two Negro and one white worker.

Rain drove the marchers into the Irving Plaza Hall, near Union Square and there they waited for hours, many fearing they might be left behind.

"I certainly want to see that man Roosevelt. I want to tell him you promised us plenty. I left three barefooted children at home and I want the Scottsboro boys cleared. That's why I'm going", declared Mrs. [illegible] Reid, a delegate of the Navy Street, Brooklyn Block Committee.

Alberta Ruffin, who has [illegible] children, and Marie Walker, who has three children, came with Mrs. Reid representing Women's Council 45.

The Spartakus Greek Workers Club and the 51st St. Block Committee brought their own truck into the Square, with over twenty workers going to Washington to carry on their fight. They come from a locality where Negro and white workers have already learned the value of united struggle in rent strikes.

At 2:30 in the afternoon, the committee announced that only 500 would be able to go. A committee of captains met to decide who would have to be left behind. Not a person left the hall, all hoping to go. The selection was made and still they stayed. Later, however, the necessary number of trucks were obtained.

Will Report Wednesday.

NEW YORK. — The Scottsboro marchers who by that time will have returned from Washington, will return to a mass meeting in Rockland Palace, 220 W. 155th St., this Wednesday evening at 8 p. m.

Representatives of the marchers who will describe the events in Washington, and Joseph R. Brodsky, chief counsel of the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro case, will discuss next steps in the fight.

The Scottsboro Case

Justice Levy Contends Decatur Verdict Cannot Stand

To the New York Herald Tribune:

I do not know whether the Negro on trial for his life in the Scottsboro case is guilty or not. The question today is not whether he is guilty but whether he has had a fair trial. The very atmosphere of the courtroom seemed impregnated with prejudice. If the testimony printed in the New York press is correct, and I have a right to assume that it is, then the trial was a travesty on justice, and the verdict cannot stand.

The state's attorney, whose duty it was to prosecute impartially and disinterestedly, himself appeared to be saturated with prejudice which he exuded with almost every sentence. His summation was sufficient in itself to set aside the verdict. And Judge Horton, though an excellent man whose intentions were fair and honorable, should, as matter of law, have decided that the action and remarks of the state's attorney were such as to create prejudice in the minds of the jury, and he should have directed a "mistrial." The jury should then have been discharged and a trial ordered de novo, and in such event the state's prosecutor should have been warned that his unethical and illegal remarks must not be repeated. The latter's action appears to have been absolutely prejudicial to the defendant, and I cannot too strongly criticize it.

Moreover, it has been decided in Strauda vs. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, that where a state neglects or refuses to permit colored men on the jury it is a violation of the Federal Constitution, and that fact itself will compel the Appellate Court to set aside the verdict in that case. The latter question also is similarly involved in the decision of Judge Lowell of Massachusetts, sustaining habeas corpus, which is now the subject of impeachment proceeding against the judge.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Judge James E. Horton acted wisely in halting the trial of those Alabama negroes on charges of attacking two white girls.

The statements attributed to chief defense counsel were entirely unfair and un-called for. His published remarks were an insult to every white man in Alabama, and a slur on the entire South.

When the International Labor Union sends a New York Jew into Alabama to defend negroes and he in turn makes such remarks as have been attributed to him, the negroes cannot expect to profit by it. In fact, it tends to cause unrest all over the South, especially among the negroes.

But the Scottsboro case is Alabama's affair, and we don't propose to take any part in it, other than to join her in resenting the remarks of the New York attorney.

AS TO LEIBOWITZ

To the Editor of The Telegraph:

Mr. Samuel Leibowitz, New York, your most insignificant remarks in the New York paper were read with much surprise that any man of your standing to make such of an ass of yourself by such junk. I am sure Alabama has people much superior to you. I have much regard for New York but must say you have shown less respect for yourself than any Alabama colored lawyer would attempt to do, to try to uphold such a crime regardless of color.

THE SCOTTSBURG ASSAULT CASE

The ire of the thinking populace of the country was raised, and rightly so, several months ago when seven Alabama Negroes, residing at Scottsburg, were tried and sentenced to death for an alleged assault on two white girls while they were "beating a ride" on a freight train.

Later one of the girls, whose mysterious disappearance during the trial, was noted in the press, made the trip all the way from her home in New York state to the southern city to go on the stand and repudiate her confession, declaring that neither she nor her companion were assaulted by the Negroes.

In spite of the newly acquired evidence in the favor of the seven defendants, one of them, a 19-year-old youth, in his second trial gets the death sentence.

What we are concerned with is not the guilt or innocence of the Negroes, although we have serious doubts if the alleged attack ever took place, but with the question of fair play and equal justice to all colors and races.

The writer, a southerner, and residing in that section until he was 30 years old, can testify to the fac tthat color lines are sharply drawn and the man with black skin has little chance for a fair and impartial trial at the hnds of a jury of the opposite race. We say "little chance," for there are cases where jurors are actuated by the impulses of social and moral righteousness and act accordingly. However, in the majority of cases, the convicted Negro is facing a losing battle. Many a white man in the south has committed as heinous crime as any Negro ever attempted and has escaped the gallows and electric chair and sometimes the prison, while a Negro charged with a like offense has to forfeit his life, and in many cases is the victim of mob and lynch law and does not have the right to a trial. That is as unjust as we can imagine. The preponderance of evidence may be in his favor, and yet it has no weight with the jury.

Our opinion is that if the above case had been left in the hands of the eminent jurist who presided at the trial the verdict in the first trial would have been different, for he instructed the jury to not be guided in their deliberations by racial prejudice and to forget color lines and give the prisoners the benefit of the doubt. And yet it appears that they were guided by that very thing.

We have not forgotten the stirring scenes at Roanoke, Va., in 1893 when a Negro assaulted a white woman, he was arrested, taken to jail, the militia were stationed at the jail until midnight to prevent incensed citizens from taking the prisoner out and lynching him; and when it was believed that all danger had passed the militia was withdrawn, and later the mob returned and carried out their purpose, dragging the Negro through the streets of the city, stringing him up to a tree, riddling his body with bullets and pouring kerosene on his body and burning it. In later years, when there was a shakeup in police circles, it was revealed that, following this incident, the right man had surrendered to police, but he was advised to keep it quiet, as one man had been lynched for the crime, and that was enough, or words to that effect.

With all the progress that we have made in tearing down racial barriers, we have quite a journey yet to go. It does not seem possible that in a so-called and loudly proclaimed Christian nation we should still have a condition that militates against the chances of a man or woman having a fair and impartial trial and that either can be sent to the gallows or the electric chair when one may be innocent of the crime charged.

We know that southern Negroes have a mania for attacking white girls and women, and we would not for a moment excuse them where there is evidence sufficient to convict them, but we believe this is one case that will bear the most thorough investigation. The repudiation of confession on the part of one of the alleged victims seems to warrant it. Let's have fair play.

ANOTHER NEGRO CONDEMNED

The Scottsboro Case

Guardian

Manchester England

Clarence Norris, the second of the seven negroes accused of assaulting two white girls on a freight train at Scottsboro, was found guilty by the jury at his retrial on Wednesday at Decatur (Alabama).

The jury had deliberated for over forty hours and brought in their "guilty" verdict despite the fact that Ruby Bates, one of the two white girls in the case, signed a declaration last week that Norris had not attacked her.

Later the judge formally sentenced to death both Heywood Patterson, the negro who was found guilty on Friday, and Norris. He first fixed the date of the electrocution at February 2, but gave a stay of this later, following notice from the lawyers for the defence that they would appeal and would go to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Asked if he had anything to say, Patterson replied: "I am not guilty. I have been sentenced to the electric chair three times for something of which I am not guilty."

Norris said: "I am not guilty of the charge. It was framed against me."—Reuter.

This is the second retrial of the case, which has been the subject of nationwide agitation in the United States.

The Third Trial

Guardian

12-8-33

Manchester England

For the third time Heywood Patterson, one of the seven negro youths charged with assaulting two white girls (Victoria Price and Ruby Bates) in a train at Scottsboro on March 31, 1931, has been found guilty and sentenced to death.

The defence announced that they would ask for a new trial as soon as the Court had formally sentenced Patterson, and that they would carry the battle to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.—Reuter.

An Exchange telegram dated December 5 says that the retrial has been indefinitely postponed.

History of the Case

The assault with which the negro youths were charged was alleged to have been upon two white girls on a freight train in which a mixed crowd of boys and girls were travelling. A quarrel broke out, in which the white youths were said to have been thrown off the train.

The case has been the subject of nation-wide agitation in the United States. The youths have been lying in the death cells of Alabama State prison since April, 1931, and gifts towards their defence have been sent from all parts of the world. Eight were originally sentenced, but on appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court one sentence was reversed on the ground of juvenility.

The execution of the seven youths was originally fixed for May 13, 1931, but the time was extended by the Alabama Supreme Court to afford time for an appeal. The negroes were convicted only after a protracted trial in an atmosphere seething with colour hatred. The affair called forth thousands of protests from all parts of the United States and of the world. Mr. H. G. Wells was among those who signed protests addressed to President Hoover and the Governor of Alabama.

As the result of an appeal the Supreme Court in Washington set aside the death sentences and returned the case to the Alabama court. At the retrial Miss Ruby Bates, one of the white girls who was said to have been assaulted, completely repudiated the evidence she had previously given.

In spite of this evidence, Heywood Patterson, who was the first of the negroes to be retried, was again found guilty and sentenced to death. The judge, however, came to the conclusion that a fair trial could not be obtained in the court at Decatur, and the trial was "indefinitely postponed."

In June this year the death sentence on Patterson was again set aside and a new trial was granted, which opened on November 27.

An I. L. D. Lynching

The temptation to place at the doors of the International Labor Defense the double Alabama lynching this week doubtless is to be resisted, for whatever the provocation, there is never an excuse to keep the law from taking its course. The negroes lynched were accused of the murder of a young white woman, and the officers who were spiriting them from Tuscaloosa to Birmingham appear to have acted in good faith. The lynching followed the attempt of the International Labor Defense to employ counsel to represent Pippen, one of the negroes killed and the rejection of its aid by Pippen's parents had followed.

There have been two cases of interference with the administration of justice in the South which immediately spring to mind in explanation, though, naturally, not justification, of the lynching. The first, naturally, was the conduct of the trial of Heywood Patterson, one of the Scottsboro negroes, by Leibowitz, the New York lawyer who went and described the "bigots" making up the jury. Judge Horton's decision to give Patterson a new trial because of Leibowitz's conduct of the case was a striking vindication of law, which must play no favorites. Then, Federal Judge Lowell, of Boston, took it on himself to deny the state of Virginia extradition papers for a negro accused of murder, the grounds being that no negroes would be on the jury and that he would save everybody the trouble of appealing the case to the United States Supreme Court.

All this, we may assume, was not in the minds of the misguided men who took the law into their own hands Sunday night. But there was no doubt a feeling that the law was being impeded by activities of outsiders, and particularly of the International Labor Defense, an organization clearly more interested in stirring up bad feeling between whites and blacks than helping individual negroes. An investigation of the lynching, and punishment of those guilty, is to be hoped from Alabama authorities. But, since Southereners, all these years have been carrying on the fight to end the curse of lynchings, it is time that we warned the I.L.D. and the other professional protesters that it is precisely their interference which is making it difficult for us of this section to achieve our goal. For their opposition to the established processes of low provoke other actions in contempt of the law. It is true that all such actions, whether of I.L.D. lawyers or Alabama lynchers, were brought to a stop.

HULL HOUSE SETTLES THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Hull House in Chicago has become famous throughout the world because of the fact that it is the nucleus for one of the finest adventures in social settlement work undertaken in this generation. It is inseparably connected with the name of Jane Addams, conceded to be one of the foremost of American women, and has become a center of attraction for visitors to the fair during the celebration of the Century of Progress.

But all who have visited Hull House have not come away in a pleasant frame of mind. A case in point is furnished by a well-known Annistonian who was there recently and found that this noted institution was being used for the purpose of stirring up race prejudice and casting aspersions on the courts of this state. The gentleman in question brought back a prospectus of a meeting that was held on September 5 under the auspices of the Chicago Scottsboro Action Committee, reading as follows:

"The purpose of the meeting is to acquaint professional people in Chicago with the facts concerning the conviction of the Scottsboro boys of a crime which no unprejudiced person believes they committed. There is wide-spread feeling that these boys have been convicted not because of the alleged crime of rape but because of the color of their skin.

"Professor Robert Morss Lovett is chairman of the Chicago Scottsboro Action Committee. Speakers for the meeting include Ruby Bates, the principal witness for the prosecution, who at the second trial exposed the frame-up and declared the boys innocent; Mrs. Ada Wright, the mother of the youngest of the boys; Llewellyn Jones, well-known journalist; Thyra Edwards and A. G. Falls, M. D."

It is to be regretted that Miss Addams and her backers should allow the famous Hull House to be used for so partisan a purpose as this meeting probably proved to be. She probably is suffering from that same ignorance of Southern conditions that characterized Lady Perkins, Secretary of Labor, in her famous intimation that the people of this section do not wear shoes. If Miss Addams would come down to Alabama and sit in on one of the hearings of the Scottsboro case, she might conclude, as does Elmer Davis in the August Harper's, that there was no more of racial prejudice in the trial of this case than there was in the notorious Sacco-Vanzetti case in the East, or in the unpardonable race riots of a few years ago in Chicago.

The people of Alabama have an open mind as to the guilt and innocence of the Scottsboro boys, but they resent the exploitation of Ruby Bates and others who were involved in the case by the pink Socialists of the North, and Miss Addams should have studiously avoided becoming involved with this class of our citizenry.

Jolting Alien Law Aid

One of these organizations which make a business of tendering the services of their lawyers to defendants whose rights, because of racial or political prejudice, are supposed to be insufficiently safeguarded, has received a jolt at Leipzig, Germany, where five men, including Ernst Torgler, former Communist party whip in the German Reichstag, are on trial for having set fire to the Reichstag building in February.

At the very moment when the American lawyer arrived the situation was looking particularly dark for the Communist defendant and we imagine that it was with a great deal of self assurance that this attorney made his offer to breast the waves of prejudice and snatch the defendant from the axe of the headsman.

By the same token it must have caused pained surprise when Herr Torgler curtly rejected the services of the American lawyer. He said he was entirely satisfied with the manner in which his own lawyer was handling his case and the alien attorney had nothing to do but cool his heels in the corridors. Perhaps there is something to be said for the existence of a disinterested organization which stands ready to finance the defense of a man who might be in special jeopardy because of prejudice, but we know by experience, here in the South, at least, that the wiser course is always to employ a local attorney. We have no doubt but what the defendants in the Scottsboro case would have been better off if their defense had been left entirely to Southern lawyers. Prejudice has not yet gained such a foothold here in the South, on any ground, but what it would always be possible for a defendant to find competent counsel for the most desperate case.

We are quite prepared to believe that this whole trial at Leipzig is a frame-up to conceal the fact that the Brown Shirts themselves were responsible for the burning of the Reichstag building in order to create a prejudice against the Communists upon whom they place the blame.

But this does not alter the fact that the German people, like those of other countries, would resent the gratuitous intrusion of an alien and it is hoped that, guilty or innocent, Torgler has served a useful purpose by the stand he has taken.

10,000 Protest Frame-Up Case Against Negro

9-6-33

LYNCHBURG, Va.—Ten thousand people, one-quarter of the town's population, attended a meeting Tuesday night and heard Frank Lewis, of the newly-formed Scottsboro Committee of Action, and T. H. Stone, of the International Labor Defense, who spoke on the frame-up of Reginald Leftwitch and the growing oppression of Negro and white toilers. The meeting adopted a Plan of Action to conduct a militant struggle against these conditions.

The unusual size of this meeting can be attributed to the [illegible] of the Negro workers and their white comrades over the frame-up of Leftwitch, who was immediately arrested after he reported finding the dead body of A. B. Coates, a white farmer.

The Negro and white workers were stirred to action by this event. Immediately the newly-formed Scottsboro Action Committee took up the case. They invited a representative of the International Labor Defense, T. H. Stone, who investigated the case and reported that the whole thing was a palpable frame-up.

The Defense Conference held Tuesday night was a big step in the campaign for the release of Leftwitch. Thirty organizations, representing practically the entire Negro population of Lynchburg, rallied around the ILD and its campaign to free Leftwitch, and in support of the Conference held in the local Presbyterian Church. 9-8-33

The ILD plan of action, including concrete steps for building the campaign organizationally and financially, was adopted at this conference and committees elected to begin the work immediately.

The first resolution adopted proclaimed the belief of the conference in the absolute innocence of Leftwitch, demanded a change of venue from lynch-spirit-riddled Rustburg to Richmond where the organiz workers can give more adequate protection to Leftwitch, and demanded that Negroes serve on the trial jury in his case.

Resolutions were also passed demanding the release of the Scottsboro boys and demand the punishment of the Tuscaloosa lynchers.

Heflin Renews Call For A Scottsboro Gang Lynching

Planet 9-16-33

Birmingham, Ala.—An open and direct call for lynching of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys, and for more lynchings, was made in a Labor Day speech by ex-Senator Tom Heflin in Ensley, a steel mill suburb of Birmingham.

"Southern white womanhood is greater than the Constitution," he said, "and if the courts of Alabama can't stop 'nigger' rapists, the white men can and will.

"The Scottsboro niggers are guilty as hell. If it hadn't been for the International Labor Defense and Jew money from New York, they would have been dead two years ago.

"They would have been killed for the crime they committed, and if our courts can't give them what they deserve, the white people of Alabama must see to it that justice is done to them."

The Ku-Klux Klan ex-Senator, who is helping Attorney General Thomas E. Knight in his lynch prosecution of the Scottsboro boys, is special prosecutor for the white landlords against the framed Tallapoosa share-croppers pointed to Tuscaloosa as the "right way to deal with dirty nigger rapists."

He referred to the Scottsboro boys as "filthy, nasty nigger men who raped two innocent white girls," and spoke of Willie Peterson, tubercular Negro veteran framed on murder charges, as "guilty as hell."

SCOTTSBORO CASE.

Much criticism has been heaped upon the Alabama jury which tried and convicted, for the second time, one of the negroes in the famous Scottsboro case. The Columbia, S. C., Record points out that it had "become finally impossible for the negroes to get a fair trial at Decatur and to blame for this fact is not Southern prejudice but the foolish bitterness or bitter foolishness of the man who was their chief of counsel."

The Record praises Judge James E. Horton, who conducted the first trial, for postponing the other trials and goes on to say:

"Concerning the Alabama jury—which was probably much like juries in New York and South Carolina—that convicted Haywood Patterson, first of the negroes to face retrial, the New York Herald-Tribune quoted Samuel L. Leibowitz, New York attorney, as saying:

" 'If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"This statement, reeking of prejudice, was obviously calculated to arouse animosity and resentment. It left the jurors who would have tried the other defendants in no position to give them a fair trial and Judge Horton puts the fact mildly enough when he declared that the accused negroes would be the victims of this statement.

" 'His leading attorney,' the judge said of the second of the defendants called for trial, 'would be a millstone about his neck.' "

Trouble Breeders

If Haywood Patterson, one of the nine negroes charged with assault upon two white women, and convicted for the second time, escapes the death chair, it will not be because he had a good lawyer defending him. If his sentence is changed in any way, it will be in spite of the fact that Samuel Leibowitz was his chief defence counsel.

For commenting on the verdict and the sentence, Leibowitz said of the jury: "If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drop tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it."

The lawyer was talking for the benefit of ignorant souls up North, whose support he covets. He was thinking less about the man he was defending than he was about the publicity he was building through the dirtiest sort of prejudice.

Fortunately some enterprising news gatherer obtained a picture of the jury, and this gives the lie to what Leibowitz says. They appear to us as being men of more than ordinary intelligence, and capable of rendering a just verdict. But the persons the lawyer wanted to reach will not want to believe the truth, so the picture won't matter.

It is such as this that serves to keep the race question alive. The whites and black of the South, if left to work out their own relationship will both be happy with the result. Here in North Carolina, right now, outside influences are injecting a virus calculated in advance to spring a fever.

There has been a question in our mind whether the negro Patterson should have been convicted on the testimony of women, admittedly impure and not altogether reliable, but there has been no doubt as to the integrity and high purpose of the jury that heard the evidence in full.

The Scottsboro Case

The Scottsboro case down in Alabama has resulted in some new sidelights on the very interesting subject of th race question in the south. The case arose about two year ago when the ten ~~Negro men were~~ arrested for assaultin two white girls who were riding on a freight train. Thi crime in Alabama and most of the southern states is punishable by death. The ten were tried, convected and sen suit. The dead wood must be cut away lest the tree perish

ANOTHER VOICE ON SCOTTSBORO

To the Editor of the Evening Post:

Sir—Your editorials on the Scottsboro verdict, while brief, were impartial, fair and complete, but the letter of Mr. J. T. Neal of Thomson, Ga., printed in today's Post, contains "another point" which is not well taken. Is his distinction between Negroes of a low type and those who are good citizens drawn by Southerners in every case where a colored man is spurlos versenkt? Are there no "rowdy criminal" whites? How many convictions have there been in Georgia or Alabama since Reconstruction of white men for attacks on colored females or for the wanton murder of Negroes? If there really are good citizens among the Negroes, why are they not allowed to vote or to serve on juries?

What is a "low type" anyhow? I assume that the proof of the infallibility of Southern judgment of type is the inevitable conviction by a prejudiced white jury, death in the lyncher's noose or failure to survive a pot-shot.

While Mr. Neal is pragmatically voicing a merely local hypocrisy, the unfortunate part of the situation is that the United States loses its national prestige because of the conditions in the South and the feebleness of our excuses for them. How strong an effect can our protests against rampant prejudice and oppression in other countries be when we fail to suppress these evils in our midst?

Scottsboro March Committee at the White House Today

Daily Worker
5-2-33 New York, N.Y.

Call to Arrange Presentation of Bill of Civil Rights to Roosevelt May 8

NEW YORK.—A committee will call at the White House today for the purpose of making an appointment with President Roosevelt to meet representatives of the Scottsboro Marchers on May 8, who will present the Bill of Civil Rights demanding the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments, at the same time calling for the immediate release of the Scottsboro boys.

The committee which will call upon Louis Howe, secretary to Roosevelt, is composed of Frank Spector, assistant secretary of the International Labor Defense; Maud White, of the Trade Union Unity Council of New York; Samuel Patterson of the Carribean Union; Rev. James W. Brown of Grand United Order of Odd Fellows; Rev. J. W. Brown of the Mother Zion Church and treasurer of the National Scottsboro Action Committee; William N. Jones, editor of the Baltimore Afro-American, and Elinor Mish, of Hagerstown, Md.

In connection with the Scottsboro march, the program of action includes:

1. Telegrams to pastors of leading Negro churches, asking them to urge their congregations to join the march. The telegrams declare that "attacks upon the Scottsboro boys in their cells, covered by a false charge of 'mutiny', make quick action essential."

2. Designation of May 2 and as "Scottsboro days". A house to house canvass will be made in Harlem and other sections to recruit marchers and secure food and supplies for the trek.

3. Sending a delegation of prominent Negro and white intellectuals to Washington, D. C., early this week to arrange with President Roosevelt for an appointment with representatives of the marchers on May 8.

4. Securing marchers and support from the hundred odd organisations represented in the National Scottsboro Action Committee.

An Appeal for Funds in Scottsboro Case

Editor, The Pittsburgh Press:

ON APRIL 9, an all-white jury filed into the Decatur courtroom. With grins on their faces, they delivered a verdict of legal lynching for Heywood Patterson, first of nine Negro Scottsboro boys to be tried on framed charges.

This was the verdict asked for by Wade Wright, Morgan County solicitor, and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., of Alabama, who disregarded all the testimony presented and demanded a verdict, based solely on sectional, racial and religious prejudice and hatred.

The other eight boys were taken to Birmingham for safe-keeping as mobs of farmers jammed the town, lynch-gangs came in from Scottsboro, Huntsville and other sections.

Returning from Alabama, Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief trial counsel, said, "I want to say that had it not been for the International Labor Defense, those nine boys would be in their coffins now, buried back of the county jail."

Friends of the Scottsboro boys say, "Now this fight is only beginning." Certainly it needs renewed strength. The appeal from the lynch verdict (for which the record alone will cost above $5,000), the preparation of defense of the other boys, must go forward.

We call on every one of your readers to send whatever money they can and send it quickly to Scottsboro New Trial Emergency Fund of the International Labor Defense, Room 430, 80 East Eleventh Street, New York City.

Sincerely,
WILLIAM L. PATTERSON,
National Secretary International Labor Defense

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE AND THE NEGRO QUESTION

The verdict "guilty as charged," with the punishment fixed at the electric chair" which was handed down in the Decatur courtroom against Haywood Patterson, the first of the Scottsboro boys to be retried, has electrified the world. The storm of protest was immediate and spontaneous.

The issues raised so dramatically at the trial in Decatur, Ala., [illegible] dealt with the Negro question. These are with the Negro suestion. These are THE AMERICAN NEGRO and NEGRO LIBERATION, both written by James S. Allen, special Daily Worker correspondent at the Decatur trial, and selling at 10 cents a copy.

There are two additional pamphlets dealing with specific aspects of Negro oppression. LYNCHING, by Harry Haywood and Milton Howard, traces the causes of lynching and suggests how to fight it. It sells at 5 cents a copy. THE CHAIN GANG, by John L. Spivak, describes the conditions he found on personal investigation of the chain gangs and road stockades in Georgia.

4-1-33

New York

DECATUR, Ala., Mar. 29. (By Mail). —The nine Negro boys sit along the wall behind the defense lawyers' table. In their corner is a window which opens out on the lawn. Here spring is far advanced, the trees bear young leaves, the grass is rich green.

Haywood Paterson has been singled out for the first attack by the prosecutor when the trials begin on Thursday. He is a rather tall, lanky boy. He sits by the window gazing continually at the spring world outside from which he has been shut out now for two years.

Within arm's length of him stand two guardsmen, also young boys, barely out of their teens. They come from another world and represent the state power which is seeking to throw the electric-charred bodies of nine Negro boys into the face of the entire world.

The nine boys feel at home thruout the whole court proceeding. They chat easily with each other, laugh heartily when the defense makes a good point—and that is very often. They read the newspapers eagerly. In their whole bearing is that same confidence which brings hundreds of Negroes to the courtroom everyday, which brought Negro witnesses from Scottsboro and Jackson County to state openly in court that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service.

THIS courtroom is the nerve center of the whole struggle symbolized by the Scottsboro case. And in these Negro boys we have at one and the same time the intended victims of bourbon supremacy and the defiant reply of the roused toiling masses.

Directly in front of the nine boys sit the attorneys of the International Labor Defense. In them the boys do not see simply extremely capable lawyers who have come to plead their case. They know that behind these lawyers there looms a mass support which circles around the world. They know that not only the 400 spectators in the courtroom, but millions of toilers have their eyes fixed intently on the courthouse in Decatur.

Their whole demeanor, their proud and dignified bearing, their ease, express the power of a movement which has made possible the concentrated and rapid victories being recorded in the courtroom.

MONDAY NIGHT. The first session of court is over. With soldiers in front and back the boys are marched off to the jail. There an old brick jail and flimsy prison bars isolate them from the defense table, from the public gaze.

Gen. G. W. Chamlee, defense attorney of the I. L. D., talking with one of the Scottsboro boys outside the Morgan county courthouse upon the arrival of the defendants from the Birmingham county jail, to which they had been brought from the death cells in Kilby prison.

The first night in the Decatur jail, the boys know that the jail is weak. They have read that the jail is no longer used for prisoners—only for "niggers"—because it is so easy to get out of. They know that the sheriff gave as his reason for calling troops—to prevent a "jail break."

If it is so easy to get out of this jail, it is still easier for others to get in .....

The boys pace nervously around their cell all night. No one gets a wink of sleep. Roy, the youngest of the boys, is the most restless. They try the bars. They stamp on the floor for hollow space below. They measure with their eyes the 10 feet from the cell window to the ground. They examine the wood to see how easily kindled it can be.

The examination makes them still more nervous. For they pace the floor the whole night, now and then sitting down to read, addressing a few nervous remarks to each other.

For here in the jail house, in the dark of night, the rest of the world which is theirs is dimmed, is not so apparent, seems far away. Much closer seems the bourbon south and lynch rage; much closer the rage of those who have accepted as unalterable principle the doctrine of white supremacy, which is being so openly challenged.

(The dapper captain of the guards who told me how the boys spent the night ascribed it to their investigation of the possibilities for escape. This trim little captain missed the point. One wonders whether he will miss the point when it may become a matter of life or death for the Scottsboro boys).

BUT the next morning the boys are again smiling and self-confident in the courtroom behind the defense table, even more joyful, for with every hour of the proceedings, victories are being won for them.

And the next few days will decide the balance will determine which side is stronger and shape the course of events.

Ruby Bates Now Sees Life With Worker's Eyes

Daily Worker

NEW YORK.—The forces that have made of the Scottsboro case a symbol of the national oppression of 12,000,000 Negro people has also opened the eyes of Ruby Bates to the conditions which involved her in the case and made her for a time the unwilling pawn of the Southern landlords in their attempt to murder nine innocent Negro boys.

An interview with her today revealed a far different Ruby Bates from the one who was pulled off a freight train two years ago bumming her way. Today as she spoke of her life she saw the things that happened to her with the eyes of a worker conscious of class forces around her.

New York, N.Y.

"Before the first trial," she said, "I used to think of having to go into the mills so young (she was fifteen when she began to work on the night shift) and about all the people having to work so hard and getting practically nothing for it."

She used to wonder, she said before the trial, "what could be done, I did not know there was anything."

"I had to work under the boss and his place was so much higher than I was," "I was considered poor white trash."

"But now," said Ruby her eyes shining, "now I understand that if all people would all work together instead of against each other it would help everybody." And to make sure that the reporter did not misunderstand whom she meant by "everybody" she said "I guess it wouldn't help the bosses but it would help all the workers." When Ruby said "all people working together" in her mind must have been the dawning lesson of the force of Negro and white unity that held back the lynchers hand when the Scottsboro boys faced death.

Ruby Bates has grown out of bitter soil. She had only a mother and a younger sister and a brother too young to work. When she was still in the fifth grade in school she was already slaving in a cotton mill for $2.75. Sometime, "we didn't know how much we was gettin' because the mill store took it all up." Her mother also worked and got $3 a week.

When she aspired to a better job and life she found the greedy hand of capitalism followed her and drove her to prostitution.

"Down where I live you learn shorthand at college. The bank runs it. You can go to school for two years and they guarantee you a job afterward, but they work you and take all your money except $3 a week," she continued.

She [illegible] with all her being she

Ruby Bates, who denied that either she or Victoria Price were attacked by the Scottsboro boys, when she appeared as a star witness in the trial of Haywood Patterson, part she played in the Scottsboro case. "I feel like its something I've got to live down."

And with the same courageous spirit with which she defied the Alabama lynch gangs to testify in Decatur that neither she nor Victoria Price has ever been attacked by the Scottsboro boys said, "I feel like I made up some by telling the truth in the second trial but I'm still willin' to make up some more."

Tomorrow evening marks her first active part in rallying support to the boys she so inadvertently harmed. She will speak at a mass send-off meeting to Scottsboro marchers at the St. Nicholas Arena, 66th Street and Columbus Ave. Ruby Bates has herself become a symbol

SOUTH MAY CHANGE ITS JURY PROCEDURE

PENAL REFORMS SOUGHT

Burns, Scottsboro and Crawford Cases Focus Attention on Both Systems.

By VIRGINIUS DABNEY,

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

RICHMOND, April 27.—Action of United States District Judge James A. Lowell of Boston in thwarting the efforts of Virginia and Massachusetts to bring to trial a Negro suspected of a double murder in the Old Dominion, has served to focus public attention once more on the fact that Negroes are seldom called for jury service below the Potomac. It was on the ground that the Negro sought for trial in Virginia would be tried by a jury of whites, and that his trial would therefore be pronounced illegal by the Supreme Court, that Judge Lowell declined to permit his extradition.

Remembering the recent attack on the Southern jury system by defense counsel in the Scottsboro case, and the somewhat less recent action of Governor Moore of New Jersey in refusing to extradite Robert E. Burns to Georgia, because of the allegedly inhuman treatment he would receive on a chain gang there, the South is doing some soul-searching.

Loose Talk Deplored.

Those who view the action of Judge Lowell objectively deplore the abuse which he has received from certain Southern sources. They point out that whereas the Boston jurist apparently went outside his proper province when he attempted to forecast the action of the Virginia authorities and the attitude of the Supreme Court he stated specifically that he had no "doubt the defendant would get a fair trial in Virginia."

Although believing strongly that the district judge erred in refusing to send the Negro George Crawford back to Virginia, they deplore the public expression by a Richmond lawyer of the opinion that among Judge Lowell's ancestors "were plenty of Southern carpet-baggers"; nor do they feel that anything is to be gained through such unrestrained denunciations as that indulged in by Representative Dies of Texas, who stated that the judge displayed "a venom and prejudice unparalleled in the judicial history of this or any other country." These statements from Southerners were matched by Representative Luce of Massachusetts, who said on the House floor that "to send a Negro back to Virginia for trial would be like sending a Jew to Germany."

Negroes Rarely Called.

It is true that Negroes are not often called for jury service in Virginia, except in the Federal courts, but it cannot be assumed that when a Negro is tried in Virginia the jury is certain to be entirely white.

However, the Crawford episode has brought many Virginians and other Southerners to a realization that something probably will have to be done about the Southern jury system. The opinion seems to prevail that the Supreme Court would reverse the latest Scottsboro conviction on the ground that there were no Negroes on the jury, and now the action of Judge Lowell has tended to confirm that view.

The attitude of many thoughtful Southerners toward the situation which has been precipitated by the Scottsboro and Crawford cases is that it would be wise for Southern courts to begin calling Negro jurors from time to time. Some fifteen or twenty years ago this was done in the Richmond Hustings Court, for example, and with satisfactory results. The Richmond News Leader has the following to say of the existing situation:

"Failure to call Negroes for jury service in the South will produce more and more complications as time goes on. The second trial of the Scottsboro case probably has marked an epoch in this respect. Increasingly it will be contended that white juries are prejudiced against Negro prisoners in cases involving alleged crimes against white women. This, in turn, may increase the difficulties of extraditing Negroes who escape into Northern States. To avoid this, the fair and prudent course, in our opinion, is to remove the cause of complaint by using Negro jurors on occasion."

As for the final adjudication of Judge Lowell's action, there is apparent confidence in legal and judicial circles here that the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, to which the decision has been appealed, will bring in a reversal.

Possible Changes Seen.

The more level-headed observers are deploring the abuse that has been indulged in by both sides. There was similar recrimination in connection with the Burns case last December, when the Governor of New Jersey refused to honor extradition papers of the Georgia authorities. Here is another decision which may set a precedent, for any Northern Governor who is convinced that a Southern State is without an up-to-date penal system may feel at liberty hereafter to decline to send a fugitive South to prison.

In the case of Georgia, the iniquities of the prison system were exaggerated, but William B. Cox, secretary of the National Society of Penal Information, testified at the hearing that "there is no State in the Union where the penal system is as bad as it is in Georgia."

One surmises that Mr. Cox knows whereof he speaks when one considers that so loyal a Southerner as George Gordon Battle joined with Clarence Darrow in petitioning Governor Moore not to extradite Burns.

Thus the past five months have seen the Southern penal systems brought sharply into the spotlight, along with the Southern jury systems. It may be that we are about to witness substantial changes in both of them as a result of the recent episodes

Sad But True

APPEALS to the intelligence of the people are of little avail; the people are reachable thru their emotions, their prejudices and heart interest. Notable cases are the famous Scottsboro, Ala. case and the case of Winnie Ruth Judd of Arizona. Everybody knows that those Negro boys accused of criminal assault on two white female bums and prostitutes were not guilty, or, if guilty, had committed no crime for anybody to get excited about. But appeals to race prejudice make it utterly impossible to get for those Negro boys a fair trial or a fair verdict. On the other hand, one of the foulest murderesses this country has produced is spared the gallows on a plea of insanity. This time the appeal is to the sentiment that a woman should not be hanged.

KEY TO THE VERDICT

To the Editor of The Telegraph:

Newspapers that insist upon wearing the title "Liberal" ought to find plenty to excite and cause to become vocal their liberalism in the latest developments in the Scottsboro case.

After the conviction of one of the eight Negroes, the trial judge has postponed indefinitely the trials of the remaining seven. He declared that a remark by the defense counsel had so prejudiced the cases of the defendants that it would be difficult for them to get justice at the hands of Alabama juries. The remark, made in reference to the jury which convicted the first defendant, is said to have been as follows:

"If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy you would not ask how they could do it."

It is not necessary to argue whether the defense counsel's remark is an exact characterization of the jury which declared Haywood Patterson guilty. Perhaps it did leave out some details. But whether exact or not, it should in reason and in justice have no relation to the question of guilt of the defendants. The lawyer is not on trial. The North is not on trial. Eight Negro youths are on trial for a crime they are charged with having committed. To admit, as the judge has admitted, that a remark by the defendants' lawyer has prejudiced their chance of justice in the courts of Alabama indicates that even the judge recognizes the truth of the assertion by the defense: That Alabama does not want justice for the defendants but wants, rather, their blood.

In fact, no one who has studied carefully the Scottsboro cases can believe that Alabama wants to do justice. Alabama's leading newspapers (including those reputed to be "Liberal"), many of Alabama's leading citizens, Alabama's supreme court, itself, all have affirmed that the first trial was a fair trial and the Negroes guilty. Yet the supreme court of the United States reversed this decision, on grounds which must be considered ample by any mind unblinded by prejudice and disposed to be fair.

At the first of the retrials, the one which led to the counsel's remark, the flimsy nature of the prosecution's case must have been obvious to all. One of the two females admitted that she had previously perjured herself and denied that either had been attacked. Competent physicians testified that physical examinations had revealed no evidence of attack. Thus the prosecution's case rested solely on the testimony of a white female vagrant, a woman with an extensive police record. The prosecution had other "evidence" to offer, other reasons for demanding the lives of eight Negro youths. I quote from an article written by an observer at the trial for The New Republic:

Leibowitz is a great criminal lawyer . . . He seems to know every foot traveled by the girls on the fateful journey, everything they have done in the days preceding the alleged crime. He knows who their boy friends were and what their relations were with the boy friends. He has Victoria Price's police records. He seems to know as much as God. It is more like the dissection of a life than a cross questioning. It is as though one could see the misspent days of Victoria Price shredded to bits. The girl is full of hate and venom! She persistently denies everything, while Leibowitz shreds apart her life with his patient scalpel.

The audience in the courtroom could not forgive him for what he revealed about Victoria Price. But feeling rose to a higher pitch on Friday, the next-to-last day of the trial, when Solicitor Wade Wright made his summation to the jury. He is an enormous man, florid, dark, and during his appeal to the jury he grew so purple and swollen with his emotion that one felt he might at any moment burst and scatter dark blood over the courtroom.

As he shouted and ranted, the feeling which had been hidden, kept down by the fair and humane judge, came out like a punctured boil. As he shouted that "no Alabama jury would listen to witnesses bought with Jew money from New York," you could hear murmurs of approval in the courtroom. Members of the jury leaned forward. Wright was speaking the language of prejudice and hate which everyone wanted, which everyone understood.

There, in a few words, is the key to the verdict in the first trial of the Scottsboro cases—the key to the second conviction of Haywood Patterson—the key to Judge Horton's sensible but futile postponement. In demanding the death of eight Negroes Alabama is "speaking the language of prejudice and hate." It is a language which ought to interest those who pride themselves upon being "Liberals." No genuine Southern Liberal can sit complacently by while a Southern state attempts to take the lives of eight human beings for a crime of which almost certainly they are innocent.

CONGRESS TO GET NEW EQUAL RIGHTS BILL

Nat'l Scottsboro Action Committee Will Submit Measure.

TO PUT TEETH IN AMENDMENTS

Plans for March on Washington Complete

LOUISE THOMPSON

WILLIAM L. PATTERSON

NEW YORK.—A bill to put teeth in the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments has been drawn up by the National Scottsboro Action Committee and will be submitted to Congress by the Scottsboro protest marchers to Washington, May 8, it was announced this week by Louise Thompson, provisional secretary.

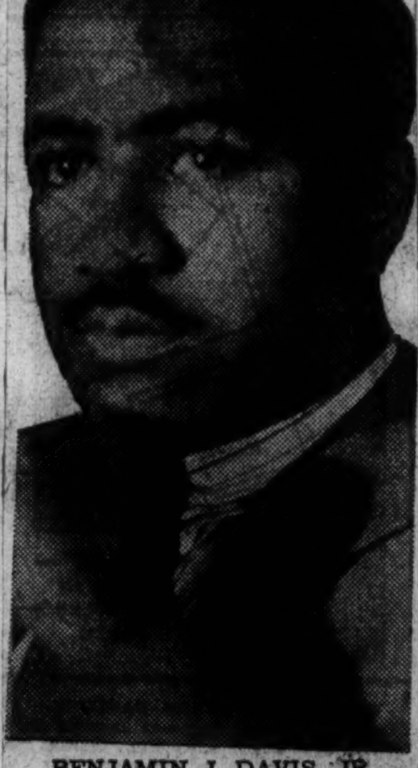
At the same time, the committee announced definite plans for the march, which will present to President Roosevelt a petition of 1,000,000 signatures demanding the "immediate, unconditional, and safe release of the Scottsboro boys."

Davis Heads Body

The plans were worked out by the National Scottsboro Action Committee, appointed Sunday at the conference called by the Scottsboro Unity Defense Committee, to which 65 organizations sent delegates. Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., attorney of Atlanta, Ga., in the Herndon case, is provisional chairman of the conference, with William L. Patterson of the International Labor Defense and Heywood Broun as vice-chairmen.

Bill Has Teeth

The bill proposed by the committee covers the democratic rights of Negroes and white workers relative to voting, jury service, schools and courts. It forbids every form of Jim Crowing or Jim Crow law in vehicles, restaurants, hotels, labor unions, public and private buildings. It makes illegal all color bars in civil service and in the army and navy. It bans all discrimination by private indivduals against Negroes in housing or elsewhere. To enforce this bill, severe penalties and the use of every form o governmental machinery is called for.



BENJAMIN J. DAVIS, JR.

The march plan of the committee calls for the mobilization of marchers in New York, Boston, Jersey City, Newark, Trenton, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Richmond, Norfolk, and Baltimore, thence to converge on Washington, April 28.

Plans for March

Offices set up at 119 West 135th Street, will be used as a recruiting station and post for donation of supplies. Other recruiting stations are: the Harlem office of the International Labor Defense, 77 West 131st Street, and the Harlem Liberator, 2149 Seventh Avenue. Similar offices are being set up in other cities.

Neighborhood committees are being established, each of which is to elect its delegates and provide for their food and transportation. A call has been issued for the loan of hundreds of trucks and passenger cars.

The National Scottsboro Action Committee is composed of such religious, political, and cultural organizatins as the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, the International Labor Defense, the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the Samaritan Rescue Episcopal Church Synod, the Harlem Interracial Forum, the Communist Party, the Order of Moses, the Shoe Workers Industrial Union, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners.

BUTLER OPINION CITED IN REPLY TO LEIBOWITZ

THREE SAID THEY SAW ATTACK

In reply to Samuel S. Leibowitz of defense counsel for the Scottsboro Negroes, who characterized the jurors in the case as "bewhiskered bigots," former residents of Alabama now living here pointed to the dissenting opinion of Justice Butler of the United States Supreme Court, when the case was appealed to that court. He insisted that a fair trial had been held and declared that three of the defendants had implicated their associates.

When the cases of the seven Negroes, now pending with one exception at Decatur, Ala., were before the Supreme Court on appeal after their conviction at Scottsboro, the justices were divided. In the minority opinion of Justices Butler and McReynolds, the following extract under the title of Powell versus Alabama, appears:

"And three defendants each, while asserting his own innocence, testified that he saw others accused commit the crime charged."

Intense Feeling.

The case, which has stirred up intense feeling in the South, in Europe and in New York, and has become something of a communist vehicle, started two years ago. A fight started on a freight train running into Alabama from Chattanooga. The fight was between white and Negro hoboes, the former being forced off the train.

Left aboard the train were the Negroes and two white girls in overalls, Victoria Price, twice married and living apart from her second husband, and Ruby Bates. After word of the fight had been flashed to Paint Rock, a posse was formed and the Negroes were taken from the train and lodged in jail at Scottsboro. The girls said they had been attacked.

Feeling ran high. The militia was called out to preserve order. Indictments were quickly handed up and the trials were held within a week, each one lasting only a day. Heywood Patterson, the oldest Negro, was tried separately. In one group were Ozie Powell, Willie Robertson, Andy Wright and Olen Montgomery; in another, Charley Weems and Clarence Norris, all in their teens. All but Wright, then 13 years old, were convicted and sentenced to death. The jury disagreed as to whether he should go to the electric chair or be imprisoned for life.

To Supreme Court.

About this time the International Labor Defense inserted itself into the case, and an appeal was taken to the Alabama Supreme Court which upheld the lower court, six to one, only the Presiding Justice dissenting. From there the case was carried to the United States Supreme Court, and it is on the minority decision that former residents of the State base their contention that conditions as presented by Mr. Leibowitz and his associates may be in some degree exaggerated.

The judgment of the lower courts was assailed on three grounds: (1) that the defendants did not receive a fair trial, (2) that they were denied the right of counsel with the accustomed incidents of consultation and opportunity for preparation for trial, and (3) that they were tried before juries from which members of their own race were systematically excluded.

In the majority report, only the second point received consideration and the judgment of the lower courts was reversed on this ground. Justice Sutherland, who wrote the report, held that reasonable time had not been given the defendants to obtain counsel, and that they had been stripped of their legal rights.

Butler's Opinion.

Justice Butler, in the dissenting opinion, stated that no such denial had been shown by the record and that, instead of trying the defendants "en masse" the State gave them four trials "and so lessened the danger of mistake and injustice that inevitably attends an attempt in a single trial to ascertain the guilt or innocence of many accused."

The opinion states that the defendants' counsel deserved "much credit for the zeal and diligence they showed on behalf of their clients." It points out that seven justices of the Alabama Supreme Court heard the cases, and that Milo Moody, who helped represent the defendants, was "an able member of the local bar of long and successful experience in the trial of criminal and civil cases."

Reference is made, too, to the "rigid cross-examination of the State's witnesses" and to the fact that "defense counsel was at all times in touch with the defendants and their people." Also that "there is not the slightest ground to suppose" that the defense counsel was by fear or in any other manner restrained from full performance of their duties.

"When the first case was called for trial the defense attorneys had already prepared and then submitted a motion for a change of venue with supporting papers," the opinion continues. "They were ready to and did at once introduce testimony of witnesses to sustain that demand.

'Evidence Was Ample.'

"They had procured and were ready to offer evidence to show that the defendants Roy Wright and Eugene Williams were under age. The record shows that the State's evidence was ample to secure a conviction. And three defendants, each while asserting his own innocence, testified that he saw others accused commit the crime charged.

"When regard is had to these and other disclosures which may have been and probably were made by petitioners to the defense counsel before trial, it would be difficult to think of anything that counsel erroneously did or omitted for their defense.

"If there had been any lack of opportunity for preparation, trial counsel would have applied to the court for postponement. No such application was made. There was no suggestion at the trial or in the motion for a new trial which they made that the defense counsel were denied that opportunity or that they were not, in fact, fully prepared."

The first of the defendants to be retried was Heywood Patterson, who was convicted in Decatur on Palm Sunday morning and sentenced to death on Monday of this week. Mr. Leibowitz, now active in the defense, charged on returning here, that racial prejudice and bigotry had entered into the verdict. Because of his statements Judge James E. Horton, who was to have presided over the trials of the remaining defendants, directed their postponement on Monday, explaining that Mr. Leibowitz had prejudiced the cases against his clients.

While Justice Butler's view was thus being brought to public attention Mr. Leibowitz, indicated that he might endeavor to bring the issue before the United States Supreme Court on the ground of racial discrimination. He said he welcomed the postponement of the trial of the remaining Negroes ordered yesterday by Judge Horton.

The delay, he declared, would "undoubtedly be a blessing to both sides." He emphasized his opinion that Judge Horton was desirous of according all the defendants a fair trial, and in a letter asked the judge that the remaining cases be transferred to Mobile, Ala., where "the Ku Klux Klan is practically extinct."

Meanwhile the International Labor Defense, the communist group which has been active in the defense of the accused Negroes, yesterday issued a statement declaring that the trial had been postponed solely because of the "tremendous world protest against the lynch verdict" against the convicted Negro. Racial Hatreds

"We are a white race and a Negro race here together—we are here to live together. The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because in the great things in life no matter what they are, it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that".

It was an Alabama judge who said that, a white man, a gentleman of the oldest American stock. Judge Horton, in charging the jury, was speaking only of the exhibitions of race prejudice in the course of the trial of the unfortunate Negroes who were convicted of assaulting two white women at Scottsboro, but he might have been speaking for and to all the world.

Not in many years, perhaps not in centuries, have there been such violent outbreaks of racial hatreds as have been manifesting themselves in these troubesome times. In Germany the Nazi government has proclaimed its hatred of the Jews to the point of barring them from almost every phase of the national life. Between the Germans and the Poles hatred is so intense that when the shadow of a German flag, on the Polish border, fell upon Polish soil, there was an indignant protest by the Polish government. The Italian people are developing a new national pride which has racial intolerance as its foundation. And we do not need to point to the racial hatreds which have barred the Orientals from Australia and the United States.

It should be possible for all the peoples of the world to get along amicably, since we are all in the world and can't get out of it. If it proves impossible, then we can see nothing ahead but a return to the Dark Ages, when every man's hand was turned against his brother.

Judge Horton, Chief Lyncher

Daily Worker
4-13-33
New York, N.Y.

WHEN the rabid prosecutor, Wright, delivered his foul tirade against the boy, Haywood Patterson, and resorted to anti-semitism that would have done credit to a Hitler about "Jew money from New York," Judge Horton permitted him to continue. He refused to declare a mistrial Then in a hypocritical manner told the jury to disregard it, only after the dirty work was done. That made the legal record clear!

Judge Horton also restated the creed of the Southern slave holders in his statement to the jury:

> "We live together in peace and tranquility between the white and Negro races . . . but we want to protect the peace and tranquility of our section."

Every lynch fiend understands such language. It means: "We, the Southern masters alone know how to handle our Negroes and we will not tolerate anyone trying to compel us to recognize them as human beings They have no rights we are bound to respect." Every lyncher knows that means to maintain unaltered the policies of jim-crowism, segregation, terror and suppression.

On the most vital question at issue in the trial, the right of Negroes to sit on the jury, Judge Horton by his actions completely threw all the strength of his position on the side of the prosecution. He deliberately permitted the trial to go on with a lily-white jury recruited from the capitalist landlord elements and their hangers-on.

He persistently denied every motion of the defense for a mistrial in the face of the most flagrant violations of even capitalist legal procedure.

Comrade Foster's description of Judge Horton as the "chief lyncher" is accurate and absolutely true.

The statement of Attorney Leibowitz praising the fairness of Judge Horton is belied by the splendid and vigorous fight made by the International Labor Defense whom he represented in the court. The actions of the defense attorneys in the court were directed against the whole legal lynch machinery of the state, Judge Horton as well as the prosecuting attorneys, Knight and Wright.

Attorney Liebowitz can really fight for the lives of the nine Scottsboro boys only by pursuing the line laid down by the International Labor Defense. No other policy can be successful. Every other policy is opposed to the interests of the boys.

Now more than ever it is necessary to carry on the fight along the lines laid down by the International Labor Defense, the line of resourceful legal defense backed and supported by powerful mass actions.

The lives of the Scottsboro boys can be saved. But there is only one thing that can save them. And that is the might of mass actions, the irresistable power of world anger at the murderous frame-up.

Now more than ever to have illusions about the impartiality of capitalist courts is fatal. The Scottsboro boys are alive today only because the protest aroused by the International Labor Defense and the Communist Party was directed against legalistic illusions.

As the struggle for the lives of the boys gets fiercer, the capitalist class pursues the strategy of fostering legalistic illusions of fairness, because it is only in this way that they can dull the vigilance of the people.

The attempt to weaken the onrush of world protest and mass actions in defense of the Scottsboro boys, by fostering the illusion that capitalist courts, particularly southern courts, are impartial tribunals of justice, is in actuality playing directly into the hands of the lynchers.

The International Labor Defense is leading the world protest against the legal lynching of the Scottsboro boys. This protest alone stands between the boys and execution. The toiling people must build the International Labor Defense. Through its leadership alone can the boys be snatched from the fate which the lynch masters have in store for them.

THE ALABAMA CASE

REGARDLESS of whether the girl who has repudiated her former testimony in the assault case of seven Alabama negroes, is telling the truth now or whether she told it before, she has stamped herself as unreliable and as such not to be believed under any circumstances. Consequently, it makes the case of those who fought so hard to save the lives of the seven negroes appear in a better light than at any time since the fight was begun.

In any event, except that prejudice in unusual amounts, appears, it is certain that no jury would doom to death any person on the testimony of any one who could be induced to change their testimony on a subject so vital to every woman, her honor. It is well that the original prejudices were not permitted to stand and the execution of seven men to follow as a result.

Alabama Justice Arouses Liberals.

JUDGE HORTON was fair in his charge to the jury. Neither color, nor race, nor sectionalism, he said, should influence the jurors who heard the evidence and held the life of Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old negro in their hands. They had a right to doubt the veracity of a white girl, admittedly of the underworld, who at the first trial of the youth swore he attacked her, and at the second trial branded herself a perjurer by retracting the accusation.

The "Scottsboro case" has put Alabama justice on the front page. It has been fought for more than two years, not only upon the facts but on the grounds that racial prejudice militated against justice. The intense feeling may be understood by the statement issued after the trial by defence counsel: "This verdict is an act of bigots."

In a murder case fought to a grim finish in Plymouth and Norfolk counties for about seven years, during which the trial aroused international if not world-wide passions, liberal opinion accused Massachusetts of prejudice, but liberals' propaganda did not convince Massachusetts that its judiciary was bigoted, its jurors incapable of returning a verdict consistent with the evidence, its governor narrow and its public prosecutors unscrupulous. Remembering the unbridled attacks then, Plymouth county is reluctant to impugn Alabama justice.

The defence has a right to carry the case higher. There, surely, the case will be deliberated without prejudice.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

THE conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the Negro defendants in the second trials of ~~the Scottsboro~~ cases, will be appealed. It should be.

Among other things prejudicial to a fair trial, the defense attorney was able to show that the jury law apparently was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel for this case. On more than one occasion during the trial the state attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent orderly and judicious consideration of evidence by the jury.

In repudiating her testimony at the earlier trial, Ruby Bates last Thursday swore that the other girl in the case, Victoria Price, had framed the Negro youths. Lester Carter, a white friend of the two girls, confirmed the testimony of Ruby Bates.

To execute boys on the discredited evidence of a woman of Victoria Price's character, and following a trial in which racial discrimination seemed to operate in the jury panel, would be unthinkable. Just as the chief justice of Alabama dissented from the first Scottsboro conviction, and just as the United States Supreme court threw out that conviction as a violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution preventing states from depriving "any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law," so the Decatur verdict yesterday appears certain to be set aside by a higher court.

A CHALLENGE TO JUSTICE

The famous Scottsboro case, in which a group of negro boys are on trial charged with attacking two white girls, has suddenly grown more dramatic with the decision of Ruby Bates, one of the girls, to testify before Judge Horton in Decatur, Ala., that the charges are false.

Her story is so striking that it is worth retelling. Early in 1931, she told the court, she and Victoria Price visited two young men then confined in a chain gang and the four agreed to go hoboing as soon as the young men had finished their terms.

The plan was carried out, and the four were taking a ride on a freight train, with several other white hoboes, when the big trouble occurred on March 25, 1931. The white men had a tussle with a group of negro youths who were also stealing rides, and a posse took the colored boys off the train and into custody at Point Rock, Ala.

Victoria Price, supported by Ruby Bates, told the police they had been attacked by the negroes on the train, and the latter were tried, convicted, and sentenced to death. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, which declared the accused had been denied a fair trial, and ordered another.

The new trial is now proceeding at Decatur. Victoria Price renewed her accusation against the negroes when she testified a few days ago. Now Ruby Bates has sworn that the other young woman put her up to join her in "framing" the negroes, to shield them from the possible consequences of riding in a train with white men across a State line in violation of the Mann act. Neither young woman was attacked by the negroes, she has now declared.

Not the least interesting feature of the story is Ruby Bates' explanation of her course in renouncing her testimony in the first trial. A short while ago she went to New York in search of work, and while there she decided to ease her conscience by going to the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, telling her story, and asking advice. Dr. Fosdick recommended that she go to Decatur at once and tell the truth in court.

Another interesting angle is the attitude of rural Alabama toward the case and the efforts to secure justice. The threat of mob violence hung constantly over the first trial, which ended in death sentences for all the defendants, and during the course of the second trial Judge Horton has deemed it necessary to guard the jail and the defendants' attorneys with a company of national guardsmen, ordered to shoot to kill in case of mob attack.

Instead of being relieved at the revelation of Ruby Bates that the two young women had not been attached by the negroes, Alabama chivalry was more stirred than ever; so much so that the authorities regarded it necessary to spirit Ruby Bates into hiding under heavy guard, as well as to keep the jail and the defense attorneys under the protection of riot guns.

To cheat these Alabamans out of a first-class lynching, growing out of a trumped-up story, would be an important feat, and we hope Judge Horton can manage it. Alabama cannot very well afford the threatened disgrace.

The Scottsboro Trial

THE new trial of the nine negro boys accused of assaulting two white girls on a freight train, of which they were convicted and given the death penalty on their first trial, is being strenuously fought out in Alabama.

In Samuel S. Leibowitz, whom the International Labor Defense has retained to defend the boys, they have a tower of strength. This young Rumanian-born lawyer has a record of seventy-seven acquittals and one disagreement for the seventy-eight clients he has defended against first degree murder charges.

The chief interest of Alabama and the South should be in demonstrating the reality of Southern justice to the Nation. The State has gone a good way in that direction by granting the new trial and a change of venue. If the boys are really innocent, no one will want to see them convicted.

The recanting of her former testimony by Ruby Bates, one of their two girl accusers, would seem to cast serious doubt upon their guilt, though Victoria Price, the other girl, reiterated her accusations at the opening of the trial last week.

HELP ASKED FOR SCOTTSBORO DEFENSE.

The Scottsboro defense is being hampered by lack of funds. Unless there is an adequate defense the boys will surely be convicted again, and this time they will surely be railroaded to the electric chair.

The trial has been shifted to Decatur, but that down is but a replica of Scottsboro, and the temper of the white people is little different from that of their brethren in the neighboring community. Already there are troops in Decatur to guard against what are called euphemistically "eventualities."

The unreconstructed white people of Alabama feel that it is not the nine Scottsboro boys, but the State of Alabama and southern "peculiar institutions" which are on trial. They wish to continue those "pecular institutions." They are incensed at world criticism. They are on the defensive. If they suffer a defeat, the morale of all color-prejudiced, exploiting southern whites will be shaken and the hands of justice and right will be strengthened.

Help in the form of money is needed to strengthen those hands and protect the Negro from legalized mob murder. The white lawyers defending the Scottsboro boys are contributing their services. Negroes should at least help the International Labor Defense to defray the necessary expense incident to the trial.—Pittsburgh Courier.

JUST TWO BAD WOMEN

We are not going to criticise the verdict of he jury in the Scottsboro case, that found the egro Patterson guilty and fixed the death penalty. The jury had the testimony before them and were better able to judge the guilt or innocence of the accused than anybody outside the court. And, as for those outside the State of Alabama who wish to meddle into our affairs, it is none of their business. Alabama courts are able to render justice without their assistance. But, for the two women—they are a couple of bad ones, and while there is no sympathy for them, there is sorrow that such degradation can be found in the South. However, that does not in any way minimize the crime of the men who attacked them, if the story of Victoria Price is true. They were just as guilty as if they had attacked two of the purest women on earth. All they knew was that they had two unprotected women in their power, and proceeded to work their hellish will on them. It might have been anybody's wife or daughter, but it would not have made any difference with them. So, though it was only two bad women, that have attracted the attention of the country and the world, their character is no mitigation for the offense. It was a crime against Southern womanhood, and as such it should be punished, if the negroes so accused are found to be guilty of it. The actual guilt of the parties should be the only question at issue, not the two bad women.

LEIBOWITZ

Upon returning to Harlem after the conviction of Heywood Patterson, the Negro brute, Samuel Leibowitz was asked why the Morgan County jury could find the verdict that it did, and he was reported by The New York Herald Tribune as replying:

> If you ever saw those creatures; those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask why they could do it.

Upon reading this obscene and indecent utterance yesterday, Judge Horton at Decatur postponed indefinitely the trial of the second Scottsboro 'boy' (aged 22 at the time of the crime), with the remark that a fair and impartial trial was impossible at this time.

This action, we submit, was more than fair. It placed the blame, not upon the South, which has been maligned and villified throughout the North and East, but upon this Prince of Racketeers in the ignoble art of inspiring and perpetuating prejudice and bigotry—for that is what Leibowitz has proevd himself to be—a racketeer of sorts. He seeks to capitalize a career from spreading hatred for Southerners, not only in Alabama, but in other States. He is less interested in defending the Negro brutes than he is in acquiring national notoriety for himself.

Well, we concede he has become nationally notorious. And now for the trial of his Scottsboro 'boys.' Alabama is ready.

The Scottsboro Verdict.

The expected happened in the case of the first defendant in the Scottsboro case, Alabama, found guilty of attacking a white woman, an offense punishable by death in that state.

The evidence against this ignorant negro boy was of the flimsiest character, contradictory and unsupported, and should have been so considered by a jury, composed of men who apparently considered themselves charged with making a gesture of "southern chivalry" rather than finding a verdict according to the facts.

It was perhaps unfortunate that a New York criminal lawyer should have been employed in the case, but apparently local counsel would not defend a man with a black skin, accused of such a heinous crime.

Most newspaper readers will concur with the statement of the defense that the state of Alabama had merely conducted a "judicial lynching," but it is at least a step in advance when the thing is done in court without the disorders and hor-hors of mob law. And the Supreme Court may overturn a verdict, obviously colored by passion and racial prejudice.

April 18, 1933

Judge Horton's Leadership

Indefinite postponement of the remaining Decatur cases enables us to comment on the whole tragic business. That comment has been withheld because of circumstances which seemed compelling. The sweeping verdict in the Patterson trial was something of a disappointment to The Age-Herald. Without being so cocksure about the matter, as observers at a greater distance have been, it appeared to this paper that a more moderate finding would have been the just and rational conclusion in viewing of the contradictions in the testimony. But to have said this, with the other cases impending, to have said this with the candor which the occasion required, might have served to make a bad situation worse by inflaming passion at a time when mental clarity and emotional poise had become the high necessities of our life.

That impediment to frankness no longer exists. By his action Monday, Judge Horton has removed the other cases from immediate consideration. It is now possible to weigh this affair as it bears upon our system of justice, our civilization, and our standing in the world. The Patterson case will go on appeal to the state Supreme Court. If it is upheld there, the issue will be submitted to the United States Supreme Court. Public opinion does not figure in the decisions of these tribunals. Alabamians are therefore permitted to discuss the matters freely and high-mindedly. As lovers of justice, as a people to whom the right solution of the Negro problem is a most urgent obligation, we can review what has taken place at Decatur and so get our bearings for the sake of our peace of mind.

The one person who came out of the Patterson case with distinguished honor was Judge Horton. His walk and conduct have won the admiration of the country. So far as he could control the course of things, justice according to the law of our state was done at Decatur. One wishes that counsel on both sides were entitled to similar praise. The lawyers for the defense were apparently only incidentally concerned about saving their client. The lawyers for the state were apparently more intent upon justifying local pride than upon seeing right established. That plea to protect Alabama from the contamination of "Jew money" was one of the most shocking performances in the legal annals of this state.

In an atmosphere of prejudice, Judge Horton struggled valiantly to keep the balances true and even. His task was made all the more difficult by the attitude of counsel engaged in the trial. The defendant had become little more than a symbol in a collision between forces fighting for aims held by them to be more significant than the fate of the individual at the bar. One the one hand, there was the prosecution hugging to itself the illusion that it was protecting our white civilization. On the other hand, there was the defense doing its level best to provide material for radical propaganda, stretching its ingenuity to incite to greater bitterness the hostility from which its client was to be saved.

Not surprising, therefore, was it that a man like Judge Horton should have postponed the other trials in the light of a later exhibition on the part of Mr. Leibowitz and the attorney general. The former had been quoted as having indulged himself in an inexcusable tirade against the jury in the Patterson case. And Mr. Knight, instead of curbing his temper to a dignified dismissal of the insult, had replied in kind. A situation bad enough in all conscience had been darkened by such tactics. "No court regardful of its duty to see that trials must be fair and impartial could under such baneful influences permit the trial of this case to proceed at the present time," said Judge Horton.

Extraordinary moral courage alone made that statement, and what followed, possible. This manifestation of a noble spirit should have a hopeful effect in many directions. It should make critics outside Alabama realize that our courts are not ravenous agencies of injustice to the Negro. It should clear the air here at home so that a refreshed sense of values can make us ready for the demands of the future. That the International Labor Defense and allied forces may come to see the crucial need for a different approach on their part is too much to expect. But that Alabama will meet the evolving challenge of this painful episode with strength, with integrity and with a hunger for right unshaken by any calumny or passion is now inevitable.

The Chicago Tribune deserves the thanks of the entire South for its vigorous and timely exposure of the gigantic fraud that has been masquerading over the country during the last two years under the guise of "justice" to some Alabama negroes accused of criminal assault at Scottsboro. Regardless of the guilt or innocence of the accused, the Tribune points out that the case has been made a world-wide sensation by the same organized propagandists who were responsible for the furor over the Saccho-Vanzetti and the Tom Mooney cases.

Although citizens of conscientious motives were drawn into these activities to give them repute, the most persistent and vociferous participants in all cases were communists and radicals of other varieties. Only a very ingenuous observer of these proceedings could miss their intent. Pretending to be a defense of innocent individuals from injustice and oppression and an assertion of civil guaranties, the objective aimed at was the disparagement of American courts and the American social conscience.

This has been strinkingly exposed in the trial just ended at Scottsboro. The attorney brought from New York by the International Labor Defense could not be as tactless as he has been save intentionally. The very fact that he was chosen in place of counsel known and respected in the region in which the trial was to be held was evidence of lack of good faith, of a sincere concern for the fate of the defendant. In and out of court his words and actions have appeared to an impartial observer studiously provocative of local feeling, and the inference must be that he intended not to win his case but deliberately to lose it, to make sure of a martyr for his cause and an excuse for more propaganda. Immediately after the verdict he gave vent to a tirade against the community amid which the trials are being held, and, returning to New York, he publicly described the jury as "those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs', whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy." Yet he is going south in a few days for the second series of trials. The employment of such an attorney for the defense promises if it does not in fact insure a miscarriage of justice. It shows no regard for the defendants but rather a deliberate determination to bring about their conviction.

At the beginning of the affair the radical agitators descended upon the community in which the trial was to be held, insulting, blatant, insolently prejudicing the case and the character of the agencies of the law. They have shown no consideration for the defendants. Pretending to defend them from mob sentiment and race prejudice, they have done everything possible to inflame both. No Klux fanatic could do more to create conditions in which even-handed justice is impossible than these pretended friends of the oppressed.

Meanwhile the well meaning public of the north has been exhorted to donate money for the support of this murderous proceeding misnamed defense. The Civil Liberties Union published advertisements calling for funds to "help give these boys the best possible break at this second trial." Such appeals are frauds. The Civil Liberties Union is a fraud. Its managers have no regard for civil liberties except when they can be pleaded for the protection of radical mischief makers and criminals. They are communists and sympathizers of bolshevism, which has destroyed civil liberties wherever it has gained power. The active head of the Civil Liberties Union at a meeting of communists in New York has just declared that political democracy is moribund, and he wants a "united front," precious bolshevik phrase, of communists and liberals to fight Fascism. A union of communists and genuine liberals would be a union of the snake and the bird. The Civil Liberties Union is such a union. Liberals who support it are either gullibles or they are not liberals. There are no civil liberties remaining except where political democracy exists, and so long as the Civil Liberties Union is run as it has been and is, by enemies of democracy, its title is a flagrant hypocrisy which can no longer deceive any but liberal sentimentalists befogged by mere phrases. Even these ought to be shocked at its methods in the Scottsboro affair.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Defense Attorney's Statements Have Prejudiced Case of Own Clients, Says Horton

BRODSKY APPROVES RULING

Fair Trial Impossible Because of Inflammatory Charges Made in New York City

DECATUR, Ala., April 17. (AP)—The Scottsboro cases were postponed indefinitely Monday because the court held a purported criticism of Alabama juries by Samuel Liebowitz of defense counsel had prejudiced the cases against his own clients.

Judge James E. Horton directed postponement of the remaining cases against seven Negroes charged with assaulting two white girl hoboes and rebuked Leibowitz.

A statement that appeared in The New York Herald-Tribune and credited to the New York attorney, who volunteered to defend the Negroes and lost his first case down here, was responsible for the unexpected action.

Concerning the jury that convicted Haywood Patterson—first of the Negroes to face retrial here—the New York paper quoted Leibowitz like this:

"If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it."

"Millstone About His Neck"

Judge Horton, who was praised by Leibowitz for his conduct of the Patterson trial, said he did not know "whether the leading counsel for the defense made the statement imputed to him. It could make little difference whether he actually said it or not. The effect would be the same. The published statement was uncalled for."

The judge who had charged the jury in the Patterson case to forget color and creed and state lines said Monday that the accused Negro "must be a victim of this statement."

"His leading attorney (Leibowitz) would be a millstone about his neck," said Judge Horton.

The court then ordered a continuance of the case against Charlie Weems—second of the Scottsboro boys to face a retrial—"until such time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had."

Attorney General Knight, who defeated Leibowitz in the Patterson trial, jumped to his feet after the judge read the statement and shouted:

"I cannot stand by and hear that jury maligned. No, we aren't bigots in the south. We tried these cases fair . . ."

The judge nodded to the fiery young state's attorney and said:

"We understand [illegible]."

The [illegible] climax to the long-drawn-out Scottsboro cases came after Judge Horton had sentenced Patterson to die in the electric chair June 16 for criminal assault on a Huntsville cotton worker.

The case of Charlie Weems—second of the gang of Negroes scheduled to go on trial here—was to have been called Monday, but the judge read Leibowitz's purported statement and then an answer that Knight gave several days ago in an interview.

"Wail of a Loser"

"It (Leibowitz's statement) can only be taken as a wail of a loser," said Knight in his published retort to the New Yorker, "particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury, he lauded the people of Morgan county and the members of the jury to the skies."

Leibowitz was not present when the discussion was made. He has not returned from New York.

The statements attributed to Leibowitz "must make impossible any just and impartial verdict," the judge said Monday after reading both attorneys' published statements.

The judge held that the "defendants' chief counsel was at fault" in the newspaper battle between him and Knight on the merits or demerits of Alabama juries.

"It is the duty of this court to see that the defendant has a fair trial," said Judge Horton.

Brodsky Approves Action

Joseph R. Brodsky, another defense attorney and also a New Yorker, said Leibowitz was expected here Tuesday. He agreed with the court's action, but said he did not believe "Leibowitz made that statement."

"Leibowitz's view is that in Decatur and the South the white workers are imbued with the idea of white supremacy and that only in union of the white and Negro workers warring against the ruling class can they gain their ends."

Judge Horton's decision left the Scottsboro case up in the air. All except Patterson, who was sentenced to death Monday, must have a new trial.

The bizarre cases started two years ago when a gang of Negro hoboes allegedly assaulted the woman and her freight train woman companion, on a train near the Tennessee line. All the Negroes except one were sentenced to death at their first trials at Scottsboro. A juvenile was spared the extreme penalty. Both white girls then testified against the defendants. The International Labor Defense and several other organizations took a hand in the case and its echo was heard around the world.

The Alabama Supreme court upheld the lower court's decisions. Sympathizers with the Negroes called it "legal lynching" and the case was taken to the supreme court of the United States. That tribunal ordered new trials for all and the cases were brought here on a change of venue."

"I Stand Pat," Says Leibowitz

NEW YORK, April 17 (AP)—Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz issued a statement Monday in which he said: "The millstone around the necks of the Scottsboro boys is that Alabama attitude which made the 12 Decatur jurors guffaw as they pushed Heywood Patterson toward the electric chair last Palm Sunday morn."

His statement followed receipt of the news that Judge James T. Horton had postponed the remaining trials of the accused Scottsboro Negroes, saying that because of an utterance by Leibowitz about the jury that convicted Heywood Patterson he would be "a millstone" about the neck of the next man to be tried.

"I respect Judge Horton and the fair-minded people of the state who are willing to extend to their colored fellow citizens the protection of the law which we take as a thing for granted in New York," he said. "As for the rest, the baying pack, the wolves of bigorty, who raised the Hitler cry of 'Jew money from New York' because we dared to demand a square deal for a poor unfortunate whose skin was black, I stand pat."

"Nothing can stop us from carrying on," he concluded.

The Scottsboro Case

The influence of the indelible mark left on the South by the trial of seven Negroes for an alleged assault on two white girls will be a matter for historians a couple of generations hence to weigh. Statesments attributed to the chief of the defense counsel, published in a New York paper, were of such a nature that the presiding judge yesterday ordered that the trials of the Negroes be indefinitely postponed. Those statements were of such a nature, in the judgment of the presiding officer, that they would have so crystallized the sentiment of the people of Alabama, some of whom must serve on the juries trying the Negroes, that an impartial verdict could not be obtained.

So the trial of the Negroes, one of whom fo a second time has been convicted and sentence to die, have been postponed indefinitely. Month will have to pass before the defendants can b brought to the bar to answer to charges agains them, charges based on flimsy evidence charges, from the newspaper reports, that hav more than a suggestion of doubt.

Yet, the conviction or the acquittal of th seven youths is not the fundamenatl questio at stake. Ordinarily, cases of this nature ar disposed of hurriedly in the courts of the South They were handled with dispatch in Alabam and had there been but one or possibly tw men, the case doubtless would have been forgotten. But the numbers involved, the hast with which they were tried, their lack of ampl preparation in their own defense gave nationwide significance to the conviction. The Alabama Supreme Court refused to interfere bu the Supreme Court of the United States ordere a new trail, based on the fact that Negroes were excluded from the juries. Yesterday in Durham an echo of the Scottsboro trial was heard when Negro attorneys petitioned Judge M. V. Barnhill to determine whether names of Negroes had been excluded from the box from which the grand jury that indicted a Negro on a murder charge was drawn.

The significance of the Scottsboro trial lies not so much in the conviction of the Negroes of a crime that we seriously doubt they committed but in the revolutionary effects of this trial upon the judicial system of the South.

Presiding Judge James E. Horton in Alabama has distinguished himself as an able officer, determined to obtain justice in this case. His statement in postponing the trial may be taken in a number of ways, and there is no question but there was a strong suggestion that he rebuked the jury for finding the first man to be tried guilty on the basis of the evidence presented.

The Scottsboro case is destined to be remembered for many years to come in the South and to exercise a marked influence upon the relationship between the Negroes of the section and the courts.

THE ALABAMA VERDICT

We regret the death sentence against the negro, Haywood Patterson, in his retrial in Alabama on charges of criminal assault upon two wayward white girls. We regret it because the penalty seems excessive, even if the testimony, some of it clearly perjured, had proved unmistkably the guilt of the nine colored boys of whom Patterson is the first to go to trial. But our main regret is that the possibility of truth and justice is now uttery lost in a welter of race, sectional and political passions that can never be untied. The South has its fundamental racial enmity between white and black. That enmity undoubtedly entered into this case. Yet it was not wise to provoke and complicate it by bringing in as the defender of the Negroes a Northerner, a radical and a Jew. When that was done, three other bigotries were added to the "color-line" already existing. Hope of real justice vanished. The negroes at once became as much victims of their would-be saviors as they were of the Southern whites.—New York Evening Post.

THE DECATUR TRIAL

The Scottsboro case affords no grounds for criticism of Alabama justice. The people behind the whole agitation—the I. L. D. and the Communists—are not concerned with justice. They do not care a rap for the accused Negroes. What they are attempting to do is to stir up strife between all races and creeds in the United States.

They had engaged the services of the greatest criminal defense lawyer in the country, Clarence Darrow, who, after learning what they wanted to do, withdrew from the case. Why? Because he was willing to try it only on its merits. That did not suit them.

The most irritating, unbearable, arrogant overbearing human being in the world is a smart, shrewd, New York attorney, thoroughly exemplified in Mr. Leibowitz. His conduct during the trial was about the same as after he had lost his case. Reread his caustic comments, "The jury spat on the tomb of Abraham Lincoln," "Bigots, Morons," and more of like savour. You will note that he could not but praise the fairness of the judge, yet I am told on good authority that the jury was made up of the same kind of people. As a matter of fact it was one of the most intelligent juries ever to try a case in Alabama.

If this crowd had really been interested in defending the negroes, they would not have sent a lawyer from New York, who, in the judgment of most people familiar with the case, mishandled matters by attempting to put on trial the State of Alabama and the people of the State, who was continually playing to the gallery—in New York—but would have engaged the services of competent Alabama lawyers who could play rings around Mr. Leibowitz. Mr. Leibowitz tried his case in New York newspapers to make a name for himself. If he lost, he was a hero. If he won, fame, renown, and principally, riches.

The chief idea of the I. L. D. and the Communists is agitation, strife, trouble—here, there, everywhere. Take the Mooney case in California, the Sacco-Vanzetti case in Massachusetts, this Alabama case. They do not know whether there was guilt or not, and do not care. Smiply a chance for them to ply their trade. Note how they had the whole world flood the Governors, and the courts, with telegrams and letters demanding the instant release of "these innocent people," before the trial, and without even hearing the evidence.

As to the merits of the Scottsboro case itself, I will confess that I do not know. Do you know? Does anyone in New York, or Maine, or Kansas, or Oregon? Most people in Alabama state frankly that they do not know—that is why we have law—courts and juries—to find out, and to do the uttermost to reach the truth, after hearing the evidence.

The opinion here among fair-minded, honest, God-fearing people (and there are the same proportion of them here as elsewhere) is that this is a matter for Alabama to handle. I believe that most people think that the Negroes are guilty, but do not want them executed. They are unanimous in wanting them punished if guilty, and quickly released and acquitted if innocent. They feel that the women are a rotten pair, but under the law, no man has the right to rape them.

Do these New York feature writers realize that in this city last year a white man was convicted for raping a Negro woman? Did you read then that Lincoln's tomb was spat upon, or that we were then bigots or morons?

There is another angle to this case which would bear inspection. How clean are the skirts of New York, or New Jersey, Colorado, Michigan, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, or any of the rest of the States? When a New York gangster shoots down a baby on the sidewalks of New York and a jury acquits him; when the Mayor steals everything in the city but the Empire State Building and as punishment is sent on a trip to Europe, with his mistress, all expenses prepaid; when gangsters are more important and more influential and make more money than the outstanding professional men; when the presidents of some of the largest banks of the United States are a crowd of crooks, by their own confession; when in an adjacent State babies are stolen out of their cribs and knocked in the head; when, in Illinois, a dozen men are lined up against a stone wall and mowed down with machine guns and gangsters own the courts and the police departments; when cold-blooded money-making murder goes unpunished, and bribery and graft flourish—in these States, and in many more in the same sections, it would seem that the press of other sections has plenty to worry about, without concerning themselves so much about Alabama's justice.

Mischievous Alien Counsel

This newspaper has stood in the vanguard of those who demand justice for the Negro at all times and in all places. Specifically, it is stood for a fair trial for the seven Negroes tried and convicted at Scottsboro, Alabama, for an alleged assault on two white women in a freight train near the Tennessee lines, in 1931.

But the action of Judge Horton, who is presiding over the new trials at Decatur, ordered by the Supreme court, following a change of venue, in postponing the cases indefinitely because of intemperate language attributed to the chief counsel for the Negroes, raises the question in acute form as to the wisdom of "defense" organizations, with headquarters in New York, injecting themselves into the trial of these and similar cases.

The chief counsel in the case of Heywood Patterson, who was convicted last week in a new trial at Decatur, was Samuel S. Leibowitz, of the International Labor Defense. In the course of his argument, Leibowitz paid high tribute to the fairness of the judge, and "praised the jury to the skies."

But Patterson was found guilty and has since been sentenced to pay the death penalty.

Returning to New York, Leibowitz gave out an interview in which he said:

> If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bechiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.

When the time came to take up the case of Charlie Weems, the second of the defendants, the judged ruled that the interview given out by Leibowitz was such as to make him "a millstone around the neck" of his client, and all the cases were indefinitely postponed.

The fact of the matter is that the International Labor Defense, according to the best information obtainable, has "horned in" on this case, as it has on several other cases here in the South.

The American Civil Liberties Union, which has employed counsel to defend several Negroes in the South, always had the good sense to employ a southern man as counsel. They actually did employ a Chattanooga attorney to defend the Negroes in the Scottsboro case, but the International Labor Defense strong-armed its way into the case and the American Civil Liberties Union retired.

This International Labor Defense has been denounced in the strongest terms by The Nation, whose liberal views and whose sympathies with the Negro cannot be questioned. That periodical charged that the International Labor Defense had no real interest in the Negro, but was looking for self-glorification and free advertising.

At all events, it is well established that in any case like that of the Scottsboro Negroes, able counsel can always be found right here in the South, even in the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed. The outside lawyer has done more harm than good in the Scottsboro case.

What we all want is even-handed justice for the Negro as well as for everyone else, and not an accentuation of race prejudice and intemperate denunciation of the people of the South.

A Gigantic Fraud Is Exposed at Scottsboro

The Chicago Tribune deserves the thanks of the entire South for its vigorous and timely exposure of the gigantic fraud that has been masquerading over the country during the last two years under the guise of "justice" to some Alabama negroes accused of criminal assault at Scottsboro. Regardles of the guilt or innocence of the accused, the Tribune points out that the case has been made a world-wide sensation by the same organized propagandists who were responsible for the furor over the Saccho-Vanzetti and the Tom Mooney cases.

Although citizens of conscientious motives were drawn into these activities to give them repute, the most persistent and vociferous participants in all cases were communists and radicals of other varieties. Only a very ingenuous observer of these proceedings could miss their intent. Pretending to be a defense of innocent individuals from injustice and oppression and an assertion of civil guaranties, the objective aimed at was the disparagement of American courts and the American social conscience.

This has been strikingly exposed in the trial just ended at Scottsboro. The attorney brought from New York by the International Labor Defense could not be as tactless as he has been save intentionally. The very fact that he was chosen in place of counsel known and respected in the region in which the trial was to be held was evidence of lack of good faith, of a sincere concern for the fate of the defendant. In and out of court his words and actions have appeared to an impartial observer studiously provocative of local feeling, and the inference must be that he intended not to win his case but deliberately to lose it, to make sure of a martyr for his cause and an excuse for more propaganda. Immediately after the verdict he gave vent to a tirade against the community amid which the trials are being held, and, returning to New York, he publicly described the jury as "those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs', whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy." Yet he is going south in a few days for the second series of trials. The employment of such an attorney for the defense promises if it does not in fact insure a miscarriage of justice. It shows no regard for the defendants but rather a deliberate determination to bring about their conviction.

At the beginning of the affair the radical agitators descended upon the community in which the trial was to be held, insulting, blatant, insolently prejudicing the case and the character of the agencies of the law. They have shown no consideration for the defendants. Pretending to defend them from mob sentiment and race prejudice, they have done everything possible to inflame both. The Civil Liberties Union published advertisements calling for funds to "help give these boys the best possible break at this second trial." Such appeals are frauds. The Civil Liberties Union is a fraud. Its managers have no regard for civil liberties except when they can be pleaded for the protection of radical mischief makers and criminals. They are communists and sympathizers with bolshevism which has destroyed civil liberties wherever it has gained power. THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

This case of nine young Negroes who are charged with criminally attacking two white girls on a freight train moving through Tennessee and Alabama, has aroused interest in all part of this country. These men were tried in Alabama about two years ago and convicted and the penalty in Alabama for this offense is death.

–The case was carried to the United States Supreme Court and the verdict was set aside because this court held that the Negroes had not been adequately represented. Haywood Petterson, one of the nine has recently been tried again in the Alabama court at Decatur and again convicted; this time defended by Mr. Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, counsel furnished by the International Labor Defense. We have no sympathy whatever with the criticism that these men were convicted because they black. The evidence as we have read it, indicate that atleast some of them were guilty. Ke know the State of Virginia would not want to convict and sentence to death an innocent Negro and we do not believe the courts of Alabama would. The State of Alabama had its Attorney-General, Assistant Attorney-General and two of its county prosecuting attorneys present in this case, to see that the laws of the state were enforced and that the honor of the state upheld, and unusual array of State and County prosecuting attorneys for any case.

We think it exceedingly unfortunate for the State of Alabama and for these nine young men that the International Labor Defense interfered in the case at all, further than to get the new trial. There is little question; but that the defense attorney, furnished by them, was a mill stone around the necks of the defendant, as evidenced by the following staement by Mr. Leibowitz issued after the verdict: "This is a black page in the history of American civilization. An occasion where once more twelve citizens of Alabama, swayed by bigotry and prejudice and hearkening to the yelps of a bombastic Ku Klux, who hurled mud at the Jew and the people of the great State of New York to sympathetic ears in the court room crowded with lantern-jawed morons and lynchers, brought in a verdict that is a mockery of justice."

After returning to New York, he made such a scatting criticism of the jury and people of Alabama and some of the prosecuting attorneys, that Judge Horton postponed the trial of one of the other Negroes for the reason that he could not get a fair trial in the face of such statements from Mr. Liebowitz. There is a movement on foot to furnish these men counsel from among the attorneys in the South.

The Southern people will not stand for this criticism and interference from any section and we think they are right. Another case of a man's friend being his worst enemy, on account of ignorance and indiscretion

5-18-33
Montgomery, Ala.

The resignation of Rabbi Benjamin Goldstein from the leadership of Temple Beth-Or and his removal to New York is a loss to the cultural life of Montgomery.

Dr. Goldstein is an exceptionally gifted young man who has made the most of his gifts by cultivating them intensively. He is immensely informed in the literature of the world. He loves learning for its own sake and has a faculty for inspiring a love of learning in others. He is, withal, a forceful, brave and engaging personality whose weight will be felt in any community.

From the beginning of his life in Montgomery four years ago Dr. Goldstein lent himself with gusto to all causes of a cultural and social nature. His lectures at the Temple were notable for their scope and brilliancy. He was the moving spirit in the lecture courses which have been so profitable and enjoyable to Montgomerians since his arrival. He was energetic in human welfare work, and enjoyed an unusual personal popularity even among those least in agreement with him with respect to his basic views.

Dr. Goldstein carries with him the hearty good wishes of the Montgomerians who knew him, all of whom will agree that apart from any opinions he may have held he was an ornament to this community.

Goes To New York

Rabbi Benjamin B. Goldstein, who recently resigned from his position as spiritual leader of Temple Beth-Or in Montgomery, left yesterday for New York. Mrs. Goldstein had preceded him to join relatives in that city. Dr. Goldstein, who has been in Montgomery for four years, has made no announcement of his plans for the future.

George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, one of the attorneys employed in the case by the International Labor Defense set forth in his petition for the writs that both negroes were only 13 years of age at the time of the alleged attack and therefore are within the jurisdiction of the juvenile courts.

The petition further set forth that Roy Wright was indicted on a charge of attacking Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims, and that the attorney held an affidavit from the girl denying that she was attacked.

The Bates girl made a sensational appearance in the trial of Heywood Patterson last month at Decatur and repudiated her testimony in the former trials in which all except Wright were sentenced to death.

She appeared after having been missing for seven weeks.

Roy Wright was granted a mistrial in April, 1931, in Jackson Circuit Court after a jury failed to agree on punishment for him.

Williams was convicted and sentenced to death, but the Alabama Supreme Court set the verdict aside on the grounds that Williams was a juvenile, the State having failed to establish that he was not.

Death sentences of the other seven were set aside by the United States Supreme Court on the grounds they did not have full benefit of counsel in the first trials.

In a new trial at Decatur last month Heywood Patterson was again convicted and sentenced to death, and a hearing on a motion for a new trial has been set for June 22 in Decatur.

Trials of the others were indefinitely postponed by Judge Horton after portions of an interview with Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief counsel describing the jurors as "bigots" had been published in a Decatur paper with a reply by Atty. Gen. Knight, chief of State counsel.

In his petition for the writs, George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, one of the attorneys employed by the International Labor Defense, further contended that he held an affidavit from one of the two alleged victims, declaring she was not attacked.

SOLDIERS TOLD SCOTTSBORO MARCH AIM WAS TO "START A RACE RIOT"

How Officers Inflamed Men at Ft. Meyers Is Told in Letter from Soldier

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Before the Scottsboro Marchers came, we soldiers at Ft. Meyers were told that the "Negroes are coming to Washington to start a race riot." They told us they would go so far as to poison the cavalry horses at the post to prevent our coming down to quell any trouble, etc.

The officers posted special guards at the stables to give their stories a semblance of sincerity. We soldiers must learn that they are trying to inflame our minds against the Negro workers as well as against our brothers of the entire working class, to "forget" our own conditions.

We remember that last year, they held us in camp and then sent us against the veterans who were demanding their bonus. The veterans are still talking about the heroic forty marines who refused to attack them.

This year, too, they are restricting our leaves to prevent us from coming into contact with the veterans. It seems they will want to use us again if the veterans do not want to leave when Roosevelt says to.

M'Namara Says Money for Him Go Instead to Scottsboro Boys' Folks

NEW YORK.—In prison 20 years for his working class activities, J. B. McNamara has written to the International Labor Defense asking that prisoners relief money which he has been receiving be sent instead to the families of the Scottsboro boys.

"Your April 21st letter contained a money order for one dollar," McNamara writes. "Through the "Defender" express my deep appreciation to all the members for their comradely thoughts of all those behind walls and bars. In the future send money orders to the families of the Scottsboro comrades. I will inform those who ask questions that I requested it be sent to them.

"May 2 contained a copy of a letter from the workers of the Tools Department in the Stankostroi Works, U. S. S. R. It was an inspiring and forceful message and I consider it a great honor in having received it.

"Greetings to all farmers, students, and workers,

"Comradely yours,

Not a "Gesture of Contempt."

William L. Patterson, leading a demonstration of 3,000 whites and Negroes at Washington, D. C., characterized a refusal of President Roosevelt to see them as "a gesture of contempt." There is as much or as little excuse for Patterson's statement as there was for many of those that found their way into print when bonus expeditionary forces were making trouble for former President Hoover.

Mr. Roosevelt just now is a busy man. He is concerning himself with the fate of the one hundred and twenty millions inhabitants of this country. That he should be expected to leave this work to give his attention to a matter which is for the courts to decide strikes us a rather fantastic conception of the duties of the President.

The leaders were met by Louis McHenry Howe, secretary to the President. At the moment of their arrival Mr. Roosevelt was conferring with Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, special German envoy with whom he was discussing the forthcoming economic conference. Failing to get the President's ear, the crowd moved on to the capitol where Speaker Henry T. Rainey informed the petitioners that their request for congressional intervention in the Scottsboro case would be referred to the judiciary committee. Vice President Garner, with equal political acumen, vouchsafed the information that the matter would have similar attention in the senate.

What happened after this we do not know. Perhaps the demonstration dissolved in thin air. Meantime it happens that, even in Alabama

2 Negroes Said To Be Juveniles Ordered To Appear June 1 In Court At Decatur

5-19-33

ATHENS, ALA., May 18—(AP)—Writs of habeas corpus directing that two of nine negroes indicted in the "Scottsboro case" be brought into Morgan Circuit Court at Decatur on June 1, for determination of their cases today were issued by Judge James E. Horton, who presides in that court.

Montgomery, Ala.

The writs direct that Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, both alleged juveniles be brought into court for determination of their cases.

The negroes are two of nine indicted for an alleged attack on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on March 25, 1931, aboard a freight train in Jackson County.

Two of 'Scottsboro Boys' Are Juveniles, Is Claim

ATHENS, Ala., May 18 (AP)—A new move to free two of the nine Negroes in the Scottsboro case was made today as Judge James E. Horton issued writes of habeas corpus to bring them into Morgan Circuit court at Decatur on June 1. The Negroes are under indictment for an alleged attack on two white women.

The writs were in behalf of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, both of whom the defense claims were only 13 years of age at the time of the crime on March 25, 1931, and therefore subject to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

opinion is far from unanimous as to the righteousness of the Decatur jury verdict. The Plainsman, of Auburn, Alabama, for example, says: "It is all too evident that the Decatur verdict should be modified, or a new trial held. That the Negroes will be given a fair trial is now more doubtful than ever, unless they are brought before the supreme court of the United States." It is fair to say that there is little possibility of justice being secured in Alabama, even if there is intervention of some sort by a higher court, and a change of venue ought to be in order.

The Changing South

Two events of major significance have occurred within a comparatively brief period that presage a number of changes in established court practices in the South. The first, and far more significant, is the trial of several Negroes in Scottsboro for an attack alleged to have been made in a freight car on two white girls; the second was the refusal of a Massachusetts judge to deny a writ of Habeas Corpus to a Negro suspected of the murder of two women in Virginia on the ground that Negroes are not permitted to serve on juries and that the Supreme Court of the United States, were the csae appealed, would not uphold a decision requiring that the Negro be sent back to Virginia for trial under the circumstances that exist in Virginia now.

The first event has attained National importance; the second made way for heated exchange of views in the National House of Representatives where a movement was started to impeach the judge. In North Carolina the Legislature is about to provide tuition money for qualified Negro students who seek technical training not offered in the curricula of regularly operated State schools for Negro youths. Other incidents, having a bearing on the relationship that exists between the races may be expected.

What the outcome may be is a matter of conjecture. It is true, however, that decisions finally, will work to the advantage of all concerned if the incidents are approached purely as social problems to be worked out on a sane head. If the Scottsboro case has come to the point that many good Southerners, once heated to the fever point because of the first reports of this case, are praying that Alabama had gone about the first investigation without the aid of mobs and hotbeads and a bit more thoroughly, others are quite convinced that the first conviction of the Negroes seemed rather unfair. No man should be deprived of his life without every opportunity to fight for it. Certainly the Scottsboro crowd went into court without any of the advantages they could have had under more nearly normal circumstances.

Persons familiar with legal procedure declare that it was not the duty of the Boston judge to decide in advance for the Supreme Court but to base his decision on the possibility of the suspected person's guilt and whether or not Virginia should be allowed to bring him to trial.

Total exclusion of the Negro from jury service seems no longer possible in the South. Their participation, of course, will demand a considerable shifting of opinon and the whole problem should be studied with open minded intelligence. Besides the ruling of the highest court leaves no doubt that some definite changes are in the offing.

Ruby Steps Up

That sterling moral crusader and witness extraordinary, Ruby Bates, erstwhile of Huntsville, but who more recently has taken to the platform in the East, in a program of uplift and light and sweetness, as she tells of her fears of the "ruling class" of Scottsboro, was noted yesterday among the van of 3,000 white and negro marchers on the streets of Washington.

They sought to invade the White House, "gang" President Roosevelt and obtain from him some expression that could be twisted or distorted into an expression of sympathy for the "Scottsboro boys."

They got nowhere, for their committee was politely informed that the President was so busy with national and international business these days that he had no time personally to see delegations of citizens, and that they would have to leave their petition with one of his secretaries.

With what other than contempt should the President regard such a set of contemptibles?

Ruby, flanked by a negro communist, the negro secretary of the International Labor Defense, and the mother of one of the Scottsboro defendants, thereupon descended upon the Capitol to spread their propaganda before Speaker Rainey of the House and Speaker Garner of the Senate. They were rebuffed in each case.

Now that she has become Harlem's darling, set foot in the White House and addressed the speakers of Congress, there is but one wall Ruby has to scale to make her list of "triumphs" complete. That is to invade Fifth avenue's social realms to tell her story of oppression by the "ruling classes" of the South.

That is not at all impossible, for some "parlor pink" will perhaps bob up to give her a tea.

Then on to a vaudeville engagement, where the emoluments should be more lucrative than working in a cotton mill, riding a box car as a hobo, or pursuing her avocation as a "lady of leisure!"

DECATUR, Ala., June 1 (AP)—Cases of two of the nine Negro defendants of the Scottsboro case today were ordered reviewed by the juvenile courts of Morgan county.

The transfer was not opposed by the state.

The action came on application to circuit court for writ of habeas corpus for Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, whose attorneys contended they were only 13 years old when they were arrested with seven other Negroes on charges of criminal assault.

Williams' death sentence had been set aside previously by the Alabama Supreme court which held he was a juvenile. The state court, however, upheld death sentences given seven other Negroes, but when those convictions were reversed by the supreme court of the United States, all the cases — including Williams' — were sent back to trial courts. Wright, the ninth defendant, was never convicted as his original trial ended with the jury disagreed.

Only Two Witnesses Heard

"The state does not oppose these cases being reviewed by the juvenile courts," said State's Attorney Thomas E. Knight, Jr., at today's hearing, "but we will contend they should be referred back to the circuit court because of the gravity of the offense."

Beatrice Maddox, sister of the Wright Negro, and Mamie Williams, mother of the other defendant, were the only witnesses called.

Beatrice testified her brother was born Oc. 22, 1917, making him 13 the year he was arrested as a principal in the assault cases. That was in 1931.

Williams' mother said he was born Dec. 9, 1917, and was 13 when he was indicted in April, 1921, at Scottsboro.

Other Cases Postponed

The two Negroes were borught here from Birmingham where they and other defendants have been in jail since circuit court trials of most of the Negroes were postponed indefinitely.

Only the normal number of guards were on duty today and there were few spectators. This was in contrast to the last Scottsboro case tried here when Heywood Patterson was convicted a second time. After his convction ,the court postponed the other cases on contention the defense attorney, Samuel Liebowitz of New York, had prejudiced his own case by newspaper statements.

Judge J. P. Malone presides over the Morgan county juvenile court and out of town today. No date for a hearing for Williams and Wright were set.

NEGROES RETURNED HERE

Two In Scottsboro Case Turned Over To Juvenile Officials

Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, the youngest of the nine Negroes indicted in the Scottsboro case, were back in Jefferson County Jail Friday to await orders of the Juvenile Court authorities of Morgan County. They were remanded to juvenile authorities by Judge James E. Horton on hearing of a habeas corpus writ at Decatur Thursday.

The defense introduced testimony to show the Negroes were only 13 years old at the time of the alleged crime, and the state rested after introducing birth certificates.

Atty. Gen. Knight said the state had no objection to juvenile authorities reviewing the case, but said that because of the seriousness of the alleged crime the Negroes should be tried in Circuit Court. They were indicted in connection with an attack on two white women on a freight train in Jackson County.

THAT SCOTTSBORO CASE

Eight Negro boys are again to be put on trial in Alabama for the capital offense of rape. Two years ago they were sentenced to death, but, through the activity of a so-called radical organization, the case was upset in the United States Supreme Court. The defense has gained another victory in that the trial will not take place in Scottsboro again, but in the town of Decatur, some fifty miles away.

It is a rather peculiar case all around. According to those who sympathize with the boys, they were beating their way on a freight train through Alabama in their search for work. There had been a fight on the train between a group of white hoboes and another group of Negroes, with the result that the whites had been compelled to get off. The train was stopped by a sheriff and posse with the object of ejecting the Negroes from the train, word having been telegraphed ahead of the fight. As the boys were driven out of the box car, it was discovered that in another car were two girls dressed in men's clothing. All were taken in charge as vagrants. The girls made no complaint against the boys at the time of the arrest, and did not appear to be hysterical or excited otherwise, but in the morning one of the girls complained that she had been assaulted by the boys. Again, say the friends of the prisoner, this girl has retracted her testimony, but has mysteriously disappeared from the scene.

The New York Herald-Tribune says that the original trial was less than creditable to Alabama's standards of justice, a fact which seems to be recognized by opinion in Alabama itself. When the case was called recently in the same Scottsboro courtroom where two years ago the trials were rushed through with every apparance of haste, careless ignorance and prejudice, the Attorney General of the State, acting as prosecutor, accepted a motion for a change of venue.

From here it looked as if it was intended to railroad these boys to their execution, but their case attracted so much attention that throughout the country the hope is expressed that the boys will have a trial that is fair beyond a shadow of doubt. Some of the prisoners' friends believe that the case would be fairer if it were tried in Birmingham, instead of Decatur. It is believed that in such a small town, buried deeply in the hill country, prejudices will have their effect on the jury.

DEFENSE TO ASSAIL SCOTTSBORO VENIRE

Plea That Failed to Quash Indictments Will Be Used in Attack on Trial Jury.

LEIBOWITZ GETS THREATS

He Smiles at 'Crank's' Warnings—Bates Girl's Father Seeks to Aid Hunt for Her.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 29.—A petition asking Circuit Judge James E. Horton to quash the venire from which a jury is to be drawn to try Haywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes accused of an attack on two white girls, was drawn up today by Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel.

Mr. Leibowitz, who has lost one fight to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand jury which returned the true bills against them, leveled the same objection to the venire drawn from the trial jury.

With the court in recess today, Mr. Leibowitz spent his time preparing to carry his fight on Alabama's so-called "selective jury system" into Morgan County, where the present trial will be held. He was ready, he said, to subpoena nearly 200 Negro citizens of the county to testify that, while qualified in every way to serve as jurors, they have been excluded from the rolls.

In connection with his motion to quash the indictments the defense attorney presented evidence from thirteen witnesses in an effort to prove that racial discrimination in Jackson County, where the alleged attack on Ruby Bates and Victoria Price took place two years ago, kept Negroes off the juries in that county.

New Circumstances Different.

While the new petition raises a question similar to that already disposed of by the court, the circumstances are different. In arguing the motion to quash the indictments Mr. Leibowitz was handicapped by his inability to prove that no Negro names were on the jury rolls of Jackson County.

Judge Horton's ruling came after he consented to issue a subpoena duces tecum for the jury rolls of Jackson County, but before they had been produced or any ruling made regarding their admissibility as evidence.

The defense lawyer had rested his case with the reservation that he would submit further proof when the jury rolls were produced.

In arguing the new petition Mr. Leibowitz will have before him the names of all prospective jurors and it will be possible for him to establish definitely the color of each man on it.

Leibowitz Gets "Crank" Warnings.

During the day while his associates, Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel for the International Labor Defense, and G. W. Chamlee, former Attorney General of Chattanooga, were preparing motion papers and conferring with their witnesses, Mr. Leibowitz visited the jail where the defendants are imprisoned under guard of militiamen and deputy sheriffs.

He conferred briefly with the prisoners and upon leaving the jail declared it was "unfit for human habitation," saying that he would ask the court to set aside a room in the court house where he might consult his clients without the necessity of visiting the jail again.

Mr. Leibowitz said that since his arrival here he has received half a dozen threatening letters from "cranks," who warned him against continuing his attack on the laws and customs of Alabama and advised him to "stay home where you belong."

The defense attorney dismissed the letters with a shrug and a smile. "It should be understood though," he said, "that I have no interest in attacking either the customs or laws of this or any other State.

"I am doing only what any lawyer would do in this case—demanding the full protection of the law for my clients."

Renew Hunt for Girl Witness.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., the young Attorney General who is prosecuting the Negroes, spent the day in conference with his associates, Wade Wright, J. G. Bailey and Thomas E. Lawson. They interviewed several witnesses and prepared their arguments against the expected defense assault upon the venire.

Among the witnesses interviewed was the father of Ruby Bates, who gave Mr. Knight several addresses at which he said he thought his daughter, mysteriously missing since Feb. 28, might be found.

Miniature Train to Be Shown.

In order to illustrate graphically the testimony of the witnesses regarding what happened aboard the freight train on which the crime is said to have been committed, Mr. Leibowitz brought with him a miniature of the train.

Assembled, the model freight train is about thirty-two feet long, about half the width of the courtroom inside the rail.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

The trial of seven young Negroes in Alabama, known as the Scottsboro case, is being resumed under circumstances which point to another verdict of guilty in an atmosphere of passion and prejudice. A change of venue has been granted to the neighboring city of Decatur, where conditions are much as they were in Scottsboro. There is an apparent determination to hang the defendants, irrespective of evidence.

Nobody who looks at the matter without passion believes these boys are guilty. They are accused of attacking two white girls in a box car, after throwing out some white boys who were traveling with the girls. The white boys complained to police, who telephoned ahead to have the train searched as it came into city yards. Seven Negroes, who stayed on the train after a much larger number had dropped off, were arrested. They were not with the white girls, and said they had not heard of any trouble on the train. Undoubtedly they told the truth. If they had known of it, or participated in it, they would have fled with the others.

Since the last trial, at which the girls identified these particular seven youths as their attackers, the defense has compelled the state to give up a letter signed by one of the girls admitting that her statement to the police was false. Also, a 14-year-old Negro boy, who offered the only supporting evidence for the state, has stated that he was taken out of the witness box and into a room adjoining the courtroom and there beaten up, to compel him to identify the defendants. The girl who wrote the letter has disappeared. But all this makes no difference when trials are conducted in the spirit of a lynching.

The Scottsboro case has acquired international significance because the defense was entrusted to radical labor organizations. There is now both the accusation and the virtual admission that the seven boys are on trial as Negro Communists, although it is agreed they never heard of communism until the issue was dragged in.

With things like this going on in the United States, it is no wonder that all the rest of the world thinks of Americans as prize hypocrites when they worry about injustice and intolerance overseas. The Decatur jail is said to be weak. It will be a wonder if Alabama doesn't improve our position in the eyes of the world by burning the seven boys to death.

It is hard for the average American to realize that affairs like this are deadly poison to the nation. They poison our courts, they poison the minds of the people, they poison our international relations.

Nobody can tell how greatly we may be weakened, in loss of foreign support and friendship, at some moment in history when our very existence may depend upon the goodwill of distant peoples who judge us, not by the Constitution and Declaration of Independence, but by such callously dismissed incidents as the Sacco-Vanzetti executions, the Mooney imprisonment and this Scottsboro case.

EVIDENCE ASSAILED IN ALABAMA TRIAL

4-5-33

MISTRIAL MOTION REFUSED

Leibowitz Offers It When Attorney General Applauds Statement of One of His Witnesses.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 4.—The State of Alabama closed today its second attempt to send Haywood Patterson to the electric chair for a criminal attack on Mrs. Victoria Price two years ago and the defense immediately began its effort to prove her "a perjurer."

A routine motion to dismiss the indictment against Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes, on the ground that Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. had failed to establish a prima facie case, was denied by Judge James E. Horton.

The State rested suddenly after calling five witnesses to support the story of Mrs. Price after Mr. Leibowitz accused Attorney General Knight of applauding the testimony of one of his witnesses and asked Judge Horton to declare a mistrial.

This incident occurred while J. A. Woodall, a former deputy sheriff of Jackson County, was on the witness stand. Examining a small penknife which he said he had taken from one of the Negroes at the jail in Scottsboro, Mr. Woodall said the prisoner told him he had taken it "from one of the white girls."

It was the same knife which Mrs. Price identified yesterday as hers, charging that one of the Negroes took it from her and held it against her throat while she was attacked on a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock on March 25, 1931.

Knight Applauds Evidence.

As the words fell from the lips of the witness, Mr. Knight, who had turned the direct examination over to H. G. Bailey, Circuit Solicitor, brought his hands down flat on the top of the counsel table, showed his elation and dashed into an anteroom, clapping his hands together once.

The Attorney General was out of the court room when Mr. Leibowitz made his protest, but his assistants sprinted after him and brought him back to apologize to the court and jury. He seemed nervous and chastened as he listened to the closing words of the defense lawyer's motion for a mistrial.

'"Now, your honor," said Mr. Leibowitz, "I would like the record to show that when the witness gave his last answer, the Attorney General, the chief prosecuting official of this State, clapped his hands and rushed from the room in high glee. I am amazed at the actions of the chief prosecutor who, after saying he wanted these Negroes to have a fair trial, thus shamefully comforts himself before the jury. It is disheartening and I now move for a mistrial."

"I never saw anything like that before in my life."

Mr. Knight apologized and Judge Horton expressed regret that the incident had taken place. He had been looking away from the State's counsel table when it occurred, Judge Horton said, but he ordered the stenographer to note on the record that he had heard a sound of the sort that Mr. Leibowitz described. Then he denied the motion for a mistrial.

Negro Identifies Mrs. Price.

It was the most dramatic moment of the day but it was almost equaled soon after the defense opened when Victoria Price stood in the railed-off space before the bench and was identified by Dallas Ramsay, a Chattanooga Negro, as one of the girls he saw with a white youth in the "hobo jungle" alongside the railroad yard in Chattanooga, on the morning of the day when the crime is alleged to have taken place.

Mrs. Price had testified that she and Ruby Bates, her missing fellow victim of the alleged attack, spent the night at the home of "Callie Brochie" in Chattanooga, denied that she had visited the "jungle" and insisted that she and her girl companion were alone when they boarded the freight train.

Ramsay testified, however, that she was with a white man when she started back to Huntsville, her home.

Mr. Knight objected vigorously to the identification without first requiring Ramsay to describe the woman he had seen.

Judge Horton ruled that the identification could be made and Mrs. Price was brought into court from the witness room.

Counsel Clash Over Evidence.

Mr. Knight, who had been entering objections to almost every question Mr. Leibowitz propounded to Ramsay, asked what relevancy his testimony had and Mr. Leibowitz retorted:

"I'm going to show that the State's main witness is a perjurer. That's what I'm going to show before I'm through. This is only the beginning."

When Ramsay had left the stand, Mr. Leibowitz called his first white witness, Norris Payne, clerk of the Huntsville City Court, in a new but unsuccessful effort to place in evidence records showing the conviction of a Victoria Price for vagrancy, adultery and violation of the prohibition laws. The records were barred from evidence but their import was made plain to the jury.

Judge Horton based his ruling excluding this evidence on the grounds he cited yesterday when it was first offered, that violation of the prohibition law did not reflect upon the credibility of the witness and that infractions of city ordinances were not admissible in impeaching her testimony.

Mr. Leibowitz protested that a conviction involving moral turpitude was pertinent for a jury to consider as to the credibility of the State witness.

Mrs. Beatrice Madox, married sister of two of the Negroes awaiting trial, testified that she had searched the city directory of Chattanooga and conducted a personal investigation and that she had failed to find any one named "Callie Brochie."

When Mr. Knight objected to her testimony Mr. Leibowitz said he was only trying to save time, declaring that he was prepared to call postal officials and others if necessary to prove that there was no one in Chattanooga named "Callie Brochie."

Defense Attorney Takes Stand.

G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga attorney who is assisting Mr. Leibowitz, testified that for twenty-five years he had occupied an office or residence on Seventh Street, Chattanooga, where Mrs. Price said "Callie Brochie's" house was located and had never heard of her. The street, he said, was "one of the wealthiest" in Chattanooga and contained public or semi-public buildings.

The witnesses called by the State in closing its case were W. H. Hill, station agent at Paint Rock, where an armed posse stopped the train with the Negroes and white girls on it; Tom Taylor Rousseau, Paint Rock storekeeper, who aided in the round-up, and Lee Adams and Orey Dobbins, overalled farmers from Stevenson, where the white companions of the girls were thrown off the train after a fight with the Negroes.

Mr. Hill, who did not testify in the first trial, declared that the nine Negroes were taken from one gondola car, but he "could not swear" that the girls were taken out of the same car.

Rousseau declared that as the train slowed down the Negroes piled out of gondola cars and ran along the tops of the box cars toward the engine in an effort to get away.

Adams, who was working in a field a quarter of a mile from the tracks as the train passed, said he saw a group of Negroes and white men scuffling in one of the gondola cars. It was too far for him to see whether there were any women in the car, he said.

Conflicting statements by Dobbins at the first and second trials as to seeing the girls on the moving train were challenged by Mr. Leibowitz.

The court adjourned an hour earlier than usual to permit Mr. Leibowitz to confer with the nine Negroes in preparation for calling each of them to the witness stand. The conference took place in the court room when the defense counsel complained that the jail was "unfit for a pig to enter."

During the conference militiamen occupied a building facing the court house with machine guns trained on the second floor windows.

Negroes and Juries

The defense in the case of the Scottsboro Negroes in Alabama faces difficulties arising out of lack of funds and the choice of Decatur as the scene of the new trial. Most of their witnesses live in or near Scottsboro. To transport them fifty miles to Decatur, owing to the limited and inconveniently timed train service, promises to be an expensive job, and the funds supplied by the International Labor Defense are limited.

It is a pity the defendants have had to rely on this radical organization, and that lack of assistance from any other quarter led to their embracing Communism after their arrest. The offense charged against them is in no sense political, nor is it one growing out of labor relations. The reason the accused did not get a fair trial, as the Supreme Court found, was that they were Negroes, and it is strange that the members of their race did not take action in their behalf that was free from the taint of radicalism inherent in the National Labor Defense.

If the defense attorneys can manage it, an issue of far-reaching importance is to be raised in the second trial. The point will be made that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury that returned the indictment, and that Negroes have been invariably kept off jury rolls in Alabama. The government will contend that the jury commissioners have been unable to find any Negroes possessing the sound judgment and other qualifications required for jury service, but the defense hopes to prove discrimination on account of color. The Supreme Court within the past few years has decided a number of cases involving political rights of Negroes in Southern states in favor of the Negroes, and it is not improbable that the Scottsboro case will reach that tribunal again.

"The President Says He Cannot See You"

By M. KAMMAN

WASHINGTON.—For more than a week representatives of the International Labor Defense, the National Scottsboro Action Committee and sympathetic organizations fought to arrange an interview between President Roosevelt and a delegation of the Scottsboro marchers on the Scottsboro case. Colonel Howe, the President's secretary, promised to take up the matter with Roosevelt and let the delegation know the president's decision.

Several days before the marchers arrived, a group of 25 Negroes came unheralded to Washington. At their head was William Davis, editor of the New York Amsterdam News, a Harlem Negro paper. Carrying a bundle of petitions they hastened to see Colonel Howe. An interview with him had been arranged secretly with the help of a congressman.

A Social Call.

For more than half an hour this delegation, composed of Negro business men and politicians exchanged banal chatter with Howe. These bourgeois Negroes thanked Howe for his patience, affability and told him he would make a good president. They did not insist on seeing Roosevelt. They did not propose definite steps to be taken by Roosevelt to free the Scottsboro boys. They left without having received any definite promise from Howe.

The details of their conduct leaked out the same afternoon. Honest Negroes residing in Washington were disgusted with the scraping, bowing Harlem delegation which claimed to represent the Negro race. They felt the humiliation Davis and his group had imposed on the Negro race. They understood the treacherous, disruptive character of the step taken by Davis and his self Jim-crowed crowd. The same night the Washington Scottsboro Action Committee, composed of a majority of Negro workers, attorneys, teachers, adopted a resolution condemning Davis and his delegation as cowardly and his conduct as treacherous to the Scottsboro boys, and to the Negro race.

THREE days later. May 8, 1933. This time Negro and white workers, 25 of them, walked determinedly into Howe's office. Among them were Ruby Bates, Lester Carter, Mother Patterson.

Thousands of Negro and white marchers outside chanted. "The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die! The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die!"

Like the tide of a sea the sound of this chant penetrated the thick walls of the White House.

"Do you hear it, Mr. Howe?" William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, asked after Howe said Roosevelt could not see the delegation. "It's the voice of the masses, Mr. Howe! We who are in here speak for them. egation

During the march the motorcycle They outside are speaking for millions of [illegible] workers. Mr. Howe, I believe the president hears them, too. Mr. Howe—"

Howe holds up his hands, almost helplessly. The grim faces of the delegates, the chant of the masses pounding, pounding on the walls of the White House makes him uncomfortable. The presence of his lackeys, some of them doubtless armed, does not altogether reassure him. Nor do the pictures of battleships and an exaggerated self-confident portrait of Roosevelt on the walls of his office assure him against the chanting masses outside.

Sweetened Gas.

He takes on a painted expression. He can wear such an expression, for he is slight, almost dwarfish, his weasel face heavily lined and thin. He talks softly. No direct statements. Only intimations. He wants the delegation to think he believes the Scottsboro verdict outrageous; but he only intimates, he does not say so. He wants the delegation to believe that some executive action will be taken to set aside the Decatur lynch verdict; but he does not say so directly.

His words are like a sweetened gas poured in the hope of paralyzing the determination of the Scottsboro delcops had purposely blown out thick fumes to gas and discourage the marchers. The cops failed to accomplish their end.

Now Howe, suave and polished Howe, tries a sweeter sort of gas on the marchers' delegation. He wants it to stop demanding to see President Roosevelt. He fails, and forgetting himself shows impatience.

William L. Patterson presses closer. His voice is sharp, sharp with the class struggle, at another time it is deep with the voices of the workers. He demands that Howe get in touch with the president, to tell him that the delegation must see him. Patterson's tone is not pleading. It demands.

Howe bites his lips.

While Howe stands thus, undecided Ruby Bates is fighting with herself. For the first time she is in the White House. It is not easy for her to overcome the awe drilled into her for federal authority. But this working class girl has the innate fighting spirit of the working class.

She steps forward. She pauses for a moment. Then in a firm, clear voice she says:

"Mr. Howe, the boys are innocent. I am Ruby Bates. I know the boys are innocent, Mr. Howe!"

Mr. Howe smiles, as if the matter in its entirety were a little spectacle staged for his entertainment.

THE delegation presses closer, closer around Howe. Anger brews in the hearts of this working class delegation. Roosevelt is closeted with the representatives of murderous fascist Germany and Italy. And he has no time to see a delegation of American workers! His lackey smiles when the innocence of nine Negro boys who are facing the electric chair is proven to him.

Patterson: "Mr. Howe, do you still refuse to get in touch with the president and tell him he must see us?" Patterson points to the window thru which can be seen a portion of the Scottsboro marchers, with their banners, placards. The sound of their chant beats on the White House walls.

Howe crumples. He takes the phone, calls the president in his retreat. Howe holds the receiver somewhat away from his ear, turning it towards the delegation.

"I have told the Scottsboro delegation you cannot see it, Mr. President, but still they insist."

Roosevelt's voice sounds impatient, Most of us cannot hear his reply. Howe hangs up.

"The President says he cannot see you."

IN the silence that follows, there is a sob. Mother Patterson steps forward. Deep, deep into her has sunk the realisation that the president who has the power to send millions of youths to the slaughter of war does not want to see her, let alone save the nine boys.

Vainly she tries to control her tears. She stands in front of Howe, her body bent as in pain. She weeps.

"Please tell the president to give me back my boy. He's innocent."

The Voice of the Masses keeps pounding, pounding on the White House walls. "They Shall Not Die! They Shall Not Die!"

AS the delegation marches out of the White House, the 5,000 marchers raise tremendous cheers. Told by Patterson that Roosevelt refused to see the delegation, the marchers booed, but soon the chant is taken up again, stronger, more grimly, "The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die! The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die!"

All Washington heard this chant. The Negro spectators heard it and repeated it with the marchers. White workers applauded the chant. "Black and White Unite and Fight!"

Patterson, Scottsboro Boy, Stabbed; Warden Holds Incommunicado

Capitalist Press Carries Lying Statements; Hold Roosevelt and Alabama Governor Responsible for Lives of Boys!

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 11.—Haywood Patterson was attacked and stabbed in Jefferson County jail here today. The extent of his injuries, which the warden said were "slight," could not be ascertained because of the refusal of prison authorities to permit any friends to see him. An investigation of the attack is under way by the International Labor Defense office here.

In announcing the stabbing, Deputy Sheriff Burgis Hawkins said Patterson was wounded in a fight with Roy and Andy Wright. This is an echo of the lying story carried by all the press services during the Decatur trial that Patterson and the Wright boys had a fight in jail. Investigation showed one of the boys had a nightmare, caused by their inhuman treatment, and woke up screaming.

Recently, the prison officials sent a gang of prison thugs and criminals into the part of the jail where the boys are held, with orders to attack them. When the boys announced they would defend themselves, and forced the withdrawal of the thugs, prison authorities sent out a story that they had "mutinied."

The I. L. D. pointed out that the present attack on Patterson and the story given out by prison officials was logical continuation of the previous attempts to frame and murder the boys.

NEW YORK.—A call to all districts of the International Labor Defense, to all Scottsboro Action Committees, and to all workers and sympathetic organizations, to raise the following slogans in wires to President Roosevelt, Governor B. M. Miller, at Montgomery, Ala., and to the warden of Jefferson County Jail, Birmingham, Ala., to save the lives of the boys:

The Scottsboro Boys are innocent.

Dismiss the Scottsboro cases.

Roosevelt and Governor Miller are responsible for the safety of the Scottsboro Boys.

Roosevelt can and must free the Scottsboro boys.

Ruby Bates, southern white girl and chief defense witness in the Haywood Patterson trial, led the Scottsboro march in Washington last Monday. A delegation elected by the Marchers presented the Bill of Civil Rights to the Roosevelt government, calling for the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the U. S. Constitution. Ruby Bates is second from the left. At her side is L. Thompson, secretary of the National Action Committee. On the extreme right is William L. Patterson, national secretary of the I. L. D., who headed the Marchers delegation.

Courier 5-6-33 Pittsburgh, Pa.

Hostilities of Ignorant, Prejudiced Decatur Whites Scored—Lynchings Threatened, Spivak Declares, In Masterful Description of Famous Scottsboro Trial At Pittsburgh Y. M. C. A. Meeting.

(Stenographically Reported by Theodore Washington)

I couldn't help but think of Decatur, Ala., when you were singing "Sweet Land of Liberty," but I gathered that you were voicing hope and not stating a fact.

Mr. Vann very courteously read the letter I wrote him protesting against his editorial and we spent several hours this afternoon discussing various matters centering around the Scottsboro case and the activities of the I. L. D. and the N. A. A. C. P. in it.

Now to get down to the Scottsboro case in Alabama. I shall spend perhaps a few moments on what the Scottsboro case means in the North and the South, and then afterwards try to show you the differences in meaning, which should be valuable. I am going to try to give you facts that were not so widely publicized.

I sometimes wonder whether there is a Scottsboro case. When I sat in the Decatur courtroom for the two weeks during which the Scottsboro case lasted I wondered whether the nine Scottsboro boys were on trial for their lives or whether the South was on trial for its treatment of the Negro, and I came to the conclusion that the nine boys were not on trial. Even the assistant attorney general of the State of Alabama remarked during the course of the trial, "Where is the forgotten man, Heywood Patterson?" During the entire first week of the trial all talk was on the exclusion of the Negro from the jury roll, and a bitter fight was waged by the defense on this question.

Now .. doesn't matter whether the white man objects to the Negro sitting on the bench with the white man ,but the participation of a Negro on the jury would help a black ma nin Alabama to become of legal importance and have a hand in the legal machinery of the South that s now controlled by the white man.

The fact is significant that the State of Alabama, through its highest legal officer, Attorney General Thomas Knight Jr., put up a more bitter fight for the exclusion of the ury roll from the court-room than t did to convict Heywood Patterson. He put up his best fight in the first five days of the trial, fighting the I. L. D., which was trying to bring in the jury roll of five thousand names to show the exclusion of Negroes from the right to serve on the jury.

Judge Horton who presided over the trial is a representative Southerner. A gentleman, but a Southerner, and a white man. He knew that there was deliberate discrimination against Negroes on the jury roll and that no Negroes in the State of Alabama had served on a jury. He is a shrewd jurist and he is a learned man, but he knew that it was illegal for that jury roll to be used in the picking of a jury. Yet, when the I. L. D. attorneys had moved to quash the list, Judge Horton overruled the motion. That means only one thing, that this able jurist was forced to admit the existence of the discrimination of Negroes and was forced to admit the omission of Negroes from participation in any legal activities of the state, and yet Judge Horton had to defend white supremacy, and of course, after that there was nothing to do but go on with the trial.

This then is the main issue of the Scottsboro case. A centering of world attention, both white and black, upon the deliberate oppression of the Negroes in the South and the deliberate discrimination against them from participation in legal machineries. Although they pay their taxes, the South does not want them to participate in the legal activities of the South, because you will be able to see Negroes on juries dispensing justice. That is why the South fought so desperately against having Negroes on the jury to try Heywood Patterson.

It was the whole South on trial in the handling of the nine Negro boys living in the South.

I am going to try to picture to you the things that went on outside and inside the court-room that did not appear in the newspapers.

On the morning that the boys were supposed to be brought in from Birmingham jail for trial and arraignment, some 500 whites and 300 Negroes crowded the courthouse lawn. Decatur is a typical Southern town, with wide streets where the whites live and the narrow, dirty streets where the Negroes live.

The court house where this dramatic and historic trial was to take place is a three story yellow building adjoining a two story jail building that has already been condemned as unfit for human safety. And it was to this jail that they were going to bring the Negro boys to keep them for the duration of the trial. There is a decrepit statue typifying justice on the court house lawn. I noticed that throughout the trial no one, not even the whites, went near the statue of justice. It is a strange fact and I do not know why, but they just wouldn't even look in that direction.

Most of these whites awaiting the coming of the Scottsboro boys were farmers who stood chewing tobacco and settled on the point of white supremacy. The Negroes who were there were afraid and worried and they did not want anything to happen. There had been talk that the county did not have the money to stand the expense of the trials and they were afraid that the whites were going to try to hang the boys. Anyway, if anything happened, the Negroes wanted to be there.

Thirty-six militia men were quartered across the street from the jail. Some were so green that they didn't know whether to shoulder their guns on their left shoulder or on their right. They were mostly young boys.

Due to some misunderstanding the boys did not arrive that morning so court was adjourned. They did arrive that afternoon. They came in a Birmingham patrol wagon with four men armed with guns guarding them. The crowd made a rush for the wagon. I think that it was curiosity that drew the crowds to the wagon. The soldiers kept them away. The boys were scared. They did not know what was going to happen to them. They were chained two by two and were forced to stand there while photographers took their pictures, then the soldiers led them directly into the court house.

Ozie Powell, one of the boys, is blind in one eye and near-sighted in the other, and as he walked up the steps he stumbled and the crowd thought that the shooting had started that everyone was expecting. In the court house the old jim crow system was in effect. The whites sat on one side of the room and the Negroes on the other side There were about 400 whites, smoking pipes, cigars and cigarettes, very informal. There were two Negro correspondents, but they were not permitted to sit at the white correspondents' table. They were seated at a table over in the colored section of the courtroom. As a matter of fact for the first few days everything was tranquil.

Attorney Leibowitz of the I. L. D. immediately after the indictment of Heywood Patterson was read, demanded that the indictment be quashed on the grounds that it was drawn up by a jury that was selected from a jury roll of whites only and was a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States. He was overruled by Judge Horton. The question of the jury roll lasted for four days. Attorney Leibowitz was continuously asking for the jury roll to be brought into the court room. The highest legal authority in the state fought vigorously to keep the jury roll out of the courtroom, and when it was brought in, and the world was shown that they didn't have any respect for the law, the actual presentation of facts began.

The boys were kept in a room on the second floor of the condemned jail. A curious detail concerning this building was the fact that there were exactly thirteen steps leading from the first floor to the second, which I counted the morning that I went to visit the boys in the jail, and immediately at the top of the thirteenth step was a trap door, and overhead stood a gallows, which was visible to the boys as they stood looking out of their cell. For two years they looked at the electric chair in Kilby prison, and when they arrived at Decatur they had to look at the gallows.

The first night that the boys arrived, none of them slept. They paced up and down looking out at the darkness and worrying and wondering when a mob was coming to lynch them. The only light they could look at was the light illuminating the gallows. It was several nights after the trial had gone on that the press blazoned forth with stories that Patterson had attacked Powell in a cell and that two of the Scottsboro boys had had a fight. Patterson and Powell sat in the vermin filled cell. Constantly in the day time looking at the gallows, and at night fearing that they would be hanged and in the middle of the night Patterson had a nightmare and dreamed that he was being hanged, and fought Powell who fought back. Why the boys did not go crazy I do not know.

While the trial was on and after Victoria Price had taken the stand she kept her eyes continuously on Attorney Knight. She was the coldest-blooded witness that I have ever seen. Not once during her hours on the stand, never once did she look at the defense attorney. When a flash of uncertainty came upon her face while Leibowitz was questioning her, Knight would jump up and object, giving her a chance to think of something to say.

Knight was always smoking and getting up, but while she was on the stand he would not stir from his chair. While the trial went on after Victoria Price gave her testimony, I went into the witness room just in time to see her with her ear against the door of the room where the defense lawyers were drawing up their plans. While the trial was going on and Leibowitz had grilled Victoria Price and had shown that she had lied on some of the things, we got word that fifty men from Scottsboro had come into town armed saying that the trial of those "niggers" was taking too long. They met in a hall with klansmen with the vowed intention of marching upon the jail and lynching the boys. Subsequently, I might as well tell you that we got the word from a southern white worker. A man who all his life was prejudiced against the Negro, but a man who had come to realize that he was just as low as the Negro unless we could raise the Negro to his level. He had been circulating around the towns for just such information for the newspapermen.

We all lived in the same apartment house. That is Knight and his assistants, Leibowitz and his assistants, and the newspapermen. In fact, everyone got along like one big family the first few days of the trial before the sentiment was brought against the New York Jews and northern money to defend Negroes. The defense and prosecuting counsels even conferred in the same room. Knight and his assistants in one part of the room and the I. L. D. lawyers could be heard quietly discussing their defense plans in low voices in the other. In fact, everything was gentle until the Negro question came up, then the free activities didn't exist.

Myself and the other newspapermen had been riding around the town at night in taxies. Well, the night that the mob was supposed to march to lynch the boys there was much strange activity among Attorney General Knight and the Captain of the militia. Both Knight and the Captain said that there was nothing wrong, when asked what was in the air. And stranger still was the fact that our usual taxis could not be found, nor could any be found. We wanted to go around town because we figured that there were mobs gathering. The newspaper men divided up and walked to the jail because if there was anything to happen it would happen at the jail. The jail was lit up with five huge flood lights. Soldiers were all around the court house who told us that nothing was going on. When we returned to the apartment house the soldiers that had been stationed there to guard us had been removed. The next morning another newspaperman and I were walking around. We saw a soldier. I said to him, "Lots of fun we had last night?" He said, "Yes." What time did the thing start? Oh, about 8 o'clock. How many soldiers did they use? Oh, about 20. How many were in the mob? Oh, about 200. A mob of 200 had marched on the jail, Sheriff Davis and deputies and soldiers met them and told the mob that they would shoot into them if they would try to lynch the boys. It was not to leak out because the stench would be too much on Alabama if it reached the press. When the newspapermen started wiring the stories that there was a mob that had tried to lynch the boys, Attorney General Knight tried to persuade the newspapermen that there was nothing to the story and not to send the stories. The Associated Press correspondent who had been conferring with Knight tried to aid Mr. Knight in asserting that there "was not a mob." There was a hasty conference between the judge and the attorney-general and it was then that the judge sent out the statement that they would protect the lives of the boys and the I. L. D. attorneys with the lives of the soldiers.

While Leibowitz was questioning the Price girl the propaganda was started against "northern Jews who would defend Negroes." One of the white spectators shouted out loudly in the court-room "Get that Jew bastard who is questioning that girl." He was seized and taken from the court-room and not allowed to return. But during the greater part of the trial the white spectators were talking in loud undertones and threatening, and only once or twice did Judge Horton weakly bring down his gavel on his desk and call for order.

The next day Ruby Bates was brought on the scene with a white boy. She was a white southern prostitute, no better than Victoria Price, but one not quite so hard, one who was still too young to be hardened by the work in the mills where she had worked for $5 a week, from six in the morning until six at night, tending the looms. She confessed to me that "Niggers were human too" and said that she wanted to testify even at the risk of her life that she had lied before.

Throughout the trial, Attorney-General Knight kept singing "Where is Ruby Bates?" "Produce Ruby Bates." They hated Ruby Bates and the white boy who had come with her to testify worse than they hated the nine Scottsboro boys, because they came to save a Negro. We got word that all Huntsville was armed and simultaneously that nine soldiers were surrounding the court-house, because Ruby Bates was in conference with the I. L. D. attorneys there. Knight sent for the reporters and came out and talked to them. He said, "Gentlemen, we are willing to take you into our confidence. These 14 soldiers are not here for a fire drill. Two distinct mobs are on their way here to lynch Ruby Bates, but we do not want any of this to come out. We are taking Ruby Bates and Lester Carter away because Alabama could not stand to have them lynched. We are expecting an attack in 30 minutes in the event that the militia men could not stop them at the bridge. Attorney Knight then turned to a New York Daily News photographer and said, "Don't take any pictures, Walter." "But I came down here to get news not surpress it," he answered. But we are going to stop them and he turned to the writers and said, "If there is shooting then write, if there isn't then don't write it." However, the militia did turn the mob back.

I tell this story for two reasons: "First, Alabama is a race-hating, seething, inferno right now and was then, and second, the attorney-general of the State of Alabama tried to suppress news of the trial."

THE SCOTTSBORO CASES

The result of the second trial of Raymond Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro boys, has been the means of opening the eyes of the civilized world with regard to the treatment and administration of justice to the Negroes in the South. Everybody, North and South, seems to be unanimous in their statements that neither Patterson nor the other boys involved in this case have received a fair trial. So far as we have been able to learn, there has not been a dissenting voice (in good faith) to the contrary.

The big question now is, how are these boys to get a fair trial? Evidently, the State of Alabama has no intention of giving these boys a fair trial because that would mean acquittal for them. These cases have developed to the point where the State must face the question of admitting that it was wrong or committing another wrong, both of which, the premises considered, are hard for the State of Alabama to face. Meanwhile, the question is being asked, East, West, North and South, is how long shall these boys be made and compelled to suffer because the State authorities are not able to adjust themselves to the real facts in the case without prejudice?

Of course, the next logical step in Patterson's case will be to take the case to the Alabama Supreme Court which means a great expense to the defense and a long time in jail for the boys. This case before the Alabama State Supreme Court will be before the same sort of people before the same sort of people before whom it has already been tried. As fair as Judge Horton has been accused of being, he did not have the courage to dismiss the case against Patterson after admitting that Samuel Leibowitz, council for the defense, had made a prima facie case by showing that no Negroes had been summoned for jury services, even though many of them were eligible; thus, denying the defendant of his constitutional right.

If Judge Horton had been a man of Judge Lowell's calibre and had he been able to foresee the unnecessary expense not only to the defendants but to the State, Patterson would be free or his case would be well nigh to the United States Supreme Court without going the rounds of the State courts.

Meanwhile, the lovers of justice and fair play will busy themselves to see that necessary funds are raised for the defense of these boys. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has sent notice to all of its branches to assist in raising money for these cases, notwithstanding the fact that it is burdened with many other cases. Whatever money is raised by these branches for the defense of these Scottsboro boys will be sent to the national office of the N. A. A. C. P., and it will turn the money over to the International Labor Defense attorneys who have charge of this case.

Commercial Appeal
5-11-33
Memphis, Tenn

Several days ago The Commercial Appeal found it necessary, in the discharge of its duty to the public, to direct attention to the mess that a lot of meddlers made of the Scottsboro case in Alabama. Under the pretense of defending some negro boys, these meddlers paraded themselves as heroes in the battle for human rights, rekindled as far as possible all of the sectional prejudices and race hatreds in the book, and in the end made a mockery of both justice and the orderly processes of law.

One of the organizations mixed up in this business was and is the American Civil Liberties Union. The Commercial Appeal felt obliged to denounce as frauds the appeals made by this organization to innocent people for funds with which to make the meddling more complete. The American Civil Liberties Union undertakes to explain, in another column, that it is not a fraud.

The attention of our readers is invited to the explanation. It might be well to observe that the Civil Liberties Union very promptly and ingeniously takes a run-out on the trial itself, frankly stating that for that it "has no responsibility." The International Labor Defense, a radical, mischief-making associate, handled the defense. The Civil Liberties Union was willing to beat the bushes for nickels and dimes to "insure a fair trial," but when the trial turned out to be an indictment of the entire Southern people and even of justice itself, it dismisses the injustice with the statement that it "has no responsibility."

The American Civil Liberties Union is a black and tan outfit which interests itself largely in dabbling in other people's business. It assumes that it must go on parade at intervals by entering a strange community and, without regard to local conditions or customs, pretend to defend somebody by putting the whole community on trial. No local lawyer, jealous of the reputation, integrity and the traditions of local courts and local justice, will do.

This is particularly true of the outfit's activities in the South. It proceeds on the idea that the South is still a conquered province, basking in ignorance, and ruled by a lot of overbearing slave-drivers immune to every principle of justice or morals. A few political self-seekers rose to a doubtful fame and temporary power by such stuff 60 years ago, but happily it is no longer found except among a few professionals who lather themselves up for periodical drives and parades. That northern people themselves have no truck for such mischief-makers was evidenced last week by the very proper and sensible action of the officials in Illinois who denied Civil Liberties Union agents permission to go into the mine district and start a lot of monkey business among an inflamed and dissatisfied community of miners.

The record brands most of these outfits as frauds, thriving on prejudice. Not a night but somebody, frequently a young woman, is "taken for a ride" in New York or Chicago. What does the American Civil Liberties Union do? Light up the torches? Beat the tin pans? No! It quietly scoots for cover and keeps its mouth shut. But let somebody be "taken for a ride" south of the Ohio River. It immediately becomes a "lynching," and all the meddlers rush out with demands that the barbarous and savage outrage be repudiated by the governor and that the courts at once get into action and hang the perpetrators.

No civilized people have found a substitute for law and order. The Commercial Appeal stands for the orderly processes of law. It yields to no voice in this community in its persistent demand for a fair and impartial enforcement of law and the triumph of justice whenever she sits in judgment upon life, liberty or property. Gang killings, lynchings or whatever they may be called are relics of a disordered age. No community can exist without order. But it can exist without meddlers. The sooner everybody learns to attend to his own business, the sooner will everybody have some worthwhile business to attend to.

HOODED BIGOTS AND BOMBS

Montgomery, Ala.

"It takes more than a crowd of hooded bigots to scare a Jew from the sidewalks of New York. And it will take more than threatening letters and bombs to keep me from going down there 'til Hell freezes over and until the fight is won and we bring the nine of them back to this platform."

Thus spoke the Martyr Leibowitz as the wild cheers of a mob of misled Negroes and his own prostituted eloquence gave birth to phrases of hatred and prejudice that would drive "Nigger-baiting white scum" to shame.

A man pretending to have the interest of the American Negro at heart, a man who vowed that he would fight "'til Hell froze over" for the lives of nine black men could not have been outdone by a frenzied witch doctor in appeals to savage emotion that belongs not in civilized Harlem—but to jungle campfires.

A voodoo medicine man who called ignorant blacks to war council with the blood-rousing music of tom-toms could not have touched flames of hatred behind the shirt fronts of civilized black men more effectively than did Leibowitz as he sought to enlarge the ranks of the "Free the Scottsboro Boys Washington March."

This happened at St. Nicholas arena in New York the other night when Leibowitz and the International Labor Defense League had as honor guests Miss Ruby Bates, of Alabama, and Mr. Lester Carter, of Chattanooga and points East, West, North and South.

The Bates girl has been won over to a Cause.

New York is a nice place for a girl to visit, you know. And Ruby's generous heart has gone out to her New Friends, who teach her pieces to recite. Evidently she enjoys being a lady of distinction.

Carter happened to be riding on the train when the Negro defendants boarded it near Paint Rock two years ago.

Somehow he found his way into the I. L. D. camp and has been doing his bit with the aid of Communistic drill sergeants

How many threatening letters has Leibowitz received?

How many hooded bigots threatened the man?

How many bomb threats has he received?

If Leibowitz has received any threatening letters it is to be hoped that the United States Postoffice Department is investigating them. And it is to be hoped that the senders of the letters are prosecuted in the Federal courts.

If any hooded bigots threatened Leibowitz it is the duty of the sheriff of Morgan County to investigate and make arrests. And it would not be out of order for the Attorney General to prosecute them.

But Leibowitz was only making a speech when he told of the threats. He was not swearing out warrants.

And Leibowitz, to put it mildly, was exaggerating.

But the only thing the New York lawyer has to fear from Alabamians is a contempt that cannot easily be hidden, a contempt that is reserved for the sour loser.

President Refuses To See Protest Delegation And Leaders Are Indignant

WASHINGTON, May 8.—(AP)—A parade of 3,000 whites and negroes today sought from President Roosevelt and congressional leaders, intervention to free the nine Alabama negroes convicted of criminal assaults in the renowned Scottsboro case.

In the van of the march was Ruby Bates, the girl who after once swearing the men had attacked her, reappeared at a new trial as a surprise witness and reversed her testimony. With her went James Ford, negro communist, and William L. Patterson, negro national secretary of the International Labor Defense. Along also was Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson at whose retrial the Bates girl changed her story. He was convicted again and is for the second time under sentence of death.

At the White House the leaders saw Louis McHenry Howe, presidential secretary. They complained bitterly when told the President was too busy conferring with Dr. Hjalmar Schact, special Germany envoy, to receive their petitions in person.

They marched then to the Capitol. Speaker Rainey saw them.

"We demand congressional action for the unconditional release of the Scottsboro boys," Ford told Rainey. "We present also a bill of rights amending legislation to guarantee enforcement of the 13th and 14th amendments."

"The petition will be referred to the judiciary committee," Rainey replied. "As for the Scottsboro case, that is a matter for the courts. Congress has no authority to direct the release of men charged with a crime."

Ruby Bates said: "The Scottsboro boys are absolutely innocent."

"You testified once they were guilty?" Rainey asked.

Yes, sir."

"Now you retract?"

"Yes, sir."

"What caused you to change your mind?"

"Well, I didn't want to see innocent boys suffer."

"Because you had perjured yourself?"

"Yes, sir, under duress," replied the Bates girl.

Then they called on Vice-President Garner, who told them he would refer their petition to the appropriate Senate committee.

Although at the White House attaches said the President was making a practice, now that business was so heavy, of referring petitioners to Howe, Patterson, as spokesman for the marchers, said they regarded Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to see them as a "gesture of contempt."

'Reads in Papers Bankers Suffer,' Is Howe's Reply to W. L. Patterson's Statement That Negroes Greatest Victims

Rainey Garner DePriest Hedge; Delegates Report at Meeting Following Parade

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8.—Coming to the national capital from scores of centers—mostly from cities on the Eastern Seaboard—5,000 Scottsboro Marchers, two-thirds of them Negroes, paraded through the streets of Washington today in a demonstration for the Scottsboro boys and for the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the U. S. constitution.

Committees elected by the marchers called upon President Roosevelt, Vice-president Garner, Speaker Rainey and Congressman De Priest, Negro representative from Chicago demanding that these politicians support the fight for the release of the Scottsboro boys and for the enactment into law of the Bill of Civil Rights.

The Scottsboro marchers to Washington came in 37 buses, 22 trucks and 68 automobiles, besides a large number who came on freights and as hitch-hikers.

Roosevelt refused to see the Scottsboro delegation. Louis M. Howe, his secretary, met the group and told them:

"The president is busy now. He is seeing that the people's rights are not taken away from them. He is at the present moment busy with the diplomatic representatives of Italy and Germany."

William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, and spokesman for the committee, replied, declaring:

"You tell us that the president is busy with representatives of these imperialist countries, whereas we who represent Negro and white citizens of this country in protest against injustice cannot be seen by the president."

Howe "Read It In the Papers."

HOWE: "He is too busy getting us out of the depression."

PATTERSON: "We are the worst sufferers from the depression. Moreover, we are the victims of an unabated lynch terror, and yet the president won't see us."

To this statement of Patterson, Howe replied with shameless cynicism: "I thought the bankers were the ones who were suffering. I read it in the papers."

PATTERSON: "We represent the most forgotten men, the Negro people, and yet the president won't see us."

Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, began to weep and asked Howe to tell the president to "give me back my child".

On Patterson's demand, Howe called President Roosevelt on the phone, asking him if he would see the delegation. Roosevelt's loud and resounding "NO!" could be heard by the entire committee.

Cycle Fumes Choke Marchers

Previously Patterson denounced Roosevelt's earlier refusal to see the committee as "a complete expression of his contempt for the colored people."

Patterson declared that "our delegation will report to the 5,000 who are waiting outside and to those who elected us to come here, that the president refused to see the representatives of the Negro and white workers."

Squads of police, on motorcycle and on foot flanked the marchers, as they paraded down Pennsylvania Avenue.

The motorcycles of the police puffed a barrage of smoke, choking the marchers, but this failed to halt their steady chant as they moved slowly over the capital's rain-swept streets past the White House. "Scottsboro boys must not die! Scottsboro boys must be saved!"

Later the delegation went to see Rainey, speaker of the House. James W. Ford, speaking for the marchers, said:

Daily Worker

Rainey W[illegible]

"First of all we demand that Congress take certain action for the release of the Scottsboro boys. We present you with this Bill of Civil Rights, and want you to see that it is taken up."

RAINEY: "I will refer it to the judiciary committee of the House. Congress has no authority to settle the case."

New York

Rainey began to question Ruby Bates in an attempt to confuse her as to her whereabouts previous to the trial of Haywood Patterson. "I came to the Decatur trial as a witness because I didn't want to see the innocent Negro boys electrocuted."

De Priest Can't "Make Fool of Himself"

The delegation then called upon Vice-President Garner, who said he "would refer the bill to the proper Senate Committee."

The Committee saw Congressman De Priest and asked him to take up the matter of the Scottsboro case in Congress. "The Scottsboro case is a matter of law and I won't make a fool of myself," De Priest said.

Regarding the Bill of Civil Rights, De Priest said he wanted to read it first. "Well, how soon will you read it?" Patterson asked. "I can't promise when," the Congressman replied.

"It is a bill calling for full social, political and economic rights for the Negroes," Patterson explained. De Priest abruptly cut the interview short, saying that if he had anything to say he would say it for himself and that no one could tell him what to say.

In a speech to the Marchers assembled, William L. Patterson called upon the Negroes in the U. S. to violate all Jim Crow laws and to completely smash discrimination of any sort against the Negro people.

"The march to Washington," Patterson declared, "is only the beginning to save the Scottsboro boys. The mass protest movement will be developed until the millions of Negro and white workers are aroused to militant intensity in the defense of the Negro boys.

"The marchers must develop plans for preparatory work for the development of strikes of workers and students in order to save the Scottsboro boys, and to establish complete equality, including social equality, for the Negro people of America."

Other speakers at the meeting were James W. Ford, Communist candidate for vice-president in the last national election; Louise Thompson, secretary of the National Scottsboro Action Committee; A. J. Muste, of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action; Frank Spector, assistant national secretary of the International Labor Defense; and Samuel Patterson, of the Caribbean Union and of the Odd Fellows.

Line of March

The Scottsboro Marchers formed at New York Ave., east of Florida Ave., then marched west on New York Ave., to N St., west on N St. to 13th St., south on 13th St. to New York Ave., west on New York Ave., to Pennsylvania Avenue, west on Pennsylvania Avenue to West Executive Avenue, around South Roadway to extension of E St., east on E St., to Pennsylvania Ave., east on Pennsylvania Ave, to Constitution Ave., east on Constitution Ave. to Second St. N. E., south on Second St. to C St. S. E., west on C St. to Third St. S.W., north on Third St. to East Seaton Park where a big mass meeting of the marchers was held.

Previously Major Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police in the District of Columbia in haggling over the permit for the parade, sought to force the Scottsboro Committee to accept a shorter line of march which would make impossible the focussing of the demonstration upon thousands of Negro and white workers of the city. Brown, in insisting on the shorter line of march, offered as reasons that a longer line "would tie up traffic and fatigue the marchers."

PRISON GUARDS BRUTALLY BEAT UP SCOTTSBORO BOYS

Cleveland Gazette
5-13-33
Cleveland Ohio

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(C. N. A.)—The nine Scottsboro boys were brutally beaten up last Thursday by prison guards in their cage on the eight floor of the Jefferson County Jail here.

The boys, arming themselves with pieces of plumbing, finally drove the guards from the cage. They then refused the demands of the guards that they go to their individual cells, realizing that the attempt to separate them was in preparation for more brutal attack. Heywood Patterson, under a new sentence of death as a result of the Decatur lynch verdict, declared "we'll die first" when the boys were ordered by the warden to go back to their cells. The eight other boys stood solidly with Heywood.

The boys then sent a letter of demands to the warden, protesting against their ill-treatment and closing with the slogan now thundering throughout the world "Freedom for the Scottsboro Boys!"

The warden, angered by the militancy of the boys, declared that they had been "insolent," "especially Paterson," since their return from Decatur.

In order to cover up the mistreatment of the boys, the warden prohibited visitors last Thursday, although Thursday is the day set aside for Negro visitors to the prison. Hundreds of Negroes were on hand in an attempt to convey to the boys their sympathy and solidarity with them.

News of the brutal beating of the nine boys spread like wild-fire throughout Birmingham and has evoked a wave of indignation from Negro and white workers alike.

Harlem ethed with indignation today as its residents learned of the vicious attacks on the nine innocent Scottsboro boys by the prison guards. News of the attack was carried on the front pages of most of the daily papers, although these papers attempted to minimize the attack and interpreed it as a "mutiny" by the boys.

A bulletin posted up in front of the office of the Harlem Liberator, at 2149 7th Avenue, immediately drew large crowds. A protest meeting was started at once, with speakers from the Liberator staff and the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, addressing the crowd and urging them to protest the ill-treament of the boys, and join the Protest march on Washington to demand their release.

Scottsboro Marchers On Way To Washington

5-8-33
New York City

BALTIMORE, May 7.—(AP)—Approximately 1,000 New Yorkers, mostly negroes, arrived here today in trucks and buses en route to Washington to seek President Roosevelt's intervention in the Scottsboro case.

They were to stay over night at Tom Mooney Hall and in homes of sympathizers and leave tomorrow together with a local contingent. They said similar delegations were en route to Washington from Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago.

About 5,000 persons here today attended a meeting where Ruby Bates and Lester Carter, two defense witnesses in the Scottsboro case, asserted the indicted negroes in the case were innocent victims of a frame-up.

The Scottsboro March to Washington

IVE THOUSAND Negro and white workers, professionals and students demonstrated in Washington on Monday. They came from scores of ies and converged on the nation's capital where they put forward de-ands for the release of the Scottsboro boys and for the enforcement of e 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to the United States constitution. t the fight for the release of the Scottsboro boys, the march focussed the tention of millions of Negro and white workers throughout the coun-y on the fact that of the 13,000,000 Negroes in the United States, nearly 000,000 live in the Black Belt; that these Southern Negroes are denied e rights of citizenship and of social, political and economic equality— the contrary, that they are held on the land by peonage, debt slavery, e chain gang system, contract labor, etc. Conditions prevailing in the lack Belt are only slightly worse than those prevailing in the industrial orth.

Daily Worker

Y dramatically presenting the Bill of Civil Rights to the Roosevelt government and its spokesmen, the marchers through their elected ommittees served notice on them that a ceaseless struggle is now begin-ing for the rights of the Negro people. Concretely, the demand was put orward for the enactment into law of the right of Negroes to be a can-idate for any public office, to vote in any election or referendum, to serve n juries, and to the full use of educational facilities without segrega-ion. It would forbid jim-crowism in trains, hospitals, hotels, restau-ants and places of public amusement. The Bill of Civil Rights would orbid residential jim-crow laws or ordinances as well as discrimination n the matter of membership in fraternal organizations and trade unions. n the latter point the American Federation of Labor is the worst of-ender.

5-10-33

The rousing reception given the Scottsboro marchers by the Negro nd white population of Washington—particularly in the Negro sections— s an indication of the spirit created throughout the country by the emonstration in Washington. Elsewhere in this issue is an eye-witness escription of the march, emphasizing particularly the inspiring scenes n the squalid sections of Washington—a stone's throw from the im-posing Capitol dome.

New York, N.Y.

PRESIDENT Roosevelt bluntly refused to see the delegation elected by the marchers to present to him the Bill of Civil Rights and thousands of names signed to a petition for the release of the Scottsboro boys. Roosevelt's action shows him to be the chief violator of the elementary rights of the people (the right of petition) and at the same time the chief supporter of the southern bourbon rule in which the Democratic Party is so deeply intrenched.

Both Rainey, Speaker of the House, and Vice-President Garner, hid behind formal technicalities in declining to act on the Bill of Civil Rights. All parliamentary bars were lifted when dictatorial powers were turned over to Roosevelt upon his inauguration—so that "emergency measures" could be taken in the interests of the banks and railroads of the country. When, however, demands come from the most oppressed sections of the population, every legal device is dragged forth to justify inaction on the part of the politicians.

As for the Negro congressman from Chicago, De Priest, we will take up his deceitful alibis in an early issue of the Daily Worker.

The Negro reformists, who at first pretended to support the Scottsboro March under pressure of the masses roused to fury by the Decatur lynch verdict, later eased out of the campaign. Despite their treachery, however, the march was an achievement.

THE Scottsboro March symbolized the struggle for the freedom of the nine innocent Negro boys, which is inseparable from the struggle for Negro rights.

Returning to their home cities, the delegates who joined in the march should take the lead in consolidating organizationally the tremendous sentiment behind the movement for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and the fight for Negro rights.

Fish Sees Boost For Communism In Execution Of Scottsboro Negroes

Montgomery, Ala.

WASHINGTON, May 4.—(AP)—Linking his remarks with possible reaction to the Scottsboro case, Representative Fish (R), New York, warned of "communist activity among [illegible] negroes in America."

"Numerous negroes," said Fish, in a speech from the floor of the House, "have been sent over to the revolutionary training school at Moscow."

The International Labor Defense, representing the negroes charged with attacking two white women on a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., Fish declared, was "an out-and-out communist organization."

"I say to you gentlemen from the South," Fish said, turning to the Democratic side of the House, "that if these young boys are executed, it will put into the hands of the communist party a weapon as it never before had."

The negroes of the world, Fish said, would regard execution of the Scottsboro men as a "miscarriage of justice."

The New Yorker also mentioned in his address the impeachment of Federal Court Judge Lowell, of Massachusetts district, in connection with granting of a writ to stop the return of William Crawford, negro, to Virginia to stand trial for the slaying of two white women.

Fish, defending Lowell's act, said the judge merely "desired to expedite justice." The appeal from the writ, instituted by the State of Massachusetts, said Fish, will bring the case promptly to the Supreme Court, rather than allow some time to elapse before the case filters through the lower courts.

Finished with his discussion of the Scottsboro and Lowell cases, Fish turned his attention to the current situation in Cuba, in which he already has interested himself.

"In nearby Cuba, less than a hundred miles from our mainland," he said, "a country which we freed from the misrule, terror and bloodshed of an alien Spanish dictatorship, there have been several hundred Cuban citizens killed by the secret police of the Machado government within the last few years. . . .

"In view of the fact that our State Department only a few weeks ago very properly asked for a report from the American ambassador and consuls in Germany regarding the attacks and outrages perpetrated on American citizens in that country and the facts concerning the persecution of the Jews there, why should not the same request be made of our diplomatic agents in Cuba. . . . .

"The part played by some big New York banks and utility companies in support of the Machado dictatorship does not make pleasant reading for liberty-loving Americans."

Referring to the Scottsboro defendants, Fish said: "They are charged with attacking two women of the underworld, women of low character. One of these boys has been sentenced despite the testimony of one of these women that she was not attacked.

"The attorneys representing these negroes were paid by the International Defense League, an out and out communist organization. I think the judge conducted himself with the utmost integrity. I am only trying to serve notice that the execution of these young men will do more to spread revolutionary propaganda in this country than anything the communists could do themselves."

Representative Colmer (D), Mississippi, asked Fish what he "hoped to accomplish by discussing a case being tried in a sovereign court of Alabama."

"Does the gentleman hope to influence the jury?" Colmer asked. "Does he hope to influence the judge in instructing the jury?"

"There is no good purpose to be served by such a speech."

Lee (D), Missouri, interjected that the Fish speech "would encourage a lot of negroes to get into trouble who ought to remain good negroes."

FISH SEES 'RED' PERIL IN SCOTTSBORO TRIALS

Atlanta, Ga.

Constitution

WASHINGTON, May 4.—(AP)—Representative Fish, republican, New York, told the house today that execution of the negroes on trial at Scottsboro for attacking two white girls "will be regarded by negroes as a miscarriage of justice that will put a weapon in the hands of communists such as they've never before had."

"They are charged with attacking two women of the underworld, women of low character," Fish said. "One of these boys has been sentenced despite the testimony of one of these women that she was not attacked.

"The attorneys representing these negroes were paid by the International Defense League, an out and out communist organization. I think the judge conducted himself with the utmost integrity. I am only trying to serve notice that the execution of these young men will do more to spread revolutionary propaganda in this country than anything the communists could do themselves."

"A few weeks ago," Fish continued, "four white men were arrested in Virginia for attempting to rape a 12-year-old negro girl. Does anyone believe they will be sentenced to death?"

Fish referred to Federal Judge Jams A. Lowell, of Boston, whose conduct the house voted to investigate last week after he released George Crawford, negro, wanted in Virginia for murder, as his personal friend and "a man of high character."

He said Virginia was fairer to the negro than any other southern state and had been the scene of fewer lynchings.

"The main reason communists haven't succeeded in their efforts to spread communism among negroes," he said, "is that the American negro believes in God and is a church-going people and when they learn that communism teaches hatred of God it doesn't go very well.

"But if these men in Scottsboro are executed, negroes will believe there is no such thing as justice for the negro in America and it will give the communists the weapon they need."

Representative Colmer, democrat, Mississippi, asked Fish what he "hoped to accomplish by discussing a case being tried in a sovereign court of Alabama."

"Does the gentleman hope to influence the jury?" Colmer asked. "Does he hope to influence the judge in instructing the jury?"

"There is no good purpose to be served by such a speech."

Lee, democrat, Missouri, interjected that the Fish speech "would encourage a lot of negroes to get into trouble who ought to remain good negroes."

WASHINGTON, May 2.—(AP)—A committee, representing the National Scottsboro Action Committee, today called on Louis Howe, one of the President's secretaries, in an effort to arrange for a conference with President Roosevelt on May 8.

Samuel C. Patterson, chairman of the National Scottsboro Committee, said Howe would inform them later whether they could see the President. The committee was formed in an effort to free the negroes who were indicted at Scottsboro, Ala., on charges of assaulting two white women.

Burn Home of Scottsboro Witness

Chatanooga, Tenn.—The vengeance of the Ku Klux Klan against those who fought to cheat the lynchers of their prey in Decatur, Ala., reached into Chattanooga, Monday, April 17, and while E. L. Lewis, Negro witness for the defense in the Scottsboro case, was attending court at Decatur, waiting to be called in the trial of Charley Weems, his house here, at 220 Central Ave., was burned to the ground, and all its contents destroyed. Fiery crosses burned in northern Alabama while this outrage was perpetrated.

Lewis was the witness for the Scottsboro boys who testified that Victoria Price spent the night before the arrest of the boys at Paint Rock, in the jungle at Chattanooga. The girl has said she spent that night at the home of "Callie Broochie"—a non existent person. Lewis was able to show that he had seen and spoken to her, Ruby Bates, and two white boys, early in the morning in the Chattanooga jungle. Ku Klux Klan threats, both officially from the organization, and from individual members, have been received by defense witnesses and their lawyers.

Already, in Jackson County (Scottsboro), a reign of terror against the Negro witnesses who testified for the defense on the exclusion of Negroes from juries, and two have been terrorized into signing repudiations of their testimony.

A SOCIALIST QUITS HIS PARTY

5-7-33

Heywood Broun, who writes things for The New York World-Telegram, and who had been prominently identified with the Socialist Party has unhitched.

In other words, Mr. Broun has quit the party of Norman Thomas. He quit it cold—because he knew that the next day or so he would be asked to resign.

And the indirect reason for Col. Broun leaving the political body, of which he was a strong pillar, was the stand he took in defense of the "Scottsboro men."

Now we like Col. Broun. We like his writings. We like the way he starts out to convince his readers—and himself—of the truth. And we like the way he sometimes ruins his own case in trying to stick to the truth as he sees it, or as he saw it yesterday. Not that the erstwhile Socialist does not know that he is applying the blowtorch to ideas which he might have held last year, or day before yesterday. Nothing of the kind.

Broun, obviously, is what too many so-called liberal thinkers are not. He is honest enough to be defeated in debate. And usually his defeat is brought about by the arguments of none other than Heywood Broun.

Mr. Broun is consistent, however, in one theme. And that is his defense of the lowly. The underdog, in his opinion, not only deserves protection—but always is right.

But that is because he does his thinking with his feet off the ground. And that is why more than once he has shocked the powers-that-be with whom he has been affiliated.

Mr. Broun does not care for Communism. He has attacked it in his column.

But the Communists were quick to grab the Mooney and Scottsboro cases for propaganda fodder.

And Col. Broun if convinced that the defendants in both cases are innocent, and that they have not been treated justly.

So against the orders of the Socialist Party leaders, the fighting Colonel attended gatherings of rather crimson color to make speeches in behalf of Tom Mooney and the Scottsboro Negroes.

He knew when he attended the meetings that he would be asked to resign, so he beat the party leaders to the draw and announced that Heywood Broun has severed connections with the Socialists.

"I still think democracy the best way," he explained, "a majority can always overrule a minority, even though the minority is better organized."

But Broun is no less a Socialist now that he has resigned than he ever has been.

He never was a party man. And though he may in a fashion, place his name on the roll of some other political party, he never will be a party man.

Col. Broun is one of the top-rankers of those who think with their feet off the ground.

But there are many more lesser gentlemen whose thoughts are given birth in the air, so to speak, who profess allegiance to Socialism. They are not party men either.

And that is why Socialism never will make headway in this country—unless of course it is given wing by the Democrats or the Republicans.

Apology to South Is Weakening to Magnificent Fight.

HINT SURRENDER TO DEMOCRATS

Eulogy of Judge Horton Unfortunate.

NEW YORK—Warning him that some of his public statements in which he apologized to the South and eulogized Judge Horton might be weakening to the magnificent defense he made in behalf of the Scottsboro boys, William L. Patterson, secretary of the International Labor Defense, has written Samuel S. Leibowitz a letter asking the trial attorney not to play into the hands of the enemy by such utterances.

There has been noted, says Patterson, an attempt by political groups and others whose purpose it is to stem the huge tide of public protest against the outrageous Decatur lynch verdict in the Scottsboro case, to use the attorney for for these ends.

Magnificent Victory

"Pressure of business has delayed my transmitting to you the congratulations of our organization for the very splendid part you played in the victory which is ours at the Decatur trial," Mr. Patterson wrote. "I say victory advisedly, for despite the fact that a verdict of 'guilty' was passed, this outrageous ruling-class lynch verdict and decision has been one of the most salient factors for the mobilization of new thousands into the ranks of struggle.

"The International Labor Defense congratulates you for the magnificent manner in which you carried forward the battle in the courts, and yet it feels that at this moment, more than at any other, it must call to your attention anew the basic character of our fight and the relation of certain mistakes you unwittingly made to the weakening of the defense of the boys as a whole.

"It would seem unnecessary to add that this tremendous gathering of forces for the defense, in which your activities played so prominent a part, was at once the vehicle with which the forces of reaction were also mobilized. The proof of this, of course, is to be found in the numerous attacks made upon us by the Southern press and the leaders of the prevailing political thought of the South—even their political opponents in the other capitalist parties."

The letter pointed out that while Mr. Leibowitz's reiteration that he is not a Communist was quite correct, his harping on the fact that he is a Democrat, a member of the party which in the South is the most determined upholder of the system of slavery and degradation for the Negro people and the white workers, seriously confuses the issues involved in the Scottsboro case.

Both Democratic and Republican organizations, Mr. Patterson said, are busily at work attempting to form "new defense organizations," the sole purpose of which, in view of the affiliations of these groups, can be to divert the pressure of mass opinion which alone can save the Scottsboro boys from death.

"In lumping them together you have unwittingly played into the hands of the lynchers, those who are against the Scottsboro boys and their interests," Mr. Patterson said.

Leibowitz's eulogizing of Judge Horton was termed "unfortunate" in the letter of Mr. Patterson, and his apology to the South, in his summation at the trial for having demanded that Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., call a Negro witness "mister" was characterized as "weakening."

NOTES ON EDUCATION

Ruby Bates, the companion of Victoria Price on that infamous train ride near Paint Rock, Ala., two years ago is by way of becoming educated.

A Communist organization has adopted the cotton mill girl, and for the second time has extended to her the hospitality of the City of New York.

The other night, under the sheltering wing of the gentle Leibowitz and the good brethren of the International Labor Defense League, the Bates girl was haled before a mob of cheering Harlemites.

She made a speech.

And among other things Ruby Bates said: "The ruling classes of Scottsboro frightened me into saying the Negro boys attacked us."

Ruling classes!

Could it be that the kindly souls who have taken the girl in inspired that speech? Could it be that the simple mill girl was taught that speech by her "new friends?"

If Ruby Bates had spoken of "Them damn cops," or if she had said: "The laws made me do it," her story would have sounded much more plausible—if not true.

Next thing, the girl will be poll-parroting about "the oppressed proletarians" and "the crushing iron heel of Capitalism on the necks of the humble white and Negro workers."

And the pity of it is that Harlem Negroes and Boston blue-bloods will believe her inspired stories.

Conflicting Opinions on The Scottsboro Case

Editor of Citizen:

PSEUDONYMS like "Southron" and "Southern Rebel" are quite handy when a writer wants to express distorted, biased opinions without revealing his identity.

The fair-minded opinions stated by The Citizen and Heywood Broun about the Scottsboro case surely cannot be interpreted by an intelligent person as a suggestion that those Negro boys should go "scot-free" if they are guilty of crime. "Southron" should know, if he does not, that in addition to The Citizen many northern newspapers, and even many southern newspapers, have expressed the opinion, not that the Scottsboro defendants are innocent or guilty, but that the state of Alabama has not given them a fair trial.

True, "the south knows the Negro"—so much so that the white forefathers of the south readily trusted the black man to guard the white wives, daughters, and sweethearts of the south, and this while the white forefathers were away fighting to keep these very black men and their wives, daughters, sisters and sweethearts in slavery.

"The south knows the Negro," and for that very reason many southern white newspapers have stepped up on holy ground with The Citizen and Heywood Broun—ground of right and justice—with the contention that the Scottsboro Negro boys have not to date received a square deal.—O. W. Shaw.

ANSWERS "SOUTHERN REBEL"

Editor of Citizen:

WHO, may I ask, does "Southern Rebel," as he so fittingly calls himself, think he is? Who empowered him to judge his fellow men and say that, when killed by the state of Alabama, "they will never be missed?"

In my estimation, a Negro has just as much right as anyone else to be considered innocent until he is proved otherwise in a trial conducted somewhat differently from the one at Scottsboro. If "Southern Rebel" doesn't like the north, the south might want him, and we "won't miss him."—W. H. McL.

SOUTHERNERS AND NEGROES

Editor of Citizen:

THE Scottsboro case again discloses the extreme ignorance of the average northerner about the race question in the south. Contrary to what most northerners believe, the southern people do not hate Negroes. In fact, the average southerner is a much better friend of the Negro than the average northerner.

With a tremendous colored population, the south has long found it necessary to separate the white and colored races to prevent race friction. This is simply an honest and intelligent way of handling a social problem, and educated Negro leaders approve and insist upon this separation.

No one knows better than I do that the commission of a vicious crime against a white woman or a child makes the ordinarily good natured southerner's blood boil, and he is altogether too likely to take the law into his own hands. Such crimes endanger to otherwise harmonious relations between the races. For these reasons, the crimes with which the Scottsboro boys are charged are of the most serious nature.

I do not know whether these boys are guilty as charged, but I do know that their "defense" has not been to their best interests. It is unfortunate that a certain organization is using this case merely for publicity. The boys are not Communists, but simply irresponsible youths who got themselves into serious trouble.

The services of any number of skilled attorneys, white and colored, are available in Alabama. A "defense" based upon class, sectional and race prejudices, conducted by a lawyer who has not the slightest sympathy with American institutions or social conditions in the south, cannot represent the true interests of the accused in this case; neither can any court, no matter how fair, assure an impartial trial.

Furthermore, southern people, white and colored, resent the meddling of outside agitators in affairs of which they have no real knowledge or interest. When Heywood Broun stops the sale of judgeships, the purchase of juries and witnesses and the "taking for a ride" of state's witnesses, the good people of Alabama will be ready to welcome his advice. —Alabaman.

Editor of Citizen:

WHETHER the Scottsboro Negroes are guilty or not, I wouldn't have supposed that southern white "ladies" would lower themselves to become boxcar hoboes. As for the north not knowing how to deal with Negroes, the north does know how to give anyone a fair trial, white or black.—Lucille Williams.

THEORY VS. FACT

Editor of Citizen:

THE statements of "Southron" and "Southern Rebel" are based on pure theory, not fact. At the first trial, about two years ago, Ruby Bates testified under oath that the Negro defendants had assaulted her. At the recent trial she testified, again under oath, that her previous testimony had been a lie. The only thing she proved at both trials was that her testimony was false.

Yet it was her evidence, in the first trial, that convicted the defendants. The district attorney charged that "northern Jew money" had bought her off, before the second trial, but there was no evidence to support this charge. Just another theory.

If the Scottsboro defendants are proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, I believe firmly they should be punished, as should any man who commits such a crime as they are charged with.—W. D. M., Delaware, O.

NEGROES IN THE NORTH

Editor of Citizen:

WHAT, asks "Southron," does the north know about how to deal with the Negro? Well, the north knows that the Negro is decidedly human; that in a few brief years of freedom he has made progress that the free white race required centuries to make; that he is entitled to decent respect.

The crime charged against the Scottsboro youth is, in reality, not a crime. The prosecution is exploiting southern hatred of the Negro. Great numbers of southerners have never realized that the Negroes are no longer slaves, and continue to regard them as less than human beings.

I do not uphold my people, or any other people, in wrong, but my sense of justice is strong. I have small respect for people like "Southron" and "Southern Rebel," who ask newspapers to print letters they are afraid to sign with their real names.—William Davis.

REGARDLESS OF COLOR"

Editor of Citizen:

SO the north does not know how to handle Negroes! Well, the north does give men accused of crime a fair trial, regardless of their color. We don't go in mobs, like hounds on the trail of a rabbit, after a man who has committed—or is suspected of having committed—a crime. The Negro, in the north, knows his place and stays in it. If he makes a mistake, we or our fair courts teach him correctly.

The Negro, in the north, has a chance. Knowing that he will be dealt with fairly, he trusts the law. There are no race wars; there are almost no lynchings, legal or illegal.

It is the north, and not the south, it seems to me, that does know how to handle Negroes.—Arden Brown.

Haywood Patterson Knifed During Fight With Andy and Roy Wright, Codefendants

Macon, Ga

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., May 11 (AP) Three Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case fought among themselves in jail Thursday and Haywood Patterson was stabbed. The wound is not serious.

Wardens said Andy and Roy Wright—two of the nine Negroes accused in the case—attacked Patterson as the prisoners were being transferred from the night to the day cells.

Two stitches were taken in the wound. Sheriff James F. Hawkins ordered Patterson confined apart from the others. The Wright brothers said they attacked Patterson because he was "overbearing and arrogant." Officers took a knife from one of the Wright brothers.

Patterson is the omy one of the Negroes who has faced retrial. He was convicted recently at Decatur and resentenced to death.

One of the two women who accused the Negroes of assault—was reported missing from Huntsville Thursday, but later reports said she was visiting relatives in Tennessee.

Trouble Started at Kilby

Trouble with Patterson started several months ago while the Negroes were being held for safe keeping in the death house at Kilby prison, state penitentiary at Montgomery, Deputy Sheriff William Biles said the Wrights told him.

During the retrial of Patterson, who was convicted a second time and sentenced to death at Decatur last month, Morgan county officers quelled a fight among the Negroes.

Following their return to the jail here from Decatur the Negroes mutinied two weeks ago when they charged a deputy warden abused them. They spent the night on the floor of the day cell on a [illegible] water ratio[illegible] the next day cap[illegible]

Young Alabamians' Opinion

That Alabama opinion is itself far from unanimous on the Scottsboro case is indicated by the following from "The Plainsman," the student semi-weekly of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala. This, a state-aid, land-grant college in eastern Alabama, is one of the leading educational institutions of the state. It has an enrollment of about 2,000, drawn almost entirely from Alabama. The first quotation is from an editorial, written by Knox M. McMillan, the editor of "The Plainsman." The second quotation is from a feature column, conducted by John R. Chadwick under the signature of "Observer."

"The Plainsman"—Editorial

The acquisition of further information on the subject inclines us to believe that our first judgment of the Scottsboro verdict was somewhat hasty. . . .

It is all too evident that the Decatur verdict should be modified or a new trial held. That the Negroes will be given a fair trial is now more doubtful than ever, unless they are brought before the Supreme Court of the United States. The defense has done more to convict the boys by its vituperation of the Decatur jury and the white people in Alabama than the prosecution has done. The propaganda scattered throughout the North by various organizations has done the defendants an injustice that may mean their deaths. We rather believe that the propagandists have never been really interested in the administration of justice; what they want is fertile ground on which to sow their communistic doctrines. And the poor, ignorant blacks are the targets of their preachings.

What the good citizens of Alabama think of the trial is best expressed by John Temple Graves 2d, of "The Birmingham Age-Herald," who says:

"Walter Lippmann paid this column the compliment last Tuesday of wiring from New York for its opinion of the Scottsboro case and asking 'What, if anything, I could helpfully say?' It seems to us that the most helpful thing Mr. Lippmann could say is that enlightened Alabamians—and there are thousands of them—have their fingers crossed, that they want with all their hearts to be fair, that they believe the death penalty a social necessity in the South for the crime of which the Negroes are accused, but that they are by no means certain of guilt in this instance, and that even if there is guilt the circumstances seem to call for executive modification of sentence. And that they have no more patience with Solicitor Wright than they have with the International Labor Defense. And that they do not believe in lynching—by hand or by telegram."

We are inclined to concur with Mr. Graves's viewpoint. The whole affair has been badly mismanaged. . . . We can only hope that future procedure will bring out the facts of the case in their true light before any irreparable mistakes are made.

"The Plainsman"—Observer

A few issues past, Observer took occasion to point out what seemed to be a slight inconsistency in the editorial pages of "The Montgomery Advertiser." The occasion arose from a comparison of two editorials appearing in that paper. The first, appearing some months ago, shuddered at the caste system as practiced in India; the second, an outgrowth of the attacks upon the State of Alabama in regard to the Scottsboro trial, pointed out that individuals and any organized force would do well to allow the sovereign State of Alabama to settle alone those circumstances which pertained to its own jurisdiction. Said "The Advertiser," in reply to those statements: "Is 'The Auburn Plainsman' opposed to the 'caste system' as it is in Alabama?" . . .

Observer is opposed to the caste system as it is in the State of Alabama. No person who has lived in the far South for many years and has seen the misuse of the Negro can deny that he does not suffer from inequality before the state-operated legislative and judicial tribunals and their respective tributaries. No one who has ever seen the average officer of the law in this state, laboring under a misconceived estimation of civil authority arrest a Negro, can doubt that equality of the two predominating races in the state is far short of mythical. . . .

Certainly "The Advertiser" is aware that the State of Alabama ranks tenth among eleven Southern states in the educational expenditures for the Negro as compared with the white. Can it then be denied that there is unequal educational opportunity of the two races? Leading sociologists, respected for their knowledge of living problems of the races, contend that crime will be more easily found where there is ignorance. Is it then rational to misuse human beings who have been denied the proper teachings of the social standards?

The political situation, which does not encourage and often prevents Negro participation in government, leaves the Negro practically a dependent upon the whites who make the laws. The majority of the blacks refer to the courts as the "white man's court," and to the police as "the law." As a consequence the Negro's feeling of civic pride and community responsibility has been stunted almost to the point of extinction. The state does not adequately provide for welfare work and organizations which would remedy the poorly accommodated institutions for juvenile delinquency and the mentally deranged among the Negroes. The justified feeling that he does not have the police protection afforded the whites leads the Negro to the conclusion that he must protect himself. In many communities police allow a crime of Negro against Negro to go unpunished; not so in Negro against white. Rarely does one hear of the lynching of a white person; never when white has committed a crime against a Negro.

The Negro has not only been denied the common advantages of a human being but has also been made to feel his inferiority. There is no denying the Negro's mental inferiority due to the fact of his suppressed educational advantages. It is possible that the Negro as a race is inferior to the white. Certainly he has been given no opportunity to disprove such a supposition. It is true that the white race has proved itself more barbaric, more taken by greed and more capable of inhuman actions than the Negro could conceivably be capable of committing. The Negro has been born to be more primitive than the white, but certainly more appreciative of human rights in more than one respect.

It is Observer's belief that if the Negro in this state were given a broader opportunity for advancement he would be more creditable to the state. This idea undoubtedly grates upon the provincial Southland and upon those traditions which are attributed to the old South. But we are not striving to live in the ante-bellum South. We are existing in the present and should strive for a more intelligently conceived advancement.

"Privilege to Give," Says Dentist, Sending Check of $25 to Publisher

To the amount of $41.27 reported last week as the balance on hand of the Scottsboro defense fund under the direction of William H. Davis, publisher of The Amsterdam News, the sum of $88.73 had been contributed yesterday by the following clubs and individuals:

Dr. Bernard Haines	$25.00
The Gay Dumb Belles Bridge Club	25.00
African Universal Church of Miami, Fla.	17.13
V. G. Jervis and Unity Life Insurance agents	8.60
The Sunflower Club	10.00
Mrs. Anna Black	1.00
C. V. Jones	1.00
Susie A. Wilkins	1.00
Total	$88.73
Brought forward	41.27
Grand total	$130.00

"I consider it a humble privilege," wrote Dr. Haines, a white dentist, "to make my small contribution to this fund.... To me it seemed that every phase of the (Decatur, Ala.) trial was clouded by unreasonable prejudice. I have dealt with hundreds of colored people during my many years as a dentist, and I have always found them no different from those of my own race."

Patterson Hearing Is Set For June 22

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 15 (AP) Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., was notified by Judge James E. Horton Monday that the petition of Heywood Patterson, one of the nine Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro" attack cases, for a new trial had been set for June 22, at Decatur.

Patterson was convicted and sentenced to death by a Morgan county jury April 9 for the second time. Trials of the other "Scottsboro" case defendants were continued to an unspecified date by Judge Horton after a Decatur newspaper had printed portions of an interview by Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York counsel, for the Negroes in which the jury was severely censored for its action in convicting Patterson.

"It takes more than a crowd of hooded bigots to scare a Jew boy from the sidewalks of New York. And it will take more than threatening letters and bombs to keep me from going down there 'til Hell freezes over and until the fight is won and we bring the nine of them back to this platform."

Thus spoke the Martyr Leibowitz as the wild cheers of a mob of misled Negroes and his own prostituted eloquence gave birth to phrases of hatred and prejudice that would drive "Nigger-baiting white scum" to shame.

A man pretending to have the interest of the American Negro at heart, a man who vowed that he would fight "'til Hell froze over" for the lives of nine black men could not have been outdone by a frenzied witch doctor in appeals to savage emotion that belongs not in civilized Harlem—but to jungle campfires.

A voodoo medicine man who called ignorant blacks to war council with the blood-rousing music of tom-toms could not have touched flames of hatred behind the shirt fronts of civilized black men more effectively than did Leibowitz as he sought to enlarge the ranks of the "Free the Scottsboro Boys Washington March."

This happened at St. Nicholas arena in New York the other night when Leibowitz and the International Labor Defense League had as honor guests Miss Ruby Bates, of Alabama, and Mr. Lester Carter, of Chattanooga and points East, West, North and South.

The Bates girl has been won over to a Cause.

New York is a nice place for a girl to visit, you know. And Ruby's generous heart has gone out to her New Friends, who teach her pieces to recite. Evidently she enjoys being a lady of distinction.

Carter happened to be riding on the train when the Negro defendants boarded it near Paint Rock two years ago.

Somehow he found his way into the I. L. D. camp and has been doing his bit with the aid of Communistic drill sergeants

How many threatening letters has Leibowitz received?

How many hooded bigots threatened the man?

How many bomb threats has he received?

If Leibowitz has received any threatening letters it is to be hoped that the United States Postoffice Department is investigating them. And it is to be hoped that the senders of the letters are prosecuted in the Federal courts.

If any hooded bigots threatened Leibowitz it is the duty of the sheriff of Morgan County to investigate and make arrests. And it would not be out of order for the Attorney General to prosecute them.

But Leibowitz was only making a speech when he told of the threats. He was not swearing out warrants.

And Leibowitz, to put it mildly, was exaggerating.

But the only thing the New York lawyer has to fear from Alabamians is a contempt that cannot easily be hidden, a contempt that is reserved for the sour loser.

Scottsboro Front Split at Meeting

Old Antagonisms Revived by Speakers After March to Washington—Large Audience Lacking in Former Enthusiasm

5-17-33
New York, N.Y.

Aroused to historic heights of indignation by the Palm Sunday conviction of Haywood Patterson in Decatur, Ala., and spurred on to a mass protest march on Washington, Harlem seems to be suffering a reactionary let-down on the Scottsboro case.

This fact was evidenced at a monster meeting at Rockland Palace last Wednesday evening, where an unresponsive audience of 5,000 persons assembled to hear the report of the Scottsboro marchers who vainly sought to protest the decision to President Franklin D. Roosevelt on May 8. The meeting was sponsored by the Scottsboro Action Committee, which was also responsible for the demonstration at the nation's capital.

Instead of giving a detailed report of the march, speakers on the Rockland Palace program launched a bitter attack against the various organizations and individuals who had joined in a "united front" to support the defense of the nine boys and sought to arouse a jaded audience to fight against the leadership it had previously followed.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Socialist Party, The New York Amsterdam News, the New York Age, the ministers of Harlem, and the professional practitioners of the community bore the brunt of the attack waged by a long list of speakers. Included among the attackers were Louise Thompson, national secretary of the sponsoring body; Richard B. Moore of the International Labor Defense, Larry Cohen (white) of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, Samuel Patterson, chairman, and several others.

Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of the twice convicted youth; Ruby Bates and Lester Carter, two chief witnesses for the defense in his retrial; Irving Schwab, I. L. D. attorney, and the Rev. A. C. Powell, Jr., assistant pastor of Abyssinian Baptist Church, also made short addresses. Two-minute talks on the hardships and significance of the march were given by several participants, including the Rev. J. Brooks Callander of the African Orthodox Church, Mrs. C. J. West, Mrs. Ruby Edwards and William Boyd.

Organizations Attacked.

The N. A. A. C. P., which is at present raising funds for the defense of the boys, was savagely attacked by Moore and other speakers. The Amsterdam News was scored because its general manager, William H. Davis, carried a delegation of nineteen persons to present a petition of 145,000 signatures to President Roosevelt. The Age was opposed because it carried an article connecting Miss Thompson and the I. L. D. with the Communist party. And the ministers, many of whom have donated their churches and services for Scottsboro meetings, and the Socialist Party, which was invited into the "united front," were attacked for everything from Hitlerism to petty larceny.

Attorney Schwab brought greetings from the Scottsboro defendants, Angelo Herndon and the Tallapoosa sharecroppers; Carter and Miss Bates expressed their intention of going back to Alabama to testify in behalf of the other eight boys, and the young Rev. Mr. Powell made a plea for all "to forget pettiness, narrowness and false racial antagonisms in the fight to free the boys."

No mention was made of the old "united front" of all groups on a common cause which made history in Harlem during Holy Week.

Scottsboro Case May Be Depicted for Posterity in Murals of Diego Rivera

Student of Celebrated Painter Is Planning Artistic Project

Amsterdam News

By T. R. POSTON.

New York

THE BARBARISM of Alabama will be preserved for posterity if a project now being planned by Yay Sanches, young Mexican mural painter and pupil of the great Diego Rivera, is carried out. 5-17-33

Sanches, an assistant to Rivera in the disputed creation of a mural in the RCA building at Radio City, is completing a collection of newspaper clippings, sketches and pictures of the celebrated Scottsboro case with the view of reproducing the high lights of the internationally famous case on the walls of some metropolitan institution in the new future.

The projected mural will be done in true fresco—that most enduring decoration used by the Egyptians more than 4,000 years ago to preserve for the ages their impression of that period. The same medium was used by Rivera in the creation of the openly Communistic mural in Radio City which recently broke another storm around the head of a man whose artistic life has been a series of tempests.

IT is certain that Rivera, believed by many to be the greatest mural painter of the century, will assist his pupil in the creation of the Scottsboro fresco—if, indeed, the master does not take over the project himself. As a proletarian painter, Rivera is intensely interested in the position of the Negro in America and was so deeply affected by the Decatur verdict convicting Haywood Patterson that it was impossible for him to continue his all-absorbing work in Radio City for a while.

In his present mural, now threatened with destruction in the RCA building, the Negro plays an important part. One of the most prominent figures in the foreground of the American scene is that of a colored girl in a student group. This figure is a likeness of Miss Ethel Carr, a Temple University graduate, who posed for the artist. Directly beyond Miss Carr is the head of another Negro student in whose thick lips and flat nose a faint resemblance to the writer of this article may be discerned.

A Negro worker is included in the ranks of the unemployed men who march past South and Wall streets under the vigilant eye of Commissioner Bolan's mounted police in another scene, and the painter was considering adding a "Free the Scottsboro Boys" placard to the others carried by the demonstrators stating, "We Want Work, Not Charity," "Free Mooney," and "Down With Imperialistic Wars Against Soviet Russia."

But a Negro worker figures most prominently in the panel which brought about the dismissal of Rivera last Tuesday and ended in the threat of destruction of the whole mural. This panel shows Lenin, the patron saint of the Russian revolution, joining the hands of a soldier, a white worker and a Negro. Nelson Rockefeller objected to the likeness of Lenin.

THEREFORE, through the pupil, Sanches, and the master, Rivera, Posterity may yet hear of and discuss the fate of nine Negro boys whose lives were placed in jeopardy—if not lost—because their skins were black. In view of this it is quite possible that 5,000 years from now some renowned archaeologist, delving into the ruins of what once had been the New York City, Chicago or San Francisco of today, might uncover a wall filled with hieroglyphics of especial significance.

And, studying these, some future chronicler of these turbulent times may describe the America of 1933.

"In those times," this future historian may write of this period, "a large portion of the North American continent was set apart by arbitrary boundaries and designated as the United States of America. This area inhabited by a heterogeneous group boasted an estimated population of 125,862,037 persons. This population, in deference to the tryannical customs of the land and despite its mongrel composition, was divided into two classifications, commonly called the blacks and the whites. The blacks (Negroes or niggers, according to the section) composed 10 per cent of the whole or approximately 12,684,926 souls.

"These Americans (as those arbitrarily divided inhabitants insisted upon calling themselves) were a half-civilized group of barbarians who constantly sought to bolster their conceptions of national and racial entity by the outward adoption of ridiculous platitudes—the most common of which was "all men are created free and equal."

"WHILE some of these platitudes were national in scope—that is to say, they were accepted by all persons within the artificial boundaries of those United States—other platitudes and concepts were more or less localized and peculiar to the section of the country in which they were originated and maintained. In this way the concepts of "White Supremacy" (a contention that all whites were inherently better than all blacks), and "the Purity of White Womanhood" (that the females of the white species were pure and undefiled by the blacks) were brought into being.

"These latter concepts were born in the Southern part of the country immediately after the blacks had been freed from a short period of enforced servitude at the hands of the whites. In later years—during the 1900s—the leaders of the South found it to their advantage to foster these purity concepts most openly so that the poor and exploited whites would not see that they too were being mistreated by the rulers in the same manner as were the blacks.

"Therefore at stated intervals, surreptitiously set by the leaders, the poor and exploited whites would be influenced to seize some equally poor and exploited black and to torture him to death. In this way the unfortunate blacks and whites would spend their time fighting each other instead of uniting against the leaders who systematically robbed them all.

"And so, on a certain day in 1931, a freight train was passing through Alabama (one of the least civilized of the Southern provinces) when agents of the rulers, hearing of a fight between some black and white youths, halted the conveyance and arrested nine brothers named Scottsboro...."

Neither Sanches nor Rivera can vouch for the historical interpretation which may be placed upon their murals, but the student at least is determined that Posterity shall hear of the plight of the nine black boys in Alabama.

"Scottsboro, Decatur, and Boston"

TO THE EDITOR: I am deeply gratified for your editorial of May 13th, Scottsboro, Decatur, and Boston. It is the sort of editorial I have long desired to see in your paper, as expressing the Anglo-Catholic attitude toward race proscription and social injustice.

I do not comprehend the logic of Fr. Albinson's letter, anent the Scottsboro case. It seems slightly illogical. I should like to have him develop his thesis. He seems to argue that harm is produced by the intrusion of lawyers from the north, particularly Jewish, into cases involving the legal protection of Negroes. Moreover, he urges that "if the people of the south are let alone there is very rarely a miscarriage of justice in cases at law where Negroes are concerned." If this contention is admitted, his conclusion is correct; but the fact exists that his contention is incorrect; if the people of the south are let alone there is rarely any justice for Negroes in cases at law, or in any other situation affecting white and black. Moreover, he seems to argue that "a sovereign state has the right to administer its own justice" in terms of its own concept. If this is true, lynching, disfranchisement, and social proscription are justifiable. Again, he argues that the intrusion of northern agencies into situations of southern injustice causes harm, and is unchristian. Would he argue that the causes of the intrusion—legal and social injustice to Negroes—constitutes no harm and are Christian-like? Admittedly, in cases of Negroes in the south, it is the state that is on trial, and not the defendant at the bar, but this, not because of a show of northern superiority but because there is remote probability, that bigotry and race prejudice rather than Christian intelligence are dominant factors in the administration of southern justice, so far as Negroes are concerned. The Scottsboro case raises the important question of whether the normal southern mind is competent to administer legal justice to Negroes and of whether that mind has developed a concept of illegal and unconstitutional justice for those people. The rulings of the United States Supreme Court seem to indicate it has. The guilty element is not the northern group that has brought to light the constitutional injustice, but the element that develops and seeks to perpetuate it. I would remind Fr. Albinson that if the south would give equal justice to Negroes there would be no necessity of northern intrusion. No intelligent person can agree that harm is produced by the exposure of evil; the fact exists that harm is produced by the development and stubborn perpetuation of evil conditions.

Scottsboro Marchers To Fight For Civil Rights For Negroes

FOR two years the Negro and white working masses have been waging a life and death struggle to save the nine innocent Negro boys framed at Scottsboro. Through the militant leadership of the Communist Party and the International Labor Defense, supported by the world-wide revolutionary movement, the issue in the struggle, during this period, has been raised beyond the question of saving the lives of nine framed-up defendants to the fundamental issue of defending the most elementary rights of the Negro people in the United States.

The justice meted out by the Alabama courts has sharply revealed to the whole world that behind the Scottsboro case rages an elemental war between the reactionary forces of the white ruling class and the awakening Negro people, in solidarity with the white workers, for their right to complete equality. It is this fundamental principle which is the moving force in the stubborn struggle of countless black and white toilers in behalf of the Scottsboro boys.

MILLIONS OPPRESSED

Thirteen million Negroes, a tenth of the population of the United States, are living today under various kinds of disabilities, economic, political and social.

In the Black Belt of the South, 8,000,000 Negroes, although constituting a majority of the population, are reduced to the status of an oppressed nation. The so-called "emancipation proclamation" of 1863 has in no way lifted the actual yoke of slavery from the Negro masses. This proclamation did not touch upon the fundamental question of land, and by depriving the Negroes of the land, their slavery has, on the contrary, been perpetuated. The material conditions of Negroes under the present system of share-cropping, peonage, denial of the right to sell crops, plantation stores, usury, and convict labor, are in no way improved by their "legal" freedom. All the forces of government are enlisted to maintain their slavery.

BY law, and by practices unchecked by law, the Negro people of the United States are everywhere subjected to economic super-exploitation, to social indignities, and to political inequality bordering on virtual outlawry. The Bill of Rights in the American Constitution is for the Negro masses a mere fiction.

The 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution, adopted ostensibly to admit the Negro people to political equality, have proved a hollow mockery. State upon State maintains legal restrictions on the rights of the Negro people. Chain-gang slavery, peonage, disfranchisement, segregation, inter-marriage bans, all or in part, are legalized in more than half the States in the Union, while "unwritten laws" legalize such practices as the closing of many occupations, (particularly the skilled industries) and the professions to Negroes, the discrimination in the American Federation of Labor unions, the imposition of inferior working and living conditions upon Negroes, prejudicial treatment of Negroes in dwellings, in public places, in places of employment, in educational institutions, in law courts, on public carriers, etc.

THE ALABAMA LYNCH VERDICT

The recent lynch verdict of the Decatur courts, in the case of Haywood Patterson, first of the Scottsboro boys to come up for a new trial, has most especially brought to light the flagrant systematic exclusion of all Negroes from jury service; has evidenced the repeated and wilful attempts by the courts of Alabama legally to murder nine innocent boys in the face of their proved innocence, in the face of the perjury of the principle State witnesses, of the acknowledged injection of race prejudice by the attorneys for the prosecution, and of admitted tampering with the jury

So brazen has been the offensive of the boss-controlled courts of Alabama in the Scottsboro fight which has become a test case for the continued tyranny over the Negro masses, that the moment has come for the Negro people and white working class, as well as all true friends of Negro liberation to hurl the challenge: Shall a nation of thirteen million people continue to remain oppressed economically, politically, and socially, or shall the entire American working class, white and black, join in unison to demand full and unqualified equality for the Negro people!

Finally, the refusal of Congress to avail itself of the enforcement powers granted it by the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments, the refusal of the President to exercise his executive powers to check lynchings, has given the stamp of approval, the status of unwritten law, to the murderous instigations of the white master class of the South against the Negro masses whom they seek to keep in perpetual subjection through the most fiendish terror. The railroading to long prison terms of Angelo Herndon and the five Tallapoosa sharecroppers are examples of the whole system of white ruling class oppression, particularly in the South.

The Constitution of the United States includes three Amendments avowedly for the purpose of giving political equality to the Negroes. The following are quotations from the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments:

"Sec. 1. Neither slavery nor INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside. NO STATE SHALL MAKE OR ENFORCE ANY LAW which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of a CITIZEN of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

"The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Each of the foregoing Amendments carries with it an enforcement clause reading:

"Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

The responsibility for the inhuman oppression of the Negro people rests directly upon the white ruling class and its State and Federal Governments. Numbers of states openly launch attacks upon the living conditions, liberties and lives of the Negroes, while the refusal of Congress and President to act or lift a voice against these atrocities clearly demonstrates their partnership in the onslaught upon the Negro people.

Congress in two flagrant examples out of many has jumped to the defense of the lynchers: in the case of George Crawford, where impeachment proceedings were overwhelmingly voted against Judge Lowell because he refused the extradition of a framed Negro to Virginia on the ground that any sentence passed there would be illegal on account of exclusion of Negroes from juries; and in the case of the Hawaiian lynchers, where Congress lined up with Clarence Darrow to prevent their punishment.

Clearly, the liberation of the oppressed Negro people, as indeed of the entire toiling masses, is the task of the Negro and white toilers of the land. Not by way of holding forth legalistic illusions, not in the spirit of the reformists, as in formal presentation of anti-lynch laws without the rousing of mass struggle and support for their enforcement, but by way of bringing forward militantly the claim to equal rights for the Negro people, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights has brought forward the Bill of Civil Rights, which has been endorsed by the National Scottsboro Action Committee.

ONLY STRUGGLE IS EFFECTIVE

Only by constant struggle, by a consistent fight on the part of millions of toilers, black and white, by the combatting of every expression of Negrophobia, can enforcement of such a bill, effective legal protection for Negroes in all fields, and actual enforcement of their equality, be obtained.

The community of interest between the struggles of the Negro people against national oppression, and those of the white workers against their exploitation and degradation by the same ruling class forces, is clear. That the white workers increasingly recognise this common interest is shown by the fact that even in the South they are being drawn more and more into the struggle for Negro rights.

It is in no way an accident that it is in the South, where the ruling class doctrine of white supremacy reigns most openly, that the conditions of the white workers are the most degraded, their exploitation most extreme. The slave status of the Negro masses is used by the ruling class as a weapon to whip down the living standards of the whites. The laws of the Southern states which disfranchise the Negroes operate also to the same effect against large masses of white toilers. Armed forces of "law and order" and the extra-legal forces, such as the Ku Klux Klan, which supplement them, though used primarily to enforce slavery on the Negroes, are used also against the whites whenever they attempt to fight for better conditions.

Mob violence, which the ruling class and its government authorities use as a weapon against the Negro toilers, is instigated by the drawing in of white workers into its operations, for the purpose of diverting them from their community of interest with the Negro masses.

SOME of the basic democratic rights denied the Negro people almost completely include those of jury service, voting, educational facilities without discrimination, and the right to move from place to place freely without being shamefully herded into Jim Crow vehicles. These conditions are dealt with explicitly in sections of the Bill of Civil Rights designed to abolish them. Heavy penalties, as well as provision for civil damages, are provided for their violation.

Lynchings and police murders, and murders of Negroes by individuals at the instigation of the white ruling class and its officers, are the most violent open expressions of the drive against the Negro masses. Five thousand Negroes have been lynched in the past fifty years. Last year, with suppression of all information regarding lynchings the order of the day for the working class and its press, thirty-seven lynchings came to light. In the first two months of 1933, nine lynchings were recorded. Besides these, and besides the unrecorded lynchings, there have been a growing number of police murders and murders by individuals, of Negroes, mounting into hundreds per year as this form of terror has become more popular with the white rulers of South and North.

Against these, also, sections are provided in the Bill of Civil Rights, authorizing specific use of every agency at the command of the government—not, as is now the practice, to promote them, but to prevent them.

The conditions which require the inclusion of sections 3, 4 and 5—against disfranchisement, disqualification for jury service, and school segregation and discrimination, are particularly concrete, as embodied in the laws of many states, and in the practice of all.

ON the basis of the mass movement roused around the indignation and protests of millions of Negroe and white workers over the infamous lynch-verdict of Decatur in the Scottsboro case, concessions can be won by a militant struggle, from the ruling class. Such concessions, partial though they may be, are definite forward steps in the national struggle of the Negro people for the right to self-determination. Only the winning of this right, with the confiscation of the land now held by force by the white ruling class, can achieve the actual liberation of the Negro people.

The League of Struggle for Negro Rights, an organization of Negro and white, wholeheartedly approves of the proposed program of action of the National Scottsboro Action Committee in presenting President Roosevelt and Congress on May 8 with a demand for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and with the "Bill of Civil Rights" demanding the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the U. S. Constitution as an inseparable part of the struggle for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys.

Scottsboro Boys' Own Story of Jail Abuse

BULLETIN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 30.—Negro and white workers fought off attacks of police here today and held a mass meeting in front of the Standard Theatre to demand release of the Scottsboro boys. 3,000 held a second meeting in the South Side following the first struggle.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 30.—The first authentic report of what actually occurred in the Jefferson County jail in connection with what the capitalist press maliciously described as the "Scottsboro Mutiny" on Thursday and Friday became available today when Irving Schwab, attorney for the International Labor Defense, visited the Negro boys in their cage on the eighth floor of the prison.

Abused in Prison.

The framed-up Scottsboro defendants told Schwab that they had been receiving particular abuse at the hands of a guard named Dement. They had objected to the use of the word "niggers" in referring to them and constant cursing—all of which culminated in an open protest policemen tore h

wall. He collapsed under a hail of blows. A policeman was kicking his hat like a football over the square.

The police wavered. In spite of their mad rush at everything in their way, they couldn't break up the demonstration. On the contrary they have come to them, not only from workers in the United States, but from other countries as well.

Daily Worker

The prison guards sought to quell the protest of the Negro boys by bringing to the day cell about 25 white and Negro prisoners, armed with blackjacks. The guards called for the boys to come out, but the latter refused, arming themselves with whatever they could find about the cell for defense—continuing all the time to shout protests.

The attack upon them was called off, but the boys refused to leave the cell for 24 hours. They were denied all food during this time, according to the I. L. D. attorney, and, contrary to capitalist press reports, were not even given bread and water.

The boys surrendered, Schwab reports, when they were promised better treatment. Their spirit is high, he says, and they feel confident of ultimate release by the workers of the country.

NEW YORK.—A truckload of marchers is leaving today from Portland, Ore., it is announced by the National Scottsboro Action Committee, 119 W. 135th St., which is organizing the march. The purpose of the March to Washington is to demand of President Roosevelt on May 8 that he intercede for the release of the Scottsboro boys and that Congress pass laws guaranteeing the constitutional rights of Negroes.

Marchers who have already signed up for the demonstration met Sunday at the Lido Palace, 146th St. and Seventh Ave., New York. Here they were divided into Block Committees, captains elected, and plans for the march formulated.

May 2 and 3 have been designated by the National Scottsboro Action Committee as Scottsboro Days for the enlisting of recruits. A house-to-house canvass will be made in Harlem and other sections of New York City to sign up workers and secure provisions and supplies.

NEW YORK.—A "Scottsboro March Sound Truck," operated by the noted Negro aviator, Colonel Hubert Julian, will cruise up and down Harlem streets this week, calling on workers to support the Scottsboro campaign and enlist for the demonstration in Washington, May 8.

Richmond Meet

RICHMOND, Va., April 30.—One thousand Negro and white workers, professionals and students crowded the Fifth St. Baptist Church here at a Scottsboro protest meeting.

Speakers included Richard B. Moore of the International Labor Defense, who called for mass support for the Scottsboro March to Washington.

Prof. J. E. Moore of Virginia Union University voiced the sentiment of the audience when he declared that he was "not scared by the Red bogey. If the Communists fight for the Scottsboro boys, then I am willing to fight with them."

Norfolk Protest

NORFOLK, Va. (by mail).—With Richard B. Moore of the I.L.D. as the chief speaker, the local Citizens' Scottsboro Aid Committee held a protest meeting attended by more than 800 at the St. John's African Church here.

EL PASO, Tex., April 30.—The first auto caravan of Scottsboro March delegates to Washington hit the highways today when three cars full of workers and sympathizers left here for the trek to the capital. Several more cars of marchers will leave within the next few days, according to the secretary of the Southwestern Branch of the International Labor Defense.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Every patriotic citizen will pray that a righteous indignation over the verdict of an Alabama jury in the first re-trial of the series of Scottsboro cases will be restrained and will not be permitted to start a conflagration of racial prejudice and madness. Protest is justified. Appeal to the ultimate recourse of law is desirable and should be urged. The better mind and spirit of the State of Alabama may intervene, both in this individual case and in the further trial of the remaining cases. But the spirit of lynch law is not the right way to secure justice, even if the fury of the mob be directed against the institutions of the State instead of being visited upon individuals.

The conduct of the trial was to the credit of Judge Horton, who presided, and to that of the State of Alabama, whose authority was used to check every demonstration of violent prejudice. The verdict of the jury, which seems to the outside world to be in contradiction of the weight of evidence presented, is not, in itself, a reflection upon either. And the assumption should be that there is power in the institutions of the law and justice to assure fairness, as against prejudice and passion. The appeal from what is regarded as an unjust verdict ought to be in the spirit of such an assumption rather than through inflammatory tactics, which are the method of the mob.

ERRONEOUS IMPRESSION

When George Chamblee of Chattanooga appeared in circuit court here Thursday morning to get a writ of habeas corpus for two of the Scottsboro negroes it so happened that the case of Lewis Williams, colored, was called for trial. It was presumed by some that Chamblee was here for the purpose of representing Williams, but the Chattanooga attorney soon dispelled this impression.

Hits Leibowitz On Motives in Scottsboro Case

Negro Leader Criticizes ~~Lawyer~~ for 'Bragging' Over Political Ties

Samuel S. Leibowitz, Brooklyn defender of the Scottsboro Negroes, was criticized last night for his political affiliations by the spokesman for the organization which retains him in the famous case.

Before a mass meeting in behalf of the prisoners, William L. Patterson, Negro, general secretary of the International Labor Defense questioned the sincerity of Leibowitz' fight for Negro rights. About 200 persons, mostly Negroes, heard the criticism at John Wesley M. E. Church, 305 Pacific St.

"Leibowitz is bragging about the fact that he is a Democrat, a party that has its Tammany Hall here and has its lynch-rule in Georgia," he said. "Surely he fought a good fight for us. But unless he shows he is a real champion of our cause we may ask carefully why he went down there for nothing.

"We can imagine the reason he went down. Because it was the greatest legal case in the country, that is bound to bring him respect and make himself a hero.

"But we will not let him play political football with the lives of nine Scottsboro boys nor of the Negro people. We did not care who the lawyer was as long as he saved these boys."

Other than to declare that "the record speaks for itself," Leibowitz today declined to comment on the Patterson statements.

In behalf of the defense counsel, it was pointed out, however, the political and racial issues in the trial have not been injected by Leibowitz and that the Brooklyn attorney has concentrated in the proceedings so far on building up an appeal on the basis of Negroes being denied admission to juries in Alabama.

Patterson told an Eagle reporter that the defense was satisfied with Leibowitz' handling of the case, that "it is not contemplating any change in counsel." He added Leibowitz is slated to argue for a new trial in June.

Let's Think This Over

—WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE COURTS?

By I. S. CALDWELL

T. 78

IN SUNDAY'S Augusta Herald our good friend George S. Murphey expressed surprise that I should think the Scottsboro boys innocent of the crime for the commission of which they were found guilty. My observation of cases of this kind in several states has led me to the knowledge that in many cases the mob spirit was the deciding factor. I know of one case in this state where a member of the trial jury said that he voted as he did for conviction because the accused was a Negro. Every intelligent, observing, mature man who is familiar with the administration of law in sections where there are enough colored people to arouse racial hatred, knows that black skin often prevents justice.

In regard to the Scottsboro case there were several things that gives reasonable ground for doubting that the men are guilty. A long time ago there was a man in Spain who had a variety of expedients to force confessions and it seems at times that the spirit of Torquemada has been divided into a multitude of spirits and that they have been reincarnated in some modern officials. In this particular case one of the women who testified against the negro men says that she was forced to say the men were guilty when she knew that they were not guilty. She says that as soon as she escaped from coercive influence that she determined to retract her charges. What is the truth of the matter? Is it still true that it is better for a hundred criminals to go unwhipped than that one innocent man should be unjustly punished?

Why did the jury in this particular case do the unusual thing in fixing the dealth penalty rather than leave it to the judge to decide? The fact that this was done is a clear indication that there was prejudice in the court room. The men on trial were black and the lawyer conducting the defense was from New York and he was a Jew and he was a member of the I. L. D. The lawyer ought to have remained in New York. There was enough prejudice already.

Mr. Murphey is correct in saying that this country is developing a criminal tendency and a criminal record that is blacker than that of any other nation. It is also true that our halting courts are largely to blame for existing conditions. When unmerited leniency is extended to a Negro it is usually done at the behest of some white man who has an axe to grind. The number of times that justice miscarries in this country is notoriously great but the Negro race with all of its aggravating faults is not responsible for the halting, falacious procedure of our courts. The white people have the courts in their hands. We are responsible for the failure of justice and the wreaking of vengeance on a few colored people will not relieve us of the responsibility. God Almighty is responsible for some things, the negro race is responsible for something, but undoubtedly neither God nor the Negro is responsible for the courts of Alabama or Georgia.

Our courts are too expensive, they function too slowly and too uncertainly. It is time for a general overhauling of judicial procedure. Last summer while I was in Milwaukee a man charged with second degree murder was brought before the judge of the district court the day after the alleged crime was committed. The judge told the man that he could get a lawyer and demand a jury trial or he could make his statement and let the judge decide. The man preferred to let the judge try the case. That afternoon he was taken to the state prison to serve ten years. A case like that in Jefferson or Richmond would take a whole day, possibly two, would cost the citizens of the county several hundred dollars and then there would likely be an appeal with additional cost. We need a revolution in judicial procedure.

—FOULNESS—

Ruby Bates of Huntsville, Ala., who figured in the Scottsboro case with rather unpleasant notoriety—for those who had to read the filthy stuff—has become a platform performer and she also led a gang of negroes and radicals down Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House:

If the President were ever inclined to meet radicals face-to-face, or as man-to-man, he would hesitate a long, long time and his usually calm demeanor would be ruffled by the necessity of contact with the Bates woman.

So of course he refused to greet the motley crew.

The President's secretary was sent, as a matter of fact, to wave them away.

By the Great Horned Spoon! It seems strange that in this land where we believe in the fitness of things there could be any one who would give ear to a moron and degenerate.

We can with some sense of fitness give heed to the roar and rumble of the voice of Danton—he of the disfigured face, the ape-like body and massive head who led the initial stages of the French Revolution to the guillotine.

But who can stomach this sorry spectacle in Washington even though there be some justice to the cause against the Scottsboro case?

The story—from first to last acts in which Ruby Bates engages — is so foul and filthy that we make our case against it as brief as maybe.

DEPLORES METHOD OF TRYING NEGRO BOYS

Walker Thinks Defendants In Scottsboro Case Deserve New Deal

"If Communism and attendant turmoil should spread among the Negroes of the South, it will not be so much the fault of a race that was brought here in chains and is kept here in ignorance as the fault of certain well-fed members of a race whose ancestors fled here to establish justice but whose children's ears have become so intent upon the clink of the dollar that they can no longer hear the wail of oppression," asserted Rev. Joseph R. Walker in his morning sermon at the West Raleigh Presbyterian Church yesterday.

He was regretting the circumstances surrounding the trial in Alabama of seven Negro boys charged with assaulting two white girl hoboes. Continuing his discussion, the minister said:

"During the past week we have been reading of an illustration of this fact that is of peculiar interest to us here in the South. I would like to commend an editorial in The News and Observer on the notorious Scottsboro case, and to carry the thought a step further. Mr. Daniels comments upon the fact that the case was prejudiced by the fact that the Negroes' lawyer was a Northerner, and a Communist, and that he used abusive language about the South. The editor states that the Negroes could be better defended, and should be defended, by able Southern lawyers. He points out also the rather obvious fact that they are being served by a Communist organization, not from any particular love for the Negro, but for purposes of propaganda among Negroes. He concludes, however, by observing truly that except for this propagandizing service, they would have been already hanged.

"Well, we do not have to be radicals to admit that it is good propaganda, and legitimate propaganda, though some of us may wish it were in a better cause. I wish to raise the question, why is there no Southern organization to come to their defense; some manufacturers association, some merchants association, some organization of farmers or legal body composed of Southerners give them help in their extremity? Why is it that here in the South, among those who draw so much of their manpower and wealth from the black man's toil, there are not people who care enough for the Negroes welfare to provide an organization whose business it should be to investigate and make war upon injustice to the Negro in our courts? Is it because there is not enough injustice to warrant such a thing? One has only to read cold facts in the last issue of Harper's, an article entitled, "Chain Gangs and Profit," to become sick at heart. The Negro picks our cotton, hoes our corn, heaves our brick, lays our roads, cooks our food, tends our children. Vast fortunes have been built in the South upon Negro labor. Why is it that no one has thought to provide a place to which seven Negro boys can turn who are about to be hanged on a fram-up? I will tell you why—because we have been too content to get from the Negro, and too little interested in giving him even the common ordinary justice which we take as our own birthright, and for which, if necessary, we would die."

"AN ABIDING FAITH IN THE GOOD PEOPLE"

To the Editor The News:

It is very interesting to read the many articles about the Negro and the Scottsboro case. From these one gets a very good idea of how the other group is thinking about these things. The best part of it all is the very frank, and to a great extent sympathetic, and tolerant attitude expressed in a great many of the articles.

Unfortunately, there are some who use every excuse, from the so-called danger of social equality to the very Bible itself, to keep from admitting the Negro has as much right to expect and ask for equal opportunities, justice and the right to participate to the fullest extent of his ability in this great American government as any other group has. No one believes in racial integrity any more than I do. Yet I think it is quite possible to allow the Negro the same chance others are allowed and still maintain racial integrity. Of course, most intelligent people know this, but won't admit it because of selfish interests. It's simply an old vestige of might makes right—to the strongest belong all the best things.

No one who has read the least bit of world history can conscientiously believe in racial superiority. We have always had individual superiority, but all races have shown capacity to produce great men and women. The Negro is no exception to this rule. Carver and Washington, of Tuskegee; Dunbar, the poet, and a host of others too numerous to mention are examples worthy of notice.

Would one say the Italians were an inferior people just because the Romans built a great empire almost within their midst while they remained ignorant for years thereafter? Can the Nordic truthfully boast of superiority when the Chinese invented gunpowder, printing, and gave or sent these to Europe where the people were unable to use them for years, whereas the Chinese and other Easterners had been civilized for hundreds of years before? Imagine a people whose culture is little over 250 years old calling Jews inferior, when the Bible was written by them? Yet withal, no one of my group should allow himself to become too bitter, for no place where slavery has existed within the living memory of the people has given the Negro as great a chance as this country, notwithstanding lynching and other injustices that have been perpetrated upon him.

So, withal, I have an abiding faith in the good people of our country. There are too many Southern Christian white people who are not only ready and willing, but are actually advocating justice and fair play, for us to lose hope. And these people are neither radicals nor liberals, but just plain, honest Americans.

CHURCHES AND THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

The word "Scottsboro," is familiar to more than forty million people. When they hear this word, a picture of nine innocent Negro boys who are sitting, as it were, in a death chair waiting for an electric shock to snuff out their lives comes before them.

"Innocent," yes, we think that every fair minded person, or rather every normal minded person, who knows anything about the evidence which has been produced in the courts will agree with us that the charges against these boys were "framed," and that the accused are innocent of rape upon two white girls in Scottsboro, Alabama more than two years ago. Now, therefore, the question which arises is what are you going to do about it? Yes, "you," not what is he going to do nor what are they going to do, but you, yourself?

We are interested to note that the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the leading religious organization in this country, has entered the case, is taking cognizance and in a public statement recently issued, among other things, said:

> We have viewed with growing concern the developments attendant upon the Scottsboro case recently brought again to public attention. The issues involved in the Scottsboro case are neither local nor sectional. The whole nation is concerned. Race prejudice is not limited to any section nor state. The treatment of Negro citizens almost everywhere in America brings all of us to shame.

The Federal Council of Churches is just another civic or religious body which has entered into this case, looking forward to and hoping for justice, simple justice, for the accused Negro boys; and in its protest, of course, it took cognizance of the treatment of the whole Negro race in America, based upon racial prejudice. Surely, something ought to be done to speed up such action in this case as will free these boys.

Forty million people are watching this case. It is an unusual case. Forty million people are saying that the boys are innocent. What do the Courts of Alabama say?

ANGRY MOB MANHANDLES EDITOR

Argus 6-2-33

William Davis and his wife, editor and owners of the Amsterdam News, have been subjected to much criticism and attempts at bodily harm at the hands of mobs led by the League of Struggle for Negro Rights and the followers of the International Labor Defense. Mr. Davis is accused of misusing funds which his newspaper collected for the defense of the Scottsboro boys, and newspaper reports state that his wife has been compelled to use a cane to defend herself against attacks of the mob.

St. Louis, Mo.

The controversy herein related is merely incidental and would not command any comment from us were it not for the fact that we see, in this, as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has warned, that there is likely to be much "trouble" up the road in the handling of the moneys which have been given for the defense of the Scottsboro boys.

It will be remembered that Mr. Davis and the Amsterdam News were the first to announce a campaign to secure a million petitions to send President Roosevelt. This newspaper was among the first to rush into print, telling about opening its office to receive moneys for the innocent boys, and now the life of its editor and his wife are being threatened and the Lord only knows what the end will be.

Is the Negro in a Trap?

(From The Christian Century)

Christian Index

AFTER twenty hours of deliberation the Alabama jury sitting on the first of the Scottsboro cases to be re-tried brought in a verdict of guilty. The verdict carried the jury vote in favor of death. It is expected that the state will now press for quick trials of the other six defendants. Since the cases are identical, it is impossible to hope for different verdicts. These Negro boys will again be sentenced to die for an alleged attack upon two white girls, one of whom now denies that any such attack occurred. The verdict will not be well received in the North. This attitude on the part of the North will be hotly resented in the South. There is, therefore, every chance that the grave issues involoved may be lost sight of in a flurry of mutual sectional recrimination.

By this time the Scottsboro case (or cases, to be precise, since the boys are now being tried separately) is so well known to our readers that its details need not be recounted again. The United States supreme court held, in a 7-to-2 verdict rendered last November, that the young Negroes accused of raping the two girls whom they found bumming their way with a crowd of white boys from their Alabama mill town to Chattanooga and back, had not had a fair trial. The consequent re-trial—in the case of the first defendant—hinged on the testimony of the girls. This was absolutely contradictory. Although both agreed that they were together during the period when the attack was alleged to have taken place, one denied and the other affirmed the actuality of the incident. If ever a condition of "reasonable doubt" can arise it would seem to be under such a confusion in vital testimony, yet the jury is reported to have reached its verdict immediately and to have been delayed only in fixing the punishment.

There are reasons to believe that another appeal to the Supreme Court may lead to another intervention. The establishment, by the defense, of the exclusion of Negroes from juries in Morgan County, Alabama, where the re-trials are being held under change of venue, would seem to lay the proceedings open to the same criticism on which the Supreme Court set aside the former verdict. And the atmosphere surrounding the trial seems to have been as surcharged with popular passion as when the original trials were held in Scottsboro. Even the judge at Decatur, whose attempt to conduct a fair trial was notable, felt forced to refer from the bench to rumors and mob action against the defendants and their counsel. The Christian Century has already received several letters from various parts of the South expressing the opinion that, had the verdict been other than it was, there would have been some sort of popular outbreak.

It is good to feel that the final hope for these young Negroes is not lost with the verdict of this rural Alabama jury. But to those who study the Scottsboro cases as parts of the most baffling social problem in American life, a problem that is growing more dangerous every year, there is slight comfort in the possibility of another reversal by the Supreme Court. Undoubtedly the general feeling in Alabama—and throughout the south—is that the Decatur trial is significant, but because of its outcome, but because of its demonstration of the lengths to which the e would go (under pressure) to grant a Negro the benefit of the forms of the law. The tendency is now to turn to the rest of the nation—and to Negroes everywhere—and say, "What more could be done to insure due process of law?" Too few will be those who sense even faintly the despair in the Negro heart at the growing conviction that what this Decatur trial really signifies is, that whatever forms observed, the fate of the Negro turns out to be unchanged.

We are in no mood to upbraid the state of Alabama, or the South in general, over the Decatur verdict. To tell the truh, we have too keen a sense of the part which the accidents of geography have played in this whole matter of the place of the Negro in American life to feel like casting any stones from a northern vantage point. Recent Negro migrations to northern cities—now largely suspended on account of the economic stagnation—have indicated that, when the color question becomes a sizeable one in the North, the Negro can count on little more security, and justice than in the South. But the Decatur verdict, and what has gone with it, has revealed once more a condition within the nation of terrible menace. As such, it must be faced with frankness.

The simple fact which whites, in considering the national color problem, fail sufficiently to take into account is this: One-tenth of our American population lives constantly under a sense of jeopardy. It believes that it is trapped. It feels no more certain of justice, opportunity, fair dealing than an animal at the mercy of an irresponsible hunter. A life of rectitude may lead to a measure of community approbation; it may just as well lead to death at the hands of some irresponsible mob. Booker T. Washington was almost beaten to death for the crime of looking at the names an an apartment house mailbox. (That, be it noted, happened in New York City!) To the accustomed disabilities of the poor, the Negroes must add the handicaps imposed by terrific race prejudice. It is still cause for national notice when the conditions of segregation and discrimination which these causes produce are, even momentarily, transcended.

For seventy years the Negro in America has been under various sorts of pressure toward a higher standard of living. No more heroic chapter stands in the national record than the story of his climb. And many of the noblest names in the story are the names of whites. But always the Negro has remained at the mercy of the mob—in Chicago as much as in the South. And that has meant not only jeopardy of life (that, thank God, is growing less as the years pass!) but jeopardy of occupation, jeopardy of residence, jeopardy of opportunity for children, jeopardy in court. (It would be revealing to discover, over a ten-year period, how large a proportion of the persons actually executed in northern prisons are friendless Negroes). No white man can fully enter into this black man's world of jeopardy. But no white man with social imagination can fail to understand, at least dimly, how insecure it renders the future of American life. One American in every ten living under the tension produced by this ceaselessly gnawing fear!

To meet the Negro's need there have, in three stages, arisen three types of leadership. There was the leadership of philanthropic whites who, frequently at the cost of social ostracism, took up the black man's cause in the days following emancipation. Then came the leadership of the Booker T. Washington school, a Negro leadership which believed that, by sedulously avoiding conflict with white prejudice and gathering together an economic stake, the Negro would finally win sufficient approbation to lead to his being granted at least peace and opportunity by the whites. Latterly, however, there has emerged a more radical type of leadership, dating from the rise of Dr. DuBois, proclaiming itself disillusioned as to the readiness of the white man to do justice until the Negro organizes to demand and compel justice. It is this new leadership, intensely scornful of what it calls the "Uncle Tom" sort of Negro who is obsequient in the white's presence, that has set rumbling deep undertones of anger and desperation in American Negro life since the war. Today, even Dr. DuBois is on the edge of being displaced by a still more radical leadership within his race.

The Caucasians in the south who have become so aroused over the Scottsboro cases have been right in seeing, behind the trial of these friendless boys, something of deeper meaning. By a strange quirk of fate, these heedless moronic young drifters became the pawns over which a struggle was precipitated within the Negro community. It was a struggle between the championship of the race represented by Dr. DuBois and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (a leadership which most whites still regard as ultra-radical) and the leadership of the left-wing group which insists that the color problem is a part of the Marxian class war, and that the Negro can attain security only by enlisting in the war on the side of social revolution. The latter group won out; the Decatur trial was not fought by the N. A. A. C. P., but by the International Labor defense, a communist organization.

Faced by this unexpected issue, the whites in the south with few exceptions, swung into line at the sounding of battlecries born of their own prejudices. The strategy of the case on one side called for a class solidarity; very well, there appeared an equal class solidarity on the other side. White womanhood must be protected. (The slogan lost none of its effectiveness despite the circumstances of the case.) Outside intervention—especially northern intervention—in a southern matter must be resented. Americanism must withstand the red menace. The prosecuting attorney even called upon the jury to hang the accused as a rebuke to the machinations of "Jew money."

The latter note in the prosecutor's speech is worth pondering in these days when so much indignation is being registered in the United States over the anti-Semitism of Adolf Hitler. We have no doubt but that Hitler and his Nazis will do incalculable harm to Germany if they continue in their course. But it is by no means sure that the open and calculated brutality of their program will do more harm to Germany in the long run, than will the hypocrisy and callousness of our Nordics to America. Hitler is blasted by our scorn for putting under jeopardy less than one per cent of the people of Germany; it is to force back the United States that the racial, sectional and social prejudices of the whites are mobilized in such eventualities as this Scottsboro affair.

But to return to the main issue, the principal national significance of these Decatur trials is going to be the increase in the Negro's sense of desperation. What the Negro will see is not the carefully observed forms of the law; what he will see is the (to him) foreordained verdict. His is becoming the psychology of the trapped. Most of the south—no, we believe that truth compels it to be said that most of the whites of the nation—when confronted with the desperation of the trapped turn instinctively to the tightening of the trap. A few, such as the noble women who are working in the inter-racial commissions of the south, are aware of the future tragedy implicit in that course. They would take down bars; they would, by insuring security and opportunity, strike at the source of the Negro desperation. But they are so few in relation to the mass, and the progress that they make is so slow! Meanwhile there has definitely come into the picture this new, revolutionary element which is hastening both sides, white and black, toward catastrophe.

It is a time for great searching of heart on the part of the Christian churches. The mass of the Negroes is still touched by the influence of the churches as by no other influence. In the south, at least, the same thing is true for the mass of the whites. Ideally, the churches stand for the things which the Negro feels he is denied; the lack of which constitute the trap in which he is caught. Are the churches really, genuinely, in their vitals concerned about this? Here comes the prophet of the class war; he is concerned. Say what you will about his motives, his methods, and the outcome if his message is accepted. The fact remains that he has used the Decatur trial, and he will use a hundred other episodes, to prove that he is interested in the fate of the black man in the trap, that he will risk his own future to help the black man get out of the trap. In all honesty, are the churches ready to meet that challenge?

Tribune 6-17-33

Philadelphia, Pa.

A nation-wide scandal looms because of the large number of individuals and organizations which are collecting funds supposedly to be used in the defense of the Scottsboro boys.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, who defended Heywood Patterson at Decatur, Ala., has issued a statement intended to put an end to the promiscuous collection of funds for the defense of the Scottsboro boys.

"I am working in conjunction with the I. L. D. and the National Scottsboro Action Committee in the continuance of the effort to liberate these innocent Negro defendants," he said.

Referring to the fact that his name was being used by others collecting funds ostensibly for the defense of the boys, he stated: "I cannot make it too clear that I have never given anyone my authority to take such action and that no one, either organization, committee or individual is authorized by me either directly or indirectly to make such representations."

Send Checks to Committee

Checks, money orders and currency for the defense of the Scottsboro boys should be sent to the ILD, to the National Action Committee in the name of Rev. J. W. Brown, treasurer, 119 West 135th st., New York City.

Meanwhile, the sum of $1,810.94 has been collected by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to assist the ILD. This money is being held in a separate account.

Two members of the National Scottsboro Action Committee, J. Dalmus Steele and Seward Virgil, who went to Washington, D. C., with the delegation led by William H. Davis, editor of the Amsterdam News, have been expelled from the committee.

Defense Witness Threatened

According to reports from Chattanooga, Tenn., attempts have been made to rifle the offices of General George W. Chamlee, chief of counsel for the Scottsboro youths.

Threats are also said to have been made against E. E. Lewis, important Negro defense witness. While Lewis was in Decatur at the trial, the KKK burned down his house.

The Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, early this week issued a statement calling upon the Christian forces of America to take action in the Scottsboro case.

Urge Churches to Take Action

The statement follows: "We have viewed with growing concern the developments attendant upon the Scottsboro case recently brought again to public attention. Interracial understanding and goodwill have been further jeopardized, and hatred and misunderstanding have been increased. This situation is so crucial that the churches should express their ocnvictions in no uncertain terms. The confidence of all in the soundness of our institutions is shaken when suspicion is raised that justice cannot be secured because of creed, race or color.

"The issues involved in the Scottsboro case are neither local nor sectional. The whole nation is concerned. Race prejudice is not limited to any section or state. The treatment of Negro citizens almost everywhere in America brings all of us to shame.

"In view of Christianity's basic recognition of the sacredness of human personality and the spirit of the teachings of Jesus Christ affecting human relations, we urge our churches and church leaders everywhere to voice their convictions that justice for all, irrespective of creed, race or color, should be assured in America."

IN THE NAME OF AN HONEST STATE

> If you ever saw those creatures; those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.

This is what Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel for Haywood Patterson at Decatur, is quoted as having said in New York following the conviction of his client.

These bitter and provocative remarks followed a formal statement made a few days before in which Mr. Liebowitz condemned the jury for "bigotry" and race hatred, and of contempt for the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

Yesterday when the case of Charles Weems, another defendant, in the so-called "Scottsboro case," was called, Judge James E. Horton, indignant at what had been said, declared from the bench:

> The published statement was uncalled for. It was addressed to a panel of highly intelligent jurors, and men who wished to do what was right in the case. The statement of itself of necessity must make impossible and just and impartial verdict. The accused negro must be a victim of this statement. His leading attorney would be a millstone about his neck."
> The impartiality of the courts must suffer as a necessary result.

In conclusion Judge Horton said: "It, therefore, becomes the unquestioned duty of this court at the present time to enter of its own motion a continuance of this case until such time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had."

For obvious reasons it is plain that there must be a breathing spell, in order that the harm done by the defendant's enemies, their lawyers, may be neutralized by the passage of time.

Judge Horton's decision, therefore, will be applauded by the people of Alabama.

There is not a decent man in Alabama who is not a better friend to the seven defendants in this celebrated case than the lawyers who have been retained to defend them.

There is not a good citizen in this State who is not more honestly interested in seeing exact justice done these men than their lawyers.

The Attorney-General of Alabama is more honestly interested in seeing justice done these men than the motley groups of the International Labor Defense and the Communist party who are raising storms without the State and clamoring metallically for justice to these "poor, downtrodden laboring men."

The State demands justice for all concerned.

The defense and its backers want anything but justice.

What they want is trouble.

They are not so much interested in establishing the innocence of their clients as they are the guilt, if any, of the white people of Alabama, whose only offense it would appear, was in furnishing the women that were to be attacked on that undefended gondola.

Their purpose is to run a wall between whites and blacks in Alabama so that neither may hereafter have peace.

All of them would upset the jury system of the State, and most of them would upset the economic system of the State.

Their motives are political and economic, and the more difficult they make it for these defendants, the happier they will be.

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty, and fix his punishment at death." This is the barbarous lynch verdict handed down by the Alabama lynchers through their courts against Heywood Patterson, the first of the nine Scottsboro boys to be tried. With their fingers reeking with the blood of thousands of Negro workers, the fiendish lynchers, the capitalist class, of Alabama, are determined to murder, to burn alive, nine innocent Negro boys, victims of the most damnable and infamous frame-up in the history of the savage persecution and terror against the Negro people of the United States.
> This monstrous lynch verdict against Patterson gives the cue for what the Southern plunderers and oppressors of the Negro people intend to do to the remaining eight boys and the masses of Negro toilers.
> The verdict of death handed down at Decatur it not merely a verdict against an unemployed Negro youth. It is a verdict of terror, cold-bloodedly calculated to maintain the age-long violent oppression of the Negro masses by the Southern lynchers in particular and by the American Capitalist class in general. It is a verdict of the white ruling class butchers intended to terrorize the Negro toilers and thus stem the growing revolutionary struggles of the Negro masses against the barbarous oppression of the lynch masters. It is a verdict aimed at smashing the growing unity of Negro and white workers in common struggle against unemployment, hunger, discrimination and fiendish lynch terror.

When the Patterson verdict was announced, The Chicago Tribune, which had been following the history of the case from the beginning, printed a remarkable editorial denunciation of the gang that is doing all it can to lead these wretched defendants to the slaughter.

The Chicago Tribune has in other years been a bitter and unkind critic of Southern institutions.

Though in other respects a great public journal, The Tribune has been uncharitable and intolerant of most things Southern.

> Whatever opinion those who have followed reports of the Scottsboro trial may have reached as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, the conduct of the defense deserves attention for its own sake. The cause has been made a world-wide sensation by the same organized propagandists as were responsible for the furore over the Sacco-Vanzetti and Mooney cases. Although citizens of conscientious motives were drawn into these activities to give them repute, the most persistent and vociferous participants in all cases were Communists and radicals of other varieties. Only a very indigent observer of these proceedings could miss their intent. Pretending to be a defense of innocent individuals from injustice and oppression and an assertion of civil guaranties, the objective aimed at was the disparagement of American courts and the American social conscience.
> This has been strikingly exposed in the trial just ended at Scottsboro. The attorney brought from New York by the International Labor Defense could not be as tactless as he has been save intentionally. The very fact that he was chosen in place of counsel known and respected in the region in which the trial was to be held was evidence of lack of good faith, of a sincere concern for the fate of the defendant. In and out of court his words and actions have appeared to an impartial observer studiously provocative of local feeling, and the inference must be that he intended not to win his case, but deliberately to lose it, to make more of a martyr for his cause and an excuse for more propaganda. Immediately after the verdict he gave vent to a tirade against the community amid which the trials are being held, and, returning to New York, he publicly described the jury as "those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy." Yet he is going South in a few days for the second series of trials. The employment of such an attorney for the defense promises if it does not in fact insure a miscarriage of justice. It shows no regard for the defendants, but rather a deliberate determination to bring about their conviction.
> At the beginning of the affair the radical agitators descended upon the community in which the trial was to be held, insulting, blatant, insolently prejudicing the case and the character of the agencies of the law. They have shown no consideration for the defendants. Pretending to defend them from mob sentiment and race prejudice, they have done everything possible to inflame both. No klan fanatic could do more to create conditions in which even-handed justice is impossible than these pretended friends of the oppressed.
> Meanwhile the well meaning public of the North has been exhorted to donate money for the support of this murderous proceeding misnamed defense. The Civil Liberties Union published advertisements calling for funds to "help give these boys the best possible break at this second trial." Such appeals are frauds. The Civil Liberties Union is a fraud. Its managers have no regard for civil liberties except when they can be placed for the protection of radical mischief makers and criminals. They are Communists and sympathizers with Bolshevism, which has destroyed civil liberties wherever it has gained power. The active head of the Civil Liberties Union at a meeting of Communists in New York has just declared that political democracy is moribund, and he wants a "united front," precious Bolshevik phrase, of Communists and liberals to fight Fascism. A union of Communists and genuine liberals would be a union of the snake and the bird. Liberals who support it are either gullibles or they are not liberals. There are no civil liberties remaining except where political democracy exists, and so long as the Civil Liberties Union is run as it has been and is, by enemies of democracy, its title is a flagrant hypocrisy which can no longer deceive any but liberal sentimentalists befogged by mere phrases. Even these ought to be shocked at its methods in the Scottsboro affair.

Alabama wants no innocent blood on its hands.

Alabama asks merely that it be given a chance to do its full duty by its own people, and in its own way.

Alabama is humiliated and outraged at the unscrupulous assaults which have been made upon it by a combination of moony sentimentalists on the one hand, cutthroats on the other.

Alabama resents the necessity of siding with either, for both are wrong, and wholly unreliable.

Judge Horton relieves Alabama somewhat of that bitter necessity when he declares a postponement of the remaining trials until the atmosphere clears.

Somewhere between the opinions of foggy-headed sentimentalists and realistic cutthroats lies the clean, pure truth about this sordid, revolting affair.

All that decent Alabamians want is the truth.

The least that Alabamians hope is that before it is too late the defendants will find more charitable and chivalrous lawyers than those they have so far retained.

Somebody ought to be on their side who is as much interested in justice as the prosecution is.

STUDENTS BLAMED FOR RACE PREJUDICE

New York

White members of student organizations were held to blame for discrimination against Negro students in a talk by Donald Henderson, economics instrutcor at Columbia University, at the opening session yesterday of a three-day student conference on Negro student problems, initiated by the National Students' League, in the McMillin Theatre at Columbia.

The conference of representatives of schools and colleges and student organizations from Eastern, Middle Western and Southern States will continue today at the International House, 500 Riverside Drive, where Kenneth E. Barnhart, Sociology Professor at Birmingham Southern College, and Mrs. Jennie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, convicted Scottsboro youth, will speak.

Mr. Henderson said the reaction to the verdict at the first Scottsboro trial marked a new epoch for the Negro, in that it indicated a changed attitude on the part of the white race toward racial oppression. He said the main object of the conference was to give the white student "a clear, acute and painful knowledge of what is going on in these United States." Mr. Henderson thought the attitude of white students toward Negro students was only sentimental and lacked serious understanding.

E. Franklin Frazier, Sociology Professor at Fisk University, noted that college training of the Negro was changing from emphasis on indsutrial subjects to the academic, and Arthur Huff Fauset, principal of Singerly Public School, Philadelphia, viewed the Hitler demonstration against Jews as analogous to oppression of Negroes in this country.

HEYWOOD BROUN SAYS KNIGHT WAS AFRAID OF FACTS

Courier 4-22-33
Pittsburgh, Pa

Noted Columnist Comments On "Slave Ship" Days As He Takes Alabama "Justice" to Task—Urges Judge Horton to "Speak Up."

By HEYWOOD BROUN

NEW YORK, April 20—A clipper ship came down the tide and cast her anchor over. She rode the long swell and waited for boats from the blazing coast to bear her black slaves. When they were below deck she picked up her pin and headed for America.

That was more than two hundred years ago. The other day in Decatur, Ala., a jury of 12 white men brought in a verdict of death against Heywood Patterson. The Attorney General of the great sovereign State referred to him as "that thing."

They say it was a quiet courtroom and a gentle day down in Morgan County when the jury filed in after 24 hours of deliberation. But could none of them hear the wind in the rigging of the slave ship, the creaking of her timbers and the cries of the cargo?

That ghostly ship has steered her course around our coasts and even up into the back waters times innumerable. She seeks in vain a final haven.

We, the grandsons and the great-grandsons of the slavers, are not appeased. We have not forgiven the Negro. It is less difficult to forgive your enemies, but the persecution of the Negro continues because we have wronged him so vastly and so vitally. We are bound to the wheel of our damnation and try to stave it off with silly postures and cruel antics. Fear grips us, and we sheer off even from an act of simple justice.

Attorney General Knight could not even bring himself to admit that he was in the presence of a man on trial for his life. He had to take refuge in such a phrase as "that thing." He was afraid of the facts. He had reason to fear.

Alabama Justice

There was much panicky talk in the speeches of the men who pressed the case. "Show them Alabama justice cannot be bought and sold with Jew money from New York!" cried Solicitor Wright at one point in the trial. And the Attorney General, after deploring the injection of prejudice by his associate in the summation, went on to say: "If you acquit this Negro put a garland of roses around his neck, give him a supper and send him to New York City. There let Dr. Harry Fosdick dress him up in a high hat and morning coat, gray striped trousers and spats."

And that was because Dr. Fosdick had told Ruby Bates to face the danger of return and go back to confess that she lied when first she accused the Negro boys. And that was because the Attorney General was afraid.

If human life were not at stake this Scottsboro case might take rank with the most inspired of all extravaganzas, but the shadow of the chair falls across such ironic ribaldries as the conviction of a Negro field hand on the ground that Alabama does not like the modes and manners of New York City. Instead of a crown of thorns, Alabama rhetoric pressed down a high hat upon this poor laborer.

But the irony of the situation swings wide beyond the borders of the State where the trial was held. Does the learned counsellor from the Southland actually believe that the song of the slave ship never floats above the roofs of Harlem? Instead of the fantastic festival outlined by the prosecutor, what would New York really have to offer any Heywood Patterson? Morning coats and garlands? Not exactly. The great and free city of New York would afford him an opportunity to share a three-room apartment with nine or ten of his fellows. And only with the best of luck would he be able to pay the rent.

We Use Tuberculosis

The South imposes rather more lynchings, legal and otherwise. New York and Chicago take it out in tuberculosis.

We have no right to sit in the seats of the scornful. Nor is it the part of wisdom to think of the Scottsboro case as a local issue. We will get nowhere if comment merely takes the form of attacks upon the legal machinery of Alabama and charges that Decatur opinion is blinded by bigotry. That would merely be a matter of the mote calling the beam black.

As a matter of fact, some wise words were spoken during the trial. "The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. * * * Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that."

That was said by the Judge—James E. Horton. Well, Your Honor, when it comes time to pass sentence of death, how are you going to plead? Remember that you and all the rest of us are on trial for our faith, our integrity and our lowest common decency. What say you? Guilty or not guilty?

Speak up, man! Let us all speak up and prove that we are not guilty of this monstrous thing. Let us scuttle the slave ship in 40 fathoms and stop that whine of the wind in its rigging.

BACKGROUND STUDY OF SCOTTSBORO CASE

Scenes That Marked the Clash of Issues In the Little Courtroom of Decatur

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

DECATUR, Ala.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEEN years ago, on Jan. 13 last, President Monroe ordered his Surveyor General to lay out a town to be named in honor of Stephen Decatur, the distinguished naval commander dear to the 100 per cent American for his words:

"My country—may she ever be right, but, right or wrong, my country."

The selected site, in Northern Alabama on the south bank of the tortuous, muddy Tennessee River, remained part of the Cherokee Indian Reservation until 1826, when it was incorporated. From then until a little more than a month ago it continued on its tranquil, almost somnolent, way with only an occasional disturbance, such as a strike in the Louisville & Nashville Railroad shops or a crime of purely local significance.

Then, through no fault of its own, Decatur inherited the now famous Scottsboro case—a Southern cause célèbre involving nine Negro youths and two white girls of a stratum of society only a little above the inexorably drawn color line. The little community, drafted for a part in history which it did not seek or relish, approached its task of rendering fair judgment under the play of conflicting public opinion with an added mélange of emotional and intellectual contradictions. It wanted to be impartial and unbiased, but many of its more thoughtful citizens wondered if that were possible.

Rustic Southern Traditions.

Despite its external appearance, suggesting a small Middle Western town, Decatur is Southern and rustic in its traditions and its background. Some of its buildings bear the scars of Union shells, many of its residents bear in their hearts the wounds left by the war between the States. The memory of the reconstruction period which followed the peace is a vivid and haunting one to many of its people and the people of Morgan County, of which Decatur is the seat of government.

A few days before the Negroes were brought from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham to the vermin-ridden jail in Decatur, condemned two years ago as unfit for white men, the little city buzzed with anticipation and preparation. The one hotel, its three stories topped only by the water tower dominating the town's main street to the west, threw open a whole wing of rooms long out of use.

A long wooden table was built in the second-floor courtroom, its floor dotted at one-yard intervals with cuspidors for the tobacco-chewing gentry, and places were marked off for visiting newspaper men. Cards of admittance were printed and issued carefully to exclude gate-crashers, Communists and trouble-makers from the arena before the judge's bench.

The National Guard Called.

Sheriff A. W. Davis—Bud to his friends—had a final conference with Judge James E. Horton, who was to preside over the wrangling lawyers with such enlightened impartiality that he won the admiration of neutral observers and even the most radical of the Negroes' sympathizers. At that conference they decided to call upon the National Guard to see that mob spirit did not interfere with the orderly processes of justice.

Sheriff Davis let it be understood that the call for troops was prompted more by a wish to prevent escape of the Negroes from the flimsy old jail than by a fear of trouble from the townsfolk. They were a law-abiding lot, he said, patient and willing for the law to take its course. The Negroes, he said, had nothing to fear from the citizens of Decatur.

So it seemed as the proceedings got under way on March 27 with the defense, led by Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal attorney, calling Negroes as witnesses in the most formidable legal onslaught against the selective jury system of Alabama and the South that the last sixty years of jurisprudence has seen.

The court room was as quiet and as orderly as a church, even when the New Yorker, after addressing one of his dark-skinned witnesses as "Mr.," questioned the veracity of a white official of Morgan County, who had said that he did not know whether any of the persons whose names appeared on the jury rolls was a Negro. Row upon row of rough-faced, unshaven countrymen in blue denim overalls and cowhide boots chewed their tobacco meditatively, but uttered no sound of disapproval. Their faces were set in hard, unsympathetic lines.

The Judge on the Bench.

Upon the bench sat the lank, raw-boned jurist who was called upon to rule upon questions of law involving in fact matters which he had grown up believing were undebatable. He allowed the defense much leeway—so much in fact that he was criticized privately in some quarters for leaning backward, and newspapers of the South declared in headlines that the time-honored jury system, which is held necessary by many to preserve white supremacy below the Mason-Dixon line, was in greater jeopardy than ever before.

Judge Horton's physical resemblance to the Emancipator, Lincoln, was observed and noted. Photographers gamboled about his court room. Typewriters clattered so that lawyers finally asked him to quiet the din. It seemed as if he scarcely noticed any of it as he rendered his rulings first for one side and then the other, occasionally sending unabashed for law books to look up some moot legal point.

He held—to the surprise of many, after several Negroes had laid claim to the very qualifications laid down in the statute for jury service, and after the defense had shown there were no Negroes on the jury rolls of Morgan County—that Mr. Leibowitz had established a prima facie case of systematic exclusion on racial grounds in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. The court-room crowd gasped and frowned. Not long afterward they recovered their composure and faith in the jurist and the orderly processes of law which he represented.

The Jury Board's View.

The State, represented by Attorney General Knight, sharp-faced and sharp-voiced, had to call only one white witness to refute the evidence the defense had offered. Arthur J. Tidwell, President of the Jury Board, testified that while it might be true that only the names of white men were inscribed upon the jury rolls it was not because of any arbitrary discrimination against the African race but merely because he and his fellow-commissioners in the exercise of their discretion had not encountered a Negro fit to serve as a juror when judged by the terms of the statute.

Thus, with the issue one of fact rather than law, since the defense conceded that the Alabama statute fixing the qualifications of jurors was constitutional while contending that it was misapplied by the jury commissioners, Judge Horton rendered his final ruling on a question which agitated the Southland considerably more than the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused Negroes. The court room breathed more easily.

"I am going to deny the motion of the defense," he said. "Let's get on with the trial."

The attack by the defense on a time-honored jury system was only one of the factors which so combined extraneous matters with the main facts at issue—the question of whether two white women were attacked by a dozen Negroes on a freight train—that it is doubtful if any jury of twelve good men and true could have rendered a verdict based solely on the evidence presented to them.

To understand this fully it is necessary to go back more than two years to the little town of Scottsboro nestling in contented isolation among its beloved hills. There it was that the Negroes were taken by the armed posse, which removed them and their white accusers from a freight train at Paint Rock, a few miles beyond, and lodged them in the Jackson County jail. There, two weeks later, they were tried for their lives, with the result that eight of them were condemned to die in the electric chair.

While their trials progressed th Negroes could hear, welling up from the court-house square, the cheers that greeted the announcement of each verdict of guilty. No witnesses were called in defense of the accused at the hastily ordered trials, and the lawyer appointed by the court to defend them prefaced his defense with a protest to the court against his assignment.

Into this atmosphere, attracted by the publicity that accompanied the Negroes' arrest and conviction, there walked one day, while the trials were still under way, a New York lawyer associated with the International Labor Defense, which is the legal arm of the Communist party. He wired a description of the scene to New York headquarters, and immediately there started a flood of telegrams, couched in the accepted phraseology of Communist diplomacy, demanding protection for the Negroes and holding the officials of Alabama responsible for their safety.

Reds Become Interested.

Whether from pure altruism or a desire to make capital of the plight of the Negroes for organization work among the members of that race, the Communists became as interested in the case as though a member of their own group were under arrest.

Lawyers were engaged and the verdict was appealed. The Alabama Supreme Court, holding that one of the convicted Negroes was a juvenile, ordered a new trial for him and affirmed the death sentences imposed upon seven others. Attorney General Knight's father wrote the prevailing opinion of the court. The case then went to the United States Supreme Court, which last November reversed the original verdicts of guilty, set aside the death sentences and ordered new trials.

On the date set for the opening of the new trials defense attorneys moved for a change of venue, and Judge A. E. Hawkins, after inspecting the affidavits charging fevered prejudice in Jackson County, granted the motion. The defense, seeking a trial of the issues in the urban community of Birmingham, sometimes called the "Pittsburgh of the South," had sought to disqualify all the other county seats in the vicinage.

Through some oversight in drawing the papers Morgan County and Decatur had been overlooked. The people of Jackson County were determined that if they were not to have the final word in a case that had disturbed the peace and quiet of their community and brought it unwelcome publicity for two years past they wanted desperately to have the case tried by people of their own kind. They were pleased when Judge Hawkins "for reasons of economy" sent the case to Morgan County.

Thus when twelve citizens of Morgan County raised their hands before Judge Horton and swore they would "a true verdict render," they were swimming in strong currents. A complexity of issues intruded upon the plain issue of guilt or innocence of the defendants.

Handicaps of the Defense.

The Negroes were under the natural handicap of appearing as defendants in a case in which a white woman was their accuser. Communist support, though it saved them from the electric chair, at least for a time, was another handicap. There was another. That was the almost unexpressed resentment among many Alabamians at what was considered a rebuff to the Supreme Court of that State, a rebuff that could only be offset by a new conviction, which would be a ratification of the Jackson County jury's verdict, which the State's highest court upheld.

The supposed wealth of the defense, despite the repeated assertions of Mr. Leibowitz that he was serving without a fee, made the hill folk suspicious of the Negroes' defense; led to the charge in open court that its witnesses were "bought and paid for" by "sinister influences" in New York.

The Semitic complexion of the defense led by Mr. Leibowitz and assisted by Joseph Brodsky, an admitted Communist, helped to increase the antagonism of the natives of Decatur toward the Negroes. A common comment of the townsfolk, after a medical expert had been called by the defense to testify that the story told by the Price girl did not gibe with scientific findings, was:

"When a nigger has expert witnesses, we have a right to ask who is paying for them."

"Real Issue" of Trial.

It remained for Wade Wright, circuit solicitor associated with the prosecution, to lift the curtain on what had become a real issue of the trial. He thundered anathema at the city and city ways until the walls of the court house seemed to shake. He stamped up and down before the jury as though transported in religious ecstasy, as he summed up the case for the Southland against the meddlesome East, which had sold slaves at a profit and then taken them away.

Judge Horton told the jury to disregard the inflammatory words, but he could not stop them from appearing in print from one end of the country to the other. Whether the jury did disregard them is a question which the United States Supreme Court may yet be called upon to decide.

Whatever the result of an appeal may be, in all fairness it should be said that Attorney General Knight and many of the more enlightened people of Decatur wish that the earnest young circuit solicitor had prepared a manuscript and submitted it for approval before delivery.

"We'll March!" Shout 3,000 in Scottsboro Mass Meeting

4-21-33

New York N.Y.

ATLANTIC CITY, April 20.—"We'll march! We'll march!" shouted 3000 Negro and white workers at a Scottsboro protest meeting in the Boxing Arena here last night as they rose to their feet and cheered in response to a talk by William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense.

Patterson's appeal that Negroes take an active part in the fight to free Tom Mooney was also greeted by cheers. "Negroes are asking and have secured the help of the white workers in their battle to save the Scottsboro boys. Now they must show their solidarity with the white victims of the same capitalist frame-up system by fighting for the freedom of Tom Mooney."

The audience applauded and cheered Patterson's account of Ruby Bates, the poor white mill girl who courageously took the stand, despite threats of lynching, and testified that she had been compelled to lie in the original Scottsboro "rape" trials. Patterson pointed out that for a white girl in the South to take the stand in defense of Negro boys framed for rape was a sign of the awakening unity of poor whites with the Negro tenant farmers and workers.

Mayor Stays Away.

The mayor and other officials of the city had been invited to the meeting, but did not appear. "It is not by accident that they are not here," Patterson declared. "They are part and parcel of the machinery which uses lynch and legal terror against workers here as well as in the South."

When he called upon the audience to fight for the Scottsboro boys in their daily local struggles against discrimination and jim-crowing, Patterson was greeted with a roar of approval. He declared that the barring of Negroes from restaurants, hotels, and amusement places in Atlantic City, the playground of the white ruling class, was of as much political importance as the Scottsboro case. He called for a struggle against these bars, telling of the march on Washington to demand of Roosevelt the freedom of the Scottsboro Boys and congress a bill guaranteeing the constitutional rights of Negroes.

It was at this point that the audience shouted: "We'll march! We'll march!"

The meeting was called by the Citizens Committee. Among the speakers were Father Jackson of the Episcopal Church; Isaac J. Nutter, well-known attorney, and C. Barr, a politician.

MONEY—NOT PETITIONS

Defender

4-22-33

Chicago

The Chicago Defender believes that if the Scottsboro boys are to be saved it will be through the proper legal channels. It believes that the case of Heywood Patterson will again go to the United States supreme court, as it rightfully should. It believes that the other boys are innocent also, and should be given every recourse to law guaranteed to them under the Constitution of the United States.

The Chicago Defender knows that it takes money to fight. It knows that the orderly process of courts is not influenced by petitions. It knows also that President Roosevelt has nothing to do with the courts, and that he will say as much when and if the petition is presented to him. It knows further that the number of names on the petition will add weight only in so far as they add pages to the package—and that the practical value will be exactly zero.

That is why The Chicago Defender is taking no part in the great petition drive. Instead, it is attempting to help in a practical way. It wants to raise money to turn over to those who are conducting this defense so that they can carry on through the highest court of the land. That is why The Chicago Defender is staging a monster SCOTTSBORO BENEFIT FUND SHOW at the Regal theater on the night of [illegible], the entire proceeds of which will be sent to the organizations conducting the defense.

TRIBUNE CRIES FRAUD

4-22-33

Chicago

An editorial appeared in the Chicago Tribune under the date of April 13 entitled "A Fraud Exposed." The editorial attempted to deal with the Scottsboro case, and it did in the Tribune's usual style of all matters affecting our group. The editorial was a collection of accumulated hate, hypocrisy and sophistry that has been a part of the Tribune's politics and plans since the days of the civil war.

The Tribune, in accordance with its tradition, sought to slander the attorneys for the defense, as well as slinging mud on the Civil Liberties union and International Labor Defense. So far as the Tribune is concerned, no movement for the purpose of sustaining the civil rights and privileges of black people has ever been accorded its favor.

The Tribune was, as usual, silent on the conduct of those who prosecuted the case, and could see nothing reprehensible in the methods used by the thin-jawed attorney general, Mr. Knight, whose nauseating and putrid activity made the whole proceedings a farce and mockery. But the Tribune was much disturbed over the conduct of the defense counsel, who pleaded to save a black man from a legal lynching.

They, of course, according to the Tribune's viewpoint, should have been on their knees trying to find virtue where vice exists. They should have thrown a halo of sacredness around Victoria Price, who unfortunately has been a prostitute all of her adult life. The Tribune now hopes to rescue and cure the cause of the disease by attacking the dead patient.

This method of seeking virtue where vice exists is not unusual with the Tribune. It maintained this same attitude in the Jake Lingle case, and in the midst of its disturbed conscience it sought, or better still, it secured a method of easing its troubled mind by a questionable conviction.

So when the Tribune cries "Fraud" no one need be alarmed. First, every black man should find out which side the Tribune is on, and for the sake of his own sense of justice and fair play, go the other way.

[illegible] 4-29-33

South Hates White Girl who Testified for Scottsboro Boys as Much as It Hates the Boys Themselves. Ruby's Early Life as Hard-working Mill Hand Described—Long Hours, Sex Thrills, Social Disease, Came in Early Childhood. She's Just Finding out that Negroes in the South are Human and Get Treated "Worse than Us Poor Whites".

By STANLEY GIBSON

DECATUR, Ala.—Almost more than the Scottsboro boys, the white bourbons of the South now hate Ruby Bates.

They hate her because, a white girl born and bred in the South, she took the witness stand in Decatur, Alabama, and with her testimony exploded the ancient legend that "Negroes rape white women." Exploding that legend has a deep social and political significance. It means putting out of gear the machinery with which the ruling class of the South terrorizes Negroes and keeps them in slavery.

Uproar

When Ruby Bates took the stand and declared that the Scottsboro boys had never touched her, the courtroom went into an uproar. That night the Ku Klux Klan and the young upper class blades about Decatur talked of lynching Ruby Bates.

It was a new thing for the southern rulers to see a poor white girl "side" with Negroes. Yet this new spirit is slowly seeping into the consciousness of the white share croppers and workers throughout the South. Slowly they are beginning to realize that the same powers that lynch Negroes and frame them for "rape" are likewise grinding out the poor white cotton tenant.

That's why they hate Ruby Bates. That is why they said of her that "such people aren't fit to be members of the white race," and threatened to lynch her.

RUBY BATES
At the trial she relieves her conscience

And that is why the dramatic appearance of this slim white girl in an Alabama court to tell the truth about the Scottsboro case is of such momentous social and political significance.

Lived in Squalor

For sixteen years Ruby lived in squalor in a "white trash" shack in Huntsville, Ala. As a child, barefooted, with skimpy calico dresses, she played about the unpaved streets where the "mill hands" lived. Upper class whites looked down upon these mill hands as scarcely better than the Negroes.

Nearby was the Negro quarter but Ruby Bates kept away from that. The poor whites were taught that they were "better than" Negroes." This was the only thing that the Bates family clung to their sense of "superiority" over the Negro people down the street. In this manner, the bourbons who control the South keep the masses black and white, apart. "Divide and rule" is their motto.

Ruby stayed in school barely long enough to learn to read and write. By sixteen she was already an experienced mill hand, with a drab life of tending the looms ahead of her. She worked eleven hours a night and earned $5 a week. Living seemed sordid and empty to the girl.

Family in Want

Sometimes the family was in extreme want. There was no money for clothes, for food, for the little pleasures that a girl wants. In the bleak day-break she came home exhausted from the whirr of the looms and the throb of the machines; she ate her scant meals, slept, and went back into the linty atmosphere of the mill again.

The only fun for a young adolescent girl in these barren mill-owned towns is the thrill of sex. Ruby was never taught the dangers of promiscuous sex relations. When she was still a child, she was already the victim of veneral diseases.

Then the mills shut down and even what little security Ruby had was snatched away. The burdens of the crisis fell on the poor whites almost as heavily as upon the Negro masses.

Famous Hobo Ride

Next followed that internationally famous hobo ride on the freight train which took Ruby Bates and another mill hand, Victoria Price, to Chattanooga and back to Huntsville again, via Scottsboro.

To cross the Tennessee-Alabama line with the white boys who had accompanied them and with whom they spent some days in a hobo jungle, meant arrest for vagrancy or perhaps even more serious charges.

Victoria Price had already spent time in jail. The mill had beaten Victoria Price down, the police terrorized her, till she had surrendered. In sex and in squalid underworld life she found some escape from the blight of the mill drudgery.

"Say we were raped by the Negroes," Victoria whispered when they were arrested at Paint Rock. "That will let us out and we'll make some money as witnesses."

So the girls said they were "raped" and Scottsboro had a Roman holiday while the nine Negro boys were "tried' and sentenced to death.

Ruby Thinks

Ruby Bates was only a child, and not so hardened as her companion. As time went by, and the Scottsboro cases resounded around the world, Ruby began to do some thinking. Conditions in the poor little shack became worse and worse. Sometimes there was no food to eat.

It was then Ruby began to see that poor whites cannot rise by badly as Negroes. She began to see that poor whites cannot rise by stamping the Negro deeper into the mire. Some faint glimmering of unity with the downtrodden black workers up the street began to flicker in her mind.

It Wasn't Right

"Somehow I began to think it wasn't right," she told the writer in Decatur the evening after her fateful testimony, that she had lied in the original Scottsboro trials. "Sure, them boys is Negroes. But Negroes got feelings just like white folks.

"After the trials when I went hoboing again I just couldn't get the idea out of my head. Them Negroes was human. They was on the way looking for work, just like we was. They gets treated even worse than us poor whites. And it bothered me, mister. Yes, sir. It just made my head hurt thinking about them Negroes me and Victoria was sending to the electric chair—just because we wanted to escape being put in the bull pen and get a few dollars for being witnesses."

Went to New York

"Then I went to New York, you know. I saw Dr. Fosdick, this minister I was telling about on the stand, and I told him the whole story. I just couldn't see it—my lies sending them boys to their death.

"That's how I come back.

"Sure I know I took a chance of going to prison for perjury for lying the first time. But, mister, I feel better right here," she pointed to her heart.

"Negroes is human. They gets treated worse than us poor whites. Yes, sir, I finally saw what I done, so I told the whole truth."

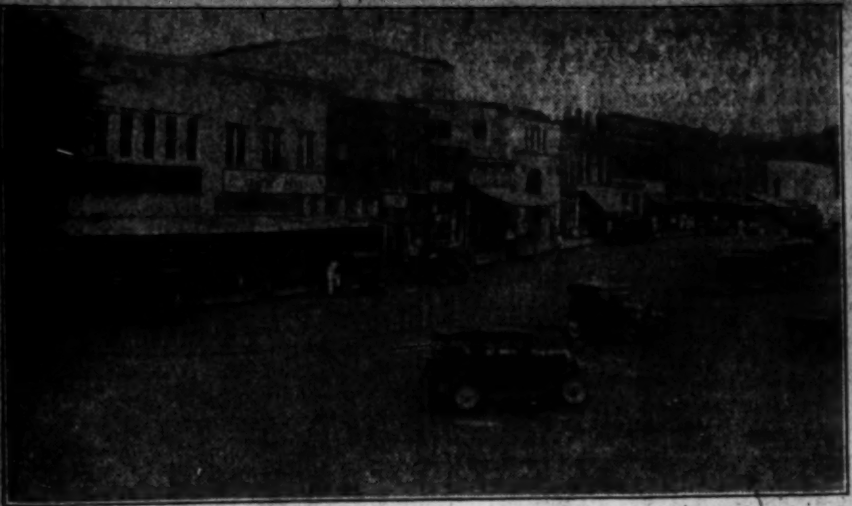
Ruby Bates does not yet understand who it is that treats poor Negroes worse than poor whites—and treats both badly. But she does understand that they belong to the same class and are fighting against the same brutal forces that strip both of freedom, health, and joy in life. And so this child of nineteen, her life almost wrecked by disease, by gruelling labor in a mill, by the hopelessness of her future, by the system of which the entire working class is victim, walked courageously into the Morgan County courtroom and defied the hatred and contempt of the Southern ruling class to save the lives of the Scottsboro boys.

Poor Begin to Awaken

When a white woman has the strength and courage to face a southern lynch court in an effort to save a Negro framed for "rape," there occurs a historic moment in the rise of the black and white masses of America. Ruby Bates's appearance on that witness stand is a symbol of a deep change in the South.

It means that the poor politically backward whites, at the bottom, are beginning to awaken. It means that slowly the veil of race prejudice drilled into them by the owners of the mills and plantations is beginning to drop from their eyes.

It means that some day they will join hands with the still poorer blacks and together will face their common enemy.



Scottsboro—Typical Alabama town where whites are poor and ignorant, and blacks still more so.

Ruby and Victoria in calico. We need only a picture of them in overalls as hobos to complete the cycle from overalls to sport ensemble.

Scottsboro Nine Return To Cells

Rebellious Negroes Agree To Surrender Temporary Arms, Pay For Damage

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., April 28.—(AP)—After twenty hours of rebellion, the nine negroe defendants in the "Scottsboro case" today capitulated and went peaceably to their cells for a good meal and slept most of the afternoon.

Armed with pieces of metal ripped from plumbing and lighting fixtures of the day room, the negroes late yesterday defied officials and refused to return to their cells.

"We'll die first," they shouted to Sheriff J. F. Hawkins, who sought to reason with them after Warden F. L. Erwin had failed to quiet them.

About 11 a.m. today, however, after holding out from 4:30 p.m. yesterday they sent word to the warden they would behave and promised to pay for damages done in ripping out their crude weapons. Sheriff Hawkins had ordered them locked in the day room, which is equipped only with a table and benches, and placed on bread and water until they became tractable.

Warden Erwin attributed the outbreak to "streams of communist propaganda and letters from sympathizers" and discontinuance of the practice of permitting hundreds of negroes to visit them on Thursday afternoon.

Previous to the rebellion, the negroes had sent a crudely-printed placard to the Warden headed "Freedom for the Scottsboro boys" and demanding "better treatment."

Sheriff Hawkins said the only complaint they made when he asked if they had been struck or mistreated by deputy wardens was that one of them "cursed us."

Warden Erwin designated Heywood Patterson, 19, of Chattanooga, recently convicted and sentenced to death the second time for an alleged attack on Mrs Victoria Price, Huntsville textile worker as the ring leader.

Gov. B. M. Miller, at Montgomery, today refused authority for the transfer of the negroes to Kilby Prison, where they have been incarcerated during most of the two years the International Labor Defense has sought to free them. The governor said there was no law authorizing the removal of the prisoners to Kilby prison unless the jail in which they were confined was insecure.

It was further explained to the Sheriff that prisoners must be convicted and sentenced before being received at Kilby. It is likely, however, that Patterson, since he has been resentenced, may be transferred to Kilby.

"I have no fear of any trouble or the negroes escaping," Sheriff Hawkins said, "but they are having an unwholesome effect on the other negroes in the jail and in the county."

The Jefferson County Jail where the negroes are confined is atop the new $2,000,000 courthouse, seven floors above the street level, and is modern in every respect.

Patterson and his companions, Andy Wright, Eugene Williams, Charlie Weems, Ozie Powell, Willie Roberson, Clarence Norris, and Olen Montgomery, were sentenced to death in Scottsboro on April 9, 1931, after convictions by juries. All except Williams, whose sentence was reversed by the Alabama Supreme Court, were granted new trials by the United States Supreme Court. The ninth negro, Roy Wright, was given a mistrial at Scottsboro.

Patterson, the first to be retried at Decatur under a change of venue early this month, was convicted and his punishment fixed at death. A motion for a new trial is pending.

The other trials were indefinitely postponed by Judge James E. Horton, after a statement attributed to Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of Patterson's counsel, concerning "bigots" had been printed in Decatur with a reply by Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr.

The negroes were charged with attacking Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train on March 25, 1931, as the girls "hoboed" their way home from Chattanooga.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 28.—A demand that the attacks upon the Scottsboro boys congned in the Jefferson county prison in Birmingham cease, and that the boys be freed, will be made at a Scottsboro meeting to be held here Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Stanard Theatre, South and 12th Street.

Prominent local labor representatives, clergymen, and speakers for the ILD, which is arranging the meeting, will appear. Prior to the meeting a large delegation will demand that Mayor Moore order the chief of police to "keep hands off" the meeting and cease threats to prevent the meeting from taking place.

2,500 IN MARCH TO AID YOUTHS

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Approximately 2,500 Negroes and whites staged their march on the White House and Capitol in behalf of the nine Scottsboro, Ala., colored youths charged with criminally assaulting two white girls.

The marchers were headed by National Communist leaders, including James W. Ford, Negro Vice-Presidential candidate of the Communist party last year.

A delegation was admitted to the White House offices, where they had a half hour conference with Secretary to the President Howe.

The delegation demanded to see President Roosevelt, but was informed he was in conference with the German economic mission.

Knight Goes To Decatur For Scottsboro Hearing

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., left yesterday afternoon for Decatur, where tomorrow, with Asst. Atty. Gen T. S. Lawson, he will represent the State at hearing before Circuit Judge James E. Horton, of habeas corpus proceedings filed by defense counsel, seeking the release of Roy Wright, and Eugene Williams, two of the nine original "Scottsboro" case negro defendants.

In petition for habeas corpus, George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, Tenn., attorney for the two negroes, maintained that they were 13 years old at the time the crime with which they are charged was committed, and that they should have been turned over to the jurisdiction of the juvenile courts of the State. Mr. Chamlee, it is understood, will represent the petitioners at the hearing tomorrow.

Two Seek Liberty In Scottsboro Case

DECATUR, ALA., May 31.—(AP)—Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, two of nine negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" and alleged juveniles, have been ordered brought into Morgan Circuit Court tomorrow for a hearing on petitions for a writ of habeas corpus.

Wright and Williams, both alleged juveniles, are under indictments with seven other negroes on charges of attacking two white girls aboard a Southern Railway freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

Applications for writs of habeas corpus were filed before Judge James E. Horton at Athens several weeks ago, and a hearing was set for tomorrow.

In filing the petitions for writs, George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, one of several attorneys employed by the International Labor Defense, informed the court he held an affidavit from Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims, denying that Wright attacked her.

In the trial of Heywood Patterson, convicted a second time on April 9 this year and sentenced to death, the Bates girl made a sensational appearance after having been missing seven weeks and repudiated her former testimony.

Sheriff James Hawkins at Birmingham in whose custody the negroes are, declined to say what time he would leave for Decatur with the prisoners. In setting the hearing Judge Horton directed Sheriff Hawkins to produce the negroes here tomorrow.

CASES TRANSFERRED TO JUVENILE COURT

Youngest Scottsboro Defendants Turned Over To Lower Jurisdiction

DECATUR, ALA., June 1.—(AP)—Juvenile authorities of Morgan County today were given jurisdiction over the cases of the two youngest of nine negroes indicted in the "Scottsboro case," by Judge James E. Horton after a hearing on petitions for writs of habeas corpus.

The hearing took less than an hour, the defense offering two witnesses to support contentions that Roy Wright and Eugene Williams were only 13 years of age when arrested, and the State resting with introductions of birth certificates.

Concluding his case Thomas E. Knight, Jr., attorney general, chief of the prosecution staff, said "The State has no objection to the juvenile court reviewing the cases, but we will contend that because of the gravity of the offense, they should be sent to the Circuit Courts."

It was after this statement that Judge Horton ruled that the negroes, both charged with participation in an attack on two white women aboard a freight train in Jackson County, March 25, 1931, should be transferred to the jurisdiction of the juvenile courts.

Beatrice Maddox, sister of Roy Wright, who testified he was born Oct. 22, 1917, and Mamie Williams, mother of the other negro, who gave his date of birth as Dec. 9, 1917, were the only witnesses called.

Atty. Gen. Knight introduced into the record a birth certificate purporting to show Wright's birth date was Oct. 26, 1916, and that of Williams as Sept. 2, 1916.

The hearing attracted little attention in contrast with the crowded courtrooms during the trial of Heywood Patterson, first of the negroes to be tried here, under a change of venue.

The negroes were brought here from Jefferson County by deputies sheriff and after the hearing was returned to jail there pending setting of a date for a hearing in juvenile court.

Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the alleged victims of the attack, was present in court, but was not called to testify. She was the principal witness against Patterson who was sentenced to death last April 9.

Patterson and his seven companions were arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., March 25, 1931, and charged with attacking Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train.

All except Roy Wright were convicted and sentenced to death in Jackson Circuit Court on April 9, 1931. The Alabama Supreme Court set aside Williams's death sentence on account of his age, and the United States Supreme Court set aside the others and ordered a new trial.

Only Patterson was tried here in April, Judge Horton postponing the others, because of remarks about the jury attributed to Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief of defense counsel.

ANY HELP IS WELCOME

The Scottsboro case is an epitome of southern conditions, — Negroes charged with crime and adjudged guilty without evidence. Victory in it will have a far reaching effect. It will mean the end of the legal reign of terror which has made Negroes yield rights on demand, and filled prisons with innocent men.

If as Josephus Daniels of Raleigh, N. C., says, southern whites will raise a fund and secure the best southern white lawyers, well and good. Such a step would take the last vestige of respectability from the way southern courts treat Negroes. It would bring to an end the conditions of the past under which Negroes have been without aid of counsel worthy of the name.

Help comes from the International Labor Defense and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The latter is our old stand-by when in trouble. The former made itself known to us in the Scottsboro case.

To win the Scottsboro case, we need both favorable public opinion and money. They are the faith and works of the problem. No need to argue which is the more needed. Help in any way is welcome and no sensible person will refuse it, no matter from whom it comes.

Daily Worker 6-7-33

New York

MT. VERNON, N. Y., June 6.—An attempt by the Ku Klux Klan to intimidate workers and disrupt a "Save the Scottsboro Boys" meeting held here last night was defeated by the solidarity of Negro and white workers who despite the vicious tactics of the Klan flocked to the A. B. Davis High School Auditorium to attend the meeting.

As the workers gathered, they found the walls of the building inside and out covered with stickers reading:

THE KU KLUX KLAN HAS ITS ON YOU!

The workers, however, refused to be frightened by this "warning." When they went to their seats, they found scattered through the hall labelled "Ku Klux Klan Exposed by a Klansmen."

A Klansmen, the circular said "has the courage to back these convictions and the nerve to get in now and not wait until the work is all done."

This obvious warning that Klansmen intended to use force and violence which has marked their terroristic history followed statements such as these:

"A Klansmen believes Black Supremacy is O. K. for Africa and stands unalterable for White Supremacy in America.

"A Klansman opposes trash immigration.

With the growing strength of the militant working class struggle among both whites and Negroes against the sharpening terror of the capitalist rulers of America, the intensifying fight on the workers is evidenced by the revival of terroristic activities by the Klan, as exemplified by the onslaught at last night's meeting.

Carter Speaks.

At last night's meeting, while Lester Carter, defense witness for the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro case, retold the shameful story of the frame-up in that case, he saw two Klansmen and one Klanswoman who gained entrance to the hall make secret Klan signs to each other.

William L. Patterson, national secretary of the I. L. D., Mrs. Leslie Thompson, of the Yonkers Scottsboro Action Committee, N. Pollard, Westchester County Scottsboro Action Committee and L. E. Williams, A Coverdale, Pa., miner, were among the speakers at the meeting arranged by the I. L. D. in conjunction with Blossom Heath Lodge, No. 31, I.B.P.O.E.

Patterson, on behalf of the International Labor Defense, issued an immediate call as a result of the attempted Klan attack last night to all district branches of the I. L. D. to take active steps to protect future Scottsboro or other defense meetings against the menace of attacks from the Klan.

Negro Motion Hearing Is Changed To Athens

Athens, June 6 — The motion for a new trial for Heywood Patterson, convicted Scottsboro negro, who was sentenced to death at his trial in Decatur, Ala., recently, will be heard at Athens instead of Decatur on June 22, it was announced by Judge James E. Horton of Athens Monday, who who presided at the trial of Patterson.

The fact that circuit court will be in session under Judge W. W. Callahan in Decatur on that date was assigned as the reason.

Thomas E. Knight, Jr., of Montgomery, attorney general, George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga and Samuel Liebowitz of New York are among the attorneys who probably will be present.

5-29-33

DECATUR, ALA., May 28.—(AP)—Hopes for early freedom for two of the nine negroes indicted in the Scottsboro case hinge on habeas corpus proceedings, set for hearing in Morgan circuit court here Thursday, June 1.

Judge James E. Horton recently issued an order that Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, juveniles, be brought into court here for determination of their case, and set the hearing for Thursday.

In applying for the writ to "determine their cases," George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, one of the attorneys employed in the caes by the International Labor Defense, contended both negroes were only 13 years of age at the time of the alleged crime and therefore should have been committed to the jurisdiction of the juvenile courts.

Chamlee further set forth that Roy Wright was indicted on charges of attacking Ruby Bates, who in the trial of Heywood Patterson in April denied her previous testimony.

The girl made a sensational appearance in court after having been missing seven weeks, and swore that she was not attacked and that she previously had testified falsely.

Wright in the first trials at Scottsboro from whence the case takes its name, was given a mistrial when the jury could not agree on punishment for him. A previous attempt to gain his freedom on a writ of habeas corpus failed in Jefferson Circuit Court.

Williams was convicted and sentenced to death in the first trials at Scottsboro in April, 1931, but the Alabama Supreme Court set the verdict aside on the grounds that his counsel contended he was a juvenile and the State had not proven his age.

DePRIEST DISSENTS

While white malcontents have made a hullabaloo over the Scottsboro trial in Alabama, it is interesting to note that Representative Oscar DePriest, of Chicago, the nation's only negro congressman, takes a dissenting view as evidenced by his Memorial day address in Chicago. As noted by the Greensboro Record:

"His theme was patriotism, and he lambasted the communists to a fare-you-well: They are using the Scottsboro case to spread their devilish doctrine, he declared, admonishing: 'Don't you black people of America let them take you in on that. They are against all that you believe and all that you are. They don't believe in our government and they have no faith in cur Christ.' That much is obviously true.

"Lauding the patriotism of his people the Chicago delegate said: 'The negro never has turned upon the flag of his country. He always has been first to fight for it, though he has had many complaints at the protection it has offered him. But this is the best country in the world for the negro.' Though some of this is exaggeration, the country as a whole recognizes and, we hope, appreciates the patriotism of the negro, so we have no particular fault to find with what Representative DePriest has said on this score in the heat of his own oratorical fervor."

SCOTTSBORO MEETING IN CHURCH IS ALMOST A RIOT

KANSAS CITY, Kas.—A near-riot disrupted a meeting at First A. M. E. church here Sunday afternoon when Congressman U. S. Guyer and Lester Carter, white Texan, who was one of the defense witnesses at the last Scottsboro trial at Decatur, Ala., came perilously near to fisticuffs before an assemblage of 1,000 which had gathered to hear a talk by Mrs. Jane Patterson, mother of Haywood, one of the nine Scottsboro boys.

The trouble arose when Mr. Guyer, refuting attacks made by Richard B. Moore, West Indian Communist, against President Roosevelt, the supreme court, Congressman DePriest, and America in general, was challenged by Carter after the congressman had made a remark Carter construed as an insult to himself.

"There are some good white people in Texas," Mr. Guyer remarked, "but they are good to white people only."

"You can't call me a liar, you capitalist!"

Carter seemed on the point of physically attacking the congressman, who set himself for defense, when Forest B. Anderson, chairman of the meeting, and president of the Ctizens league, which was sponsoring the meeting, intervened firmly.

"There Was Confusion"

Other members of the Patterson party started yelling too. A number of people in the audience sturged towards the rostrum. Others ran toward the exit of the church, fearing a general melee. For a few minutes much confusion reigned.

Then the Rev. A. W. Davis made his powerful voice heard above the tumult. He succeeded in restoring a measure of order.

Following him the Rev. W. D. Wilkins, pastor of the church, expressed regret that such an occurrence could have taken place and apologized to Mr. Guyer for the incident. The minister told the crowd, which had become quiet again, that he had reluctantly given his consent for the holding of the meeting in his church. He had not expected that inflamatory speeches would be made, he said, but only that Mrs. Patterson would speak in order that the people might know the truth about the Scottsboro case.

Carter Leaves

Mrs. Patterson spoke briefly. She was calm and her talk was effective. She related the reasons which she, and most other people had, for believing her son and the other Scottsboro boys innocent of the rape of the two white girls, for which they are being held. She praised the I.L.D., saying that it had come to her aid when she needed it and that it had stuck by her and she would stick by it as long as she lived.

The speech which riled Congressman Guyer, as well as many of the audience, was that of Moore. In a vitriolic manner Moore poured abuse on President Roosevelt, calling him a "sneaking demagogue." The supreme court of the United States he termed a "tool of Wall street." DePriest, according to Moore, was a traitor to his race and worse. Going back to Lincoln, Moore said of the great emancipator that he he freed the slaves not from humanitarian motives but as a move of expediency to save the Union.

"No Honest Judges"

"There are no honest judges," Moore shouted. "There ain't no such animal."

Carter, the white Texan, said he was on the train on which the fight between the white and colored boys took place. He stated that he and his partner were with Ruby Bates and Victoria Price and that the colored boys had made no attack on the women.

Carter told how officers had tried to make him sign statements saying that the women had been raped by the colored boys, but that he and his partner refused. The police then made them get out of the state, Carter said.

When Congressman Guyer rose to speak he defended the president, the courts, except in Alabama, and Oscar DePriest.

"I could not sit here and allow you to attack the President," Mr. Guyer said. "You should not go against your friends. I have stated several times that the Scottsboro boys have not had and cannot get a fair trial in Alabama. I have offered to aid in whatever way I could to help these lads. But I cancont and will not sit here and listen to attacks on our nation in silence."

CONGRESSMAN RESENTS ATTACKS HURLED AT U. S. GOVERNMENT, SUPREME JUDGES, ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND CONGRESSMAN DePRIEST MADE BY I.L.D. SPEAKER; FORREST B. ANDERSON MAKES STATEMENT.

BULLETIN

Directly following the appearance of the article in the Kansas City Times, Monday morning, scores of prominent citizens of both races made urgent inquiries of Rev. W. H. Wilkins, pastor of First A. M. E. Church, and officers of the Citizen's League concerning the Guyer-Carter fiasco. The Times failed to state that the belligerent Carter was a white man, and much resentment and consternation is reported because of the unfortunate affair.

Rumors also are rampart that many persons are directing criticism toward Forrest B. Anderson, president of the Citizen's League, because of his invitation to Congressman Guyer. It seems to be the concensus of opinion of prominent political leaders, that the unpleasant state of affairs should have been averted, for the good will and well meaning of all concerned.

(By an Eyewitness of Plaindealer Staff)

Remarks of Congressman U. S. Guyer in which he expressed dire resentment of the tenure of attacks hurled at the national government, President Roosevelt, the Supreme Court of the U. S., and his fellow congressman, Oscar DePriest of Chicago, by the vitrolic gestures of Richard B. Moore during the latter's address Sunday afternoon at First A. M. E. Church, were abruptly interrupted at the instance of a counter charge on the part of Lester Carter, (white) defense witness.

The altercation came at the close of the program of a mass meeting and testimonial given under the auspicies of the Citizen's League, during the presence of Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of the doomed Heywood Patterson, who made a sympathetic plea in behalf of the condemned boys in Alabama; and following enthusiastic reception of Lester Carter, the white boy the risk of his life helped to prove the innocence of th Scottsboro boys on the witness stand along with Ruby Bates.

Young Carter in his own way had described the event o affairs leading up to and after the last trial. Incidentally h made it known that he was a native of Texas. And what actually caused the violent commotion when he threatened to strik Congressman Guyer, was Mr. Guyer's statement that "it wa true that the Scottsboro boys could not get a fair trial in Alabama and that there were good white people in Texas, but they were good to white folk." Immediately following this statement from Congressman Guyer, Carter rose to his feet and challenged Congressman Guyer with firey denunciation, that might have resulted in bodily harm but for the quick actions of others seated on the platform, who surrounded the repugnant youth and escorted him to the door. Mr. Moore the alleged avowed communist came to the rescue of Carter and succeeded in mal ing a quiet retreat.

At this juncture the hundreds of persons in the vast [illegible] had been thrown into panicky frenzy and half of them made a hasty exit, unheeding the cries of Rev. W. [illegible] Wilkins, pastor of the church who valiently tried to restore peace and calm. After his alert admonishments, he finally gained hold of the situation and Congressman Guyer was allowed to continue his talk. Mr. Guyer was reticent and declared that his fo[illegible] was in error, and apologetically explained that he made no attack upon the good will of Cater.

The terrible confusion of affairs came as a bombshell out of a clear sky, and marred the morale of what intended to be almost tranquill gathering who were bent on paying tribute to Mrs. Patterson and wishing her every good wish for the safe return of the Scottsboro boys to their homes.

Moore, the prolific speaker of the I. L. D. held the attention of his hearers firmly, which included a representative group of the leading business and professional men and women and pastors of the churches, together with the Honorable member of Congress. During his 45 minutes of discourse he hurled varied accusations at Congressman Oscar De Priest, of Illinois, as having failed to properly represent the members of his race in Washington, and described him as especially negligent in the Scottsboro case. He made wanton attacks upon the NAACP specifying that they failed to turn over $7,000 defense funds collected in the name of the unfortunate boys. Further, Moore spoke despairiyingly of the "noble" deeds of Abraham Lincoln, and charged that the emancipation of the Negro was not brought about by his love for the colored people but to save the Union.

The long afternoon was a voloptous round of affluent oratory by numbers of speakers, some of which gained access to the floor at advantageous points. The meeting finally adjourned amid excitement running high.

Anderson's Statement

I had two purposes in inviting congressman U. S. Guyer to the meeting first, that Mrs. Patterson the mother of one of the Scottsboro boys could tell him her story and second that he could hear it. This poor mother traveled all the way to Washington to tell congress her story and was refused the right to do so, while in this event she had the congressman come to her so the meeting was beneficial to both of them, especially in the event that Mr. Guyer decided to take official action (which I hope he will) he will have first hand information from the lips of one who can tell the story as no one else can.

The meeting was a perfect success except for a few unpleasant words that passed between Mr. Guyer and Mr. Carter (both white) which I regret exceedingly and while I did not think the matter of any grave consequence still as a matter of precaution I appointed a committee of three men to escort the congressman to his car.

As president of the citizens league I would feel remiss in my duites to have had Mrs. Patterson come to our city and go away without being entertained by some local organization. I have no apologies to offer, if I had it to do over again I would persue the same course.

Scottsboro Cases To Be In Supreme Court Again, Lawyer Says

Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—(AP)—The Scottsboro, Ala., cases are again to be brought before the Supreme Court.

Osmond K. Fraenkel, of New York, counsel for Ozie Powell and six other negroes charged with assaults upon two white women, has given notice he will ask the highest court to order United States marshals to levy on property of the State of Alabama to satisfy costs totalling $1,452 awarded his clients when the Supreme Court set aside their conviction and gave them a new trial.

Fraenkel, in the papers he has prepared for filing with the court, said he had called upon Atty. Gen. Knight, of Alabama, to comply with the court's decree by paying his clients costs to cover the expense of printing the records in their cases for use of the high court but had been unable to obtain any assurance the money would be paid

He pointed out that the negroes would again be brought to trial on Nov. 27 and declared it was highly important the money be available to enable them to present a proper defense.

He said he would inform the court that efforts to raise money otherwise for the defense of his clients have not been fully successful.

Stay Asked for in Scottsboro Appeal To Supreme Court

ILD Demands Ala. Pay Cost of First Appeal Before New Trial

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3.—Motion for a stay of all proceedings in the trials of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys until the state of Alabama pays the costs of the appeal to the U. S. Supremede Court has been filed with that court by Osmond K. Fraenkel, attorney retained by the International Labor Defense, and will be hear Monday, Nov. 13.

The motion cites the assignment of $1,452.55 in costs, nearly all of it for printing of the appeal, by the U. S. Supreme Court to the state of Alabama, which was the defendant in the appeal, won by the International Labor Defense, in a decision handed down Nov. 7, 1932, granting the boys a new trial.

With November 27 set as the date for the opening of the new lynch trial before Ku Klux Klan Judge W. W. Callahan, and with Attorney General Thomas E. Knight calling for the nine boys to be brought for arraignment to the lynch town of Decatur, November 20, the motion, unless decided immediately by the Supreme Court, would have the effect of delaying the trials.

No precedent has ever been set for the decision of the court in a so-called criminal case, but the law calls for a stay of all further proceedings by the losing side in all cases coming up to the U. S. Supreme Court until costs are paid up as assessed.

CONCERNING JUDGE HORTON

To Editor, The Age-Herald:

As a constant reader of your paper, I note your editorial in your issue of Tuesday, Oct. 24, under the head of "On Shifting Judges."

In this article you regret that Judge Horton is not to retry the Scottsboro Negro rape cases, and that Judge Callahan is to try them. You wonder why the change was made, and you say: "The fact which cannot be overlooked is, that the judge who has already tried the cases and who has done so with infinite credit to himself and the state of Alabama, is not being permitted to bring to a fresh investigation the benefit of his experience and the assurance of his unfaltering courage." Have you ever thought, Mr. Editor, that Judge Horton deliberately disqualified himself from again trying these cases? This, he did, when in passing on the motion for a new trial, he stated "that the evidence was not sufficient to convict." After deliberately expressing this opinion, he knew, as everyone else ought to know, that he would no longer be qualified to sit as judge in the case.

Your statement in that editorial that Judge Horton had tried the case "with infinite credit to himself and the state of Alabama," shows a lamentable ignorance of the true facts. The facts are, that during that trial, Judge Horton allowed the courtroom to be made a circus of, by allowing flashlight pictures to be made in the courtroom while the trial was in progress, and allowing that Jew lawyer who represented the defendants, to say and do what he pleased.

For instance, Mr. Editor: When the attorney general of Alabama was cross-examining a Negro witness and called the Negro by his given name, this lawyer for the defendant rebuked the attorney general by saying in a loud voice: "Why don't you call him mister?" and Judge Horton sat there, and said nothing; suppose that you, Mr. Editor, had been in the place of the attorney general—would you then be willing to reiterate that Judge Horton is "the brave and veteran judge, whose behavior in the last trial won the praise of all thoughtful observers?"

The truth is, Mr. Editor, to many who have observed that trial, and who know Judge Horton, it seemed that he was lacking in courage, that he was seeking notoriety, and that while his political ability is well recognized, that he has no more backbone than an angle worm. You seem to regret in that editorial that Judge Callahan is to try these cases. I have known Judge Callahan for many years and I venture the prediction that when the trial is had that it will be tried right, that the court proceedings will be conducted with decorum, that the lawyers engaged in the case will not cast side bar remarks to each other, that a circus will not be made of the courtroom, and when it is over, the people of Morgan County will not be humiliated by thinking that their Circuit Court has been made a political forum.

Respectfully,
WILLIAM MOSELEY.

Lynch Law

Editor of The Record:

Sir—Americans, while protesting to the German Government against the mistreatment of the minority race of Jews in Germany, should give their very serious attention to the unparalleled mistreatment of Negroes in America.

Until our country does give such attention to this universal mistreatment of its own Negro citizens and attempt to stop same, it will weaken its position to make protest to the Hitler or any other Government against their mistreatment of minorities in their respective countries.

I refer particularly to the most dastardly, bestial, and gruesome lynching that has ever disgraced the already stained banner of America, the Armwood lynching of Princess Anne, Md. A lynching that has not only disgraced Princess Anne and the State of which it is a part, but the whole United States.

It is needless to dwell on the details of such a horrible lynching. This has already been done adequately by an aroused and protesting press. Their word picture of the lynching of George Armwood by an infuriated mob, estimated at between two thousand and five thousand people, must have caused every law-abiding and peace-loving American to shudder in righteous horror and indignation.

Newspapers and individuals have speculated as to the cause of the lynching. Some have attributed it to the naturally slow process of the administration of justice, but they all seem to forget in the forming of such a conclusion that it is the Constitutional right of every citizen of these United States who is charged with a crime to be tried according to the due process of law. Also, that this Constitutional clause has always been interpreted to mean that any citizen charged with crime, irrespective of its nature, is entitled to every legal means to prove his innocence before the courts of our land, even if his case must be taken to the highest tribunal, the United States Supreme Court.

Therefore, even though I bemoan with others this apparent slowing down of the administration of justice, yet I think that in many cases it has served the useful end of the meting out of fuller justice to the citizen charged with crime.

And, certainly, when such a process of administering justice is used for the purpose of giving the accused every Constitutional privilege of proving his innocence, it should be upheld by all of us who profess love for our Constitution and its decree of a fair trial for any citizen accused of crime.

According to lynching statistics that were released by the Commission of Church and Race Relations in 1921 there were 1028 white persons and 3069 Negroes lynched during the period of 1885 to 1921, inclusive.

In the years 1929 and 1930, 37 more were added to that number, making a total of 4134 whites and Negroes lynched during those years, with the Negroes in the great majority. As to the number that occurred during other intervening and succeeding years, I have no figures to tell, but I do know that during the year 1933, at least 33 lynchings have occurred.

In citing these figures on lynching statistics, my sole object is to show the white and Negro citizens of the United States the seriousness of the lynching evil.

Then, as a representative of the Negro race and an American citizen, I hereby fervently appeal to our white fellow citizens to join with us in abolishing the lynching evil once and for all time. Let us, white and Negro citizens, organize ourselves into a band of anti-lynching crusaders, first, to wage a vigorous campaign of education of our people of the danger of lynching to established government, and then to bring about the enactment of an anti-lynching law.

My sincere hope is that many favorable responses to this challenge may be forthcoming from our friends of law and order of the white race.

A CHECK ON LYNCHINGS

Kansas City Call

Washington.—The federal government has the power to punish officials in any state who permit lynchings of prisoners in their care, and the president of the United States may call out the land and naval forces of the nation to see that the guilty ones are punished.

These are the contentions in a brief filed with Attorney General Cummings this week by Charles H. Houston, Leon Ransom and Edward P. Lovett, three attorneys of this city.

The brief cites a federal law first passed by congress May 31, 1870 and since amended to make it still stronger. It says in substance that any person who under color of any law..... ordinance..... or custom shall be subject or cause to be subjected any inhabitant of any state .... to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or to different punishments, pains or penalties on account of such inhabitant being an alien or by reason of his color, or race, than is prescribed for the punishment of citizens, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year or both. . . . The name of the law is Section 52, Chapter 3, Title 8, U. S. C. A. (R. S. 5510).

Going further, the brief recites from Section 55 of the same chapter and title (R. S. 1989): "It shall be lawful for the president of the United States, or such person as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States or of the militia, as may be necessary to aid in the execution of the judicial process issued under any of the preceding sections, or as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of the provisions of this title."

The brief is an attempt to get the federal government to act to punish Sheriff R. L. Shamblin of Tuscaloosa county, Alabama, from whose custody Dan Pippen and A. T. Harden were taken on August 12 and lynched. The three lawyers prepared and submitted the brief for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the International Labor Defense and the American Civil Liberties Union. They contend Sheriff Shamplin caused Pippen and Harden to be deprived of their rights as United States citizens, that the sheriff acted under color of law or custom of Alabama, that the victims suffered the deprivation of the rights by reason of their color and race, and that federal prosecution is the only means by which the deprivation can or will be punished.

The brief covers 24 full typewritten pages and recites the facts of the lynching as well as arguments to support the contention under the law. In conclusion it points out that despite the admitted "shock and outrage" of the "best citizens" and the state officials, Alabama did nothing and a grand jury found no grounds for action. The conclusion is that the Negro has no hope of getting action through state and local authorities and must depend on federal intervention and punishment.

Lynching Did Not Always Imply Mob Violence

Editor Everybody's Corner: What is the origin of the term lynching and is it only found in the United States?

N. M. B.

THE origin of the word "lynching" is doubtful and is said by some to have originated in Virginia, where a farmer named Charles Lynch took the law into his own hands after a theft, caught the culprit, tied him to a tree and flogged him. Another theory is that the term came from James Lynch Fitz-Stephen of Galway, Ireland, who about 1526 sentenced his own son to death for murder and, to prevent his rescue by a mob, executed him with his own hands. Still another theory is that a Charles Lynch, who lived in Virginia from 1736 to 1796, flogged Tories during the Revolution and gave his name to the practice. He was a justice of the peace in Bedford county, Virginia. Although he overstepped his authority in flogging the Tories, the State Legislature passed a law which exonerated him.

A farmer named James Lynch, of Piedmont, Virginia, was selected by his neighbors in 1688 to try offenses on the frontier summarily because there were no law courts for miles around.

Nevertheless, although lynching connotes a peculiarly American institution, the practice has been common in all countries when unsettled conditions existed or in threatened anarchy. In Europe early examples of such a practice are found in the proceedings of the Vehmgerichte in medieval Germany, and of Lydford law, gibbet law, or Halifax law, Cowper justice and Jeddert justice in the sparsely settled border districts of Great Britain. In later years it is found mainly in Russia, and in southeastern Europe besides the United States.

Lynching in its earliest history in the United States was not mob law, as it is now understood, but it was orderly, methodical and fair in its practices, and was strongly opposed to violence or mob rule. Its decrees and findings were executed sternly and swiftly in places where territory had extended faster than effective government organization for the punishment of offenders could follow. But in the East in the early history of the country lynching was found: (1) in the mistreatment of Indians in New England and the middle Colonies in disregarding laws protecting them: (2) in the custom found in various Colonies of administering summary justice to wife-beaters and other obnoxious persons; (3) in the acts of the regulators of North Carolina (1767-71); (4) in the popular tribunals of the Revolutionary period when the popular feeling towards Great Britain weakened the authority of civil governments.

From 1870 on it became an unwritten law in the South to lynch by mob rule every negro charged with rape or assault, or with the murder of a white person and it is still in the Southern States that the number of lynchings is greatest. Other causes of lynchings are homicide, felonious assault, robbery and theft, insult to white persons, etc. Rarely has there been a conviction of persons who participated in lynchings, owing largely to the sympathy of the jurors for the accused, or, as in the recent Maryland lynching case, where evidence or identification is lacking in bringing the accused to trial.

REPORT ON PROPOSED LEGAL CHANGES DUE

Subcommittees Will Review Plans For Alteration On Criminal Procedure Thursday

Reports of three subcommittees on the advisibility of making drastic changes in the State judicial system pertaining to criminal cases are scheduled to be received Thursday — the date of the first full meeting of the Judicial Commission of Maryland, recently appointed by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie. The meeting will be at the Courthouse.

State's Attorney Herbert R. O'Conor, chairman of the commission, announced today that the group had been called to be in session Thursday to receive reports of subcommittees and begin consideration of proposed changes designed to prevent delays in criminal cases.

Meetings Held

The three subcommittees, which already have held meetings to study suggested changes in procedual laws, are headed by Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond, of the Court of Appeals; Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis, of the Supreme Bench, and Edgar Allan Poe.

The Governor's commission was appointed after the recent lynching in Somerset county and declarations from some sources that lynch feeling was promoted by the fact that some cases, notably the Euel Lee murder case, could be delayed through the courts for years before completion.

A GRAVE ISSUE

No graver reflection has been cast upon the decent citizenship of a county in Maryland than State's Attorney John B. Robins casts upon the people of Somerset. He asserts that effort to arrest and hold in jail men whom the Attorney-General of the State says are under suspicion of participating in the Armwood lynching would lead to a riotous outbreak that could not be controlled.

If this means anything, it means that mob violence, engendered not in a moment of passion but determined upon with calm deliberation, would prevent an orderly attempt to enforce the law. This, Mr. Robins says, would occur despite the Attorney-General's plain and direct statement that proof of guilt against the nine men whose arrests he has advised is so definite that no magistrate could legally refuse to hold them for the grand jury and no grand jury would be justified in refusing to indict.

The Attorney-General shows his faith in his case by requesting that the men be taken before a magistrate, so that the preliminary hearing may be had in the open and the public may learn the substantiality of the charges. Mr. Robins prefers the other way around. He would move first into the grand jury room, where secrecy would prevail. After State's Attorney Robins' general procedure in the matter, the public will not agree that he knows better than Attorney-General Lane which procedure in this particular instance is best calculated to promote justice, and to preserve the integrity of Maryland law.

The court of the First circuit has opportunity now to demonstrate that law can be and shall be carried out. It has authority to eliminate Mr. Robins from the case. And in view of his entire conduct in the matter, special counsel should be chosen to supplant him and to give the Attorney-General the cooperation that is necessary.

PUBLICITY

A few weeks ago the Maryland Free State was given a national advertisement when a popular radio broadcast was devoted to a dramatic rendition of the Princess Anne lynching. Shrieks, howls, curses and yells, all subordinated to a rhythmic chant, "This is what we do on the Eastern Shore!" gave Maryland an evening of publicity from coast to coast.

This week it is the marrying parsons of Elkton who provide the Free State's nation-wide claque. The theme of the piece, which appears in the New Yorker, is that "it is not always wise to announce in a courtroom that you were married in Elkton, Md." One New York jurist, upon hearing that an applicant for alimony was married in Elkton, said "I don't think much of that marriage." Thereupon follows a description of Elkton and a recital of the strange reason why that sleepy Maryland town should play so large a part in the union of elopers and bigamists. The marrying parsons, with their runners and their splits with taxicab companies, are fully accounted for.

Still, marrying is better than lynching and if it is true that Elkton in 1930 has 3,464 marriages to 260 for Gretna Green, that is less distressing than to have Maryland overtake Georgia as a lynching center. But a perusal of this article would have a sobering effect upon those opponents of the civil marriage bill who believe that an Elkton wedding at the home of a marrying parson in cahoots with a taxi driver has any relation to religious experience.

The Mob Rules

Law, as embodied in two of the three judges of the First judicial district of Maryland, formally abdicated to the mob yesterday. The scene in the Princess Anne courtroom, where the prisoners and the mob, rather than the judges, conducted the proceedings, marked the end of orderly government in that section of the State.

Save in so far as they suffer when the reputation of the State suffers, the people of Baltimore and of the rest of the State have little to fear. But the people of the First judicial district may well tremble at the future.

This is no idle threat. Careful statistics show that a community in which lynching is not challenged reverts more and more often to this type of orgy. Moreover, the people of the First judicial district are living in a false security if they think that their mobs will confine themselves to lynching an occasional unpopular Negro. The records show that lynchers next proceed to Negro women, then to white men and finally to white women. Eleven white women have been lynched by mobs in the last few years.

Moreover, mobs are not only killers, they are also destroyers. The Salisbury mob, in its exuberance, destroyed the automobiles of three innocent persons on Tuesday. No effort has been made and none will be made to punish the perpetrators of this vandalism. Destruction of property is condoned by authority in the First judicial district.

The judges, the State's Attorney and the mobs may think themselves pretty much heroes today. But they have set in motion forces which will plague and harass them for years to come. It is not unlikely that before long the decent people of the community, if any have the courage to remain there, will be calling upon the Governor to send troops to protect them from their neighbors.

SKELETON IN THE CLOSET.

From The St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The statement made by Governor Rolph of California in approval of the San José lynchings must rank among the most shocking ever made by a Governor of an American State.

In no country in the world is a recrudescence of mob justice more to be feared than in the United States. It is the skeleton in the family closet of this country. There is a fearsome background. At one time lynching exceeded 200 a year in the United States. It has required more than fifty years of progress in the extermination of this dangerous attitude toward justice to reduce the number of annual lynchings to the present almost negligible or at any rate comparatively slight total.

Crime will not be stamped out in America until all who would commit deliberate crime know that the force of police and of the courts will certainly overcome them if they break the law. Nothing short of the regular and increasingly successful victories of law over crime will burn home the lesson that Governor Rolph desires

TWO GOVERNORS CONTRASTED

CONSIDER the contrast in the conduct of Governor Rolph, of California, and Governor Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, with regard to lynching. The California Governor has defended the lynching in his state. And that raises a serious question. Is the country, or any part of it, to be ruled by law and order and the authorities, or are mobs of lynchers, law-breakers, to take command whenever it suits the frenzied fancy? Under the latter rule we should soon have chaos and practical anarchy.

No matter what the provocation may be, the law should take its course. And if the law delays the people should exert their influence in the proper way for the prompt administration of justice. We cannot afford to go back to the rule of lynchers. That really would be barbarous.

It is stated that Governor Rolph has been condemned by some and praised by others, but it is difficult to see why there should be praise. Disapproval has been expressed by a number of Governors of other states, large states at that.

On the other hand, Governor Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, has from the start manifested his high and complete conception of his duties. The Governor of Maryland promptly sent troops to the disturbed regions, heavily armed National Guardsmen, in an effort to apprehend the leaders of the mob who did the lynching. They succeeded.

Apart from other reasons the Governor was carrying out his sworn duty. And after it is all over and there is time for reflection some of those who have been condemning Governor Ritchie will conclude unemotionally that he was merely performing his sworn duty, which is that the law must be sustained and disorder discountenanced in every way, shape and form.

Political Method

When Governor Rolph, the erstwhile hero of the California liberals, was told of the lynching of two men at San Jose, he was delighted. Said he:

> This is the best lesson that California has ever given the country. We show the country that the State is not going to tolerate kidnapping.

This method of greeting news of the breakdown of government has obvious advantages and can be applied to many governmental problems. Thus if word should come to Governor Rolph that the chairman of his road commission has stolen ten millions, he could say:

> This is the best lesson California has ever given the country. We show the country that we have another millionaire.

Or, if the police of San Francisco were proven to be in cahoots with bank robbers, he could say:

> This is the best lesson California has ever given the country. We show the country that our police know how to deal with bank robbers.

Readers will see at once the political advantages of the method. And in no place, we are sure, will it be better understood than in the regions of Maryland on the other side of the Choptank river.

Scottsboro Protest Actions On Increase Throughout Whole Country

Form Anti-Lynching Committee in St. Louis

NEW YORK.—A call for the loan of trucks and automobiles to help bring Harlem workers to Saturday's Scottsboro protest demonstration in Union Sq. was issued yesterday by the district office of the International Labor Defense, 87[illegible] Broadway, phone Gramercy 7[illegible]9219. Members of the I.L.D. and sympathetic workers were also urged to report to help in the distribution of leaflets for the demonstration.

NEW YORK.—The Young Communist League of Harlem is holding a Scottsboro protest meeting this afternoon at the I.W.O. Hall, 415 Lenox Ave., as part of the city-wide drive to mobilize the workers of New York for a tremendous protest demonstration this Saturday in Union Sq. against the infamous Decatur lynch verdict and the release of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys.

In the Bronx, the Ronald Edwards Branch of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights is holding a protest meeting this Wednesday night at their headquarters, 3958 Bronxwood Ave.

In Mineola, L. I., the local International Labor Defense branch will hold a meeting this Friday evening at 80 Main St., Mineola, L. I.

Yesterday 600 workers in the Hotel Commodore pledged their support to Saturday's giant demonstration and unanimously adopted the following protest resolution to be sent to Judge Callahan, presiding at the Decatur lynch trials:

"In the name of 600 workers, Hotel Commodore, New York, we protest lynch sentence of death for Haywood Patterson. Scottsboro boys are innocent. We demand immediate, unconditional release of all Scottsboro boys and protection for them, counsel, and defense witnesses. Hold you responsible for any attempt at legal or other lynching."

Needle trades workers also held a militant protest demonstration on 36th St., and pledged full support to Saturday's demonstration.

St. Louis Demonstration Dec. 16

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 5.—A Missouri Committee Against Lynching was organized here Saturday with delegates from many organizations, including the local National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the local Socialist Party, Urban League and a number of ministers, newspaper men and other prominent citizens.

The committee adopted plans for a mammoth protest parade for Dec. 6 against the lynching of Lloyd Warner in St. Joseph, the rising wave of lynchings and the Decatur lynch verdict.

After the parade a mass meeting will be held, at which will be presented a resolution and petition to Gov. Park of Missouri demanding real investigation of the lynching and the indictment of the mob leaders. White and Negro citizens of St. Louis, enraged at the lynching in St. Joseph, attribute the crime to the statement of Gov. Rolph of California, given wide publicity in the capitalist press endorsing the double lynching in his state.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 5.—Negro churches in this city have named next Sunday as Scottsboro protest day. Speakers from the League of Struggle for Negro Rights and the International Labor Defense will address the church organizations. Many protest meetings are being held throughout the city.

TOLEDO, Dec. 5.—A Scottsboro protest demonstration will be held here this Thursday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock in the County Courthouse Park. An open letter was issued today by the International Labor Defense to all churches in the city urging their paraticipation. A special appeal was also made to the 10,000 workers on the C. W. A. jobs to participate. Speakers will include William L. Patterson, National Secretary of the I. L. D.: Eugene Stoll, Section Organizer of the Communist Party, and James Wilson, local Negro leader of the unemployed.

HARTFORD, Conn., Dec. 5.—Two outdoor anti-lynching meetings held here last night were attended by large numbers of Negro workers, despite the attacks by local preachers on the anti-lynching movement.

Chicago Conference Thursday

CHICAGO, Dec. 5.—Many organizations are responding to the call for a Scottsboro anti-lynching conference Thursday at 5 o'clock at the Lincoln Center, 700 E. Oakwood Blvd. The conference will help prepare a giant protest parade and demonstration this Saturday, which will begin at 43rd and Indiana Ave., on the South Side, and will wind up with an indoor meeting. The Communist Party has issued 50,000 leaflets in support of this action.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 5.—The Hayford-Jackson Branch of the I. L. D. organized a Scottsboro defense group last Tuesday, with 14 Negro and white workers. Similar groups are being organized throughout the city.

SCOTTSBORO NEGRO IS CONVICTED AGAIN

LEAVES COURT UNDER GUARD

Prisoners Sent to Death Cells Despite Own Pleas to Remain in County Jail.

New York

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, [illegible] Dec. 6.—Another trial in the Scottsboro case ended today with a conviction and a sentence of death after prolonged deliberation by the jury had aroused defense hopes of a disagreement. Thus another chapter of the South's cause celebre came to a close, with the next one to be written in the Supreme Court of Alabama.

Clarence Norris, one of the nine Negroes accused of attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on a Southern Railway freight train nearly three years ago, was the one found guilty this morning. A few minutes after the verdict was rendered against him Norris and Heywood Patterson, convicted last Friday, received the formal sentence of death from Judge W. W. Callahan with broad grins after protesting that they were innocent of any crime.

The jury in the second and last of the cases to be tried now had been out forty-one hours and three minutes. It had spent exactly fourteen hours in the jury room. According to report, the point of disagreement was the same as in all the other cases—whether the defendant, who was adjudged guilty at once, should be electrocuted or imprisoned.

Leibowitz Alarmed.

Trouble was in the air of the court room this morning. Only a handful of spectators was present, but the deputy sheriffs were jumpy and nervous. Even after the sentence was imposed, Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, the only one of the defense attorneys present when the verdict was returned, asked and received the court's permission to leave before any of the spectators. He had been warned, he said afterward, that several men in the court room were waiting with loaded guns for him to leave the building.

Arch Daley, former New York State trooper, and Harold Fox of the New York homicide squad, escorted Mr. Leibowitz from the court room, their 250 pounds almost hiding him from view. Under their arms they clutched brief cases in which were loaded guns. Three special Alabama deputies were ordered to accompany Mr. Leibowitz, other defense attorneys and New York newspaper men past the Alabama State line to Chattanooga, Tenn., because of fear that there might be trouble at Paint Rock, Scottsboro or Huntsville, through which their train passed.

Prisoners Are Confident.

Aside from the reiteration of their innocence, the Negroes took their sentences as a matter of course, confident that the International Labor Defense, a Communist organization, will save them from paying the extreme penalty. Their only complaint was that they were to be taken to the death cells at Kilby prison instead of the "soft" jail at Birmingham, where the other seven defendants are to be confined pending the outcome of the appeals in the two cases just tried.

Patterson, after sentence had been imposed upon him, went before the bench and pleaded that the judge reconsider his order transferring him and Norris to the State penitentiary at Montgomery. He had been mistreated there, he said, and the white guards had threatened to kill him if he returned. Judge Callahan told him he had no authority to rewrite the law and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight said he would see that the two condemned Negroes received the same treatment as any other prisoners.

Within an hour after Judge Callahan ordered that the Negroes be put to death on Feb. 2, 1934, and Mr. Leibowitz had filed notice of appeal, acting as an automatic stay of execution, the seven Negroes who have been in jail here for nearly three weeks were on their way back to the Birmingham jail to rejoin the two juveniles indicted with them. They were escorted by a dozen armed deputies riding before and behind the patrol wagon in which they were transported over the ninety-two miles of country road.

It was 11:20 when the jury rapped on the door signaling that it was ready to report. At that moment Mr. Leibowitz was preparing to ask the court to dismiss the jurors on the ground that an agreement appeared impossible and that further detention of the jurors amounted to coercion. Orders had come fifteen minutes before to send the patrol wagon back to Birmingham and the judge had told newspaper men that unless the jury reported by 9 P. M. he would lock them up for another try tomorrow.

Both Negroes Smiling.

Ten minutes after the jury knocked on the door behind which they had argued, wrangled and debated all day yesterday, Norris and Patterson were brought into court, handcuffed together. Each held his cap in his hand. Each was smiling, Patterson cynically and Norris with a trace of hope.

Patterson has been convicted and condemned to die three times. Once the United States Supreme Court saved him from death, the second time he was saved from electrocution by Judge James E. Horton, who presided at his trial here last Spring and after pronouncing a death sentence upon him, reversed the jury's verdict on the ground that it was against the weight of evidence. The uncorroborated testimony of Victoria Price, he held, was unreliable.

For Norris, it was his second trial. He was convicted and sentenced to death at Scottsboro at a trial which the United States Supreme Court held was unfair because he was inadequately represented by counsel. Unlike Patterson, he was not retried last Spring. The other seven Negroes are still waiting for the new trials, to which they are entitled according to the highest tribunal in the country.

Inside the railed enclosure before Judge Callahan's bench the two Negroes, dressed in overalls, were unshackled and they sat down together. To a newspaper man, Patterson confided that he wanted to be "married at once" to Mattie Johnson, a Decatur Mulatto, with whom he has been friendly. "I'm going to the death house," he said, "but I don't care. I want to marry her before some one else does."

Norris Would Marry, Too.

Norris said that he, too, had "a girl in Decatur" whom he wanted to marry. Her name, he said, was Sadie Westmoland. Before anything more was said Judge Callahan cut the conversation short, declaring that he did not approve of "interviews" under such conditions as this.

In the meanwhile the jury had lined up before the bench, a solemn-faced group of men with tightly drawn lips. One of their number handed the judge a slip of paper and stepped back into the line with his fellow jurors. Judge Callahan read the verdict himself:

The jurors then took their places in the jury box. One of them picked up a newspaper and began to read it as the judge started to dismiss them from further service at this term of court. Mr. Leibowitz interrupted: "I want to know whether the record shows that this jury ever was sworn." Judge Callahan looked up over his spectacles, a startled expression on his face. "Sworn," he repeated. "Why, I have a distinct recollection of ordering the clerk to swear the jury and hearing him do it."

Mr. Leibowitz then asked the court to sentence both defendants, explaining that he was starting home this afternoon. To this Judge Callahan agreed. While Norris stared like a man who has seen a ghost, Patterson stepped before the judge, his hands clasped behind him.

He gave his pedigree to a clerk. He was 21, single and his mother, Janie, lived at 910 West Nineteenth Street, Chattanooga, he said. "What is your occupation?" "I haven't any regular occupation," he said.

"Where did you work last?" prompted Mr. Leibowitz.

"The American Brake Shoe and Foundry Company," he said.

Again Denies His Guilt.

"Heywood," Judge Callahan began, "the jury has found you guilty and fixed your punishment at death. It becomes my duty to impose that sentence upon you. Have you anything to say about why the sentence should not be passed upon you."

"Yes, sir," said the defendant.

"I mean anything except to repeat what you have testified to about not being guilty of this charge."

"Yes, sir," said Patterson. "I would like for the court to know that I'm not guilty of this charge. I've been sentenced to death in the electric chair now three times on the same charge that I'm not guilty of."

"Very well, Heywood," said Judge Callahan. "That's for the jury to decide. I have nothing to do with that."

Notice of Appeal Given.

Judge Callahan then repeated the legal formula of death—a formula which specifies that "a current of electricity, of sufficient intensity to cause death," shall be passed through the body of the condemned man until he is dead. "May God have mercy on your soul," Judge Callahan concluded.

Mr. Leibowitz asked that notice of appeal be noted on the record, and when that was done, Norris was summoned before the bench. He said he was 20 years old, that he was single, and that his mother, Ida, lived in Moenia, Ga. He never had had a regular occupation, he said, but he recalled that he once had held a "construction job." Asked if he had anything to say before sentence was imposed, he answered affirmatively and said:

"I'm not guilty of this charge. The whole case has been framed up against me."

"Well," said Judge Callahan, "of course I have nothing to do with that. The jury has passed on all that."

Judge Callahan then proceeded to recite the legal formula once more but this time he did not ask the mercy of God upon the soul of the defendant.

A moment later the two prisoners shackled together again, were being escorted from the court room by the deputies. Upon their heads they wore caps, tilted at a jaunty angle. Upon their faces were smiles that were really sneers. Joseph R. Brodsky, one of the Communist lawyers in the case, received the news of what had happened from Mr. Leibowitz. G. W. Chamblee, of Chattanooga, was at home defending a client of his own.

Two hours after the court proceedings ended Mr. Leibowitz and the other defense attorneys were at the railroad station, surrounded by their bodyguards and a handful of curious bystanders. As the train pulled out they were singing "Take Me Back to New York Town."

COLOR LINE DISAVOWED

But Calahan Cites New York Law in Barring Evidence About Woman Accuser.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 4.—The second of the Scottsboro cases went to the jury tonight after a dramatic scene in which Judge W. W. Callahan, at the insistence of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, amended and emended the charge he had just delivered.

Informed that the general exception entered to Judge Callahan's charge to the jury which convicted Heywood Patterson would be valueless on appeal under Alabama law, Mr. Leibowitz entered thirteen specific exceptions to the charge delivered in the trial of Clarence Norris.

It was 6:17 P. M. when the long session ended, and, at the request of the jurors, consideration of the evidence on which Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. asked the death penalty for the Negro defendant accused of attacking Victoria Price was deferred until tomorrow morning.

At that time also, the sentence of death which the jury's verdict against Patterson makes mandatory upon the trial judge will be pronounced, and the trials of the five other Negroes now in the jail here will be postponed until another term of court. Both sides are understood to feel that further trials pending appeals would be a needless expense.

Judge Disavows Color Line.

Judge Callahan's charge to the jury today differed in only one important respect from the one which he gave to the Patterson jury on Thursday. This afternoon he failed to tell the twelve white jurors that where a white woman charges she has been ravished by a Negro "the presumption is great" that she did not yield willingly. Instead he said:

"The law forbids rape, and the law is made for all and intended to protect all, and it will protect all womankind, regardless of their standing in society or their past acts or station in life or their race or color. And I'm not raising the color line either; I'm telling you the law."

As he said this Judge Callahan peered over his spectacles at the representatives of Northern newspapers.

He proceeded to explain to the jury the forms of the verdict they might return—guilty with a sentence of death or guilty with a term in prison of not less than ten years. He paused a moment and added:

"Gentlemen, that is about all on the law."

Mr. Leibowitz arose from his chair and it seemed for a moment that Judge Callahan again was going to forget to instruct the jury on the form of their verdict if they should decide to acquit.

But Judge Callahan explained that he had merely finished giving "the State's side of it" and that if the jurors were not convinced of the Negro's guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt" they should write the following words on a piece of paper and sign it:

It was after this that Mr. Leibowitz announced that he intended to offer several specific exceptions to the charge. Judge Callahan, who earlier in the day had sent the jury out while he reprimanded the New York attorney for what he termed disrespectful conduct, left the bench and sat in the witness chair.

Then began in the almost empty courtroom a battle of wits which lasted nearly half an hour with Mr. Leibowitz pressing the judge almost as though he were a hostile witness. Some of the lawyer's demands the court granted. Others he declined to grant and some he granted in such manner that Mr. Leibowitz took exceptions.

The first four of the defense attorney's exceptions were directed to that part of the charge in which Judge Callahan had told the jury that the past conduct and character of the complaining witness, in this case Victoria Price, was immaterial and irrelevant when "consent was not the defense."

"What I said was that it was wholly out of place in establishing or tending to establish her consent," the judge declared. "Of course her conduct may shed light on what credence is to be given to her testimony."

Mr. Leibowitz then asked the judge to qualify his statement that the mere presence of the defendant while the alleged crime was being committed made him as guilty as though he had been a participant.

Judge Callahan said he had not "said it just that way," and explained that the presence of the defendant must have added to the assurance of the person who committed the crime and contributed to the fear of the women.

Accuser "An Interested Witness."

Judge Callahan, who had charged the jury that the defendant, who in this trial did not take the stand was "an interested party," then was asked to inform the jury that the status of Victoria Price was also that of an interested witness.

"That's not the way to make that request," replied the judge. "It's not a legal request, but I will say regardless of the way in which you tried to get it done, that the fact that she is the prosecutrix does make her an interested witness."

Mr. Leibowitz then asked Judge Callahan to revise his charge and instruct the jurors that in the case of a witness, who has been shown to have testified falsely about any material fact, the jury may disregard all his testimony.

"I decline to do that in the manner in which it is put," replied the judge, who had instructed the jury that they might decide for themselves which parts of a witness's testimony they would believe and which they would cast aside.

"Exception!" snapped Mr. Leibowitz.

As to "Reasonable Doubt."

"I now ask you to explain to the jury the meaning of reasonable doubt," said Mr. Leibowitz to the white-haired jurist, whose cheeks were flushed. "It may be that you stated the meaning of the words negatively, but I would like to have you charge the jury specifically on the meaning of reasonable doubt."

"It's like the pronoun 'it.' We all know what it means, but its hard to explain," said Judge Callahan. "It means more than mere doubt. It means a reasonable doubt. If the law meant just doubt there wouldnt be any sense in that extra word. It is doubt for which you can find a reason in the evidence."

Mr. Leibowitz proceeded to his next exception:

"I now ask your honor to charge this jury that if any among them have a reasonable doubt after a consideration of the evidence, it is his duty under the law to stand his ground until and unless that doubt can be removed by logical reasonable argument based on evidence."

"The law doesn't require me to do it," the judge said. "However, there can't be a verdict unless all twelve agree. Each man has a right to his own honest convictions."

Judge Callahan went on to say that he did not mean that any juror should enter the jury room with 'any pride of opinion" or that he should refuse "to listen to his fellow-jurors," because the law expected them to "reason together."

Urged by Mr. Leibowitz to direct the jury that they were "under no legal duty to agree" if the honest opinion of even one man was arrayed against the other eleven, the judge responded: "I think I have already done that." Mr. Leibowitz noted another exception.

In his charge Judge Callahan reminded the jurors that the case was not a suit between Victoria Price and Clarence Norris but an action between the State of Alabama and a defendant charged with a crime "against the peace and dignity" of the Commonwealth.

Asserting that, as the defense had raised no claim of "consent" by the prosecuting witness, the issue of her reputation could not be brought up, the Judge said:

"The rule is that prior unchastity is inadmissible as a defense. The question of chastity or unchastity is a wholly immaterial issue in the case.

"That, gentlemen, is the law of Alabama. It is also the law of Cnnecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio, Vermont and New York."

As he pronounced the name of the Empire State, from which come all the lawyers associated with the defense, except G. W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, Tenn., Judge Callahan allowed his voice to rise and he cast a challenging look at Mr. Leibowitz.

Regardless of his race or color, or condition in life, Judge Callahan said, the defendant was entitled to a fair trial.

Bates Deposition Admitted.

Mr. Leibowitz made the closing argument for the defense after Wade Wright, the Circuit Solicitor, and Attorney General Knight had demanded the death penalty for Norris. The summations began after Lester Carter, a white hobo who was thrown off the train before the alleged attack took place, had testified and after the deposition of Ruby Bates had been read to the jury.

The Bates girl's assertion that the Negroes did not molest her or the twice-married Price woman was allowed to go into the record along with her admission that at the first trial in Scottsboro she had testified they had.

All details of what went on in the hobo jungle in Chattanooga, where the defense contends the two girls spent the night with Orville Gilley, a State witness, and Carter, were bared.

In his charge Judge Callahan said that the deposition of Miss Bates, taken in a New York hospital, must be given the same weight as though she had appeared in court as she did last Spring at Patterson's second trial.

Mr. Wright, opening the argument for the prosecution, urged the jury to "have in mind that this crime could have happened to any woman ,even though she were riding in a parlor car instead of a box car."

Declaring that the only way to "stop such crimes," was to inflict sufficient punishment, he asserted that the law had not yet made hoboing on freight trains a defense against a charge of criminal attack.

Plea of Mr. Leibowitz.

Mr. Leibowitz spent about an hour trying to convince the jury that his client should be acquitted on the evidence, citing the points on which Mrs. Price had been trapped in untruths and in variances from the testimony of other State witnesses.

He spent most of his time, however, trying to overcome the bitter local prejudice against him and the International Labor Defense, / a Communist organization, which brought him, a Democrat, into the case.

It was his duty under the law, he pointed out, to fight every witness the State produced against his client, to raise every point of law every technicality he could find for the benefit of his client.

He sometimes wondered, he said, why the whole country should be aroused over "a contemptible frame-up by two bums," and he declared that was all that was left of the State's case with the "blah-blah," the "hurrahs for Jackson County and Morgan County," eliminated.

"Aren't we all American citizens?" he asked.

Referring to the occupants of the press seats, Mr. Leibowitz told the jurors that the "eyes of the world" were upon them. Then he concluded:

New York

"If you have a reasonable doubt, hold out. Stand your ground, show you are a man, a red-blooded he-man—a Southern gentleman, ready to do justice even to this lowly, insignficant worm of a Negro boy If the State had showed his guilt I'd be the first to say hang him. But the State has failed to do this. Its case smells to heaven. We've had enough of this expense, enough opprobrium upon this State of Alabama. Let's end it now."

The high point of the morning came while Mr. Leibowitz was examining Golley, a tramp minstrel who testified at this trial and at Patterson's third trial, that he had seen the Negroes do all the things Mrs. Price said they had done. Gilley was inclined to spar with the New York attorney, and at one point Mr. Leibowitz asked:

"What are you trying to do—get smart with me?"

Judge Callahan directed the bailiffs to escort the jury from the courtroom. Then he said:

"Gentlemen, I am doing all in my power to see that the State of Alabama and this defendant get a fair trial under our laws and on the evidence in this case and I will continue to do so if I can get the proper assistance from counsel for both sides.

"I have tried to be respectful to everybody in this trial. Time after time the attorney for the defense has made improper statements to see if I could not be nagged into saying something that's improper. So far I have not done so, and I am not going to do so."

Emergency Conference Issues Ringing Call For Fight on Lynching

Calls Nation-Wide Demonstrations for Next Saturday; All Organizations Urged to Adopt Similar Resolutions

NEW YORK.—The Emergency Scottsboro anti-lynching conference held in Harlem last Sunday afternoon unanimously [illegible] a resolution against the [illegible] lynch verdict and [illegible] furious [illegible] of lynchings [illegible] raging throughout the country. The Conference called on all organizations to adopt similar resolutions to be sent to President Roosevelt, Gov. Miller of Alabama, and Judge Callahan at Decatur, Ala.

The resolution carries a ringing call to the Negro and white toilers of the country for immediate nation-wide protest actions to save the Scottsboro boys and beat back the rising wave of fascist lynch terror. It sets Saturday, Dec. 9, as a National Day of Struggle against Lynching and for the Scottsboro boys, and calls on the workers to pour into the streets in mighty protest demonstrations in every city and town of the United States. In New York, the main demonstration will be held in Union Square. The resolution follows:

This emergency conference, composed of 185 delegates, representing 58 organizations of Negro and white, notes with alarm and intense indignation the wave of lynch and fascist terror spreading over the country.

For the third time, the lynch lords of Alabama have flungs their challenge of brutal terror into the faces of the Negro people and the whole of America's laboring population.

Decatur Verdict a Declaration of War

The death verdict against Heywood Patterson, innocent Negro youth, is a grim declaration of war by the white masters of the South against the nation of 13,000,000 Negro people held in bondage, and sweated under conditions of slavery.

This death verdict is a manifesto, an open declaration that the Negro people shall not dare to aspire to the status of a free people, shall not dare to question the superiority of the masters, shall not dare to win for itself even the right to sit upon a jury.

The white ruling class of the South has not been unaided in its attempts to maintain its dominant position.

Lynch Terror Rising All Over Country

Its death verdict against Patterson comes naturally upon the scene of a national wave of lynchings spurred and stimulated by the official pronouncements of governmental spokesmen, who condone, who sanction, who organize and direct lynch mobs against the Negro and against his white brother in struggle.

St. Joseph, Maryland, Decatur, San Jose: The thread of deliberate ruling class policy runs through them all, links them up, converts them into a crystallized program of ruthless, fascist terror against the white and Negro toiling masses, that they might take heed, and not resist the onslaughts of those who live by their sweat and blood.

But the sweated and tortured people of America, white and Negro together, will resist, will organize and will unite to fight back this wave of fascist terrorism.

The fight against lynch teror is also the fight against fascism in Germany and elsewhere.

Only Mass Action Can Save Boys

Immediate, organized, united mass action is the need of the hour. There is no other weapon at the disposal of the toiling masses. It must be strengthened and used with full force.

United mass action has stayed the hand of the Scottsboro lynchers for over two years. Many times they have placed the innocent boys in the shadow of the noose and as many times we have saved them through swift and effective action. We must act more swiftly and more effectively today than eevr before.

We, who have come together in this time of emergency, address ourselves to the oppressed of the whole nation:

Free the nine innocent Scottsboro boys!

Send telegrams and resolutions to Gov. Miller of Alabama and President Roosevelt demanding the immediate and safe release of the innocent Scottsboro boys!

Fight against rising fascist lynch terror!

Jim-Crowism breeds lynchings!

Organize mass violation of Jim-Crow laws and practices everywhere!

Call mass protest meetings immediately, organize street parades, marches in protest against lynch and fascist terror! Circulate petitions for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and the enforcement of the constitutional rights of the Negro people and white toilers and all oppressed masses!

Into the Streets Next Saturday!

For a common fighting front of all oppressed, Negro and white, against the reign of fascist lynch terror and starvation!

Make December 9th a nation-wide day of struggle and resistance against lynching and growing fascism!

All out on December 9 into the streets! Organize in united mass protest! Organizations, unions, churches, lodges, fraternal societies, anti-fascist organizations, mobilize your membership for action! Women and youth organizations, carry through protest actions, strikes in the neighborhoods, schools, colleges, against lynch terror!

Demand:

Impeachment of Governor Rolph, Governor Ritchie!

Death penalty for the lynchers!

Free Tom Mooney and all political prisoners!

Defend the victims of Hitler terror!

Smash the Scottsboro frame-up and lynch verdict!

Scottsboro-Decatur

AFTER deliberating for 24 hours the jury that heard the evidence in the third trial of HEYWARD PATTERSON in the now famous Scottsboro Boys case, transferred to Decatur, in Alabama, returned a verdict of guilty and recommended the death penalty. Press reports said the jury appeared tired, haggard, solemn. Our humble lay-judgment and strong conviction is that the jury had a terrible attack of stricken conscience. Judge CALLAHAN had confused matters by overruling all the decisions of Judge HORTON; by refusing to delay the trial a day to receive the deposition of RUBY BATES, ill in a New York hospital, who swore at the first trial that she had been attacked and at the second trial that neither she nor VICTORIA PRICE had been attacked; by refusing to allow any testimony that tended to establish the character of VICTORIA PRICE as a lewd woman of the underworld. The jury had heard DR. BRIDGES, white, of Scottsboro, testify that he had examined both the women two hours after the alleged mass attack and found their pulse and respiration normal, and that they bore no bruises on their bodies. Naturally it was difficult for this jury to comprehend how nine men could criminally assault two women without a Southern physician being able to find any physical evidences of the assault two hours afterwards.

But this had happened: These boys had ridden in the same freight car with white boys, and possibly white girls, all hoboes. The inviolable law of racial separation had been flaunted. There had been a fracas between the white and black boys, and the latter had come out ahead. In Alabama, before a rural jury with the State's attorney general and two county solicitors bellowing racial fear and hatred, what had happened was sufficient to send nine boys to their death at the hands of the State. So the jury rendered a verdict accordingly.

4,000 Cheer Call for Fight on Lynchers at Harlem Meeting

Adopt Resolution Denouncing Decatur Verdict

NEW YORK—For the third time in two days, thousands of [illegible] and white workers [illegible] in a Scottsboro [illegible] demonstration in Harlem hurled back their answer to the Decatur lynch verdict against Heywood Patterson, held last Sunday night, over 4,000 anti-lynching fighters packed the huge Rockland Palace, 155th St. and 8th Ave.

A few hours before, there had been an overflow meeting in front of the I.W.O. Hall, 415 Lenox Ave., in support of an Emergency Scottsboro anti-lynching conference in which, despite the brief notice, 149 delegates representing 46 organizations took part.

Sunday's meeting was militant. The assembled workers responded with thunderous applause as Richard B. Moore, General Secretary of the League for Negro Rights, raised the demands of the recent Baltimore anti-lynching conference.

Moore Calls For Militant Struggle

"We are seeing the rise of fascism in the United States," Moore declared. "The Negro people must rise to the occasion. With correct leadership they will answer the brutal challenge of the lynch lords". And they will not have to fight alone. The white toilers will fight by their side.

Jack Stachel, Assistant National Secretary of the Trade Union Unity League, pledged the support of the revolutionary unions and the opposition groups in the A. F. of L. in mobilizing the workers for the Scottsboro mass defense. The white workers, he declared, must be as much concerned as any Negro worker over the Decatur verdict. The T.U.U.L. looks on the question not only as a challenge to the Negro masses but to the whole working class. He drew a parallel with the rise of Hitlerism in Germany, pointing out how the ruling class and the Social Democratic leaders paved the way for fascism. Lynch terror will be used not only against the Negroes, but against the white workers. Already, under the N.R.A. the attack has been begun to destroy the revolutionary unions, to deny the worker the right to organize and strike against wage cuts.

Alabama Cropper Tells of Struggles

John Moore, Tallapoosa cropper leader, told of the heroic fight of Alabama croppers to organize against starvation and the bloody terror of the landlords and their police.

Mrs. Williams, of the Universal Negro Improvement Association pointed out that Negroes were trapped into the World War under the deceptive slogan of a fight for democracy, but got Jim Crowism and lynching on their return from the battlefields. She praised the International Labor Defense for its fight for the Scottsboro boys, and pledged full support to the nation-wide fight against lynching.

SCOTTSBORO JURY FAILS TO AGREE; AGAIN LOCKED UP

Returns to Court Today and Notifies Judge No Decision Has Been Reached.

By BEN COTHRAN

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Decatur, Ala., Dec. 1.—Alabama justice today was to record its third verdict in the celebrated Scottsoro case. A jury that yesterday deliberated the fate of Heywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes charged with assaulting ~~two white~~ women near Scottsboro, and was locked up for the nght without agreement, failed to bring in its verdict when court convened today.

The jury plunged into further deliberations at 8:30 A. M.

An Appeal Certain

A new verdict of guilty will mean another appeal to the United States Supreme Court which reversed the verdict of the Scottsboro jury that found six of the negroes guilty and prescribed the death penalty. Patterson was found guilty at a second trial, but the verdist was thrown out by the then presiding judge.

Judge William W. Callahan in charging the jury yesterday failed to tell the jury how it could bring in a verdict of not guilty until the omission was called to his attention by defense attorneys. He said Patterson could be found guilty and given death or found guilty and given a prison term.

Leibowitz Overruled

Samuel Leibowitz, chief defense attorney, took numerous exceptions, particularly to the closing argument of Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, jr. He protest Knight's language, saying it was an appeal to passion and prejudice. Knight acknowledged that it was and Leibowitz asked for a mistrial. He was overruled.

Callahan, in explaining the rules by which the cerdibility of witnesses could be impeached, glowered at Leibowitz, who had hought to show the past of Mrs. Victoria Price, one of the women alleged to have been assaulted.

Ruby Bates, the other, repudiated at Patterson's second trial the story she told at the first. The law, Callahan said, protected all "womankind."

Twelve names were added today to the venire from which attorneys were attempting to select another jury for the new trial of Clarence Morris, one of the negroes convicted with Patterson at the first trial.

The Patterson Verdict

Planet

12-9-33

Richmond Va

The lynch verdict rendered against Heywood Patterson at Decatur, Ala., last Friday occasions no surprise. It was plainly apparent from the beginning of the mock trial that a verdict dictated by racial hate and prejudice rather than by common justice would be returned.

What other verdict could be expected from such a set-up? A judge notoriously and openly hostile to the defense, a prosecution which balked neither at forgery nor perjury to accomplish its ends, and jurymen whose minds were made up when they entered the jury box and who were doubtless instructed to take deliberation for ten (10) hours and 33 minutes in order to give this premeditated and infamous lynch verdict a measure of respectability.

The lynch barons of heathen Alabama are determined to preserve their system of persecution, oppression and frightfulness at any cost and are coldly indifferent to the opinions of the civilized world. The whole affair is nauseating to decent people.

When this is read it is almost a certainty that another one of the Scottsboro defendants will have been railroaded to the electric chair and so on down the line as this farce continues until seven human beings have been condemned to death upon a character of evidence which would not convict a white man of an alleged traffic violation.

What difference does the massacre of seven Negroes make if it is necessary to maintain the prestige and infallability of white supremacy in the South?

The truth might as well be told. It is next to impossible for Negroes to get justice in the vast majority of Southern courts when any kind of white person is arrayed on the other side.

FAIR TRIAL IMPOSSIBLE

Argus

12-8-33

St. Louis Mo

The conviction of Heywood Patterson by a Morgan County jury will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court. Samuel Leibowitz, chief counsel employed by the International Labor Defense, who will affect the appeal, will set forth many reasons why Patterson did not receive a fair and unprejudiced trial. But we think all that will be necessary is for the eminent attorney to merely make the statement before the members of the United States Supreme Court to the effect that it was impossible for his client to have and enjoy a fair trial, as contemplated by the Constitution of the United States, in an atmosphere like that which surrounded the Morgan County court house with Judge Callahan presiding and no Negroes on the jury.

Get a picture, if you please, of the courtroom. Judge Callahan had been selected to preside because of his known prejudice against people of color. Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., was still ranting like a hyena under the lashing he received at the hand of Attorney Leibowitz in the former trial which made him more determined to avenge himself on the defendants. Every juror had read of and was familiar with the case. The determination to "hang the Negroes" was written on their foreheads when they filed into the jury box. These boys were made an "example" of outside interference with the so-called Alabama justice, not justice but vengence! Characterize every ruling of Judge Callahan. The part he played throughout the trial was not that of a referee but that of one who was determined to punish someone. Most assuredly this, in itself, shows that he was unqualified to sit in this case. Just think of how he rushed the cases. He assumed the attitude of a slave driver, everything being done in the crack-o'-the-whip style. Oh, well, the cases before him were inconsequential so far as he was concerned. The mere fact that these boys were on trial for their lives had no more effect upon this learned jurist than a peace disturbance charge down in "Happy Hollow." Every effort on the part of the attorney for the defense to call the court's attention to the seriousness of the case before him reminded one of the story of "pouring water on a duck's back."

The whole show indicated, from start to finish, that the judge, the prosecutor and the jurors knew that these boys had been "framed." But, for all that, they must die as an expression of resentment on the part of the people of Alabama against what they call "outside interference."

With these facts before the United States Supreme Court, we believe that the boys will be freed.

CURTAILING SCOTTSBORO TRIALS MOVE IN DIRECTION OF DIGNITY

As great a mess as the Scottsboro case turned out to be, Judge W. W. Callahan, before whom two of the original defendants will again be put on trial this week, has made a good start toward sanity by announcing that he will speed up the cases so that a verdict of the jury may be had in each instance within three days.

Such a ruling naturally was distasteful to Samuel S. Leibowitz, the professional defender for a society organized to rush to the assistance of Communists, Radicals, negroes and all in general whose indictment for crime may be twisted into the charge of "persecution." The New York attorney received priceless publicity for his early championship of the Scottsboro negroes, and since the Supreme Court of the United States reversed Alabama justice has been "as big as Old Grant" in the estimation of all Reds, pinks and lighter shades, to say nothing of becoming the hero of the High Yallers of Harlem. Reception of such a check as a shortened trial on the eve of staging a second show was naturally about the greatest disappointment that could have happened to a lawyer of the attitudinizing type.

No half-way equitable mind justified the manner in which these helpless negroes were railroaded to the point of execution in the first instance. The evidence against them was of the flimsiest character and was given by members of a profession to which perjury is as instinctive as drawing a breath or "rolling a drunk." There is scarcely a doubt that they were convicted and put in dire peril of execution by the force of the lynch spirit and the jealous prejudice the low order of whites holds against the negro.

The high court of the country prevented murder in the name of law when it took the unusual course of reversing the solemn conclusions and decisions of a State's courts, and for helping on this rescue of justice Leibowitz deserved applause. That success, however, in no way entitles him to the right to be stage director of another long-drawn-out criminal court melodrama. In each case, he must manage to speed up his defense and condense his oratory—something to cause him tears, but to work relief to a public tired with and ashamed of the whole Scottsboro matter.

Suggesting that while North Carolina has not had anything like a Tom Heflin for many years, there is lacking to our courts the power reasonably to restrict the time consumed in trials of capital cases. Where the sensation has been great enough to bring forward a battery of attorneys, these trials go along to lengths that seem endless, in the manner of a Chinese play that takes a week for presentation. And the judge with us is helpless, because of a lack of power to limit the duration of the argument. Rising to such opportunity, Tar Heel attorneys who would faint under the necessity of a modicum of physical exercise with an axe or on the hoof reach heights of enduance by orating for many hours at a stretch, and drinking gallons of ice water during the exercise.

In the next few months the State must suffer a half a dozen trials of ladies who have eradicated husbands who carried no last suggestion of the aura of romance. Everybody knows in advance what the verdicts will be. But it is conservative to estimate that before these familiar old dramas come to the final curtain, lawyers for the defense will spill, spout sigh, cry and coruscate to the extent of many million useless but costly words.

In this one respect of judicial control of a trial even Alabama is able to look at North Carolina practice with a nose in the air in scorn.

SCOTTSBORO AGAIN.

The tragic farce of Scottsboro begins again. Attorneys already guilty of villifying the state in which the trial of the accused negroes is being held, guilty of asserting before the court, confidence in the fairness of the court and jury and people, while filling the Northern newspapers with vitriolic denunciation of every one concerned, are now in the act of spectacularly appealing to the President to send troops to prevent their massacre. They are not present to serve the ignorant blacks, but to use their tragedy as a picture of atrocity to stir up other negroes, and people generally, against the American social system, to head them toward that acclaimed Utopia of mercy and goodness, communism.

Already thousands of people over the country, people who have never heard one-tenth of the evidence in the case, are talking of a miscarriage of justice, and will so talk regardless of what evidence is produced. Just as they talked in the Sacco-Vanzetti and the Mooney cases. Persons who never read a line of testimony in either case, who never read a review of it except as it was put out by paid partisans of the accused men, are today intensely convinced that they know that cruel injustice has been done, that American honor has been sullied.

This is not to say that the Scottsboro negroes are guilty, or that Mooney or Sacco and Vanzetti were guilty, but it is to protest against the rendering of public verdicts on the basis of ex parte propaganda circulated by the paid agents of social revolution.

In Decatur

For the third time, the accused Negro of the Scottsboro case has been convicted of the crime laid to his account, with the scene in the Decatur court room when the jury's decision was read one of tense and dramatic suggestion, yet wholly quiet and restrained.

In a nearby column to The Journal's story of the new chapter thus brought to a close in this famous case, is an account of the sentencing of Waxey Gordon, New Jersey beer baron, as we say, to ten years in prison and fines amounting to $80,000, with his wife standing near him with streaming eyes in the dingy, old-fashioned Federal court room and the Judge stating his opinion that the evidence showed Gordon to have been a gang leader of the worst kind for a number of years, with every proof that nothing except actual imprisonment would ever wean him away from the criminal courts.

In another column, a story of Lonnie Taylor's brother, and his opinion as to this outlaw's lack of mental balance, is given as a sort of foot note to the recently published accounts of the brief and decisive trial which sent Taylor back to the penitentiary at Nashville to serve out his original sentence together with the added years his recent outbreak had brought.

These three stories grouped closely, as they were, together, and bearing much of question and inference right now of great moment to the public mind, all are witnesses in proof of the sense of good citizenship and swift justice for which the true spirit of America stands.

In Decatur, where the case is taken by the entire country as a test case of its kind, the tension was great, but the trial passed without outward disturbance as if in testimony that the country has had enough of citizen savagery and will hesitate before again joining the ranks of lawless justice.

Judge Callahan gave the defense lawyers all the rope they needed but held them to the line of duty in representing the negro Patterson, one of seven Scottsboro negroes. He allowed no foolishness, no beating about the bush but made the state and defense lawyers hew to the legal line and as a result it only required about half the time to try the first negro that was used in the previous trial of the same negro. He was not playing to the gallery, he was trying a man for a crime that is punishable in this country by death. Callahan is a great trial judge and a great lawyer and a fine citizen. Leibowitz found a great judge before whom he wilted in his buldozing methods. The jury gave Patterson the death sentence.

PROTEST STRIKE AGAINST DECATUR VERDICT CALLED BY PHILA. DYERS UNION

Protest Parade in Pittsburgh This Saturday

Anti-Lynching Meets In Canton, Other Cities

New York

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 11.—A half hour protest strike against the Decatur lynch verdicts was voted by a meeting of 500 dyers, members of several A. F. of L. locals, at the Garrick Hall, 507 South 8th Street, last night.

The strike is set for tomorrow (Tuesday) and will take place between 1:30 and 2 o'clock. The strike vote is the first of its kind in the history of the long Scottsboro struggle and is a gauge of the furious indignation aroused among the workers, black and white, by the farcical Decatur trials and new lynch verdicts against Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris.

The strike call was sent to 2,000 members of the Dyers' and Cleaners' Union, by the Executive Committee after William L. Patterson, National Secretary of the International Labor Defense, had stressed the need for unity of white and Negro workers in militant action for the release of the Scottsboro boys, Tom Mooney and other class war prisoners.

Scottsboro protest meetings will be held in all the shops controlled by the union, for the adoption of resolutions to be sent to President Roosevelt and Governor Miller of Alabama demanding the release of the Scottsboro boys. The union will also send a letter to other A. F. of L. unions, urging their support for the struggle.

Preparations are being completed for a one-day strike in two schools. Two hundred pupils attended a meeting last night and unanimously endorsed the proposal.

The strike action by the union was made possible by the sharp turn of the Philadelphia I. L. D. to the shops, defending the workers in their day-to-day struggles.

Patterson, speaking here today, declared the strike action creates the basis for broadening out and intensifying the struggle for the Scottsboro boys and the oppressed Negro people and sets the example for the entire I. L. D. of the tremendous possibilities in this period for raising the struggle for class-war prisoners to a new level.

The New York District of the International Labor Defense issued an urgent appeal yesterday to all Tag Day collectors to immediately return the boxes and lists to the district office, 870 Broadway. Receipts for collections will be issued and the organizations issuing the boxes credited.

Bronx workers should return their boxes and lists to 699 Prospect Avenue, which will be open from 8 to 10 every night during the week.

Detroit Conference Supports Call for Demonstration Wednesday

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 11.—The emergency Scottsboro Anti-Lynching conference at Ferry Hall last night was attended by 100 delegates, who planned protest actions against the legal murder of the Scottsboro boys and the threatened execution of the four heroic Communist defendants in the monstrous Nazi Reichstag arson trial.

The conference supported the call for a huge demonstration this Wednesday at 3 o'clock in the Grand Circus Park. Thousands of leaflets are being distributed, and open air protest meetings held in all working class neighborhoods today. The demonstration will be held under the joint auspices of the Detroit League Against War and Fascism, the International Labor Defense, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights and the Communist Party.

Tomorrow, workers will picket the German Consulate in this city, while many organizations will send committees to the Consulate with demands for the release of Dimitroff, Torgler, Popoff and Taneff and the thousands of German revolutionaries held in the concentration camps.

Last Wednesday night 400 workers attended a protest meeting in the Mt. Olive Baptist Church, Brush and Willis.

Scottsboro Again.

Heywood Patterson, one of the seven Scottsboro defendants, has been convicted again by an Alabama jury and sentenced again to death.

And the verdict, based on contradicted and conflicting evidence, is hardly satisfying. There seems to the unprejudiced bystander many reasonable doubts of the defendants' guilt. But the case apparently isn't being tried on its merits and never has been since outsiders first intervened to make it a cause celebre. For always, the rule is, there must be victims in these causes celebres, sacrificed to make a protestors' holiday. Alabama juries, like judges in Massachusetts, tend to think that they are called upon to defend the state from outside attack by doing simply the opposite of what the outsiders suggest.

What complicates the case, and other cases like it, is that the defendants lose either way. Except for the ntervention of outsiders the Scottsboro negroes would have been executed as a result of the first trial, long since now declared an unfair trial by the surpreme court.

Scottsboro Boy Declared 'Guilty' by Lynch Jury; Only Mass Protests Can Halt Electrocution

12-2-33

(Special Correspondent of the Daily Worker)

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 1.—After "deliberating" for 20 hours and 33 minutes, the all-white jury trying Heywood Patterson, brought in a verdict of guilty, with the recommendation that the innocent Negro boy be put to death in the electric chair.

Judge Callahan, whose charge to the jury was a clear order to convict, deferred passing sentence until a date to be fixed later.

The jury reported about 5 p. m. (central time) that it was ready to give a verdict, and Patterson was ordered brought into the courtroom from the flimsy Morgan county jail nearby.

The Negro boy, handcuffed, was brought into the courtroom, a few minutes later by six deputies. Patterson's eyes were fixed on the floor as entered, and he licked his lips nervously.

Lining up before Judge Callahan, whose outrageous charge was a virtual instruction to convict, the jurors handed their verdict to J. H. Greene, the Circuit Court Clerk, who read from it:

When the verdict of guilty was brought in, Patterson's face was immobile. Defense attorney Leibowitz said he had nothing to say.

Leibowitz asked for one month in which to make a motion to set aside the verdict in the Patterson case, that is, one month after the stenographer transcribes his minutes, which covers about 2,000 pages.

The verdict was brought in in the presence of Clarence Norris, for whom a jury was picked today, and who goes on trial Saturday morning. Eight of the jury are farmers. It was necessary to call additional prospective jurors continually, in view of the large numbers who admitted they had fixed opinions on the case. Attorney Leibowitz's motion for a change of venue on the ground that this proved that a fair trial was impossible, was brusquely denied by Judge Callahan.

The routine picking of a jury for the Norris case was resumed while ten feet from the jury box the Patterson jury was deliberating the case. Norris sat directly alongside the jury room door in a red sweater and overalls, watching Leibowitz examine prospective jurors. From where he sat he could hear through the door the muffled voices of the Patterson jury debating whether to send the first Scottsboro boy to be tried, to death.

Within two days—by Saturday night—according to Judge Callahan's plans, the jury now being picked will be in the same room deciding whether he lives or dies.

Through the early morning hours in an almost filled courtroom the droning examination dragged on. Out of the first panel called, five out of seven said they had fixed opinions. Out of a dozen, only two were left willing to serve. When Leibowitz questions deeply into their opinions, Callahan, following his procedure all through the Patterson trial, interrupts, "I think you've questioned him from a to z. Isn't that enough?"

Another panel was drawn at 9.40 a.m., just as loud, indistinguishable sounds of heated argument issue from jury room.

Last night when court adjourned Callahan instructed the bailiff to return the Patterson jury at 8:30. The bailiff actually brought the jury in about 7:30, while the courthouse grounds and court were deserted. While the jury was deliberating on his life, Patterson was with the other Scottsboro boys in the ancient, condemned Morgan county jail.

After several hours yesterday afternoon and two hours this morning, 25 prospective jurors had been picked out of a panel of 112, and these prospective jurors included men who admitted having fixed opinions on the case but thought evidence to contrary would make them change opinions.

Thought no one actually knows what is going on in the jury room a rumor spread through the courtroom that the jury stood at that time 5 for death, 4 for life imprisonment and 3 for less than life. There was no intimation of acquittal.

Out of the new batch of prospective jurors sent for by the court two were found available as possible jurors even though Leibowitz objected to one because of his opinions. The court adjourned again while the sheriff went hunting additional citizens for prospective jurors.

At 1:30 the total of prospective jurors was 27. The law requires a minimum of 30 so as to give the state and defense the proper number of "strikes" to leave 12 which will make the Norris jury.

At 12:05 p.m., with 21 hours passed since the Patterson jury got the case, of which seven and a half hours were actual deliberations, Callahan adjourned court for one hour. Both defense and prosecution counsel watched the jurors' faces anxiously as they were led to dinner.

Their faces were hard to read. All looked tired, several with grim, determined sets to their faces; one or two smiled slightly at the stares of the attorneys and the spectators.

Same Verdict—Same Delay

Another guilty verdict has been returned in the Scottsboro case and a sentence of death imposed. The specific defendant had previously been convicted and condemned.

Sentence in the case, and in that of another defendant convicted last week for a third time, will be automatically stayed while appeals are taken to the supreme court.

In pleading for delay for five other defendants until after the supreme court acts, the chief defense attorney called the court's attention to the fact that the defendants are paupers, and that the trials have already "cost a fortune."

The paradox in that statement is explained by the fact that agencies outside of Alabama have provided the funds for defense, and that the entire world has been ballyhooed for the purpose.

Not only has the defense cost a fortune, but the delays and retrials are costing the taxpayers of Alabama a fortune merely because the whims of outside agencies refuse to be satisfied.

With the records of the Scottsboro case before them it is small wonder that Americans are exasperated by the present system of justice.

New York

GOVERNOR Miller of Alabama has taken on himself a terrible responsibility in regard to the third trial of the Scottsboro defendants, which opened Monday in the town of Decatur, in Morgan County. The Governor has refused to send troops of the National Guard to protect the defendants and their counsel from possible mob violence, as was done at the second trial, also held in Decatur. Governor Miller says he will not call out the guardsmen unless the county authorities ask him to do so, or unless he is independently convinced of a sudden change in the public feeling in Morgan County. But obviously, county officials will give themselves every benefit of the doubt before admitting that their friends and neighbors are in a lynching mood. And how is the Governor, many miles away, to know of a sudden shift in public opinion? Is there any reason to suppose that the lives of the defendants and their attorneys are actually in danger? Some weeks ago, a number of men employed by friends of the defense traveled through Morgan County, representing themselves to be salesmen of soap or brushes. They called at hundreds of homes and in the course of their "sales talk" they brought the subject around to the Scottsboro case. The result is a mass of several hundred affidavits which the defense has presented to Presiding Judge W. W. Callahan, showing that this number of persons expressed themselves in favor of lynching the Scottsboro defendants. Many of those interviewed added that they thought it would be a good idea to do away with "the Jew lawyers from New York" who are acting for the defense.

IT IS possible, of course, to argue that these persons were just indulging in loose talk, which they would never translate into action. The prosecution, evidently having got wind of these affidavits in advance, has introduced a similar large mass of sworn statements by Morgan County residents testifying that they believe in a fair trial and the orderly processes of law. But everyone knows that a lynching party does not consist of the total population, and usually excludes the "better element" to whom the prosecuting attorney would naturally go for evidence of the sort he wished. There is no reason to believe that the bitter prejudice which existed in Morgan County at the time of the previous trial, and then justified calling out the National Guard, has abated in the slightest degree. That there is some danger the authorities have admitted by swearing in nineteen special deputies from Birmingham to guard the defendants and their attorneys. If even these deputies are necessary, there is great doubt whether a fair trial is possible in Morgan County and it seems clear that despite the Alabama law to the contrary, a change of venue to Birmingham is desirable in the interest of justice.

ADDITIONAL testimony regarding feeling in the South is shown in the letters received by Ruby Bates, one of the two young women who were supposed to have been raped by the defendants two and a half years ago. Miss Bates, at the last trial, repudiated her previous statement implicating the Negroes, charged that it was made under duress, and testified to the innocence of all the accused. As a result, she says, she has received numerous letters from Alabama threatening her life if she returns and again gives her testimony. These letters have had sufficient effect so that she is extremely reluctant to go to Decatur, and her testimony will probably be available only as a deposition. Everyone knows that a written statement has far less effect upon the average jury than the same facts given by a witness in person. It is quite possible that the failure of Governor Miller to give an immediate and adequate promise of safety to Miss Bates may already have been the deciding factor in causing another verdict of guilty, although all intelligent persons everywhere must by now agree with Judge Horton, who presided at the last trial, that such a verdict is completely out of accord with the facts. And if harm should come to the defendants through mob action, the Governor—and all the decent people of the state of Alabama—must live under the shadow of the tragedy to the ends of their lives.

THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS

It appears to us as though the stage is all set at Decatur, Alabama for a wholesale lynching of the nine innocent Scottsboro boys. Slow, but what seems to be sure, are the grindings of the mills which point to crushing the life out of these nine Negro youths for an alleged crime of which the State of Alabama has strong evidence that they are innocent.

In any court, which is surrounded by a more civilized atmosphere, there isn't a shadow of a doubt but that the judge would have sustained a demur to quash the indictment against these boys in the face of the evidence. In more congenial surroundings, we would feel free to ask, "Eventually, why not now?" Eventually these boys must be acquitted. There is no legal procedure, so far as we know, which can possibly be used to convict these boys of a charge of rape upon two women, one of whom has repudiated her former testimony and when the character of the other woman in the case is said to be "loose" by the judge who heard the evidence. Everybody knows, by this time, that these boys were "framed," but the State of Alabama, through its prosecuting and judicial officers, is bent on having these boys lynched. All indications at Decatur this week show that, if it seems too ridiculous to legally lynch these boys, then they will be turned over into the hands of the mob for the "dirty work."

Judge Callahan, who is to preside over the trial of these boys, says that there is no need for troops to protect them. This statement coming from a judge who should know something about the sentiment of a community appears to us to be just a bit suspicious. If these men are lynched or if any attempt is made on their lives by the mob, then we can say that Judge Callahan must be branded as a part of the mob. He can at least be charged with "accessory before the fact."

If we are to assume that these boys are to receive a fair trial, then we repeat, "why not now?" Why shouldn't the judge sustain a demur to the evidence, dismiss these boys and let them get out of Alabama, even if under heavy guard and at the midnight hour?—Two wrongs do not make one right.

Up steps Louisiana with a lynching bee, making, according to an inexact compilation, seven executions by peremptory measures in Southern states within the last three months. There were only ten in the entire United States during the whole of 1932, and only 14 in 1931.

Prior to the turn of the century it was a year of moderation which produced less than a hundred mob murders. In 1892, for example, there were 255, which figure includes both blacks and whites. Almost with the beginning of the 1900's, however, substantial decreases began to manifest themselves as the result of crusades and the generally increasing enlightenment of the population. Even Georgia, which had averaged more than ten a year between 1890 and 1930, permitted the law occasionally to take its course.

Apparently it is time to turn to crusading again. The electrocution of a few mobsters would help.

Save Heywood Patterson!

ONLY three swift days—and then the lynch verdict!

Such is the latest decision of Judge Callahan down in Decatur who has just ruled that the life of Heywood Patterson, first of the nine Scottsboro boys to be re-tried in Decatur, must be decided in not more than three days.

This is nothing more nor less than a gruesome attempt of this lynch judge to railroad Heywood Patterson swiftly to his execution without any delay! The "impartial" judge can hardly restrain his impatience!

It is the attempt of the whole judicial lynch machinery of the Southern masters to send Heywood Patterson to his doom before the world protest that has kept him from the lynch executioners can be sufficently mobilized to save him.

NO SHOTS WERE FIRED.

The judge and state's attorney didn't think there would be a lynching and the prisoner was taken back to Princess Anne after once being removed to Baltimore and safety. There was no need the negro back and no need to attempt to keep him there after taking him back. But the judge and the state's attorney took a chance and made a mistake. And this mistake is even understandable. Judges and prosecuting officers have made mistakes before.

Governor Albert C. Ritchie made a mistake in depending too much upon the judgment of the judge and state's attorney. He should have known that judges and state's attorneys can be wrong. But this error is also understandable; governors make a habit of depending upon judges' and state's attorneys.

The mob gathered as mobs will despite the governor's hopes and the judge's and state's attorney's promises. And the lynchers carried out their purpose, breaking down the jail door, taking out the negro prisoner, dragging him through the streets, hanging him from a tree, attempting the cremation of the body. And all this was done despite the presence at Princess Anne of a captain of state police and 21 men. It is explained in part by the police captain, himself one of 13 officers injured in the fight that preceded in the capture of the jail.

"No shots wero fired," he said. "Our men have standing orders not to use their firearms except as a last resort."

It is possible of course that 21 policemen and a captain could not have prevented the lynching under any circumstances; they were, as the police captain explained, hopelessly outnumbered. But lynchings have been prevented by one man with a gun and the courage to use it, whatever the consequences. Lynchers seem to enjoy their reversion to brutish instincts, but few of them care to pay for the privilege of murder with their lives. And mobs, sometimes although not always, tend to disappear when the shooting begins. But the Maryland state police didn't shoot. They were saving their guns for a last resort and their efforts at preventing lynching apparently never reached that stage.

Nothing, of course, can be done now by Maryland to prevent the lynching. Maryland's problem and obligation is to arrest and punish the lynchers. But Maryland—and other states—may however learn something from its experience at Princess Anne. It can learn that lynchings may occur when judges and state's attorneys do not expect them. And it can learn that lynchings when they may be threatened can be prevented only by the use of every resort available to the officers charged with the enforcement of the law and the defense of otherwise defenseless prisoners.

The pity is that it had to learn its lesson in this way. So many other states—South Carolina among them—have demonstrated it before.

NORRIS BREAKS UNDER STRAIN OF YEARS IN JAIL

Afro-American

Second Convicted Scottsboro Boy Growing Melancholy under Pressure of Incarceration

12-16-33

By CLARENCE M. MITCHELL
(AFRO Staff Correspondent)

Baltimore Md.

DECATUR, Ala.—Tall, with a stolid expression that seemed to indicate resignation to whatever might come his way, Clarence Norris, second of the Scottsboro defendants accused of raping Victoria Price, white. listened to his death sentence from the lips of Judge W. W. Callahan this week.

Norris, who is apparently less sure of his speech than Haywood Patterson, the first defendant convicted by the jury on Friday, informed the jurist with a low but penetrating voice that he was not guilty and the whole case was a frame-up.

Native of Georgia

As a native of the State of Georgia, seeking fortune in Alabama, he has suffered great hardship from life in general, according to his own statement.

"The only thing about this," he said through the bars of his cell on Sunday, "is you lose so much time and this jail is killing me." He does not believe that he will be electrocuted and likes to try his hand at writing to friends.

"Have you any stamps on you pal?" he whispered, after having drawn me out of the earshot of his cell-mates. A negative reply caused his expression to change ever so slightly but he brightened up when a coin touched his hand and mumbled a colorless "thank you."

"What did you have for your Thanksgiving dinner?" I asked. "Nothing," he replied, and was about to lapse into silence when I prodded him again with an additional query of the same nature.

"Oh, we had chicken," he said, "a little chicken and some cake." His tone indicated that memories of the meal aroused no gustatory sensations, "It was better," he said, "than the usual stuff we get."

His good-bye was not bouyant like that of Ozie Powell, one the boys whose face is as yet untouched by a razor, nor was it cheerful like that of Haywood Patterson, whose chatter could be heard throughout the tier of cells.

Norris is the single member of the group who is showing his years of experience in the jails of Alabama with a vengeance. His lone appearance on the stand during the Patterson trial left one with the impression that here was a man of a retiring nature accused of a sordid crime which no student of human nature would ever believe him to be guilty of.

ALABAMA "JUSTICE"

Justice is not blind in Alabama—she can see the color line. For the third time Heywood Patterson is convicted by an Alabama jury. The evidence is contradictory. One of the two girls who testified in the first trial has confessed that she swore to what was untrue. In the third trial the State's Attorney, challenged by counsel for the defense, frankly admits that his speech to the jury is "an appeal to passion." As a climax, the Judge forgets to tell the jury the form to use in announcing an acquittal and has to be reminded of his inexcusable oversight by one of the lawyers for the defense.

Between such "justice" and mob violence there is little to choose—the mob, at least, makes no ghastly pretense of deliberation. Once more the only hope of averting a tragic injustice lies in the Supreme Court.

SCOTTSBORO AND LEESBURG

By KELLY MILLER

Recorder 12-30-33

Journal & Guide

The famous tragic incidents focussing about Scottsboro and Leesburg suggest certain contrasts. The world woke of a morning and found itself shocked at the news that nine Negro boys had been summarily condemned to death on the alleged charge of rape upon two hobo white girls. There was scarcely less shock on the announcement that a Massachusetts judge had refused to return to Virginia a Negro charged with coldblooded murder of two white women, on the score that the Virginia courts did not admit Negroes to the jury. The world did not believe that the Scottsboro boys were guilty—certainly not guilty as indicted. On the other hand, the guilt of Crawford was generally assumed on the face of the statement of the case. The Scottsboro incident elicited the interest and sympathy of the entire Negro race, and indeed aroused friendly response throughout the civilized world. The audacity of Judge Lowell in the Parker case struck us with amazement for its audacity rather than with sympathy for the culprit. Judge Lowell's extraordinary contention was swiftly overruled by the higher courts. The same fundamental principle was involved in both cases—a fair trial for the accused and the constitution right of the Negro race to recognition or at least consideration in the constitution and make up of the indicting and the trial juries. After three attempts the world is still unconvinced that the Scottsboro boys have had a fair trial. That Crawford has been fairly convicted is conceded on all sides.

The N. A. A. C. P. and the I. L. D. were rival contendants for the defense of the Scottsboro boys and won that glorious privilege. The N. A. A. C. P. undertook the defense of Crawford at Leesburg. The I. L. D. engaged white (Jewish) counsel. The N. A. A. C. P. employed colored counsel. Colored counsel could probably not have succeeded at all at Scottsboro; white counsel could not have done better at Leesburg. There were certain delicate features involving sex intimacies across the color line, into which colored counsel could hardly inquire without inflaming the jury and local sentiment beyond the point of endurance. It is noticeable that the inculpation of a rumored white accomplice of Crawford was passed over with salutary deftness. For the first time the N. A. A. C. P. engaged colored counsel in a case of vital importance. I sat in the Supreme Court when the segregation cases were argued and keenly regretted that certain able colored lawyers, like Lewis of Boston or Morris of Chicago, did not share in the presentation. A race pleading its own cause in its own voice is apt to prove more convincing than the voice of the stranger to its sufferings, especially where racial and social sensibilities are not involved, as they were at Scottsboro. The race still needs white counsel in certain type of cases.

The Negro was interested in the Crawford case mainly on account of the jury issue. It was perfectly willing to let Crawford follow the fate his heinous crime deserved. Negroes on the jury would have made no difference. An all-Negro Jury could have reached no other decision as the case was presented. It might have been Cracker cunning that the verdict was so shaped that Crawford's attorneys dared not appeal without jeopardizing the neck of their client. The jury issue, the only feature of the case in which the race was genuinely concerned, was allowed to drop out of the picture. The only advantage which the race as such derives from the Crawford case is that a Negro lawyer was given a chance to make an enviable reputation for himself by means of the courage, ability, courtesy and tact with which he safeguarded the welfare of his client.

But the Scottsboro case sends its roots deeper into the soil of our judicial structure. The right of the Negro to a fair and unintimidated trial even when charged with the most heinous crime in the heart of the most impassioned South is here tested. The I. L. D. has already reaffirmed the right of the Negro to jury representation. As many cases as possible should be brought to the attention of the public and the higher courts till every jurisdiction in the land shall recognize and act upon this principle. The Scottsboro case, since the elimination of the jury issue from Leesburg, becomes the more significant and critical and calls upon the whole arce to rally to the support of the defense. Unlike Scottsboro, Leesburg is located in Northern Virginia where there has always prevailed a more liberal and tolerant attitude. The state of Virginia is accustomed to Negro lawyers, (expecially South-side Virginia) who inform me that the courts in that state are uniformly fair to colored litigants. If the Negro, then, when charged with the most flagrant crime, can secure a fair trial in Alabama and force recognition of jury rights in that intolerant southern state, then there will be less difficulty in maintaining this principle elsewhere under any and all circumstances. Leesburg and Scottsboro will stand out vital to racial welfare in the future as red letter marks in the history of judicial procedure. Only Scottsboro will stand out in bigger and redder letters. This is the classic call in the history of Negro rights.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

ONCE MORE the negroes accused in Alabama of assaulting two white girls, are being brought to trial in the southern state. The defense attorneys from New York are making a strong, although losing stand, for their clients relative to the place of holding the trial.

One does not have to be a negro lover nor a particular friend of the dusky skinned individual to know that it is unusually hard for him to get a fair trial, especially on charges of this kind, in a southern state.

As a matter of fact any one who has followed this particular case, other than a violently prejudiced person, is convinced that the defendants are not guilty of the charges. Furthermore it is equally apparent that as surely as they are tried, so surely will they again be convicted and if the same tactics are used, and it seems they have already been begun, as were used in the last trial, the case will again be thrown out by the United States Supreme Court and another trial ordered.

As a matter of fact, the case should be tried where the defendants are assured of a fair trial and thus brought to a close. No one except a violently prejudiced person would ask that these men be convicted of such a serious crime or any other for that matter, if they are as innocent as the last trial led many unbiased people to think they are.

In Alabama the state is attempting to teach another lesson to its Negro population. Thus the Negro, Heywood Patterson, 21, again has been found guilty of having participated in an attack by freight-car roustabouts upon some white girls, who were female freight-car roustabouts, after some male white roustabouts were bested in a physical encounter with the blacks.

Evidence on hand that the two white girls involved had spent the previous evening in a hobo camp was not permitted to be placed in the record; so was other evidence the defense had ready. The judge made a charge to the jury that left little doubt in the minds of anybody hearing or reading it that the verdict would be one of guilty.

Thus the case most likely will once more be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Girls who travel on freight trains in company with youths are not likely to be of the Class 1 social type. Negroes on freights are of the same type. It is amazing that a cause celebre should be possible over an incident of this nature, with the death penalty involved.

But in Alabama it is deemed an unalterable code that Negroes must not traffic with white women under any circumstances.

He Didn't Fail

WHEN Benjamin F. Davidson, Negro, was made night jailer at the Shawnee (Kan.) County Jail, he gave a promise that a prisoner would kill him before he got away. Tuesday night he kept that promise and the prisoner, white, a bank and post office robber, didn't get away either. The faithful jailer, after being slugged and shot twice, summoned enough strength to throw the robber down stairs, where he struck his head on a stone step and became unconscious. Officers found the pair with the jailer, who died on his way to a hospital, across the robber's body. In an adjoining state a sheriff turned a Negro over to a mob to be lynched and the superintendent of the state police told the sheriff he had done a good job, "under the circumstances." One prisoner was entitled to as much protection as the other, regardless of any difference there may be in the heinousness of their crimes. If the Shawnee jailer had been true to his responsibilities at St. Joseph, Mo., he would have risked his life before the mob got the prisoner. It might have been only a moral gesture and Quixotic; but, with the mob spirit rampant in various parts of the nation, such gestures are needed.

Lynch Law in Alabama

It is hard to tell which is worse—legal lynching or illegal lynching.

The third trial of Heywood Patterson, one of the seven Scottsboro defendants, took place at Decatur, Alabama, in the midst of hysterical prejudice. There was no possibility of a fair trial among people who have race prejudice in their hearts. There was even danger that the defendant and the defense attorneys might be illegally lynched before the trial was over. Many of the surrounding residents had openly expressed themselves to the effect that this ought to be done. Many southern mobs have done that. The Maryland, California and Missouri mobs gave the cue. Any little incident might have touched off the emotional explosion.

That, at least, was avoided. The trial went on to a close, and the jury, after an absence of 25 hours, brought in a verdict of guilty and set the punishment at death, as had been done in each of the two preceding trials.

The mere fact that the jury staid out 25 hours, instead of bringing in a quick verdict, showed that there were persons on the jury who had some qualms about bringing in the death verdict; also that their objections were overcome.

The defendant and the other six young Negroes are innocent. This statement may be made flatly, on the strength of the fact that the trial judge in the former case granted a new trial, and on the strength of the testimony of Ruby Bates in the former trial. Miss Bates was one of the two young women whom the seven were accused of assaulting. She testified against them at the first trial. But her conscience hurt her about it. She consulted a preacher, Harry Emerson Fosdick, in New York, and others, who advised her to tell the truth. She did so, at the second trial. This time, however, she was ill and unable to go to Alabama for the third trial. The defense was not permitted to take her deposition and use it in place of her personal testimony.

The case will be appealed. The other cases will in the meantime come on for trial. One of them has already begun.

It is a shame that some Alabama court will not dismiss the cases and turn the boys loose and save all this waste of energy and money and the denial of justice. Should any of them be executed, it would be a legal lynching. Lawlessness is not confined to mobs and criminals. It often happens in court rooms of high and low degree.

CITRONELLA, Alabama.—

In lynch infected Decatur,
In the jail there you will see
Nine innocent Scottsboro boys,
That ought to have been free.
Only mass protest of millions
Of workers like you and me
Will keep these boys from burning
And cause them to be free.
So workers join in union
Let the bosses hear our cry,
The Scottsboro boys are innocent,
Those boys they Shall not Die.
Hurray for the I.L.D.
They are fighting days and nights,
Not only for the Scottsboro boys,
But for the workers' rights.

Communist Party Calls For Sharpening of Fight For Nine Scottsboro Boys

Daily Worker
12-9-33

Hathaway, Reporting at Membership Meeting, Declares Case Is Interwoven with General Trend to Fascism

NEW YORK.—A clarion call for the greatest mobilization of workers this city has ever seen for the Scottsboro protest demonstration this noon in Union Square was made to all members of the Communist Party, revolutionary unions and sympathetic mass organizations at a membership meeting of the Communist Party of District 2 in the St. Nicholas Arena Thursday night.

New York, N.Y.

Reporting for the Central Committee of the Communist Party on the rising wave of lynchings and the fascist trend of Roosevelt's "New Deal" government, Clarence Hathaway, editor of the Daily Worker declared that the struggle for the release of the Scottsboro boys and against the monstrous national oppression of the Negro People must become a central point in the struggles of the working class against fascism here and abroad.

Fight Assumes Greatest Importance

The fight to [illegible] boys is more important at this period than ever before, [illegible] out. This case is today interwoven with the general trend toward fascism, with the new wave of lynchings, with the shooting, gasing and clubbing of workers, with general resort to terror. It has become not only a part of the broader fight for national liberation of the Negro People, but an essential part of the struggles of the whole working class against the growing attacks on their living standards, against wage cuts and worsening conditions for the employed, against the drastic cuts in relief for the unemployed and against the impoverishment of the farming masses against the destruction of workers' rights. It is the fight of the whole working class against the fascist trends of the N. R. A. and the American bourgeoisie and their reformist allies in the leadership of the Socialist Party and the bureaucracy of the American Federation of Labor.

Daily Worker
12-9-33
New York, N.Y.

Carefully analysing the fascist trends of the "New Deal" and the demagogic promises of "prosperity" to all sections of the population, Hathaway compared these trends and demagogic promises, to the similar methods used by the German Nazis to deceive broad sections of the German masses. He clearly showed that the victory of the German Nazis had not only increased the misery of the German toilers, but had likewise sharpened the bourgeois crisis. The fight for the Scottsboro boys cannot today be separated from the fight against the murder of our heroic German comrades Torgler, Dimitroff, Taneff and Popoff, and against fascism in general.

He declared it was now a race to decide which "way out" of the crisis would be followed in this country:—the capitalist "way out" of brutal fascist terror against the workers against the Negro People and against the poor farmers, or the revolutionary way out, which would emancipate the toiling masses and win unconditional equality for the Negro People with the right to determine their own future.

The victory of the workers, he said, is dependent on the effectiveness of the work of the Communist Party, the revolutionary unions and mass organizations at the present time. Activities in the first place in the shops and factories, and also in the neighborhoods, among the Negro masses and among the farming and petty-bourgeois masses must be pushed with the greatest energy.

The concentration program of the Open Letter of the extraordinary Party Conference must be put into effect immediately.

At the same time the effort to win the Negro People and farming masses as powerful allies in the revolutionary struggle must be increased tenfold. The Negro People are already strongly sympathetic to the revolutionary movement, but they can be won as allies only if the workers particularly the white workers, prove at all times their willingness to carry on the fiercest struggle against the lynchers, for the release of the Scottsboro boys, for the national liberation of the Negro People. All remnants of chauvinism within the ranks of the revolutionary workers must be ruthlessly rooted out, he declared.

Hathaway was followed by Richard B. Moore, General Secretary of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights who outlined the program for the mobilization of the workers for Saturday's demonstration in Union Square and for further actions against the Decatur lynch verdicts and for the defense of the Negro masses.

Last Sunday the workers and guests of Camp Nitgedaiget held a meeting to protest the Decatur verdict, and collected $25.75 for the Scottsboro defense. Many Negro workers from Dutchess Junction were present. A protest telegram was sent to Judge Callahan.

Further work for the Scottsboro defense is being carried on at the camp and vicinity, including the sending of speakers to Negro churches in Beacon and Dutchess.

Jury in Norris Case Out for Hours; I.L.D. To Fight Convictions

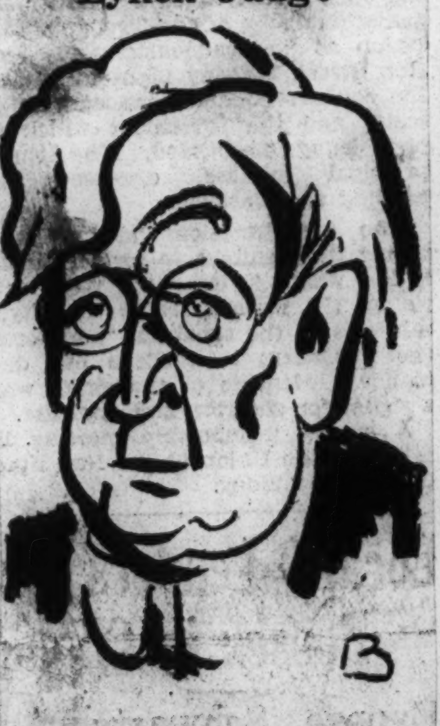
Defense Gets Delay Despite Judge's Previous Threat to "Make Speed" on All Trials

Callahan Denies Application for Bail for Olen Montgomery and Willie Robertson

Daily Worker
12-6-33
New York

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 6.—Trials of the remaining Scottsboro boys were postponed indefinitely late today by Judge W. W. Callahan, while the jury which went out last night to consider their verdict in the case of Clarence Norris was still out. . . . Callahan called for the trial of Charles Weems, when court opened this morning, but Samuel S. Leibowitz, attorney, retained by the International Labor Defense protested vigorously, on the ground that it was his understanding that the remaining trials were to be postponed pending appeal of the Heywood Patterson case, as well as of Clarence Norris in the event of a guilty verdict against him.

Lynch Judge



W. W. "SPEED" CALLAHAN

After argument by Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight, who wanted to go on with the trial, the I.L.D. won its point.

When Leibowitz demanded that bond be set for Olen Montgomery and Willie Robertson, Callahan refused. Habeas corpus proceedings to force setting of bond will be taken, the lawyer announced.

Judge Callahan today assigned two more deputy sheriffs to guard Leibowitz. He gave no reason for this action.

Callahan's charge to the jury yesterday in the Norris case, as he delivered it, differed in only one or two details from the lynch-inciting charge he made in the Patterson case. Instead of forgetting completely to instruct the jury on how to render a verdict of "not guilty" he paused after he had presented what he himself termed "the state's side of the case." Then he addd just one sentence, to conform with the law, telling the jury it was possible also to bring in a verdict of "not guilty."

Informed that under Alabama law a general exception to the judge's charge such as he made in the Patterson case was not valid, Leibowitz in this case took 13 specific exceptions demanding that he amend his charge on these specific points. In most cases Callahan refused to do so, or re-formulated the point in a manner scarcely different from what he had used in the first place.

Callahan omitted from his charge the expression he had used in his instructions in the Patterson case, to the effect that if a Negro was charged with rape the presumption must be that he was guilty. He emphasized this omission with the comment that "I'm not drawing the color line either."

Dr. Bridges, who was the first witness yesterday, testified he found no bruises, cuts, or wounds on Victoria Price other than a scratch on wrist and forearm, when the Negro boys were arrested. Her pulse and respiration was normal, one hour and a half after the alleged rape, he said.

The second witness, Gilley, answered a series of leading questions put him by Prosecutor Knight. After an absence of nearly three years, he said, he came to Hunstville to see how Victoria and her mother, whom he never knew, were getting along. Although he described himself as an entertainer in hotel lobbies, he could not name a single hotel where he recited.

Later, Lester Carter corroborated the deposition of Ruby Bates. He said he was held 18 days in Scottsboro jail and never called as a witness by the State.

The testimony of Luther Morris that he saw the girls being attacked in the gondola after the fight were proved improbable by photographs introduced by the defense.

Elias Schwarzbart, of defense counsel, testified that when they took pictures, they could not see into the car

Man Who Induced Leibowitz To Defend Boys Helps Poor

Brooklyn Court Clerk Has Long Interested Self in Negro Welfare

Amsterdam News
12-20-33
New York, N.Y.

By WESLEY McD. HOLDER

While thousands cheer the work and courage of Samuel S. Leibowitz, noted criminal lawyer and chief defense counsel in the now famous Scottsboro case, many lose sight of the man who, more than any other individual, was responsible for Mr. Leibowitz's decision to enter the case and fight for the freedom of the nine unfortunate youths, it was Harry Wolkof, chief clerk in the second district Municipal Court of Brooklyn, who brought this about.

With Harry Wolkof, standard bearer and guiding spirit of the Wolkof Tolerance Society of Brooklyn, there is no time for quibbling when danger is near. His first concern when confronted with human suffering is to have it alleviated, then ascertain the whys and wherefores. The Scottsboro case was no exception to this rule. It was while debating the Communist tendencies of the International Labor Defense that Wolkof startled a group including Mr. Leibowitz with the following remark which in but few words sums up the character of the man, "Nine human beings' lives are at stake and that is the question for the moment."

Leibowitz Accepts Challenge.

The discussion promptly ended. Attorney Lennie L. George, member of the International Labor Defense and a friend of Wolkof's, was then delegated to convey to his organization the willingness of Mr. Leibowitz to enter the case. A few conferences followed, then with the announcement that Mr. Leibowitz had joined the defense staff Wolkof, generally known for his ability to stick to the end, slipped out of the picture.

Harry Wolkof is a direct actionist. When he recognizes a genuine case of misery, one that calls for immediate help, he does not evade it and send the victim with a card or letter to the Home Relief or other agencies. His hand goes down in his pocket and comes up with enough change to relieve immediate distress, a spirit he radiates among his subordinates.

The second district court, known as the poor man's court, is in the heart of the Negro section of Brooklyn and the greater percentage of cases tried thore are between landlords and tenants. These have increased immeasurably during the last three or four years. Dispossessed tenants have thronged the court daily with scenes of misery, sometimes leading to revelations of abject want and stark hunger. Wolkof recognizes these cases as soon as they reach the window of the complaint clerk. He knows the signs and soon diaguoses the trouble.

Always a fighter in the cause of the poor and destitute, Wolkof received considerable newspaper publicity a few years ago when he caused the arrest of a white lawyer, Nathaniel N. Holzer, for altering a court record in an attempt to dispossess the family of Sager Graves, who resided at 380 Lexington avenue at the time. Wolkof at first pleaded with the lawyer to save the tenants and not throw them out on the street on a Saturday afternoon. The lawyer was insistent and Wolkof was equally determined that he should not succeed. The clerk checked Holzer in every move he made that day until in desperation Holzer changed a record.

Causes Attorney's Arrest.

Holzer is alleged to have exclaimed when the clerk found that the dispossess order was incorrectly dated, "What's the difference? He is colored." This remark so angered Wolkof it is said that he nearly came to blows with the attorney. However, he caused his arrest and conviction. The conviction was reversed by the Appellate Courts, which ruled that there was no criminal intent. Wolkof has also convinced many a housewife that it would be much better and vastly cheaper to get together with her maid or cook and settle between them the question of the wage in dispute.

Despite the fact that he is a Jew, several other religious bodies have seen fit to honor him. A testimonial was held in his honor at Holy Trinitsy Baptist Church, of which the Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Harten is pastor, in recognition of his service to the Negro. A private audience was also granted him by the Pope in Rome for his unselfish devotion to the work of St. Peter Claver Church, the only Negro Roman Catholic congregation in Brooklyn. His other charitable activities include the distribution of baskets to the needy regardless of race during Thanksgiving and Christmas. Hot meals are served daily at the headquarters of his society located at 305 Kingston avenue.

ROBERTS (Scottsboro, Ala.)—The second defendant in the famous case is sentenced to death for the third time. The third time justice is pleading for eight Negro boys, justice on her knees, imploring the whole South to be fair, to keep her scales evenly balanced. We look back at the very beginning on a day in March, 1931.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

EFFECT—TELEGRAPH KEY.

VOICE 1 (Sheriff at Paint Rock, Ala.)—Some black boys threw some whites off a fast fregiht coming out of Chattanooga tonight. They are alone on that train with two white girls and another white boy. Hold those boys.

EFFECT—TELEGRAPH KEY.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

SHERIFF — Come out o' there, nigger!

HEYWOOD—What you-all want?

SHERIFF—What did you do with those white girls?

HEYWOOD—They's back in another car. We ain't been ridin' with em.

SHERIFF—You're a liar!

VOICE 2—Sheriff, heah the girls.

GIRL (WHISPERS)—Gosh, maybe they'll arrest us for riding in a freight train. I know what I'll do . . . I'll tell 'em the niggers done. . . . (WHISPERS) That'll get me out all right.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—Thus started the famous Scottsboro case. The Negro boys were removed to jail at Paint Rock, Ala. Threats by the crowd made it necessary to remove the boys to another town. Finally there was the trial day at Scottsboro, Ala.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

EFFECT—HAPPY CHATTER OF VOICES.

VOICE 3—Downright shame. . . . The jury's still out. . . Never thought it would take 'em more'n hour to see those niggers were plum guilty.

VOICE 4—No self-respectin' white man would say a black man's innocent, 'specially when it comes to a charge of attackin' a white girl.

VOICE 3—They shouldn't have trials for these blacks. . . . Should just let us take care of 'em. . . . Throw a rope around a limb of a tree and string 'em up, sez I.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—The day for the first trial was treated as a festival. Bands were held in readiness, awaiting the verdict of the jury. Then—

MUSIC—ORGAN, FADE AS B. G.

EFFECT—GAVEL.

JUDGE—Gentlemen of the jury, have you reached a verdict?

JURYMAN—We have. We, the jury, find the defendants guilty!

MUSIC—ORGAN UP, FADE AS B. G.

JUDGE—And I sentence you to die in the electric chair!

EFFECT—CHEERS, YELLS.

VOICE 3—Boy, lets' go out and raise Ned. . . . At last those blacks got what was coming to them.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—To the supreme court of the United States went the decision of the judges. There the case was reviewed and sent back for a new trial, as three points were raised by the justices of this highest tribunal.

JUSTICE—There was not a fair and impartial and deliberate trial. The defendants were denied the right of counsel. Qualified Negroes were systematically excluded from the jury.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—And again when the case went to trial in April of this year, this last point of issue, the exclusion of Negroes from the jury was again raised by Lawyer Leibowitz, counsel for the defense.

LEIBOWITZ—I ask that the indictment against these boys be voided on the grounds that Negroes were systematically excluded from the jury rolls.

LAWYER—That's not so.

LEIBOWITZ—Have Negroes ever been allowed to serve on the jury rolls? I'll ask the court reporter. Did you ever see a Negro on a jury in this county?

STENO.—I've been serving in this county 24 years and I've never yet seen a Negro as a juryman. They wouldn't let them on!

LEIBOWITZ—And you tell me that these boys are getting a fair trial when you won't permit their own people to judge them? If it hadn't been for some people who desired to see that justice was done, these boys would have been executed—murdered by you—long ago—murdered by your hypocrisy and your hatred!

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—Judge James E. Horton of Decatur, Ala., unprejudiced, fearless, representing the law in every just meaning of the word, allowed the complete presentation of all phases of the case. Ruby Bates swore that no Negro had touched her—thus repudiating her testimony of the first trial. Victoria Price, the other girl, full of hate and venom, her tragic misspent life, and with a long police record, discredited completely, persisted in accusing Heywood Patterson. Judge Horton charged the jury, he begged for fairness, he begged for consideration of all the evidence. If there is a reasonable doubt, but in Decatur, Ala., a white man's jury . . . a Negro accused means only one verdict, guilty! The punishment, death! Before the other men were tried, Judge Horton, verifying that the defense counsel had made statements concerning the case which would make the verdict of death certain for the other seven defendants, postponed the trial indefinitely.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS (Scottsboro, Ala.)—The third trial. The whole world is watching. Threats of violence are heard.

EFFECT—ANGRY CROWD, MURMUR.

VOICE 3—Ain't no cal, foolin' around longer. . . . Us southerners don't need no smart lawyers or law books to tell us what to do.

EFFECT—CROWD, NOISES.

VOICE 4—That jury in there better bring in a verdict of guilty and send those niggers to the chair.

EFFECT—CROWD INCREASING.

VOICE 3—That's the only thing any self-respectin' southerner can do. And if the jury won't do it, I guess we know what we'll do, don't we?

EFFECT—CROWD INCREASING.

VOICE 3—And soldiers or no soldiers, we'll do it!

EFFECT—CROWD.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS — Meanwhile, in the courthouse, the trial opens. Ruby Bates, one of the girls who accused the Negroes, is ill. Her testimony hinges the case of the boys. Attorney Leibowitz pleads for time.

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

LEIBOWITZ—Your honor, I ask for time to secure the deposition of Ruby Bates, whose testimony is necessary for our case.

JUDGE 2—I won't give you any time. Get it in right away. I want speed. I'm going to get done with this case in three days.

LEIBOWITZ—But, your honor, justice demands.

JUDGE 2—I said I'm going to get done with this case in three days:

MUSIC—ORGAN UP AND FADE AS B. G.

ROBERTS—And the judge keeps his promise. Last week one defendant was sentenced to death for the third time. Yesterday the second defendant was sentenced to death. Tomorrow or the next day the third, until eight men are to be sentenced to death. The defense has submitted proof of prejudice. Judge Callahan says "no." The defense submits evidence that Negroes are excluded from the jury rolls. Judge Callahan says "no." Is this another Sacco and Vanzetti, more horrible, more fearful in its consequences that is in the making at Scottsboro today?

DECATUR MAN FIRED ON BY ANGRY WHITE

Shot After Leaving Lawyer's Apartment

Chicago, Ill.

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 15.—Tension which has marked the Scottsboro attack trials here reached a new pitch Wednesday with the disclosure of the wounding of a Race millworker by an unidentified white man.

A short distance from the apartment, Townsend said, they were accosted by a white man, who opened fire without warning. In the darkness most of the fusillade of shots went wild, but one of the bullets struck Townsend on the hand as he attempted to flee.

Revelation of the incident was not made until Wednesday, when police stated they were "making a full investigation of the affair."

Two additional deputies, meantime, were assigned by Judge W. W. Callahan to safeguard Leibowitz, who has received numerous anonymous letters threatening his life for defending the Scottsboro boys.

This doubled the bodyguard provided the New York attorney by the state when he arrived here for the trials nearly three weeks ago. The deputies were selected from a group of special sheriff's men from Birmingham. In addition, Leibowitz has his own personal bodyguard.

Unfair Comment

Two of the defendants in the Scottsboro cases have been tried and convicted the third time for attacking a white woman on an Alabama train. The crime upon which indictments were secured caused much excitement in Alabama and much interest throughout the nation. The trials of the defendants have been reported by newspapers in all the states. Some of the metropolitan papers have considered the trials of such importance that special reporters were detailed to cover them.

The defense lawyers, hired by a New York society, have done all they could to prejudice the people of northern states against the community in which the trials were held, and last week the chief counsel for the defense heard the trial judge deliver a severe reprimand for conduct unbecoming a respectable lawyer. The judge took care to send the jury from the court room before expressing his disapproval of the attorney's conduct.

Notwithstanding the three convictions and the patience of the people in the Alabama community, we read in a Western paper the following editorial comment on the case:

> Because of the evident unfairness with which the first trial was conducted nearly two years ago, the Scottsboro case has attracted national attention. The result of the second trial, which was conducted with conspicuous fairness by Judge James E. Horton, naturally did not end public interest in the case. Unfortunately, race prejudice in Alabama and the attempt of Communist organizations outside the state to make political capital out of it have both tended to obscure the fundamental issue in the case, which is one of simple justice. The third trial now has been completed and counsel for the defense has served notice of its intention again to challenge the verdict. Once more the question is being asked, has Patterson been justly convicted?

There have been few signs of race prejudice in the trial of these cases. White jurors have returned the verdicts after long and patient deliberation. Judge Horton won nation-wide commendation for what the critic herein quoted calls, "conspicuous fairness" and, through all the trials, the people have remained calm. They have been patient in spite of the Communist interference and unfair comment by editors who know little about the Southern people and who themselves are often the victims of prejudice.

The people of Scottsboro and the surrounding territory in Alabama deserve the greatest sympathy, respect and praise for their patience There should be no question of the justice of the Patterson conviction.

Mr. Graves, for no apparent reason, has taken occasion several times to tell the people of Decatur and Morgan county how they should conduct themselves. Mr Graves has attempted to tell the people of Decatur and Morgan county many things of this section.

May we humbly suggest to the columnist that he desist from further column chatter until he learns more of his subject. If he cares to learn the people of this section, we are very happy to extend an invitation. Meanwhile may we suggest that he keep quiet until he knows the facts.

TAMPERING WITH JURY ROLL TO BE AIRED AT DECATUR

Finding Of Negroes' Names Bring Charges That Hint Sensation

LAWYERS FOR DEFENSE SEEK TO SHOW FRAUD

Handwriting Specialist Called From New York For Expert Testimony

BY RALPH E. HURST
The Birmingham News Staff Writer

DECATUR—A sensation is promised in defense plans for Saturday when James Haring, New York handwriting expert, is due to appear for the Scottsboro defendants in an effort to prove that Jackson County's 1931 jury roll has been illegally tampered with and names of at least six Negroes irregularly written in. The six Negroes are also due to testify Saturday.

A formal charge of fraud in preparing the Jackson jury roll was filed in court late Friday by Defense Atty. Samuel S. Leibowitz.

In spite of this, Judge W. W. Callahan proceeded in Circuit Court with a view to taking up the actual trial Monday. Heywood Patterson is docketed for trial Monday and Clarence Norris' trial was set for Thursday although defense attorneys protested that three days was far too short a time for each trial.

The Scottsboro defendants were indicted in March, 1931, for attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on a freight train in Jackson County. Defense attorneys moved to quash the indictments on the contention that the Grand Jury was drawn from a jury roll from which Negroes had been excluded because of race and color.

As Jackson County officials, subpoenaed by the defense, went through the jury roll which had been offered in evidence, the names of six Negroes were found. The defense had the Negroes subpoenaed.

Delaying tactics were employed by the defense Friday, awaiting arrival of Haring and the Negroes from Jackson County. A study of names on the jury roll was continued in an effort to determine if other Negroes were listed, and questions were put to the witnesses as to authorship of handwriting in the book.

Hunt Stuart, Jackson jury board member from 1927 to 1931, took the stand at 3:15 after it had been occupied by Moody since 9:30 a.m. He testified he had "not noticed" any Negroes on Jackson juries. Kelly Morgan, he said, prepared all the lists.

"If the name of Mark Taylor is on that roll and was not put on through forgery or fraud, it would have been put on through your order, wouldn't it?" Leibowitz asked.

Knight's objection was sustained. The court went further and told Leibowitz he could not ask the witness if the Negroes on the roll were qualified.

Subsequently Judge Callahan and Leibowitz had a verbal clash and the jurist, pointing his finger close to the attorney's face, ordered him to "stop right there."

It was the first clash of the proceedings and Leibowitz hushed without finishing his protest.

Stuart said he knew some of the Negroes listed. On cross-examination Knight asked him if he was a member of the board that compiled the roll from which the Grand Jury was drawn in March, 1931.

The last roll his board prepared, he answered, was on Aug. 18, 1930, from a list submitted by Kelly Morgan, clerk.

"Did that list contain both whites and Negroes?" Knight asked.

"I couldn't say," Stuart answered over defense objections.

Knight asked Stuart if any person had been left off because of race or color. Over defense objections Stuart declared "Race, color, creed or religion" was never discussed.

When court opened at 8:30 a.m., following a night session, Hamlin Caldwell, Circuit Court reporter of Jackson County, was started through the jury roll to see if he could find the names of any Negroes.

Caldwell failed to find any Negroes and J. E. Moody, Jackson jury board member, was recalled to resume studying the roll.

Those identified on the roll as Negroes and for whom subpoenaes were issued were Hugh Sanford, Ples Larkin, Travis Moseley, K. D. Snodgrass, Cam Rudder and Mark Taylor.

The word "colored" was written after the name on each subpoena.

Judge Callahan, as well as attorneys, questioned Moody as to the handwriting of various names, most of it being attributed to Kelly Morgan and some to himself. The relation of the names to the red line also featured in the questioning.

Moody was still on the stand when the lunch recess was taken from noon to 1:15 p.m., examination being a predicate for offering expert testimony on authorship of handwriting in the 1931 Jackson jury book.

Knight told The News that he was not trying to prove or disapprove that Negroes were on the jury roll and pointed out that the state had not introduced any rolls. His attitude indicated he held the opinion that proof of tampering with the roll would not be grounds for quashing the indictments.

"My contention is and has been that, under the law, it is entirely up to the jury board as to who is put on the rolls and that you cannot go behind the judgment of the board when it is not shown that they deliberately excluded a person because of race or color."

Heywood Patterson, scheduled to go on trial Monday as the first of the defendants, was in court but for the time being, became an almost forgotten man as the jury system of the state became predominant in the proceedings.

Atty. Gen. Knight, questioned about the development, admitted it would have been possible for the state to have reindicted all nine defendants within the last month without it becoming known and to have the new indictments ready for the basis of prosecution in event the 1931 indictments should be quashed. He did not say, however, that this had been done.

It was also pointed out that a special session of the Jackson County Grand Jury could be called between now and Monday and secretly return new indictments. If this has been done, or should be done, it would provide the state with a legal "ace in the hole" to meet any proof of jury roll tampering and to proceed with prosecution of the cases.

Indictments are not made public until they are served and if any recent action has been taken it would not be generally known as service would be withheld pending necessity created by some development such as has come to light here.

Discovery of the names of six Negroes on the 1931 jury roll of Jackson County was perhaps the most significant development since the inception of the Scottsboro cases nearly three years ago.

With the names having been identified as those of Negroes by C. A. Wann, circuit court clerk of Jackson, and J. E. Moody, Jackson Jury Board member, the defense launched a vigorous effort to show irregularity and tampering with the roll.

During the Thursday night session, ordered by Judge Callahan because of the "peculiar circumstances," Kelly Morgan, jury board clerk of Jackson County from 1927 to 1931, testified that the names of the Negroes on the roll appeared to be in his handwriting.

He testified that no one but himself wrote in the big red book during his term of office and that he had not written in it since his term expired Jan. 19, 1931.

Defense attorneys had Morgan give them a sample of his handwriting by copying the names of the six Negroes, and this sample was offered in evidence as Exhibit A on this witness.

Defense Atty. Leibowitz had indicated through his examination of the witness that a handwriting expert would be called and later in the night it was announced that he had summoned from New York James Haring, a handwriting expert who figured in the famous Halls-Mills murder case.

The jury roll of Jackson County is kept in an alphabetically-indexed ledger with various numbers of names on each page. In 1931, when a state law requiring a new jury list was put into effect, a red ink line was drawn across each page of the book just beneath the last name entered.

The names of the six Negroes appearing on their respective initial pages, each are the last entry made and part of the writing is across the red line without any space between. In all other instances, there is space between the last name and the red line.

Defense's Plan

Defense efforts will be to show that the names, written in green ink are super-imposed over the red marginal line and therefore were written in after that part of the list had been closed and the red line drawn. A chemical analysis of the two colors of ink, to determine the age of the writing, is also expected to be employed.

Some of the Negroes listed on the roll were persons who had been called as defense witnesses here last April when they were presented to show that Jackson County had Negro residents qualified for jury service but who had been excluded because of race and color. The proceedings then, as now, were in a motion to quash the indictments on the contention that the Grand Jury that returned them was drawn from a roll from which Negroes had been systematically excluded.

Discovery of the names late in the day after the two Jackson officials had spent hours going through the book, threw an obvious surprise into Atty. Gen. Knight and his assistant, Thomas S. Lawson, as it did the newspaper men and meager courtroom audience.

The Jackson County jury roll had been barred from evidence in the proceedings last Spring, but the Morgan County roll had been accepted then, as it was the first part of this week in the defense motion to quash the venires. Names of no Negroes were found in the Morgan document.

It would have been entirely legal, however, for the Morgan jury board to have placed the names of Negroes on its roll any time prior to the drawing of the venire here and achieved as effective a stroke as by having them on the 1931 jury roll of Morgan County, even though the defense and the court knew that they had only recently been added.

If it should be proved that the Jackson jury roll has been tampered with or suffered any irregularities, it would be incumbent upon the attorney general to make a vigorous prosecution.

In event such possible proof should result in a quashing of the indictments, the state would still have recourse to forming another Grand Jury in Jackson County and again taking up the cases.

Permitting introduction of the Jackson jury roll followed Judge Callahan's differing with Judge James E. Horton, who presided here last Spring, on a question put to J. A. Tidwell, Morgan jury board member.

Tidwell had been asked why J. J. Sykes, Decatur Negro, was not on the jury roll and Judge Horton sustained the state's objection. Judge Callahan had Tidwell answer the question, Tidwell stating that Sykes was crippled and of questionable character.

Judge Callahan's third finesse against a reversible error was his ignoring the state statute that provides for only one change of venue, his denial of such a motion for the defense dealing only with cause.

Court was recessed at 9:30 p.m. with Wann, who had been recalled to the witness stand for the third time, still poring through the tome in search of Negroes' names.

Judge Callahan has overruled two previous defense motions seeking to halt the retrial of the Negroes who are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in March, 1931, on a freight train moving through Jackson County.

One motion was for a change of venue, based on a contention that a fair trial could not be had here, and the other to quash the venire drawn for the third trial of Heywood Patterson, scheduled to start Monday, on the same grounds used in the plea to quash the indictments.

The Negroes were convicted following their first trial at Scottsboro, seat of Jackson County, and sentenced to the electric chair. They were granted a new trial by the United States Supreme Court, and Patterson, tried here under a change of venue, was again convicted and sentenced to death. But Judge James E. Horton, who presided, set this verdict aside.

Thinly Veiled Threats of Lynching Made; Issued by Lawyer

By JOHN L. SPIVAK
(The Associated Negro Press)

DECATUR, Ala.—A brazen call to lynch the International Labor Defense attorneys in the Scottsboro case, Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky, is being circulated here in a 54-page pamphlet written and published by one Woodford Mabry, a lawyer of Grave Hill, Ala. Neither the legal nor police authorities of Morgan County are doing anything to stop it.

"Why does the law give you the right to expel the trespasser with just such force as you find necessary?" Counselor Mabry asks in his "brief and argument," as he terms his pamphlet. "It is because the law is too slow to save you and you must save yourself," the booklet says, and continues:

"In like manner, the law may be too slow and uncertain to save a menaced community, because of outside lawyers . . . then that community must exercise its inherent right to defend itself.

"THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE AND ITS METHODS ARE DESPISED HERE IN ALABAMA." (Capitals for emphasis are Mabry's).

Being Avidly Read

This crude call and other similar expressions in the pamphlet for a lynching is directed to the people of Alabama and is being widely distributed here and avidly read. Around the yellow brick courthouse where the Scottsboro boys are to go on trial again for their lives, this reporter saw two in the hands of grim-faced, overalled men who were showing them to others on the courthouse steps. In the center of the town the blue covered pamphlet is in evidence. Those who do not have it have seen it and are discussing its contents.

Just how many of these pamphlets are in Decatur and Morgan County there is no way of telling. A similar pamphlet was confiscated at the trial last spring by Judge James E. Horton, who presided then.

Journal and Guide
Norfolk, Va.

Not only does it contain this bald invitation to a lynching but the tenor of the whole pamphlet is that of fury against the International Labor Defense and "Northerners" who are trying to "put Negroes on juries" (Nowhere in the pamphlet is the word Negro spelled with a capital N). The pamphlet is a bitter invective against those who try to get the Negro "social and political equality."

In Hysterical Vein

Counselor Mabry's "brief and argument" is entitled: "A Reply to Southern Slanderes—In Re: The 'Negro Question,' 'Lynch Law,' etc.—Being an invitation to 'the International Labor Defense' and all other associations advocating social and political equality to 'GET OUT OF' and 'REMAIN AWAY FROM' the State of Alabama. We regard your teachings as dangerous and a MENACE to our state."

The pamphlet is marked by an hysterical tenor, bad grammar and capitalized words for emphasis.

"UNTIL THE ADVENT of the INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE and similar organizations into the South with their dangerous teaching of Social Equality, Socialism, etc., never since emancipation have the relations between the white men and the law abiding Negroes of the South been so cordial, or the confidence of the Negroes in their white neighbors and employers so strong," Attorney Mabry states in his foreword. "THE SOUTHERN WHITE MAN KNOWS THE NEGRO and the NEGRO KNOWS THE SOUTHERN WHITE MAN.

Would Restrict Education

"The BEST HOPE of the Negro of the South lies in the continuance and cultivation of these relations and the education of his children on PURELY PRACTICAL LINES."

Throughout its pages Attorney Mabry calls the white men's attention to the absurdity of paying taxes to educate colored people in Alabama and urges that "Negro education" be restricted to reading, writing and arithmetic."

"A Negro crammed on Latin, Greek, or on physiology and geometry, is a ruined nigger," the learned counsel states and continues:

"The taxing of poor white people to furnish "HIGHER EDUCATION" for Negro wenches and sassy bucks, is an OUTRAGE upon the WHITE and an injury to the Negroes."

Typical Excerpts

Following are a few excerpts from the pamphlet showing its spirit:

"In the South, the aggressions of the Socialist and the Anarchist, the Communists and the International Labor Defense are becoming bolder in spreading their dangerous teachings among the ignorant Negroes of the South, and more urgent becomes the question,—What are we going to do about it?"

"White supremacy should be established by law.

"I take the position that the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Constituion should be repealed."

"Don' you know that Holy writ expressly sanctions and regulates the system (of slavery); that Christ never uttered a word against it, and that ST. PAUL COMMANDED SLAVES TO OBEY THEIR MASTERS?"

Waves Red Shirt

"When these things happen (outsiders defending Negroes) it naturally arouses the indignation of the people and sometimes, they do what the law would have speedily done but for the SHYSTER interlopers.... who must have been sent to Alabama by organizations like the International Labor Defense, composed no doubt of a lot of half breeds, Negroes, Negro-petters, Negro lovers, and anarchists, imbued with the social equality rot and the very foolish idea that Negroes should sit in the jury box with WHITE PEOPLE."

"We will not permit ANY SHYSTER LAWYERS TO COME INTO OUR STATE and traduce its fair name, brand our jurors as being "ignorant, illiterate, jackasses' and our people "semi-barbarous' aflame with blood lust and race hatred,' 'bent on lawlessness,' and deserving of another desolation of invading armies.

Calls It "Good Advice"

"Speaking for myself alone, it is my deliberate opinion, that a recurrence of such conduct will bring about the invoking of the exception to the general rule of law (due legal procedure) above referred to it.

These excerpts would normally be funny. But here in Decatur where the tension is at the breaking point this pamphlet is pouring gasoline upon an already existing flame. And it may be noted again that neither legal nor police authorities are doing anything to stop it.

Negro Jury Service Termed Social Equality. Pamphlet Wants 13th and 14th Amendments Repealed and Slavery Restored.

DECATUR, Ala.—(ANP).—A brazen call to lynch the International Labor Defense attorneys in the Scottsboro case, Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky, is being circulated here in a 54-page pamphlet written and published by one Woodford Mabry, a lawyer of Grewe Hill Ala. Neither the legal nor police authorities of Morgan County are doing anything to stop it.

Counselor Mabry's "brief and argument" is entitled: "A Reply to Southern Slanderers—In Re: 'The Negro Question,' 'Lynch Law,' etc.—Being an invitation to 'the International Labor Defense' and all other associations advocating social and political equality to 'GET OUT OF' and 'REMAIN AWAY FROM' the State of Alabama. We regard your teachings as dangerous and a MENACE to our state."

Throughout its pages Attorney Mabry calls the white man's attention to the absurdity of paying taxes to educate colored people in Alabama and urges that "Negro education" be restricted to reading, writing and arithmetic."

"A negro crammed on Latin, Greek, or on physiology and geometry, is a ruined n——," the learned counsel states and continues:

"The taxing of poor white people to furnish 'HIGHER EDUCATION' for Negro wenches and sassy bucks, is an OUTRAGE upon the WHITE and an injury to the Negroes."

"White supremacy should be established by law.

"I take the position that the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Constitution should be repealed."

"Don't you know that Holy writ expressly sanctions and regulates the system (of slavery) that Christ never uttered a word against it, and that ST. PAUL COMMANDED SLAVES TO OBEY THEIR MASTERS?"

"When these things happen (outsiders defending Negroes) it naturally arouses the indignation of the people and sometimes, they do what the law would have speedily done but for the SHYSTER interlopers . . . who must have been sent to Alabama by organizations like the International Labor Defense, composed of a lot of half breeds, negroes, negro-petters, negro lovers, and anarchists, imbued with the social equality rot and the very foolish idea that negroes should sit in the jury box with WHITE PEOPLE."

LEIBOWITZ RETURNS HOME

Without comment, and with a face as near straight as possible, we publish herewith a news story from The New York World Telegram:

"'I've got to start making a living again,' he said. 'I've spent four months on the case this year without even expense money.'

"Mr. Leibowitz said the conviction of the Negroes on charges of attacking two white girls and their death sentences were expected.

"'In the last case, the jury came to the realization I was not some devil with horns, he shrugged. 'But they live down there. If they had come in with a verdict of not guilty'—again he shrugged. 'Well, I'll let you guess where they would be.'

"'It wasn't a trial of the Negroes,' he continued. 'It was a trial of the whole system and a philosophy resulting from years of tradition.'

"He said that either Alabama must put Negroes on juries or go through the procedure of having each conviction overruled in higher courts interminably.

"'I'll stick to this case until hell freezes over, he said."

Will Raise Funds for Scottsboro Appeal

NEW YORK.—The preparations of the International Labor Defense to carry the fight for the Scottsboro boys once more to the U. S. Supreme Court will be supported by the Civil Liberties Union according to an announcement yesterday by that body.

"The appeal from the trials of the Scottsboro boys just convicted," the announcement said, "will be aided by the Civil Liberties Union through raising funds among its members and friends, to be used by the attorneys retained by the I. L. D. In doing so, the Union follows the policy of supporting the defense established after the first Scottsboro trial, when it became clear that every effort was being made by the state authorities in appeals to passion and prejudice to electrocute these Negroes."

Judge Callahan, Presiding, Reprimands Lawyer For 'Disrespectful' Conduct

Ala.

By T. M. DAVENPORT

DECATUR, ALA., Dec. 4.—(AP)—A Morgan County jury tonight, at its own request, deferred deliberations until tomorrow morning in the case of Clarence Norris, second of seven negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" to face retrial here on charges growing out of an alleged attack on Mrs. Victoria Price in Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

Judge W. W. Callahan admonished the jury that, under no circumstances, was the case to be discussed until it entered the jury room tomorrow and not to "receive any telephone calls, written or oral communications whatever."

12 Exceptions To Charge

Judge Callahan completed his hour and twenty-minute charge at 5:57 p.m. but before the jury could retire Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of counsel for the negro, asked that 12 exceptions be noted and special charges be made.

Norris was tried on the same charge on which he was convicted and sentenced to death in Scottsboro in April, 1931, along with his six co-defendants, who were granted new trials by the United States Supreme Court.

He was the second to be given a retrial here, Heywood Patterson having been convicted of attacking Mrs. Price last Spring and sentenced to death. This judgment was set aside by Judge James E. Horton, who presided, on the grounds that the evidence did not warrant the verdict. Patterson was tried again last week and again was convicted and sentenced to death.

In his exhaustive charge, Judge Callahan went into all the phases of the law in instructing the jury of its requirements, and the weighing of evidence, and returning a verdict.

He held that chastity or unchastity of the prosecutrix was not admissible as evidence, as the defendant did not claim consent, but denied in toto the charge, adding "where there is no consent and where there is no claim of consent, then gentlemen of the jury the chastity or unchastity of the prosecutrix, is not an issue. That is the law in Alabama and it seems to be the law in Connecticut, Vermont, New York, Michigan, Ohio and other States as well.

"The law forbids rape," he said, "and it is intended to protect all, and will protect all, womankind, regardless of her past, her character, or her station in life. I'm not raising the color line either. I am telling you the law, if it was not a law to protect all, would not be a just law."

The Judge charged the jury that the defendant's plea of not guilty placed the burden of proof on the State, and "puts the duty on the State to prove the charge on the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt in your minds.

"The law protects the defendant who is hailed into court and guarantees him a fair and impartial trial. When it says that, it says it to all men, and it does not make any difference who he is, whether he is a citizen of Alabama or any other State. It does not matter what his station of life is, or his color. That is the law in Alabama."

Montgomery

Leibowitz took exceptions to the Judge's charge that the unchastity of the prosecutrix was not admissable, except where the defense consisted of consent, and that her character was not at issue because consent was not the defense.

Ala.

An exception was noted when Judge Callahan declined to charge the jury that the jury "may and must consider the reputation," of this and all other witnesses, in giving weight to their evidence.

Judge Callahan gave a special charge that Mrs. Price, as the prosecutrix, had a special interest and an exception was taken when Judge Callahan held that he had not charged the jury that they "must" accept portions of testimony where a witness has "willfully misrepresented" any of the facts.

"Reasonable Doubt" Explained

Leibowitz also asked for a special instruction that where any witness had wilfully misrepresented any material fact, all of the testimony of such witness might be discarded, and, at the attorney's request, the court explained "reasonable doubt."

Qualifying Of Jurymen For Second Trial Is Begun Shortly After First Ends

By T. M. DAVENPORT

DECATUR, ALA., Nov. 30.—(AP)—Twelve Morgan County citizens, who, after three hours of deliberation, had not reached a verdict in the trial of Heywood Patterson, one of seven negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, were ordered locked up for the night at 6 p.m. by Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding.

Judge Callahan informed attorneys on both sides he was not inclined to keep the jury up until late at night trying to reach a verdict, and ordered the bailiff to return them to the jury room to resume deliberation at 8:30 a.m., tomorrow.

"Now, gentlemen," said Judge Callahan, in informing the jury that no further deliberation would be held tonight, "let me caution you again that you are not to discuss this case outside the jury room even among yourselves. I strictly warn you against talking with anyone. either over the telephone or personally, and against receiving any communication, verbal or written."

Norris Venire Drawn

Qualifying a jury for the trial of Clarence Norris, second of the defendants to be called to trial here on charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, Huntsville, Ala., mill worker, the same charge on which Patterson was tried and has been convicted and sentenced to death twice was begun as soon as the Patterson jury begun its deliberation.

When the qualification of the venire was completed only 24 men were left on it and the law fixes a minimum of 30.

Judge Callahan sent for the jury box and drew 12 names from the City of Decatur. Should the necessary six not be qualified out of the additional names drawn, double the number missing will be drawn again.

Both negroes were in a group of nine arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., March 25, 1931, and charged with attacking Mrs Price and her companion, Ruby Bates, also a Huntsville mill worker, two of the negroes have been adjudged juveniles and are in custody of the Morgan County Juvenile Court.

Joseph R. Brodsky, of defense counsel, said this afternoon that the interrogatories of Ruby Bates, taken in a New York hospital had been delivered to Judge Callahan and would be used in Norris's trial.

In a lengthy charge to the Patterson jury, which took nearly an hour and a half, Judge Callahan went into the law governing the case, defining the crime and governing the weighing of evidence.

"You must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of this defendant," said Judge Callahan, "or should return a verdict of acquittal. If, however, you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, your verdict should be one of guilty."

Sentences Revealed

The jurist instructed the jury that, in event of a verdict of guilty, the jury could fix the punishment at death, or from 10 years' imprisonment to life.

After he had completed his charge at 3:01 p.m., Judge Callahan held the jury for a few minutes to add to his charge, as Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, retained by the International Labor Defense, called his attention to omission of the form of a verdict for acquittal. The jury retired at 3:05 p.m.

"Gentlemen," said the Judge in picking up his charge again, "I have cautioned you throughout my charge, to be sure beyond a reasonable doubt. . . I have told you if there isn't sufficient evidence to convict, then it is your duty to acquit."

In his charge, Judge Callahan said, "the situation in life of the woman, has nothing to do with the crime, as the law protects the woman of the streets, as well as the member of the prominent family who lives in luxury. . .

"The law guarantees the defendant a fair and impartial trial. . . . It is no respector of persons. The most humble, the most despicable, the confirmed criminal, has the protection of a fair and just trial. The defendant is clothed with the presumption of innocence until the evidence convinces you beyond the shadow of a doubt."

The two principal points for it to decide, the jury was told, was whether a crime had been committed and then whether the defendant committed it.

12-1-33

Just before the noon recess of three hours in observance of Thanksgiving Day, there was a flurry when Atty. Gen. Knight, in closing the argument for the State, said "you cannot avenge what has been done to Victoria Price, but you can stop it from being done to another woman."

Montgomery

Ala.

Leibowitz immediately was on his feet with an objection and asked that it be in the record. "I ask that the court have put into the record the Attorney-General's remarks as an appeal to passion and prejudice.

"It is a passion," Knight retorted. "we all have a passion to protect the womanhood of Alabama."

Another Mistrial Asked

Leibowitz then moved for a mistrial which Judge Callahan denied. Knight closed his argument a moment later and court was recessed unexpectedly.

"I think, gentlemen," said Judge Callahan, "that we should all go to our firesides and give thanks to a divine providence for the blessings of the past year."

Knight, in his argument, took issue with Leibowitz on the testimony of Dr. R. R. Bridges, of Scottsboro. Leibowitz contended that the physician's examination, showing no extensive marks of violence and only minor scratches on the arms, substantiated the defense contention that Mrs. Price had not been attacked.

The Attorney General argued before the jury that the testimony of the physician, who though subpoenaed by the State, was placed on the stand by the defense had showed evidence to substantiate the claim of an attack.

Patterson's third trial began Monday, after a week of preliminary arguments including a motion for a change of venue.

The defense sought unsuccessfully to quash the indictment returned in Jackson County, on March 31, 1931, and the venire drawn for this trial on grounds that negroes were "systematically excluded" from the juries in each county "solely because of race and

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 29.—The jury trying Heywood Patterson will get the case tomorrow morning.

While waiting for Dr. Reisman of Chattanooga to arrive, Leibowitz got Solicitor Bailey of Jackson County, who originally prosecuted the Scottsboro boys, on the stand, over Knight's and Callahan's vociferous objections. The court finally agreed to permit the defense to ask Bailey one question. Leibowitz asked him if he paid any attention to Victoria Price's step-ins and whether he noticed any stains immediately after she claimed to be raped. Bailey replied that he paid no attention to them. Callahan after waiting an hour for Dr. Reisman decided not to wait any longer. He ordered the prosecution and the defense to start summations to the jury.

Bailey, who had sat quiet all during the trial, opened up for the state, bellowing as usual and demanding that the jury find Patterson guilty, and sentence him to death in the electric chair. Knight followed with a similar plea for death.

Leibowitz in a two-hour summation pointed out the lies of Victoria Price, Gilly and other witnesses, showing the contradictions in their testimony between this trial and the former trial. In a touching, ringing plea he asked the jury to set Patterson free.

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 29.—Indifferent to the fact tha Heywood Patterson's life hun in the balance, Circuit Judg W.W. ("Speed") Callahan toda refused continuance of the trial unt tomorrow morning to give the defen time to get Ruby Bates' testimony.

Ruby's interrogatories (questio and answers regarding her origina story of being attacked by Scottsbor boys and subsequent confession tha whole thing was a frame-up) is th defense's most vital evidence.

Samuel Leibowitz, Internationa Labor Defense Counsel defending th first of seven Scottsboro boys bein rushed to trial by "Speed" Callahar explained that Ruby was in a hos pit[illegible] a major operation. A oon as physicians permitted, inter rogatories were [illegible] nov n the way [illegible] the de ense wanted was a continuance un il morning. Defense counsel offere s evidence telegrams [illegible] offic and physicians but Callahan i letermined to rush the case through.

Immediately after Callahan re fused to continue [illegible] giv Ruby's interrogatories time to ge here, the state put on Major Joseph Sterns, commander of the troops or guard during the [illegible] trial, in Scottsboro.

Since Sterns was to tell of hearing the boys "confess," Leibowitz demanded that the jury be excluded while the court determined if the evidence was to be permitted.

In a silent, tense courtroom Sterns swore hearing Roy Wright point out Charlie Weems as the boy who "had something to do with the girls." Roy's alleged confession was said to have been made to William Harris, reporter of the Chattanooga Times, owned by Ochs of the N. Y. Times. The defense contends that the boys were threatened with a mob outside if they did not confess.

Startling newspapermen and arousing murmurs of dissatisfaction among the spectators, Callahan for once ruled an important decision for the defense. He said:

"Those boys were scared. Soldiers were all around. I will not permit their confessions in evidence."

Persistent refusal to let the defense show that Victoria Price had relations with men the night before the alleged attack by the Scottsboro boys, marked Circuit Judge Callahan's rulings today.

Despite the plea of the International Labor Defense counsel defending the first of the Scottsboro boys on trial again, that it is essential to establish that from a medical viewpoint, Callahan refused to allow it.

The day was marked by amazing decisions from the bench. Time after time Callahan permitted Knight to ask questions of witnesses along the line he refused to permit Leibowitz to follow. A whole series of decisions by Judge Horton, who presided at the spring trial which allowed such testimony, was overruled by the present presiding judge. In many decisions Callahan sought refuge in legal technicalities.

In one instance Callahan's antagonism against the defense was so pronounced that he accused Leibowitz of trying to implant "vicious" ideas about Victoria Price's chastity in the minds of the jurors. When Leibowitz demanded a mistrial, Callahan apologized and ordered the word "vicious" struck from the record.

Carter Testifies for Defense

Lester Carter, Scottsboro defense witness, was the first witness called when the court resumed this morning. He testified he knew Victoria Price sixty days before the famous train ride. He said he met Victoria and Jack Tiller in the Huntsville jail.

Each time Leibowitz tried to show the sexual relations Victoria had with Lester, Callahan ordered the defense not to ask such questions and cautioned the jury to pay no attention to such questions.

When Leibowitz, rephrasing his question asked the same thing, Callahan said furiously to the jury: "Pay no attention to such questions. They can have only vicious desire to get something across to you that I have already ruled on."

Leibowitz paled with anger and in a quiet voice demanded a mistrial be called because of the judge's prejudicing the jury against the defense.

"Overrule motion for mistrial," snapped Callahan, "but if the word 'vicious' is offensive to you (Leibowitz) I will withdraw it. Jury, you will pay no attention to my use of that word."

All through the direct examination Callahan kept interrupting Leibowitz. When the defense counsel tried to establish fear of the Mann Act consequences in crossing the State line from Tennessee to Alabama as motives for attack accusation by Victoria, Callahan stopped him, saying "of course they crossed the State line. They had to get her. Nothing to that." When Callahan did not interrupt, Attorney General Knight did. It was almost impossible to ask Carter any questions.

The audience, which filled the court room, chuckled every time Leibowitz was blocked in his questioning by Callahan.

Although Callahan permitted Victoria and Gilley to tell about Chattanooga "jungles," he would not permit Carter to tell of being with the girls in the "jungle" the night before the train ride.

Carter finally managed to say he Gilley, Ruby and Victoria boarded the freight together. He told of the fight between colored and white boys, supporting Patterson's story. At Stevenson all got off, then got on again on a gondola.

"No other person got into that gondola during the ride to Stevenson," he testified. "After leaving Stevenson, some white boys on the freight came towards us. A fight started with a group of Negro boys.

Carter Jailed, But Was Not Called At First Trial

"I jumped off the train. I don't know what happened to Orville Gilley."

"In Stevenson I met several other white boys who were on train. There were five of us. We were taken to Scottsboro. Gleason, one of the boys, was there. Victoria was there, sitting in an automobile. She motioned to me and another boy."

Leibowitz brought out that Carter was locked up in the Scottsboro jail 18 days, kept in the witness room during the original Scottsboro trial as a material witness, but was never called because of his tory supporting the testimony of the Scottsboro boys.

When Leibowitz pointed to Solicitor Bailey, of Jackson County sitting at the prosecution table who prosecuted at Scottsboro and asked if he kept Carter in the witness room Callahan refuses to let Carter answer.

"I came to tell the truth," Carter began.

Callahan sarcastically interrupted "you're presumed to be here for that purpose." The audience and the jury chuckled their approval of Callahan's badgering tactics. Leibowitz protested the judge's sarcasm and Callahan apologized.

Under cross examination, Knight sought to show Carter's connection with radicals.

"Where did you come from?" Knight asked.

Whispering murmurs and laughter ran through the court room.

Having achieved his effect, Knight started hammering at Carter's story. The audience showed its antagonism against the witness by significant murmurs and comments in undertones. One juror smirked.

Throughout the examination, Leibowitz, objections were regularly overruled, contrasting with Callahan's almost invariable sustaining of Knight's objections.

Knight kept pressing Carter for an explanation as to why he left the gondola the girls were in to another gondola, whereupon Carter gave Knight sound advice on what freigh

Nine State Witnesses Called

The State called nine witnesses to the stand, including Mrs. Price and Orvel Gilley, of Albertville, Ala., both of whom identified Patterson as one of six negroes alleged to have attacked the woman. Gilley appeared on the witness stand only once in all the previous trials as a rebuttal witness.

During the Patterson trial last Spring Gilley's name was frequently mentioned as the only one of seven white youths who remained on the train after a fight just after the train left Stevenson. In the current trial, he testified that he witnessed the attacks on Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates.

The defense called 12 witnesses, including Dr. Bridges and read the testimony of E. L. Lewis, in the former trial, who since has died. Ruby Bates, who made a sensational appearance last April, and repudiated her testimony at Scottsboro in 1931, when she identified some of the defendants as having attacked her, was not a witness.

A delay was asked yesterday by Leibowitz to permit him time to receive interrogatories taken from the Bates girl who is ill in a New York hospital, following an operation last Monday, but Judge Callahan, declined to grant the delay.

Patterson and four of his co-defendants, took the stand to deny participation in any attacks and each testified he had not seen any women aboard the train. They admitted participating in the fight with the white boys, but placed the scene in a different car from that the State contended the attack occurred.

VERNON, TEX.
VERNON DAILY RECOR

DEC 2 1933

Enough Delay Has Been Tolerated.

Certain interests very obviously have chosen to make an example of the so-called Scottsboro case, apparently not so much because of interest in the principals as for the sake of the example itself. A group of negroes accused of attacking two white women have been found guilty and sentenced to die in two trials. Now one of them has been found guilty for the third time, and again given the supreme sentence.

After the former trials, the influence and legal talent employed by the national organization which has intervened in the case, managed to arrest judgment. By legal technicalities which the law provides they have found it possible to defeat the sentences of juries, and they are making much of it throughout the land of alleged prejudices and racial hatreds which they claim are responsible for the severe penalties. They have charged about everything from unfair trials to prejudiced juries, and it seems that in the interest of justice the time has arrived to disregard them.

Surely after three juries have found the accused guilty and assessed their punishment it is time to act in the interest of justice. To be sure, there is a certain amount of prejudice against negroes accused of an attack on a white woman in the South. However, the same severe sentence frequently is meted out to white man accused of similar crimes.

It is scarcely possible that every member of three different juries which have heard the cases of the negroes could be prejudiced and deliberately unfair. It should be remembered that if any one member of any jury should fail to agree with the verdict, it could never have been returned.

It is almost a reflection upon the integrity of the South to imply that there is such unanimity in alleged unfairness.

There is every reason to believe that the negroes have been given a fair trial, that they have had competent counsel and adequate opportunity to present their case. Unless the machinery of justice moves onward now disrespect for it will be encouraged. Our courts should not brook continued arrest of judgment.

Scottsboro Trial

By MARY HEATON VORSE

DECATUR, Ala., April 6. — The first phase of the trial of the nine Negroes accused of attacking two white girls near Scottsboro ended with what is everywhere considered a victory for the defense. More than the "Scottsboro boys" are on trial in the courtroom in Decatur. The defense has attacked the jury system of the south. It has attacked the white control of the courts and the legal machinery of the state. Between the opening of this famous trial March 27 and adjournment for a week-end recess March 31, the defense has proved that no Negroes appear on the jury lists of ~~Decatu~~ in direct defiance of the 14th amendment. The exclusion of Negroes from all jury lists admittedly lays the foundation for appeal to the supreme court of the United States in case the nine Negroes are found guilty.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN stand with fixed bayonets at the stairs. Once the courtroom is full—it holds 425—no one further is allowed in. A hundred or more spectators are awaiting admittance behind a barrier. They are mostly Negroes and they wait hours for admittance. People stand outside the courthouse as early as 5 in the morning. The audience of men is tense and absorbed, fascinated by the cleverness of the defense counsel and at the same time execrating him for it. To many in the audience the courtroom has been movie theater and lecture room in one. They are trained to appreciate the fine points of a great trial lawyer—and Samuel Leibowitz is more than a great trial lawyer; he is a supreme artist. His methods, his technique, are as far above those of the ordinary lawyer as a Paderewski is above an ordinary good pianist. The most routine question he asks in his beautifully modulated voice becomes eventful and living. He plays upon his audience with an incredible mastery. His methods are quiet, simple, unhistrionic. Whenever he opens his mouth there is the excitement of drama. He has a clever face, a fresh color, grayish hair and he is challenging the very essence of the southern system. No wonder the men bend forward in their seats. To well dressed old men behind me are saying:

"It'll be a wonder if ever he leaves town alive."

A fine looking young fellow next to me confides, "I'll be surprised if they let him finish the trial."

"Do you mean there's a movement on foot to railroad him out of town?"

"They do say there is. They ain't advertisin' or makin' speeches, but they'll know what to do when the time comes."

He has received many threatening letters. Friday night additional guardsmen were sent for to guard his apartment.

THIS hostility is as yet restrained and under the surface but a very real factor to be reckoned with. In contrast to the hostile audience is the urbanity of the court. The passages between Leibowitz and Attorney General Knight are conducted with spirit but with good manners and good temper. The district attorney has a long, sensitive, quivering nose. He is dark, quick, very intelligent. His pleasant southern voice contrasts with Liebowitz's clear precision, Gen. Chamlee of Scottsboro and Joseph Brodsky of the International Labor Defense and the other defense attorneys. When for a moment Gen. Chamlee takes Mr. Leibowitz's place the excitement dies. Things are dull.

Next to the officers sits the black boy, Heywood Patterson. He is dressed in blue overalls and he is so black that there is a blue bloom on his wide face. It comes on one with almost a shock that all this array of legal talent, all this court full of intent people is about this boy, that he is the black core of the proceedings. He sits quiet listening sometimes, nodding his head softly as if to some inner rhythm. The Negroes in the courtroom filling the side seats appointed for them lean forward to get a glimpse of him.

Meantime all the prominent Negroes in the community are filing before the judge being questioned as to their fitness for jury duty and asked whether they have ever been called for such duty. There are doctors, ministers, professors, business men. Almost all have college degrees. Some more than one. They are grave men, of substance, and of course not one has ever been called to jury duty. All say they would be glad to serve. One of the most significant things of this trial is the rallying to the defense of the accused Negroes of other educated and well-to-do colored people. A company of 25 Negroes has come voluntarily from Scottsboro to testify on this jury question. They have come in many instances voluntarily without subpenaes. They are willing to serve on juries and to do these things is to face a real danger.

The questioning of the witnesses is over. Leibowitz asks for the jury files of the last three years. To the amazement of the courtroom the judge allows this. The district attorney looks absolutely deflated. The courtroom gasps. The imposing red book—doom's book it is nicknamed—is brought. Leibowitz goes up to the book and smacks it with the flat of his hand, a gesture of triumph. Commissioner Tidwell undergoes a long cross-questioning as to whether he has ever known of a colored juror. He hasn't. He is a vast, red-faced man and he sputters angrily under the relentless, suave questioning. It is over at last.

Leibowitz makes the motion with immense urgency that the venue be quashed on the ground that no Negroes have been included. The judge denies the motion. The first stage of the trial is over. The jury is empaneled. Leibowitz has challenged the white supremacy of the courts. He has laid the foundation for an appeal. He has done exactly and with precision what he set out to do. The black boy, Heywood Patterson, accused of attacking Virginia Price, sits like an obsidian image. People in the courtroom whisper, "It'll be a wonder if Leibowitz gets out alive."

The Scottsboro Case

No case in recent years has attracted so much attention as that now in progress at Decatur in which eight negroes are being tried for assaulting two white women. The crime was committed in Jackson county and the case was first tried at Scottsboro where the negroes were convicted and given death sentence. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of Alabama where it was affirmed. From this decision an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States where the decision of the lower court was reversed and the case sent back for a new trial. The trial was transferred to the Morgan county Circuit Court where it started about ten days ago.

The jury system of Alabama is being attacked by the defense. The defense demurred to the indictment because there were no negroes on th Grand Jury that found the indictment. They also objected to the petit jury summoned to try the case because the names of no negroes appeared in the jury box. The objections were overruled by the court and the case was allowed to proceed but it is expected that if the negroes are again convicted an appeal will be made to the United Supreme Court. If the court should hold that the defendants were entitled to a trial by a mixed jury then our jury system will have to be revised so as to permit negroes to serve on the jury.

The questions at issue in this trial are far-reaching and may cause further race troubles. It may cause the people to again resort to mob violence to protect the white women of this country.

Down a side street off Times Square a 12-foot elephant, escorted by a 3-foot donkey and an ordinary 5-foot 7-inch circus attendant, approaches sedately. Coming to meet this procession slowly are three mounted policemen, one of the horses highly nervous at the sight of the elephant. The horse must be new to the city. Elephants in the vicinity of Times Square are more common than in some parts of Africa.

Two hundred feet away on Broadway proper a broken line of marchers trickles in and out among the sidewalk crowds. They are mostly colored youths. A couple of placards ~~denouncing~~ the Decatur verdict serve to mark off the procession from the movie throngs on the sidewalk. Only the next morning is it revealed in the papers that a few blocks further north there were clashes between the demonstrators and the police.

It thus appears that the three mounted policemen were concerned with law and order and not with the elephant from the circus. But not one in a hundred passers-by could tell. In other words, a normal Spring afternoon in New York

LET'S TRY TO KEEP COOL

In discussing the retrial of the Scottsboro Negroes which opens today at Decatur, the Birmingham News concludes some thoughtful observations with a very timely warning. The News says:

> The state has an ordeal to go through with. But Alabamians can do much by their own demeanor to mitigate the unpleasantness of it—by exercising patience and forbearance, by remaining even-tempered and cool headed, by refraining, above all, from retaliating in kind to offensive words or acts. By such conduct we can best uphold the dignity and good name of Alabama, and by the same token manifest our desire for a fair trial and even-handed justice. It is the duty of Alabamians, both to their state and to the cause of justice, to be patient and tolerant in deportment, fair and unprejudiced in spirit.

These timely words of counsel and guidance are fitly spoken. Unfortunately the feeling and convictions of the people of Alabama regarding these cases and the dominant sentiments prevalent in the North and East about them, are poles apart. There the Negroes are looked upon as helpless victims of racial preudice who are about to be railroaded to the chair in defiance of the law and the evidence. Here, there is a widespread presumption of guilt, but it is coupled with a genuine hope that every constitutional guarantee will be invoked to see that evenhanded ustice is done. It is inevitable that these two radically divergent viewpoints should provoke unpleasant repercussions. As the News enjoins, it is a good time for Alabamians to keep their shirts on and their heads cool and their passions subdued while this balodorous trial, replete with so many explosive features, winds its way along. Therefore during this hectic ordeal let's try to practice that rare virtue, self-control, which all good men preach but which is so difficult to practice. We shall gain nothing and lose much in the esteem of the world by recriminations and onslaughts upon those who speak ill of us. We have been taught to believe that the right will ultimately prevail in this old world and we are interested in securing nothing more than a just verdict.

10-19-33

New York

An investigation is being conducted into his death by the International Labor Defense. The circumstances around the sudden death by poisoning of this important Scottsboro defense witness, who has been threatened with death by the Ku Klux Klan indicate that he was done away with in preparation for the new Scottsboro lynch trials.

Lewis' testimony at Decatur last April, that he saw Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in company with Lester Carter and Orville Gilley in the jungle at Chattanooga the day before the train-ride from which followed the arrest and frame-up of the nine Scottsboro boys, was very important in breaking down the perjured testimony of Victoria Price.

While he was in Decatur waiting for the trial of Charlie Weems, which was to follow that of Heywood Patterson, but which was indefinitely postponed, his home in Chattanooga was burned down by incendiaries.

Twice since then his life has been threatened by Ku Klux Klansmen and emissaries of Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight of Alabama and ex-Senator Thomas J. Heflin. Each time he succeeded in escaping from them. He had declared his willingness to brave the terror of the white landlord Klans of Northern Alabama to return at any time to repeat his testimony.

A demand is being raised by the International Labor Defense for an open, public investigation of the death of Lewis, which is seen as a development of the campaign of terror and intimidation against the Negro witnesses in the Scottsboro case.

This demand, it was pointed out, must be supported from every part of the country, by every sympathetic individual and organization, in letters, resolutions, and telegrams to the mayor of Chattanooga.

SCOTTSBORO CASES AGAIN SET FOR TRIAL

Special Session of the Alabama Court Will Be Held at Decatur Nov. 27.

Times

New York

DECATUR, Ala., Oct. 19 (AP).—Judge W. W. Callahan of Morgan County Circuit Court announced today after a conference with Attorney General Thomas E. Knight and Judge James E. Horton, that a special term of court would be called for Nov. 27 to try the "Scottsboro cases." He said the trial was set at their request and "the suggestion of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama."

Attorney General Knight, who directed the prosecution of Heywood Patterson, one of nine Negro defendants indicted in Jackson County in March, 1931, for an alleged attack on two white girls, arrived last night for the conference.

Patterson, first of the nine Negroes to face retrial, was convicted and sentenced to death last April on charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, but Judge Horton on June 22 set aside the verdict for lack of sufficient evidence.

After the Patterson trial further hearings were postponed by Judge Horton because of feeling engendered by a statement of Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief counsel for the Negro, reflecting on the jury, and the reply by Attorney General Knight.

Patterson and seven of the Negroes were convicted and sentenced to death in April, 1931, three weeks after the alleged attacks aboard a Southern Railway freight train.

The Alabama Supreme Court reversed the sentence of Eugene Williams, holding he was a juvenile and not in the jurisdiction of the circuit courts and the United States Supreme Court set aside the convictions of the other seven.

A mistrial resulted for Roy Wright, 14, in Jackson Circuit Court in April, 1931, when a jury could not agree on punishment.

Since the original trials, Ruby Bates, second of the alleged attack victims, has changed her story, denying that she was molested aboard the train.

SCOTTSBORO CASES MAY BE SET SOON

Knight Goes To Decatur For Conference With Judge Foster

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., left yesterday afternoon for Decatur where, it is understood, he will confer with Circuit Judge J. E. Horton, Jr., concerning the setting for retrial, of the cases of the seven negro "Scottsboro" defendants. It is Mr. Knight's wish, it is believed, that as early a date as possible be named for the trials to begin.

All seven of the negroes were convicted and sentenced to death for criminally assaulting two young white women near Scottsboro, Ala., early in 1931, and judgments of the Jackson Circuit Court were later affirmed by a majority of the Supreme Court of Alabama. Appeals were taken to the U. S. Supreme Court, however, resulting in reversals and the granting of new trials.

A change of venue applied for by defense counsel, from Jackson to Morgan County, was granted. Tried a second time, at Decatur, Heywood Patterson, one of the seven negro defendants, was again found guilty and sentenced to death. Motion for new trial thereafter filed by defense attorneys, was granted by Circuit Judge Horton whose ruling in doing so was, in effect, that the evidence presented by the State was not adequate for a conviction.

From time to time, it has been rumored that in view of this ruling, and the fact that evidence against all seven of the negroes follows practically identical lines, Judge Horton would probably recuse himself from sitting in further trials of the cases, and that another judge would be named to preside.

This rumor was revived yesterday, the report being that the probability of Judge Horton being succeeded on the circuit bench by another judge in trial of the "Scottsboro" cases, is much stronger than it has ever been.

Case Has Made Oppression Of Negro a Part Of The Social World Thought; Question Now Is Will Supreme Court Condone Alabama Injustice

By JOHN L. SPIVAK

(For the Associated Negro Press)

NEW YORK, Dec. 14—Seventeen more dramatic days—from November 20 to December 6—have become a part o the crazy quilt pattern of Scottsboro. I write crazy quilt but I know that that is not all, the full impression mad on one by the bizarre facets of social attitudes exposed i this temendously important contest between justice, as defined in law and ethics, and human nature as it is found in Alabama.

The primary objects in the trials have been simple, life and death. On the one side, the State of Alabama demands death of nine Negro boys for the alleged rape of two tramp white girls. On the other, Negroes and other justice-loving people ask that their lives be spared because they did not commit the crime charged against them.

Three times has Heywood Patterson been condemned to die. Twice has a like fate been pronounced against Clarence Norris. Once death stared six of the other seven boys in the face. For three years this coming April, these boys will have lived with death as a haunt and life as a hope, boys who had not yet learned the full meaning of life.

But although the primary objects of both the state and the defense in the trials are easily seen they are by no means the dominant forces actuating either the prosecution or the defense. It is doubtful now whether life or death either mean so much to the boys themselves as the secondary objectives toward which the state and the defense strive.

These secondary objectives make of the Scottsboro cases a cause celebre. The map of historic causes and effects is drawn with queer and irregular boundaries. A hundred years from today, Samuel Leibowitz will sleep with his fa thers. Mother Earth also will have taken Prosecutor Tom Knight to her bosom, mayhap with a word of reproach. The Scottsboro boys will surely have done with life by then. All, nearly all, who now live, will sleep with their eyes toward heaven, and persons yet unborn will reconstruct these times in terms of the social forces which dominated them. What will that unborn historian think of Scottsboro? What will be his picture of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, standing before Judge W. W. "Speed" Callahan, and saying again, "I'm not guilty"?

Will the reader pardon me if I speculate? Shall the future historian glance from Rousseau who wrote a message to feed the fires of liberty in one century to Marx in the next century depicting a new relation in society? Shall the Russian revolution be symbolical of the flowering of Marxian philosophy as the French revolution was of that of Rousseau? Shall the American Negro, thousands of miles from the birth of the New Idea, play the same role in the Spread of the New Order as did the Haitian Negro, a speck in the Atlantic, did to make liberty a fact in the New World?

Scottsboro is today a world theme, a part of the ideology of the new philosophy, held by some to be dangerous. How odd that out of the tribulations of the oppressed Negro in a strange land should be found the flint upon which to strike this new fire! How odd that Christianity should have come to the world through a subject race! Not the Romans, not the whites of Alabama. Pontius Pilate and "Speed" Callahan both wiped their hands. "I can't believe," said "Speed" "that any white citizens of Jackson county would be dishonest enough to forge the jury rolls."

By virtue of Scottsboro, the American Negro is today a part of active world thought, in the vortex of the clash of interest against interest, race against race. His interests merge with those of the poor everywhere. Leibowitz, the defender, and Patterson, the defended, look at each other with a light of understanding in their eyes. Each represents an oppressed group. Each writhes under the heel of prejudice. The world is coming to grips on this and other questions which cannot be confined within the limits of the state boundaries of Alabama — an old man clinging to habit, still dipping snuff.

Scottsboro has helped the Negro. Since Reconstruction the courts of southern states have been treating Negroes as they wished. They will continue the effort. But a gap, very wide, has been opened. Through the gap, Negroes now see the way to the Supreme Court of the United States. It will be determined whether reason or prejudice rules there. The South is not quite sure. It is giving in—not in the Scottsboro case yet—but in many others. Prejudice has had it head thrown back, and the boys are still alive.

How small, how contemptible is a "Speed" Callahan in the picture of what is happening! How small he must loom beside the black boys of Scottsboro when the future historian writes — his only claim to memory being that he sought to hasten the boys to their death and obstructed their defense.

And what a grand position must be reserved for these boys. Thousands of brave men and women have gone to an unjust death and have been forgotten. But they did not die in a cause. How peaceful a couch might have seemed the auto-da-fe of Huss resting on such a cause as Scottsboro! What exalted heights of oratory Robert Emmett might have reached inspired by Scottsboro!

The future historian will read the records of the Scottsboro trials, testimony which the press of a dominant race will not print. He will see placed in the hands of the Scottsboro boys the lights of the new hope of the world today and observe them standing courageously before "Speed" Callahan's bar of judgment, bravely protesting, "I'm not guilty"!

And "Speed" will say: "Let the jury decide."

But no jury can decide, for Alabama is not interested in the innocenece of the Scottsboro boys. The power of Alabama seeks their death and would seek to prove the boys guilty as a pretext for executing them. They would kill them to keep meddlers out of Alabama and to keep "Niggers in their places."

Of course, no nine white boys could have been "put on the spot" at Scottsboro because, according to old "Speed" Callahan, the presumption of rape is only to be relied upon where Negro men and white women are concerned. How laughable! But if nine white boys had been in the place of the nine colored boys, the whiet boys would have been free on the 25th of March, 1931, the same day the alleged crime was committed.

No wonder "Speed" Callahan grinned at northern newspaper men all during the trials of Patterson and Norris. He was satisfying the mob of Alabama, but he cringed from the spectacle of what outsiders would think of him, cracking the whip on the road to death.

But heaven be praised, there is a Supreme court of the United States. Alabama will go broke before the lives of these boys are sacrificed. In the meantime, their race will have gained and they will have come through the mould of the martyrs.

NEGROES ON JURIES

The Scottsboro cases involve, more than any other thing outside the crime itself, the rights and liabilities of negroes to serve on juries in Alabama. This important question will be submitted to the United Supreme court, when the Alabama courts are through with the case. The claim is that negroes were systematically excluded from the jury lists on account of their race and color. The denial of this as a fact by the county officials, is a practical acknowledgement of the correctness of Liebowitz's contention as a matter of law. Though, as a matter of law, it might not affect the case of the Scottsboro negroes. Any negroes on the panel would have been subject to peremptory challenge, with no cause assigned, which would have eliminated them, just as effectually as if they had not been called. The right to serve on juries is individual, not racial. Any negro excluded from jury duty as such can have his name put in the box by appealing to the courts to compel the authorities to put it there. But, as a matter of fact, few, if any, negroes want to be jurors. It was once tried by a judge in this county and they all clamored to be excused. It would have been an extraordinary negro who would have served in those Scottsboro cases, if there were any possible way to get out of it.

Callahan Blocks the Questioning of State Witnesses

BULLETIN

DECATUR, Nov. 28.—The tension in Decatur, which had died down somewhat, flamed up again today as a result of the big screaming headlines of local and Birmingham papers playing up the statement of Gov. Rolfe of California approving the double California lynchings. Papers carrying these headlines were much in evidence in the crowded courtroom. Comments and whispering were frequent.

By JOHN L. SPIVAK

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 28.— A parade of state's witnesses were saved today from open confession of lying by Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding over Heywood Patterson's third trial for his life.

Repeatedly, as Samuel Leibowitz chief International Labor Defense attorney, defending the first of the Scottsboro cases, pressed witness after witness, showing they told different stories today than they told at former Scottsboro trials, "Speed" Callahan ordered him not to question them any more along the line defense counsel followed.

On one occasion when Leibowitz pressed for an answer from an harrassed and floundering witness, Callahan banged furiously on the bench and warned him that "something will happen if you don't stop."

Defense Relentlessly Exposes Lies of Witnesses

Among the state witnesses whose stories were exposed as absurd in their incredibility was Luther Morris, who "saw the Negroes pulling girls back in the freight car and heard their screams." Leibowitz showed Morris was near sighted, needing glasses even to look at pictures, as well as hard of hearing. It was while he was on the stand and Leibowitz was showing up the witness physical ailments which made it impossible for him to have seen and heard what he testified to, that Callahan ordered Leibowitz to stop that line of questioning.

Gilley Admits Coaching By Knight

The much sought after and mysteriously missing Orville Gilley, phantastic knight of the road, was finally produced as the State's chief corroborative witness. Under a battering cross-examination by Leibowitz, he admitted holding conferences with Attorney-General Knight, and Victoria Price in Huntsville two weeks ago. His testimony followed the identical story told by Victoria Price and in many instances he used the same words, although he contradicted her in her "tale of" being struck on the head with a gun. He was, undoubtedly, the state's strongest witness.

Night Sessions To Speed Lynch Trial

The prosecution rested when Gilley finished testifying late this afternoon. Judge Callahan announced that he would hold night sessions to hear the defense and then bring the case to a conclusion by tomorrow night.

The State refused to put on Doctors Bridges and Lynch, as well as Orre, Dobbins, whose testimony at the last trial this spring was destroyed by the defense.

11-29-33

Victoria Price Admits Talk Yesterday With Knight

Victoria Price, resuming the stand, admits under shrewd cross-examination, that she and Orville Gilley had a long conference with Knight yesterday before she took the stand. Leibowits obviously trying to show that Knight rehearsed stories of both of the state's chief witnesses.

As last night, Callahan again stops Leibowitz from pursuing questions whenever he gets Victoria in a tight place. The audience laughs approvingly at the judge's jibes at Leibowitz.

New York

Leibowitz, just before finishing examining Victoria, asks why she, lawfully married twice, did not bear the name of either husband.

"Speed" Callahan refused to allow the question.

The state's second witness, W. H. Hill, station agent at Paintrock, testified that he saw Victoria and Ruby Bates get off the train. Victoria appeared about to faint, with Ruby supporting her.

On cross-examination, Leibowitz produces series of pictures of the Paintrock station and tracks of the area where Hill said he saw the girls alight. Hill says the freight train engine stopped at the coal chute, about 400 feet from the station door. When the train stopped Hill ran out about 200 feet, taking up a position opposite the fourth or fifth car on the freight.

"The girls got off the last gondola, that's the fifteenth car from the engine. That car was hidden by the station. Tell us how, from where you were, you could see the girls get off," Leibowits demanded.

No answer. After a long silence, "Speed" Callahan orders Leibowitz to continue other questions.

Hill Contradicts Victoria's Testimony

Leibowits also brought out that Hill did not see the Scottsboro boys jump off the freight, though the train was going slow, and did not testify, though he was available at the first Scottsboro trial. The impression produced is that the boys had nothing to fear as the train drew in, and Hill was dug up by the prosecution to bolster its case.

Tom Rosseau of Paintrock, a member of the posse which rounded up the Scottsboro boys after receiving a telephone call that Negroes had fought with white boys, was the next witness. He told a different story today than at the first Scottsboro trial. Today Rosseau said he first saw the girls sitting in front of the railroad station.

Defense Shatters Testimony

Leibowitz read the first Scottsboro trial record, showing that Rosseau then said he first saw the girls in the back end of the car. Obvious lying at one time or other, makes audience laugh, though it is a point for the defense.

With States next witness judge, attorneys and audience became almost hysterical laughing at his absurd answers. Luther Morris, farmer living near Stevenson railroad tracks, who is hard of seeing and hearing, testified he was laying floor on barn. As freight passed window claims he got glance of white boys being chased off by Negroes and girls being pulled back by Negroes.

"You could a-got a better view of my land by taking the picture from another angle." When pressed to identify picture for record, he said angrily, "Don't understand pictures Know only what I saw from barn window."

"Look at the pictures," Leibowitz insisted.

Norris took out his spectacles to see pictures.

"Are you near sighted or far sighted," Leibowitz flung at him.

Had No Glasses At Time of Alleged Attack

"I have very good hearing," witness returned.

Upon further questioning Morris admitted he began wearing glasses after alleged attack occurred.

"Did you wear glasses because you couldn't see well?"

"I was running a saw mill," Morris replied.

The witness finally said he saw Negroes in second or third car from engine. Other state witnesses said Negroes were in fifteenth car. Leibowitz finally brought out that the top of the gondola car passing barn window through which Morris claimed he was looking when he saw freight was higher than the window

Heard Screams Over Noise of Moving Train

"You heard women scream?" Leibowitz pressed.

"Absolutely."

"Over noise of running train?"

"Absolutely."

"Got good hearing?"

"Absolutely."

Leibowitz dropped his voice slightly.

"Can you hear me as I talk now?"

The witness leaned forward, cupping hand behind ear.

"How's that?" he asked straining to hear.

It was obvious that the witness was crumbling. Callahan interrupted, telling defense counsel, "That's enough of that."

"It isn't enough," Leibowitz returned.

"I said it was enough," Callahan cried banging the bench with his open palm.

Leibowitz became silent.

"Go on," he court ordered.

"I'll go on as soon as your honor does something—"

"Go on now or something will be done," Callahan cried furiously.

"Atta boy," a loud voice called from the spectators' seats.

The court did not order silence.

Negro Farmer Called by State Aids Defense

T. L. Dobbins and other farmers were paraded by the state to testify. They saw "tusseling" on a freight train between Negro and white goys. Several of the "corroborative" witnesses are new. Why the state could not find them for preceding trials is a mystery.

Sam Mitchell, Negro farmer called by the state to tell about the "tusseling" actually testified for the defense, saying that Negroes were all along the freight, some in open box cars, swinging feet. This is the first time the state has called a Negro witness in this case.

Under cross examination by Leibowitz, Gilley said he never had a job in his life; he was "an entertainer." He explained "entertaining" consisted of walking into hotel lobbies reciting poetry and talking up a collection.

When pressed to name one hotel in Alabama where he recited poetry he could not.

"Name one in the South," Leibowitz demanded.

Gilley could not.

Leibowitz began battering at Gilley's connection with Knight and Victoria. He pursued hop and leap tactics of questioning. He would ask about the "jungle" and without warning return to the freight and then hop to Victoria's sexual affairs. It was apparent that Leibowitz was trying to break the well rehearsed story by following guerrilla attacks. After Attorney General Knight came to see him in Huntsville, he (Gilley) called upon Vicoria and saw her several times since.

When Leibowitz pressed Gilley for an answer why he did not testify at the original trials in Scottsboro, Wade Wright excitedly objected and Callahan sustained objection.

HINT STATE IS PAYING WITNESS

Patterson, Leaving the Court, Kissed by Girl

By CLARENCE MITCHELL
(AFRO Staff Correspondent)

DECATUR Ala. — Charges that the state is paying witnesses loomed here late Tuesday, when Orville Gilley, white hobo witness testified that money for shoes and regular financial allotments to his mother since he has been a witness in the trial have been given by Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight.

The [illegible] reporter of a New York weekly newspaper, was barred from the press table on the white side of the courtroom and forced to buy a table at the instructions of Judge Callahan.

Haywood Patterson, hovering between life and death for the third time, stoutly maintained his innocence under a withering fire of questions by Knight. He denied the rape charges and testified that a fight between the white boys on the freight train started the trouble.

Testimony Conflicts.

Victoria Price and Orville Gilley, white, star witnesses for the prosecution, gave conflicting statements on the stand, the former insisting that she was hit by one of the boys with the butt of a pistol, with the latter declaring that no fighting took place.

As Patterson left the court under heavy guard, his smiling sweetheart, Miss Mattie Johnson, who has stuck to him throughout the long-drawn-out ordeal, rushed over to him, and throwing her arms around his neck, kissed him. Gruff guards hustled him away.

Violence Feared.

The Rev. E. Nixon, pastor of the local M.E. church, declared Tuesday that Decatur is in grave danger of mob violence. The town is upset over the alleged rape of a white woman by Thomas Brown two months ago.

Citizens are reported to be planning vengeance on the boys under the inspiration of the double lynching in California. Attorney-General Knight frequently stirred the courtroom by repeating bit of the original Scottsboro testimony.

Scottsboro Justice.

Heywood Patterson, the 21-year-old Negro three times convicted of assault upon Victoria Price, a mill worker, on a freight train in northern Alabama two years ago, may be guilty, as far as The Post knows. The word of the woman herself and of corroborating witnesses stood against the sworn testimony of the young Negro. In proper circumstances, the question would be merely to determine which evidence to believe.

Unfortunately, the Scottsboro case is not so simple as that. Too many other things enter into consideration, and most of them lend color to the conviction that although it is possible for a defendant in such cases and in such circumstances to obtain the form of a fair trial, it is not possible by any means to get the substance of a fair trial.

Alabama has prided herself upon the fact that these defendants have not been lynched; that they have been tried in courthouses in at least an orderly manner; that they have been granted changes of venue and accorded the right to designate their own counsel. In other words, the elements of justice have been conceded them.

But that is not enough. In this case, the judge's charge was inflammatory, in that he injected extraneous discussion of the protection of womanhood. It was provocative to conviction, in that he failed to charge at all upon the mechanics of acquitting the defendant until defense counsel had reminded him to do so. Newspaper reporters said in their reports that Judge Callahan did not conceal his hostility toward the defense counsel, an attitude that was susceptible of transmission to the jury.

Aside from overt errors, the preponderating factor against the possibility of obtaining simple justice in the case was the public's attitude. It was more difficult to obtain a jury than it had been in 15 years, and at least half the veniremen disqualified themselves because they had formed or expressed an opinion—and this in spite of the fact that the trial had been moved to a county where the setting was theoretically impartial.

The public attitude again was demonstrated in the passionate address of the prosecuting attorney general, who largely threw evidence to the winds and pleaded for conviction on a basis of protection of the virtue of womanhood. He shaped up an entirely false issue and made it a case in which the jury had to convict or suffer the obloquy of abandoning traditions which some are pleased to call chivalric. When the defendant's counsel accused him of generating heat instead of light, he retorted, "Of course it's a passionate speech," and launched into a peroration calculated to stir smoldering, age-old prejudices.

An indication of at least the necessity for precaution against public temper was the fact that the judge found it necessary to assign two deputies of the sheriff to guard the defendant's counsel. The presence of that attorney was in itself an irritant.

The whole atmosphere of the trial leaves the disturbing doubt whether anything remotely approaching the substance of justice was accorded Patterson.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

(Memphis Commercial Appeal)

For the third time one of the seven defendants in Scottsboro's cause celebre has been convicted. For the third time he has been sentenced to death.

The defendant had all the benefit of brilliant legal counsel and financial aid from sources outside of Alabama. Between now and the time set for execution he will have, apparently, all the benefit of the delays provided by the law's red tape.

About all that the Scottsboro case has demonstrated is that it is often a long time between a verdict of guilty and fulfillment of the court's sentence.

By this time it would seem that those who have gone to such pains to defeat justice in Alabama would be convinced that the first verdict in the Scottsboro case was correct.

But for the meddlesome interference of agencies outside the state the case of the seven Scottsboro defendants would have been disposed of in the usual manner long ago. It now appears that it will be one of those interminable things which ultimately results in the original oint of dispute being entirely lost sight of.

The most extraordinary phase of the Scottsboro affair is the patience of Alabama citizens. None will ever be able to charge that there was hasty action.

TRYING TO PUNISH AN ABLE JUDGE

It would be an unfortunate indictment of the people of the Eighth judicial district, their sense of justice and fairplay, if they should mark Judge James E. Horton for defeat and retirement from the bench because of his rulings in the trial of the negro, Haywood Patterson, one of the Scottsboro defendants. Judge Horton won golden opinions from many eminent sources, laymen, jurists and newspapers throughout the country, for his fearless efforts to hold the scales evenly balanced in the trial of this malodorous case. It is a sad commentary on our civil institutions when judges on the bench must keep in mind the political consequences of their acts and judgments while sitting in the trial of cases about which popular feeling runs high. It is a prostitution of our most elementary conception of what a judicial tribunal should be.

Nobody who knows him would dare impugn the high character and unswerving integrity of Judge Horton and his zeal at all times to be just without fear or favor in meeting his judicial responsibilities. If the reward for his devotion to duty and the best traditions of the bench should be a rebuke by his fellow-citizens and result in his retirement to private life, then the consciousness of his own uprightness and the plaudits of a multitude of friends should go a long way in alleviating the sting of such

THE VERDICT AT DECATUR

The verdict rendered at Decatur, Ala., by a jury which heard the evidence in the Heywood Patterson trial, was the expected decision. The negro defendant, one of seven involved in the "Scottsboro case," has been tried three times. The first time he and his co-defendants were convicted and sentenced to death. The United States supreme court overruled that verdict. Patterson was then tried separately and the jury's verdict of guilty was set aside by Judge Horton. Now Patterson has again faced a jury and has been again pronounced guilty. But defense counsel intimate that an appeal will be carried to the United States supreme court, if necessary. The first step in this procedure will be a request for a new trial, which is not likely to be granted.

In contrast to the previous trials in which Patterson and the other negroes figured, on the charge of attacking two white women, the third trial was conducted in an orderly manner. There was little or none of the tense atmosphere that surrounded the second trial of Patterson, or the first trial of all the accused negroes. Judge Callahan, who presided in the latest trial, had evidently made up his mind before the trial started that he would tolerate neither disorder nor delays. He succeeded in his purpose. The trial was quickly concluded and was almost a humdrum proceeding.

But the state of Alabama has not yet heard the last of the "Scottsboro case." The third conviction of Patterson may be only the beginning of another prolonged battle in the courts.

Patterson Contrasts Defenses of Crawford and Scottsboro

Defender 12-30-33

Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29.—In a long and clear statement, William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, draws a sharp contrast between the defense of the Scottsboro boys and that of George Crawford, and accuses the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of betraying Crawford and the Race.

Mr. Patterson's opinions follow:

These two trials raise in the sharpest fashion the basic differences between the International Labor Defense and the leadership of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

These two trials raise in the most concrete manner for the masses the question of how defense struggles are to be handled.

The defense of the Scottsboro boys—the way of relentless struggle in words and deed.

hTe defense of the Scotssboro boys—the connecting of day to day local struggles with national issues.

The defense of George Crawford—the way of struggle in words and surrender in deeds.

Masses Must Choose

The masses must choose. From these two trials, conclusions must be drawn. !

The defense of George Crawford—the isolation from all other issues and dependence upon the courts.

George Crawford has been betrayed by the leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. In the betrayal of George Crawford, the N. A. A. C. P. has again betrayed the masses.

The betrayal of George Crawford is a crass and open one, but it is no accident. It is dictated by the growing militancy of the masses and the demand of the white ruling class that these masses be held back from struggle. The reformists are being rallied to the support of the NRA program of starvation and terror. They are being drawn into the government. They have been assigned the task of re-establishing the confidence of the masses in the courts.

George Crawford was charged with the murder of a Virginia planter's wife and her maid. Arrested in Boston, under the pressure of the police he signed a confession which he immediately denied when freed from the fear of further torture.

Refers to Lowell

Judge James A. Lowell refused to return Crawford to Virginia. There is no doubt that Lowell sought to strengthen the waning influence of the masses in the courts. Lowell sought to prove the "justice and impartiality" of the courts, but the immediate repudiation of his stand, by the federal court of appeals and the Virginia court, defeated his purpose. The action of these courts reaffirms the position of the I. L. D. that the courts are but agencies of the ruling class.

Lowell said the barring of Race people from the jury in Virginia was a denial of the constitutional rights of Crawford. Of the truth of this there can be no doubt. A denial of the constitutional rights of the Race by whom? By those who rule the country.

The N. A. A. C. P. leadership called the Crawford case more important than Scottsboro. Certainly it saw the policy and successful tactics of the I. L. D. in Scottsboro. It proclaimed that Crawford was innocent. It announced it would fight for Crawford—if not to the death, at least to the supreme court of the United States.

All the N. A. A. C. P. leadership needed was money. The courts were just. The active support of the masses, mass pressure was wrong. It refused to build around this case, which involved the rights of 15.000,000 members of the Race, a mass movement. It refused the aid of the I. L. D.

This is how the basis was laid for another betrayal of the people.

The N. A. A. C. P. leadership was for the rights of the people. It was for the placing of members of the Race on the jury. It was for whatever you please—so long as the approach was a "gentlemanly" one. No noise. No masses. No struggle. Respect for the courts.

The jury question, a fundamental question in the struggle for Race rights, arose. The N. A. A. C. P. leadership failed to bring forward Race people qualified to sit on the jury, to prove the violation of their constitutional rights. The jury commission said they had not found "any colored man of the county who seemed qualified for the service." And Charles H. Houston of the Howard university law school accepted the word of these "honorable gentlemen."

The N. A. A. C. P. presents Mr. Houston as a leader of the people. This is a shining example of the true spirit of the N. A. A. C. P. leadership.

The truth is unpleasant to the leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. The I. L. D. is always slandering it, always seeking to minimize its efforts, is its tearful plea.

The all-white jury, under direction of the ruling class courts, composed chiefly of farmers who need cheap and docile Race men for their plantations, found Crawford guilty. It did not fix the death penalty because Mr. Houston of the N. A. A. C. P. said Crawford should be spared so that he could help convict the Race member who in his forced confession, later denied, Crawford had implicated in the murder.

Mr. Houston forgot he had declared Crawford innocent. "To protect the prisoner's rights" he "gave formal notice of appeal" but "under no circumstances did he plan to press for a reversal by a higher court," Mr. Houston told the reporters. The jury question, the rights of 15,000,000 of the Race to sit on juries in the United States, was forgotten. George Crawford was forgotten.

Betrayal is Complete

The leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. has repeatedly said, "The I. L. D. has no interest in the lives or freedom of the Scottsboro boys." Let George Crawford answer as to the interest they have in the life and freedom of an oppressed man. They declared him innocent, and in the interest of the bosses they gave him life imprisonment.

In 1931 the leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. retained Steven Roddy, Ku Klux Klan lawyer, who left the Scottsboro boys facing the electric chair without filing an appeal.

In 1933 Charles H. Houston, Race lawyer, let George Crawford take life. "Under no circumstances will I ask for a reversal," he said.

The tools are different, but the job is just the same.

The Chattanooga News, press of the Southern lynchers, in an editorial, calls for the support of the N. A. A. C. P. by the masses. "It is a good defense for the accused," says this voice of the lynch landlords. What has George Crawford and the masses to say?

George Crawford has been betrayed to prove to the ruling class of America that the N. A. A. C. P. leadership still has a value for it. The betrayal of George Crawford is a blow aimed at the fight for the freedom and lives of the innocent Scottsboro boys.

The betrayal of George Crawford is a blow to smash the growing unity of workers of both races.

This is evident: That no act is too low or too depraved for the leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. to commit. No more openly vicious blow at the rights of the masses has ever been struck by reformism.

The essence of these cases is that the enemies of the masses, their courts and their tools, can be defeated only by the militant stand of the masses of the people. And this will only be accomplished when they turn away from the leadership of the N. A. A. C. P. which has and is betraying their cause.

We call upon the masses to come out from the leadership of these traitors.

We call upon the masses to build the I. L. D., an organization of militant struggle in the fight for the lives of George Crawford, the Scottsboro boys, Angelo Herndon, Theodore Jordan and the rights of 15,000,000 oppressed people.

STILL TRYING TO RAISE MONEY

The following two news items reproduced below, one coming from New York and the other from Atlanta show, that Leibowitz of New York and his other associates who recently drew additional death verdicts for their clients at Decatur. Upon returning to their respective homes evidently sent out S. O. S. calls to the effect that more money must be raised in order that they could carry the fight on for the INNOCENT NEGROES—However apparently the so-called Communist have made but little headway in raising additional funds—News items from New York and Atlanta follows:

PROTEST CONVICTION

NEW YORK, Dec. 9—Several thousand persons, most of them Communists, gathered in Union Square today to protest the conviction of the Scottsboro negroes. The meeting was arranged by the International Labor Defense.

Led by the red front band, the crowd marched into the square to listen to 13 speakers. The marchers carried banners and signs, showing a negro hanging from a tree and the legend:

"Alabama, the land of the tree and the home of the grave."

Several hundred police were on hand.

KLANSMEN INTERFERE

ATLANTA, Dec. 11—Hooded Ku Klux Klansmen prevented two International Labor Defense representatives from addressing a negro meeting here yesterday afternoon for the purpose of raising funds for "the Scottsboro boys."

The two representatives said to have been Parker Q. Wilson, Cincinnati and Mrs. Mary Leonard, an active participant in Communistic agitation in Birmingham, were waved away from the meeting by 22 Klansmen who had surrounded the meeting place—a negro Methodist church—before it was to begin.

The Klansmen handed handbills to all arrivals for the meeting. The handbills contained the pictures of six hooded figures riding on six hooded horses. At the top were printed the words "Communism will not be tolerated," and at the bottom, "the Ku Klux Klan rides again."

After distributing the pamphlets, meantime someone—said to have been Ben J. Davis, Jr., negro lawyer who had been assisting in the Scottsboro case—called police. The officers entered the meeting and were told it was in no way connected with Communism but to "Hear about the Scottsboro case." The Rev. J. Raymond Henderson, negro preacher, had delivered a speech, taking the place of the excluded speakers, and $15 had been collected for the Scottsboro negroes, police reported.

Hundreds of cheering men and women pushed through police lines today, hoisted Samuel Leibowitz to their shoulders and carried the defender of the "Scottsboro boys" in triumph from the Pennsylvania station.

Police finally rescued the lawyer and Joseph R. Brodsky, his associate, returning from Decatur, Ala., where two of the accused Negroes were again condemned to death. The lawyers were sped away in an automobile with cheers and strains of the International following them.

Most of the crowd was composed of Neg&roes, many of them Communists. They chanted "Scottsboro boyst shall not die" over and over while waiting for Leibowitz's train. And when they glimpsed him the broke through the cordon of bluecoats in a mad rush.

Leibowitz, defeated again, was nevtrtheless confident of reversals, both in the State and the United States Supreme Courts.

"We'll stick with this thing until hell freezes over," he said. "These boys will not burn. The United States Supreme Court will reverse, and we'll toss the cases right back to Alabama again."

Leibowitz said he had absolute proof that the jury rolls at Decatur were forged.

Two members of New York's homicide squad accompanied him. They were his bodyguards during the two trials.

"Death To Lynchers" On Flag At J. H. U.

Banner Atop Campus Pole Also Demands Freeing Of Scottsboro Negroes

"Free the Scottsboro boys and death to lynchers!"

A cloth streamer, about four by five feet, bearing that inscription was found at the top of the flagstaff on the campus of the Johns Hopkins University this morning.

The streamer had been attached to the pole. The ropes by which the flag is raised and lowered had been cut and the pole greased so as to make it difficult to reach the streamer.

O. A. Ryan, superintendent of the Homewood buildings, found the streamer. A ladder was placed against the pole and the streamer was removed and destroyed.

There was no evidence to indicate who placed the streamer in position.

Meetings Assailing Verdict Held in Many Cities

12-14-33

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 13.—Spurred by the strike of 500 children of the Reynolds and Jefferson schools against the Scottsboro verdicts yesterday, 300 pupils of the [illegible] Reid Junior High School walked out today in a similar protest, crippling most of the classes.

Police attacked the children, chasing them off the streets near the school, and searched active pickets. Walter Dengler was arrested.

The cops confiscated and destroyed all leaflets they could lay hands on.

Answering the call of the Philadelphia District of the International Labor Defense, other school children also struck. One class at the Southern High School walked out, and a Scottsboro protest meeting was held in Carnell Hall, Temple University, yesterday.

A resolution was passed at the meeting denouncing the Scottsboro verdict, and a committee was elected to continue and spread the protest campaign within the university.

Police stationed inside and outside the Barrett Junior High School succeeded in terrorizing the pupils and preventing a walkout.

ALABAMA NEGRO DEATH VERDICT TO BE APPEALED

Leibowitz Announces He Will Carry Conviction to U. S. Supreme Court.

OTHER TRIALS WILL PROCEED

Scottsboro Defendant Hears Guilty Decision for Third Time Unmoved.

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 2 (A. P.).—Convicted a third time in less than three years on a charge of attacking a white woman, Heywood Patterson, one of seven Negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case," again was under sentence of death today.

Unmoved, the twenty-one-year-old Chattanooga, Tenn., Negro, last night heard a Morgan county jury return the verdict he had heard on two previous occasions—"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged, and fix his punishment at death."

Patterson was convicted on a charge of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, who, with Ruby Bates, was alleged to have been attacked by the Negroes aboard a freight train in Jackson, Alabama, on March 25, 1931.

Seated beside Patterson as the verdict was read was Clarence Norris, second of the defendants to be tried at this term of court. Judge W. W. Callahan was preparing to swear in a jury for the trial of Norris, starting today, at the time the Patterson jury reported its decision after twenty-five hours' deliberation.

The Negroes were first convicted and sentenced to death at Scottsboro, seat of Jackson county, in April, 1931. They won an appeal to the United States Supreme Court and the trials were transferred here under a change of venue. At his second trial Patterson got the death penalty but the trial judge set aside the verdict.

Judge Callahan probably will wait until completion of the trial of Norris and the five other defendants, all scheduled to be tried at this term of court, before formally sentencing Patterson. Two of the nine Negroes involved in the case were held to be juveniles and placed in custody of Morgan county juvenile authorities.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York attorney retained by the International Labor Defense as chief counsel for the Negroes, indicated another appeal would be carried to the United States Supreme Court.

Norris faces the same charge on which Patterson was convicted, that of attacking Mrs. Price. Ruby Bates testified at the first trial in 1931 that she was attacked but returned dramatically to repudiate her testimony at Patterson's second trial last April.

Attack Jury Told to Walk a Color Line

By TOM CASSIDY.

(Staff Correspondent of The News)

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 30.—The Dixie color line threaded through the deadlocked deliberations of the jury which holds the fate of Haywood Patterson, chief of the famed Scottsboro case defendants, tonight, after both judge and prosecutor had stressed the race issue.

After the jurors had failed at 7:00 P. M. to reach a verdict, following one hour and 55 minutes debate, they were sent to their hotel and locked up for the night. Before a crowded courtroom this afternoon, Circuit Judge W. W Callahan stunned all but the local by enunciating the following sentences in his charge to the lily white farmer jury:

"The crime is rape even thoug the prosecutrix (referring to Victoria Price, accuser of the colore youths) may be shown to hav made no effort to resist.

Bars Her Past as Evidence.

"When a white woman is involved there is a strong presumption under the law that she did not yield voluntarily to the Negro and this is true no matter what station she occupies—whether she be the most abandoned, ignorant and depraved woman or a spotless virgin from a home of luxury."

Referring to defense attempts to introduce evidence that the Price woman and her companion, Ruby Bates, were in the condition they were found in due to a voluntary romantic encounter with whit men hours before, the court ridiculed this type of testimony which was permitted by Judge James E Horton at the second trial of Patterson last April.

"No accusing finger can be pointed at her erring past," he declared, "or at her hopeless future as an excuse for denying her complete protection. The glory of the law of this and other States of our union is that its protective wings reach out to cover all womankind.

"If you should determine that no rape had been committed, or if you do not so conclude, it is up to you to determine whether this defendant did it or conspired in the commission of the offense. Both must be beyond a reasonable doubt."

Forgets Not Guilty Charge.

In his charge, lasting one hour and fifteen minutes, during which he mentioned the possible penalties as the electric chair, life or a prison term, the jurist, who studied law in a haymow, failed to mention the possibility of a verdict of not guilty.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, who is under a heavy guard of New York police and especially sworn deputy sheriffs, jumped to his feet and rushed toward the bench calling attention to the omission.

Scratching his head, and pushing back the white locks which fringe his square, ruddy face, the jurist said:

"I overlooked one thing. I have given you the form of the verdic for the infliction of the death penalty or imprisonment. Of course, if the evidence fails to justify conviction, there ought'n to be any."

With the few added words, he closed his charge and gave the case into the keeping of jury.

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., in his summation, denied that the prosecution was a frame-up, as charged by the defense after the recantation of Ruby Bates, and said that he was going to leave it to the jury to determine whether the defense was framed.

"I ask for the death penalty," he declared. "There is no middle ground in this case. It does not matter how much force was used in this instance or if she (Victoria Price) submitted through fear.

"Their case is an insult to my intelligence and a reflection on my character. I never framed a prosecution and I never framed a defense."

THE OTHER FOOT

BEING "purged" by various newspapers in our own state and others in their frantic pleas that we stop "mob spirit," before the Scottsboro trials we now await with pleasure the words of commendation to flow from these same pens.

After all, if they keep up with the news they must realise by this time that there was no evidence of "mob spirit" in Decatur during either of the Scottsboro trials.

If they believe other than that, then they are misinformed.

There was curiosity in the first Scottsboro trials, in the second there was hardly sufficient interest here to fill the Morgan county court room.

The curiosity was dead.

And that was tough on the defense counsel, for if ever a defense counsel craved publicity, it is our opinion that this one did. It was difficult this time to even imagine a phantom mob, and if we recall correctly there were two or three phantom mobs developed while the first trials were being held here.

And all the while the people of Decatur, Alabama, were being ministered to with soothing words from far flung journals, telling us how to conduct ourselves.

That there was not any need for protection of the "Scottsboro boys" is self evident, that there was any need for protection of the chief of counsel for the defense is somewhat problematical. We understand that he asked for protection and was given protection.

Now that the shoe is on the other foot, we wonder just when these monthly journals with their far-fetched news stories, their "brilliant" editorial writers and their cartoonists, all having no conception whatsoever of the people of Decatur, Alabama, will have to say. All their predictions seem to have come to dismal failure.

There was no mob at Decatur, Alabama, and we wonder somewhat if some of these loud talkers, at least, are not disappointed?

They certainly did an excellent job of attempting to inflame the people of Decatur, Alabama.

Of course the Scottsboro cases are not over and there is a chance that the remaining trials will be heard here, much as the people of Decatur, Alabama, regret that outlook. Meanwhile, if the same guardian angels will continue their "friendly interest" perhaps we'll grow better and better day by day.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

AN AMAZING EXHIBITION

It should be, and we trust it will be, a long time before such a charge as Judge William W. Callahan delivered yesterday in the Scottsboro case is again delivered to an American jury. According to every report of it we have read the judge not only "glowered at" counsel for the Negro defendant but went to extreme pains to tell the jury just how they could bring in a verdict of guilty in either of two degrees without saying anything of a verdict of not guilty until the defence counsel reminded him. He then acknowledged his omission, but what is to be said of a court guilty of such an omission in face of the principle that under our law a man is held to be innocent until he is proved guilty?

Another sidelight on the spirit in which this trial has been conducted is found in an exchange between the prosecutor and the counsel for the defence. "The language of the prosecutor is an appeal to passion and prejudice," said the defence counsel. "It certainly is," the prosecutor retorted. "We all have a passion, and that is a passion for protecting the womanhood of the State of Alabama." That was more slick than frank, for it ignored the prosecution's racial prejudice, but it pleased the audience in the court, including, probably, the jury. If the jury in this case should convict Heywood Patterson, the matter will again, no doubt, be brought to the United States Supreme Court. That tribunal threw out the verdict given at a former trial for which it could be said at least that it was presided over by a judge who performed his part according to the best traditions of the judiciary, seeking only to see that even-handed justice be dealt out.

CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
DEC 3 1933

Another Scottsboro Verdict.

Once again an Alabama jury finds Heywood Patterson, one of the Scottsboro defendants, guilty and dooms him to death. Once again the verdict will be carried to higher courts and in all probability reversed. As the case now stands the Scottsboro youths may be shuttled back and forth between the United States Supreme Court and the Alabama trial courts for years to come.

The appeal from this conviction will be based on the ground that Negroes are excluded from jury rolls in Alabama "solely because of their race and color." Since the whole record of the procedure in these cases supports the claim, it is hard to see how the higher courts can fail to sustain it. It is quite true that such racial discrimination has been practiced in Alabama courts ever since the end of the reconstruction era. But that is no basis for detouring the Scottsboro cases around the Constitution.

These, of course, are technical points. There remains the more practical one that at least half the case against Patterson and his co-defendants was destroyed when Ruby Bates, one of the complainants, repudiated her story at the former trial. Since she is now ill in New York, she could not testify at the third trial. So this jury cannot be said to have heard the whole story. Whether the whole story would have altered the verdict in any degree may be doubted.

Alabamans are said to resent the criticism which has come to their state as a result of the Scottsboro cases. But they must recognize that these cases involve more than the fate of a group of obscure Negro youths, whom many believe to have been falsely accused. A system of justice which does not measure up with either federal or state Constitutions is also on trial.

NEGRO JUROR BAN TO BE TRIAL ISSUE

WANTS NEGRO WITNESSES

Seeks Permission to Call These to Stand in Effort to Prove Them Qualified to Be Jurors.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 19.—The witnesses for whom subpoenas will be requested this week by G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga lawyer retained by the International Labor Defense to assist Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer in the defense of the accused Negroes are, with one exception, colored residents of Jackson County where the crime occurred.

Mr. Leibowitz will attempt to show by examination of these witnesses, if Judge Horton permits, that they are qualified to serve as jurors within the meaning of the Alabama statute except for the color of their skins. So far as has been learned here it will be the first time in history that such an attempt has been made to prove racial discrimination in the selection of Southern juries.

One witness, a white man, who now resides in Chattanooga, but who formerly was a resident of Jackson County, is expected to testify that in all the time he lived there no Negroe's name ever appeared upon a jury roll.

The State's answer, as it will be delivered by Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General, is that the Alabama laws do not disqualify Negroes as jurors, but that they have failed to satisfy the jury commissioners appointed by the Governor that they are persons of sound judgment.

Attorneys defending the nine Negroes in the Scottsboro case plan to call twenty witnesses to support their contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from Alabama grand juries and petit juries in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, it became known today.

Long Argument Expected.

The defense has moved to quash the indictments against the Negroes charged with attacking two white girls, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago. The motion is based upon the allegation that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which indicted the nine Negroes.

Argument and the submission of proof in support of the motion is expected to consume the first three or four days of the trial, now scheduled to open March 27 before Circuit Judge James A. Horton of Athens.

Meanwhile the defense attorneys were puzzling over how their witnesses shall be transported from Jackson County to Decatur, the seat of Morgan County, where the trial is to be held. Contrary to popular belief in Alabama the International Labor Defense funds are reported to be limited—notwithstanding the frequently credited reports that the Russian Soviets are supplying the cash for the defense of the accused Negroes, who became Communists after their arrest.

The one day-time train from Scottsboro to Decatur, some fifty-odd miles to the west, reaches the latter city at noon and court sessions there usually begin at 8:30 A. M. The other train arrives in the evening and could be used for transporting witnesses only if they were to be kept over night at the expense of the defense, for it is not the State's responsibility.

Another problem before the defense is that the witnesses live in the mountains around Scottsboro and are some distance from the railroad. Consequently they are planning to hire trucks to move their witnesses back and forth between Scottsboro and Decatur.

Mr. Knight was absent from the capital city over the week-end. He said over the telephone that he had been to Decatur to arrange details of the approaching trial and had consulted virtually all the State's witnesses with the exception of Ruby Bates, who disappeared mysteriously on Feb. 28.

Prosecutor in Decatur.

In the meantime Decatur, resentful at suggestions of prejudice against Negroes in general and the Scottsboro Negroes in particular, prepared to make the best of the situation which was foisted upon it. Many of the citizens of Decatur wish that the trial of the Negroes had been sent elsewhere if they could not be tried fairly in Scottsboro, where two years ago they were sentenced to death in the electric chair, only to have the United States Supreme Court order new trials for them.

Attorney General Knight and the defense attorneys have agreed that the Negroes, now confined in the death house of Kilby prison here shall be transferred to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, pending their new trial, but as yet the necessary orders have not been signed. Mr. Chamlee mailed copies of the order which he and Mr. Knight agreed upon to Judge A. E. Hawkins of Jackson County, and Horton of Morgan County, and it was expected that these orders would be returned early this week. If and when the orders are signed the prisoners will be moved promptly, according to officials of Kilby prison.

DECATUR, ALA., March 24.—(AP)—National guardsmen will be asked to preserve order here Monday as seven negroes in the "Scottsboro case" go to trial in Morgan County Circuit Court before Judge James E. Horton.

Decision to ask for the guardsmen was announced today by Sheriff A. W. Davis after a conference with Judge Horton. The sheriff here announced that passes to the courtroom would be given to members of the press, and that spectators would be admitted on a "first come, first served" policy.

Sheriff Davis said the number of spectators would be limited to those who could obtain seats, or find standing room at the rear, but that aisles would be kept open at all times.

There was no more than passing interest among citizens of Decatur in the trial, or in efforts of organizations to obtain a further change of venue to Birmingham.

Subpenas have been issued for more than [illegible] witnesses and the jurymen have been notified to be present Monday. Commercial telegraph companies have moved wires to a building near the courthouse to handle stories of the trial.

The negroes, however, still were in jail at Birmingham with indications that they would not be brought here until Sunday or possibly early Monday.

A motion to quash the indictments now pending, will be disposed of before the actual trials begin. The motion to quash was filed at Scottsboro on March 6, when the change of venue was asked.

Judge A. E. Hawkins granted the motion for a change of venue and did not rule on the motion to quash, automatically transferring it here.

The motion was based on grounds that the negroes were deprived of their constitutional rights because "no negroes were on the Grand Jury returning the true bill."

3-27-33

DECATUR, Ala., March 26 (AP)—Disappearance of one of the principal missing witnesses caused speculation Sunday night as to the probability of beginning Monday new trials for seven Negroes indicted in the "Scottsboro attack case" who once were under sentence of death.

Macon Ga

Speculation of the probable effect of the absence of one of the two alleged girl victims of the attack aboard a Southern railway freight train March 25, 1931, overshadowed the pending motion to quash the indictments.

The girl who also is the alleged author of a letter repudiating her testimony in the first trials two years ago has been missing from her home in Huntsville, Ala., since Feb. 27, and officers thus far have been unable to find a trace of her.

Her mother who confirmed rumors that the girl was missing 10 days after she disappeared, told officers she believed her daughter kidnaped and did not report to police because she feared harm would befall either her daughter or herself.

Girl's Letter Accuses Officer

The letter the girl is alleged to have written and which she swore in an affidavit was false was delivered to defense attorneys employed by the International Labor Defense at Birmingham recently, when efforts to gain the release of Roy Wright, one of nine Negroes named in the original indictments on habeas corpus failed.

In this letter, addressed to Earl Streetman, the girl purportedly denied that the alleged attacks took place and that she was forced to "swear a lie" by officers.

The day following its discovery on the person of Miron Pearlman, a pugilist who fought under the name of Danny Dundee, both Pearlman and the girl signed affidavits setting forth the letter was written when the girl "was so drunk she did not know what she was doing."

Mortion to Quash Pending

Meanwhile, the other victim of the alleged attacks has repeatedly asserted that her testimony in the first trial was true and that through fear that harm would befall her, she had remained in her home at Huntsville at night, and went on the streets during the day time only when she was accompanied.

The motion to quash the indictments that must be disposed of Monday before any other proceedings can be undertaken was filed at Scottsboro on March 6, when the cases were called in Jackson circuit court for retrial.

The action of Judge A. E. Hawkins, original trial judge who passed sentence of death on the Negroes nearly two years ago, in granting a change of venue automatically transferred the motion to the Morgan county circuit court for disposition.

Judge James H. Horton who will preside over the new trials will rule on the motion before any other steps are taken.

Approximately 35 witnesses have been called for the trials which may last for a week or 10 days, depending on whether the state elects to try the seven Negroes at one time, or to sever the cases. In the original trials one Negro was tried separately, two in another trial and five in a third.

The Negroes facing trial are Andy Wright, 19, and Haywood Patterson, 19, both of Chattanooga; Willie Roberson, Columbus, Ga.; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga., Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 18, both of Atlanta, Ga., and Clarence Norris 22, of Chattanooga. Their death sentences were set aside by the United States Supreme court, which ordered the new trials.

The other two in the original indictment are Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, both held juveniles, and who must go before juvenile authorities in Jackson county.

Civil Liberties Union Dislikes Decatur Trial

NEW YORK, March 20—(AP)—The American Civil Liberties Union announced tonight that a telegram, signed by seven members, had been sent to the Governor and Attorney General of Alabama appealing for a second change of venue in the Scottsboro attack case.

Montgomery
Ala

The signers, as announced by the Union, were the Rt. Rev. Benjamin Brewster, Episcopal bishop of Maine; Dr. John Dewey, professor emeritus of Columbia University; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, former president of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. James H. Dillard, president of the Jean Slater Fund, Charlottesville, Va.; Dr. Elbert Russell, dean of Duke University, Durham, N. C.; Dr. Mary E. Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke College; Arthur Garfield Hays, New York attorney.

"Change of venue granted to Decatur apparently will not avoid the dangers involved in a trial in Scottsboro," the wire read. "We urge you to consider arranging a further transfer to a larger center of population where a fairer trial can be had."

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE

Considerable agitation has been going on, in and outside of newspapers, concerning nine Negroes who were convicted in an Alabama court nearly two years ago of criminal assault on two young white women, a form of crime that always arouses race feeling, especially in the south. Two of these Negroes sentenced to death were mere boys, one 13 the other 14 years old. There were no Negroes on the jury and the counsel for the defence was an aged lawyer who was the only one in the county bar whom the judge could induce to represent the accused.

Under these circumstances and in view of the intense excitement that prevailed, it has seemed to a large number of people evident that the right to "an impartial trial," guaranteed to every citizen by the Federal Constitution, had been denied to these Negroes. The U. S. Supreme Court finally confirmed this view and ordered a new trial.

Now a local judge has granted a change of venue and the case is about to be re-tried in Decatur, the county seat, some fifty miles distant from Scotsboro, while the two lads are to have a separate trial in the juvenile court. The sentiment of the Decatur community is probably no whit different from that of Scotsboro though possibly less violent. An "impartial trial" in the State of Alabama, where such a thing is unknown as Negroes serving on a jury, is a very difficult attainment.

But this is not a difficulty peculiar to Alabama. In few states of the Union, if any, could an unprejudiced jury be impaneled for the trial of a case like this. We deprecate that special form of self-righteousness that makes so many northern people hostile critics of the south, where the race problem is much more acute than with us. The whites of the north are not essentially different from the whites of the south and under the same conditions we conduct ourselves in much the same manner. What we should do is give the south less criticism and more sympathy, and both sections need to apply their best intelligence and all their Christian principles to finding the way in which whites and Negroes can live side by side in this country of ours in peace and mutual security.

The Scotsboro case is of importance to us of the north mainly in that it admonishes us that this is a national problem, not merely sectional, and that we who live in glass houses should be wary of casting stones at others.

Scottsboro Again

Nearly two years after their original conviction the eight Negroes sentenced to death in the Scottsboro case are once more about to stand trial. That the original trial was less than creditable to Alabama's standards of justice seems to have been recognized by opinion in Alabama itself. When the case was called recently, in the same Scottsboro courtroom where two years ago the trials were rushed through with every appearance of haste, careless ignorance and prejudice, the Attorney General of the state, acting as prosecutor, accepted a motion for a change of venue. "I am not opposing this motion," he said, "because I want the people of all these United States to know that these defendants will get a fair trial. They had one when they were tried here and convicted, and they will get a fair trial."

Unfortunately, in the opinion of the United States Supreme Court, the first trial was not a fair one. The reversal was not a matter of a mere technicality; the Supreme Court laid down the high rule that in a capital case it was the duty of the trial court not only to assign counsel to a defendant unable to secure counsel for himself but to see that the appointment was made in such a way and at such a time as not "to preclude the giving of effective aid in the preparation and trial of the case." The decision was a rebuke to the Alabama courts, and the Attorney General's readiness to accept the change of venue implies that Alabama knows it.

For this reason it seems to us that Alabama opinion itself might well be alert to insist that the new trial be conducted with the most scrupulous fairness. The gesture in accepting the change of venue, for example, loses some of its force when the judge, instead of transferring the case to one of the large cities, where prejudice would presumably have least effect, sends it only fifty miles away to the northern Alabama town of Decatur. Decatur is larger than Scottsboro and not buried so deeply in the hill country; but the defense regards the decision as a partial defeat. The case is, of course, Alabama's affair, and expressions of outside advice will only stir more deeply the passions which have been sufficiently aroused by the radicals who took over the defense and, while winning the new trial, used the affair for the selfish ends of their own propaganda. It is to be hoped, however, that Alabama men and women will themselves see that the only way to triumph over the propagandists is to insist that this second trial shall in fact be absolutely above the slightest suspicion of partiality, haste or prejudice. That is the only victory to be won by any one in this distressing affair.

ALABAMA, THE NEGRO AND LAW

This Southern "Negro problem," one hears so much about, exists for most part in the minds of those who have never visited the South, or who for other reasons know nothing of conditions here.

The Southern white man and the Southern Negro are fully aware of racial differences. But nine times out of ten neither is troubled by these differences, neither makes a "problem" of conditions until some outsider declares that such a problem exists.

Just so long as there are blacks and whites in the South, the two races will continue to live as they live now—two distinctive peoples moving unmolested in their own respective spheres, each more or less economically dependent on the other, just as every individual is dependent on all other individuals.

There is no question in the minds of the Southern white and the Southern Negro of the relationship each bears toward the other. It is never questioned by either.

The raising of such a question could bring only trouble, and both white men and black men know it. The will to maintain the present status of the races is mutual here in Alabama as in other sections of the South.

Now Alabama wants its laws respected.

It wants black men to respect them.

It wants white men to respect them.

And the State of Alabama, through its people and its courts insists that all men abide by the State laws.

It so happens that in this State it is against the law to commit rape. (And we believe most other States, indeed, most semi-civilized peoples have laws against rape.)

Two years ago nine Negro men boarded a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., threw several men from a box car and kept two white girls in the car with them.

When the train arrived at Scottsboro, the girls told officers that each of the nine Negroes had attacked them.

In court each of the Negroes accused his eight companions of attacking the girls but denied that he had taken part in the mass rape.

Alabama tried and convicted the men for rape.

Selfish radical groups seized an opportunity to flood the nation, and the world, with their own propaganda, using the case as an excuse to exploit themselves and promote their interests.

A surprisingly large number of Eastern newspapers, many otherwise intelligent and enlightened journals, swallowed the stuff broadcast by the radicals and immediately made a "race problem" of a case that should be judged only as a criminal trial.

Alabama is concerned only with the guilt or innocence of these men.

The New York Herald Tribune, which assumes that the first trial was unfair, says:

> The case is, of course, Alabama's affair, and expressions of outside advice will only stir more deeply the passions which have been sufficiently aroused by the radicals who took over the defense, and, while winning the new trial, used the affair for the selfish ends of their own propaganda. It is to be hoped, however, that Alabama men and women will themselves see that the only way to triumph over the propagandists is to insist that this second trial shall in fact be absolutely above the slightest suspicion of partiality, haste, or prejudice. That is the only victory to be won by any one in this distressing affair.

But the "outside" advice is not resented nearly so much as the outside interference in a case which Alabamians consider only as a court matter, the trial of which should have no other purpose than to prove the innocence or guilt of the men charged with a felony.

Better To Be Safe

Now that preparations are being made for the trial of the Scottsboro cases at Decatur Nov. 27, it is appropriate to suggest that nothing should be left undone to make sure that these Negroes will have every protection that is available.

Judge Callahan, who is to preside in these new hearings, is quoted in Tuesday's News as saying that "he is opposed to having troops at any trial." For this reason it is most likely that no soldiers will be on guard at Decatur, unless the judge changes his mind, or interprets conditions differently.

We hope Judge Callahan is right in his assumption that the situation does not warrant a request for military protection. But remembering the circumstances which prevailed during the last trial and remembering what has taken place since that time, most informed Alabamians will be inclined to think that the judge ought to prefer being safe to being mistaken. If anything should go wrong, anything which the presence of troops would conceivably prevent, there could be no valid answer to the charge that ample precautions were not taken.

There is still another aspect of the matter. We must conclude that if there is to be no military guard at the trial, there will be no military escort for the accused when they are taken to Decatur for arraignment a week in advance. Why should that risk be taken? Granted that Sheriff Hawkins, of Jefferson County, can be relied on to protect his prisoners to the limit of his resources, why must his task be made doubly difficult on these journeys from Birmingham to Decatur, and back again?

Judge Callahan's contention that soldiers do not belong in a courtroom is absolutely sound—in normal circumstances. But what we are facing in this particular affair is something so complicated and explosive that any lack of diligence in safeguarding the prisoners would be profoundly regrettable.

As a matter of fact, many of us are wondering whether, everything considered, the case should not be postponed. In the light of all that has happened in the premises, no one can justly complain that the state has failed to move with sufficient vigor. Would it not be the part of wisdom to continue the hearing?

New York

NEW YORK.—A committee consisting of Allen Taub, lawyer, Arnold Sawyer, and David Hall, of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, called on the advertising department of the New York Times last Sunday.

They attempted to insert an advertisement which read, "Scottsboro boys in immient danger. Protest. Communicate with the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, 156 Fifth Ave., New York City."

Every official of the advertising department refused to accept the ad. Finally Allen Taub asked, "Will the Times accept an obituary notice after the lynchings?"

On Friday J. W. Foster of the national editorial board of the "liberal" Scripps-Howard chain was visited by a committee consisting of Alfred H. Hirsch, secretary of the N. C. D. P. P., Grace Lumpkin, novelist, author of "To Make My Bread," and Allen Taub, who have just returned from an investigation into the Tuscaloosa lynchings.

This committee presented affidavits and documents which gave conclusive proof that plans have been made to lynch the Scottsboor boys and their attorneys.

Mr. Foster was asked to accept a story by Grace Lumpkin describing the lynch-danger that faces the defendants.

Foster said, "I won't take your story. But send me their obituary notice. We'll publish them."

The L. F. P. P. and I. L. D

THE Scottsboro defendants were to be arraigned at Decatur Ala., today, and their new trials begin November 27. Consequently, the I. L. D. again swings into the picture, its propagandist-lawyer wiring President Roosevelt, asking him to force Governor Miller, of Alabama to send troops to Decatur. Perhaps the lawyer does not know tha the Governor cannot send troops unless the judge presiding at the trial requests them, which this particular judge has refused to do, insisting that there is no need.

The International Labor Defense has been joined in this sort of work in Alabama now by another organization.

A committee of seven men and women, representing the League for the Freedom of Political Prisoners has entered Alabama, to study recent lynchings. They come at a time when the new trials for the "Scottsboro Negroes" are about to be opened, and they cannot fail to revive some of the prejudices fanned into flame by the propagandists of the International Labor Defense, who did their best to make martyrs—dead martyrs, if you please—of the Scottsboro defendants.

We understand that the League for the Freedom of Political Prisoners is not so flagrantly propagandist as the I. L. D. The members of this committee are, doubtless, sincere reformers, but the League for the Freedom of Political Prisoners also is interested in having martyrdom cases spread over front pages. Their visit may work further harm for the Scottsboro defendants.

They are investigating two separate lynchings. The South already has a Commission to investigate such outrages.

Two Negro boys were riddled with bullets one morning last August. They had been seized from sheriff's deputies. They were charged with the rape and murder of a Tuscaloosa white girl. A few days later, a mob of armed white men in Tuscaloosa county went to the home of a Negro, called him out and shot him to death.

These are the cases being investigated by the League for the Freedom of Political Prisoners. Incidentally, if the Negroes in the Southern lynching cases are "political prisoners" they have been made so by the I. L. D. and kindred organizations.

There is much sound sense in an article written by Walling Keith in the Montgomery Advertiser. He says:

The enlightened public in Alabama has not sought to shift the blame of the lynchings from Alabamians. There can be no doubt that Alabama white men seized and shot to death the three victims.

But one must believe that the three dead Negroes today either would be alive or would have been found guilty and legally executed if unscrupulous agitators had not forced their way into Alabama criminal trials with no other motive than to foment racial and class hatred among Alabamians, to splatter mud on Alabama courts and to embarrass the people of this State.

The International Labor Defense League, a Communistic organization, seized the case of nine Negroes charged with rape, and has used it for the exploitation of the Negro and for baiting the Alabama court system.

If the I. L. D. really had cared for the necks of their "martyrs," certainly they would have adopted different tactics. The I. L. D. made few moves which could be interpreted as an attempt to convince an Alabama jury that the "Scottsboro prisoners" were innocent which were not calculated to arouse racial prejudice more than to convince the jury of the innocence of their "clients."

Witness one of the tricks of I. L. D. Lawyer Leibowitz: He feigned indignation because one of the prosecutors failed to address a young Negro as "Mister." He wasted time denouncing the State's attorney for failing to address a Negro as "Mister," knowing full well the effect his outburst would have.

Apparently he did everything possible to make even the jury dislike him, then after the trial bellowed: "Prejudice! Bigots!" But Leibowitz, though he waved red herring and used every possible dodge to make headlines in the Harlem press, was not as practiced in trouble-making and in fomenting hatred as is the organization which commissioned him to make martyrs of the "Scottsboro boys."

The I. L. D., seeking to make a farce of law procedure in Alabama, has caused delay after delay in the trials of the so called Scottsboro Negroes.

This organization attempted to force its way into the Tuscaloosa rape-murder cases.

The Negro prisoners, fearing that the I. L. D. trouble-makers would cause ill feeling in Tuscaloosa, declared that they preferred to be defended by local lawyers. They wanted freedom. They wanted to save their own lives. They did not want to be martyrs.

But the I. L. D. attempted to force itself into the cases.

Tuscaloosa citizens, remembering the I. L. D. interference in the Scottsboro and Dadeville cases, knew that the organization would concern itself more with breeding discord among the white and Negro population spreading lies and attempting to slander the white assault and murder victims than in trying to present a case for the defendants.

Such was the feeling in the Alabama city the night of the double lynchings.

It is easy to understand Alabama's resentment of the I. L. D. tactics. All advocates of justice must feel similar resentment. And the entrance of the League for the Freedom of Political Prisoners further complicates matters. Certainly, the attitude of this committee will be carefully scrutinized.

Defense Scanning Jury Rolls to Show That No Negro Has Ever Been in Venire

Macon Ga.

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 23 (AP)—A meticulous search of the Jackson county jury roll for 1931 was conducted today as attorneys for the seven defendants in the Scottsboro case sought to sustain a motion to quash the indictments charging them with attacking two white girls.

Witnesses from Jackson county, some of them county officials, were called by the defense to search the roll to establish proof that it contained the names of no Negroes. A grand jury drawn from this roll returned the indictments March 31, 1931.

Judge W. W. Callahan this afternoon said he had deferred arraignment of another of the defendants in deference to the witnesses from Jackson county here to testify on the motion to quash the indictment. The judge had announced that another defendant would be arraigned today, a venire drawn and the case set for trial one week from Monday.

Men Accused of Assault

Disposition of the motion to quash the indictment based on allegations that Negroes were "systematically excluded from the jury rolls solely because of their race and color," was all that remained before Heywood Patterson, is brought to trial a third time.

Patterson and his co-defendants are accused of attacking two women aboard a Southern railway freight train as it rolled through the mountains of Jackson county on March 25, 1931. Two death sentences imposed on Patterson have been set aside, one by the United States Supreme court, which also revised similar penalties imposed on six other accused Negroes.

Interest in Trial Slight

Interest in the trial dropped almost to the zero point here this afternoon as C. A. Wann, circuit court clerk of Jackson county and others thumbed the pages of the big book in which the names of adult males qualified for jury duty were inscribed.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of counsel for the defense retained by the International Labor Defense, questioned each witness minutely as to his length of residence in Jackson county, his familiarity with the courts there and invariably asked, "Have you ever seen a Negro serving on a grand or petit jury in Jackson county?"

The answer in each case was, "No."

This And That

The "Scottsboro case" got under way again today at Decatur. This makes the third trial.

This noted case will soon have been in the courts three years, but its end is far from being in sight. Unless there is an acquittal, it may take several years more before it is finally decided.

The International Labor Defense apparently has plenty of money to fight the case as long as there is a leg on which to contest any or all of its various angles.

The one, perhaps, which it is most anxious to get the Supreme Court of the United States for a decision is non-selection of negroes upon juries in this state.

While the state has received, and will get a lot more unsavory notoriety, Jackson county is the big loser in a financial way.

Court costs and jail fees are piling higher and higher every day. It may require a special bond issue to pay them when the case is finally decided.

Judge Callahan, while dispensing with the services of national guardsmen in protecting the prisoners and some of the lawyers, is not letting down the bars as far as was indicated at first.

He swore in a score or more of special deputy sheriffs, principally from Birmingham, this morning. They have an abundance of "artillery" in their possession, and know how to use it when occasion demands.

This procedure really seems a great deal better than using troops in uniform, giving a military atmosphere to the court proceedings.

Cash received so far in the Red Cross roll call campaign totals $702.75, while pledges amount to $716.

This is just a fraction of the amount that was given last year, while the number of givers is also far short of the 1932 roll call.

It may not be possible to match the amount of the donations last year, but there ought to be more than twice as many donors. More than 2,400 got buttons in the drive last November.

If the field is closely worked and every one able to give $1, the minimum amount, is solicited vigorously, there will be 5,000 members when the campaign closes Thanksgiving day.

In city and county, there are perhaps twice as many able to make donations of at least $1 as these were last year.

Let's have a little more steam in the final 10 days of the campaign.

Madison county led the other 66 counties in the state by several country blocks last year, and made a record that called forth the commendation of national Red Cross official.

Now that so many are able to give, especially in small amounts, this county ought to maintain this enviable record this year.

A few years ago, Franklin D. Roosevelt was thought to be an incurable paralytic. Infantile paralysis had palsied his legs.

Yesterday, he was scooting around Warm Springs, Ga., in a roadster, equipped with special contraptions in the way of pedals and levers for his feet, driving himself.

Rarely is there mention of his physical ailment, though thousands of words are written about him daily. About the only reminder is an occasional picture, showing him holding the arm of someone as he stands or walks.

There is so much interest in what will come popping out of his head next that public interest is diverted from his withered nether extremities.

The director of the CCC camps announces the "forest army" will plant 40 or 50 million saplings on gullied and washed lands next Spring, to aid in tho control of erosion in the Central and Southern states.

The losses from soil erosion—just plain old washing of the land by heavy rains—are estimated to run into hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

All over this county you see the top soil being carried away in a yellow flood after each rain.

We ought to plant more young locusts, do more terracing, fill more gullies and drains with brush and other matter, to stop this gradual wearing away of productive soil. It means dollars and cents to us.

MR. SAMUEL LEIBOWITZ, who not so very long ago was telling his public in Harlem that he wasn't afraid of the goldarned cave dwellers of Alabama now is asking President Roosevelt to call out the Army or Navy or somebody to keep the Alabama cannibals from massacreing the Scottsboro Negroes and himself. You'd think Sam would know better. The consensus of opinion of intelligent lawyers who have studied the Scottsboro case is that Sam and his International Labor Defense buddies have mixed in it for the deliberate purpose of making martyrs of the defendants, and professional martyr makers should regard the risks of their trade as part of the day's work, as aviators and railroad men do. If a martyr maker wakes to find he's been made a martyr of himself, he should be game enough to regard it as one of the breaks of the pastime, or take up something with less risk in it. The I. L. D. meddlers and journeymen hell-raisers are already charged with responsibility for three lynchings in Alabama, with the I. L. D'ers taking care not to be among those present at the lynchings It seems a pity that some arrangement couldn't be made whereby the Scottsboro Negroes could be turned over to their now agitated defenders with the understanding they would be carried to the sympathetic North, where the whites are so inordinately fond of the black brother they think nothing at all of permitting him to stop in front of their cozy homes in the dead of winter and scoop up a nice snow ball for lunch, or dinner, as the case may be.

State Should Strain Point To Protect These Prisoners

So far as this paper has been able to ascertain, the Scottsboro Negroes are to be taken to Decatur for arraignment on Monday without military protection. It is, as we see it, exceedingly unwise to fail to give these prisoners the fullest protection the state can command. The responsibility which is thus being thrust upon Sheriff Hawkins and Sheriff Davis imposes on them a burden they should not have to carry. What is true with respect to arraignment is true of the trial of the week following.

If this is not a juncture when the authorities should strain a point to make sure of the safeguarding of defendants, there has never been an occasion in the history of Alabama for protecting prisoners against the possibility of an attack by would-be lynchers. If anything is left undone to protect the Negroes accused in this case, and the official optimism proves unwarranted, then the state will be under an imputation it should not have to wear. It is a risk too great to be taken.

POT AND KETTLE

When the news came of the outrageous verdict in the famous Scottsboro case in Alabama, The News and Observer expressed the opinion that the best hope for justice for the Negroes lay in the retirement from the case of the attorneys for the International Labor Defense.

This position was taken not in reflection upon the attorneys who skillfully and ably defended the Negroes in the case. In fact, if the attorneys of this organization had not come to the defense of the Negroes there is a good possibility that the defendants now would be dead and buried. The International Labor Defense came to their assistance at a time when the country in general had not awakened to the great danger of a terrible injustice being committed in the courts of Alabama.

Nevertheless, in the recent trial the case became not a judicial search for the facts but an emotional conflict of prejudices. In an outrageous manner the Alabama prosecutor played to the prejudices of the Alabama jury and called them to render a verdict not upon the facts in the case but upon their prejudices. His conduct and the verdict which followed it was a disgrace to the South.

Yet, now it seems that Samuel Liebowitz, the chief counsel for the defense, is in his attack on Southern bigots not himself averse to pandering to the prejudices of another section in describing the people of Alabama. In an address in Brooklyn the other day he declared:

> If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like a frog's, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it. When I got back home I felt that I needed a moral, mental and physical bath.

By such vituperation of a people, Mr. Liebowitz makes himself a party to the conflict of prejudices and emotions which disgraced the verdict at Decatur. Such bigotry both in Alabama and Brooklyn will not serve justice. It will not help to secure freedom for the defendants in the case. It precludes the possibility that Mr. Liebowitz can be useful in the case again.

At the time of the verdict The News and Observer suggested, without reflection upon the present defense attorneys, that justice would be best served by the withdrawal of the International Labor Defense and the substitution of eminent Southern attorneys as the defense counsel for the Negroes. Such an act this paper believed would make it possible to remove much of the conflict of prejudices and emotions in which the case is now involved. Mr. Liebowitz' statement in Brooklyn makes such a course even more necessary.

Justice will not be found in the South or anywhere else in the vituperations of a bigoted lawyer from Alabama and a bigoted attorney from New York. Their conflict makes a sad spectacle of which North and South can both be ashamed. But the important matter in the case is justice for the defendants and not the display of the sectional bigotries of the bar.

OTES ON EDUCATION

Ruby Bates, the companion of Victoria Price on that infamous train ride near Paint Rock, Ala., two years ago is by way of becoming educated.

A Communist organization has adopted the cotton mill girl and for the second time has extended to her the hospitality of the City of New York.

The other night, under the sheltering wing of the gentle Leibowitz and the good brethren of the International Labor Defense League, the Bates girl was haled before a mob of cheering Harlemites.

She made a speech.

And among other things Ruby Bates said: "The ruling classes of Scottsboro frightened me into saying the Negro boys attacked us."

Ruling classes!

Could it be that the kindly souls who have taken the girl in inspired that speech? Could it be that the simple mill girl was taught that speech by her "new friends?"

If Ruby Bates had spoken of "Them damn cops," or if she had said: "The laws made me do it," her story would have sounded much more plausible—if not true.

Next thing, the girl will be poll-parroting about "the oppressed proletarians" and "the crushing iron heel of Capitalism on the necks of the humble white and Negro workers."

And the pity of it is that Harlem Negroes and Boston blue-bloods will believe her inspired stories.

Tazewell, Va. News

DAMNING THE SOUTH AGAIN.

If those two Jew publicity hunters who went down to Alabama and pushed themselves into the Scottsboro case at the suggestion of some hair-brained communist organization had been given a taste of Southern "hospitality," and sent back home the Negroes charged with criminal assault would have fared better. As the matter now stands Messrs. Leibowitz and associate have disqualified themselves by a careless handling of the language regarding the qualifications of Southern jurors, and it will be better for their clients if they stay at home. The merits of the cases against the Negroes, who are charged with abusing two white girl hoboes they encountered on a freight train, might be raised because the mere fact that the two women happened to be white doesn't place them in any preferred position in the courts. And the further fact that the two women had gotten so low in the social realm that they entered court convicted law violators.

A Massachusetts federal judge gets in the limelight by releasing a Negro in Boston charged with a double murder in Virginia for the reason that Negroes do not serve on juries in this State, the jurists conclusion being that the murderer would not get justice from a white jury. The merits of this case are not gone into, but the simple fact that a mistrial, would be ordered by the Supreme Court in case of conviction because the jury was composed of white men appears to be the legal basis upon which the New England Judge founded his opinion.

Rainey Asks Ruby Bates About Altered Evidence

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, May 8.—A parade of 3,000 whites and Negroes today sought from President Roosevelt and Congressional leaders intervention to free the nine Alabama Negroes convicted of criminal assaults in the Scottsboro case.

In the van of the March was Ruby Bates, the girl who after once swearing the men had attacked her, reappeared at a new trial as a surprise witness and reversed her testimony. With her went James Ford, Negro comunist, and William L. Patterson, Negro national secretary of the International Labor Defense. Along also was Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, at whose retrial the Bates girl changed her story. He was convicted again and is for the second time under the sentence of death.

At the White House the leaders saw Louis McHenry Howe, Presidential secretary. They complained bitterly upon being told that the President was too busy conferring with Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, special German envoy, to receive their petitions in person.

Although at the White House attaches said the President was making a practice, now that business is so heavy, of referring petitioners to Howe, Patterson, as spokesman for the marchers, said they regarded Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to see them as a "gesture of contempt."

They marched then to the Capitol. Speaker Henry T. Rainey saw them.

"We demand Congressional action for the unconditional release of the Scottsboro boys," Ford told Rainey. "We present also a bill of rights demanding legislation to guarantee enforcement of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments."

"The petition will be referred to the Judiciary Committee," Rainey replied. "As for the Scottsboro case, that is a matter for the courts. Congress has no authority to direct the release of men charged with a crime."

Ruby Bates said: "The Scottsboro boys are absolutely innocent."

"You testified once they were guilty?" Rainey asked.

"Yes, sir."

"Now you retract?"

"Yes, sir."

"What caused you to change your mind?"

"Well, I didn't want to see innocent boys suffer."

"Because you had perjured yourself?"

"Yes, sir, under duress," replied the Bates girl.

Then they called on Vice-President John N. Garner, who told them he would refer their petition to the appropriate Senate committee.

Tragedy For the Scottsboro Boys

Doubtless the worst possible thing that could have happened to the Scottsboro negroes occurred on Thursday when they mutinied against prison treatment and generally speaking acted the fool. Claiming that they had been mistreated they rebelled and refused to go back to their cells until forced to do so. There was some show of violence and it all made against them. The accused negroes showed too plainly that they have become the victims of the very agency that desires to save them by clothing them with a sense of imaginary importance. The Scottsboro boys have reached the unfortunate position where they understand that they have become a national issue and that, as such, they are entitled to superior advantages. In the midst of the defiance on Thursday they chalked a message on a piece of cardboard "'We will see the United States Supreme Court and settle everything.'' That is the epitome of the whole case. Northern interests impregnated with a little communism have imbued the Alabama negroes with the thought that there is some secret sympathy locked in the breast of the United States Court benchers, that the trials in the lower courts of record are merely a gesture and that the high court is going to set them free.

If there is a racial tragedy in the Scottsboro case it lies not in the persecution of the colored man by Southern usage but the stupidity of would-be white emancipators from the North injecting themselves into a forum the language of which they do not understand and preying upon negro credulity by telling them they have a world audience that will see them through. They forget that there is no power on earth that can interfere with the rights of the state of Alabama to propitiate its constitutional provisions and to give to ''the Scottsboro boys'' the same kind of justice that is meted out to others.

At present some of them stand a chance of being freed through the dimming of testimony in second trials and the abatement of the conviction spirit. Mutiny in jail, slogans that rile the Southern white man and fawning upon communistic crusaders in Dixie are bound to set up influences hostile to impartial justice.

BALTIMORE, May 7 (AP).—About 1,000 New Yorkers, mostly Negroes, arrived here today in trucks and buses on their way to Washington to seek President Roosevelt's intervention in the Scottsboro case.

They were to stay overnight at Tom Mooney Hall and in homes of sympathizers, and leave tomorrow together with a local contingent. They said similar delegations were en route to Washington from Detroit, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago.

About 5,000 persons here today attended a meeting where Ruby Bates and Lester Carter, two defense witnesses in the Scottsboro case, asserted the indicted Negroes in the case were innocent victims of a frame-up.

In the van of the march was Ruby Bates, the girl who, after once swearing the men had attacked her, reappeared at a new trial as a surprise witness and reversed her testimony.

Marchers from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other Eastern cities were in the procession. Truckloads also came from Virginia and West Virginia.

Daily Worker 11-25-33

New York, N.Y.

NEW YORK.—Ruby Bates, Scottsboro witness, lies today on a hospital cot, fighting for life following a critical operation, imperatively ordered by physicians.

Ruby Bates, who was waiting near New York for her deposition to be taken by a New York lawyer for use in the Decatur trials, Thursday notified the International Labor Defense that her physical condition had become such that she had been obliged to go to a hospital. There an examination made it evident that an immediate operation was a life and death matter.

She was operated on early Friday morning. Physicians in charge could not pronounce her out of danger last night.

Thursday night, in the presence of a representative of the International Labor Defense, Ruby Bates told a Daily Worker reporter of her arrival in the hospital, and the operation she expected.

"I knew about my condition, but I didn't tell anybody just how bad it was, until I was forced to come to the hospital," she said.

"Then when I realized I'd have to be operated on, I came here, and notified Mr. Patterson of the I. L. D.

"You know I was forced to testify against the boys in the first trial. I told the truth at the last trial in Decaur, because I didn' want those boys to die on account of a lie I told. I have received threats that I will be lynched if I return, but, in spite of that, if it were necessary, and if I were able, I would go back and testify in Decatur. I would be afraid, because I know they are after me. But if I could, I would go.

"I have just heard that Knight will put Orville Gilley on the stand to testify against the Scottsboro boys, in this trial. I know they have filled him full of lies. They kept him in jail with us in Scottsboro, but they never dared put him on the stand. I wish I could go back to answer his lies, but I can't. And it isn't because I'm afraid. That wouldn't be enough to stop me."

As the reporter was leaving her bedside, she called him back:

"Do all you can for the Scottsboro boys," she said. "I did my best while I was able."

Governor Refuses to Protect Scottsboro Boys and Attorneys

I.L.D. Calls on Workers' Organizations to Rush Protests to Miller Against State-Sponsored Lynch Conspiracy

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 16.—No protection from lynch-mobs will be given the Scottsboro boys by the State of Alabama.

This was definitely announced today by Judge W. W. Callahan of Decatur, and Governor B. M. Miller of Alabama.

There will be no danger, Judge Callahan has announced, in the face of affidavits collected by the International Labor Defense quoting more than 500 Morgan county lynchers as being prepared to lynch the Scottsboro boys and murder their defense witnesses and attorneys.

No troops will be sent to protect the Scottsboro boys, Governor Miller announced, echoing Judge Callahan.

The plans of the State of Alabama become clearly a naked plot to deliver the Scottsboro boys to the lynchers on Monday, when they are scheduled to be arraigned in Decatur, or on the 27th, when their trial is scheduled to open.

The I.L.D. has called for all organizations and individuals who want to save the lives of the Scottsboro boys, to immediately rouse mass protest, hold meetings in every hall, on every street-corner, and from every meeting of workers held in the United States, flood Governor B. M. Miller of Alabama, at Montgomery, and Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur, with protests, holding them personally responsible for the lives of the Scottsboro boys, their defense witnesses and attorneys.

By JACK SPIVAK

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 16.—Sheriff J. F. Hawkins of Jefferson county, who will have the responsibility of transferring the Scottsboro boys from the county jail here to Decatur for arraignment on Monday morning, today "declined to answer" whether he would order his deputies to shoot into a mob that might try to lynch the boys while enroute to Morgan county.

This statement followed swiftly upon Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan's announcement yesterday in Decatur that he would have no soldiers in and around the court room and the jail to protect the prisoners and the International Labor Defense attorneys, Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky, despite widespread and open threats against their lives.

"Can't Answer," Says Sheriff

"Do you think white deputies would shoot into whites of their own or a neighboring county to protect Negroes," the sheriff was asked after he had declined to answer the other questions.

Hawkins obviously did not want to discuss the matter. He stared out of the window of his office working his jaws nervously.

shortly. "All I can say is that I would feel humiliated if the prisoners were taken away from me."

The sheriff has not yet received orders to transfer the prisoners from Birmingham to Decatur, nor does he know whether only seven or all nine will be ordered taken to Morgan county, sheriff Hawkins explained carefully and with a measure of significance that once he has delivered the boys to Sheriff "Bud" Davis of Morgan county his duty has been performed. Responsibility for their safety is thenceforth up to Morgan county officials.

Daily Worker
New York

Tension More Dangerous Now Than Last Spring

At the time of the Scottsboro trial this spring when the tension was nowhere near as dangerous, Sheriff Hawkins used twelve deputies and three cars to transfer the prisoners.

In Decatur they were met by a troop of some 35 soldiers which immediately surrounded the boys. When the boys were taken back to Birmingham for safe-keeping the National Guard acted as an escort.

But with Judge Callahan's statement that there will be no soldiers to guard the boys or their attorneys and with Sheriff Hawkins duty finished when he gets a receipt for them, the job of bringing them back to Birmingham if they are to be brought back to Birmingham for safekeeping after they are arraigned is left in the hands of Morgan county deputies. These deputies are residents of a county which has been loud in its announced purpose of finishing this case by means of a thirty-cent rope, whether Morgan County deputies will shoot into a lynch mob of Morgan County whites is considered very doubtful here.

Sheriff Hawkins plans to lead his deputies personally in transporting the Scottsboro boys to Decatur, what roads he will use or how many cars and deputies is supposed to be a secret.

Hawkins said that when an insurrection or riot threatens the sheriff has the legal power to call out the National Guard himself. This means that in the event of a mob movement it would fall upon Sheriff Davis to summon the soldiers, but in all cases where the sheriff calls the National Guard he is under the court's orders, and in this particular case the court has very specifically said that it saw no reason to have soldiers present.

Boys and Attorneys to Be Isolated in Court

The strange set-up of events for this coming arraignment and trial which is causing grave apprehension was further complicated by another statement from Judge Callahan which, though trifling in itself, holds far-reaching significance.

Judge Callahan refused to discuss anything even remotely connected with the case and would permit himself to be quoted in only one sentence.

Press men will be allowed in court, but no special arrangements such as press tables within the bars (the area separating the trial space from the spectators' seats) will be made for them.

At the last trial press tables were set up for white newspaper correspondents back of the prosecution table, two Negro correspondents were placed on the other side of the room near the section reserved for Negro spectators.

Reporters Sense Fear of Shooting in Court

During the entire trial newspaper men naturally were as much at home in the barred area as the attorneys. Frequently speaking to them to ask explanations of mooted points, there was plenty of space, so the question of room cannot be in Judge Callahan's mind, for there was plenty of room when Judge Horton presided.

The fact that this decision makes it inconvenient for reporters to take notes or write a running story of the trial and thus by discouraging them, thereby curtain the publicity about the trial cannot have suggested this decision, because once a reporter has been assigned, he will cover it whether he sits among the audience or at a convenient press table. In all courts where a large number of newspapermen is expected, arrangements are made to facilitate their work. Judges have been known to bar the press during certain portions of a trial which necessitated evidence being heard in chambers, but Judge Callahan apparently does not have the slightest intention of barring the press from hte trial.

He just does not want newspaper men in the space where the actual trial is being held.

See Boys and Attorneys Isolated for Targets

Newspapermen discussing this decision found in it a very grave interpretation in view of the seeming set-up, which makes it possible for mob action and the open threats against the lives of the Scottsboro boys and the I. L. D. lawyers, the situation is explosive. Judge Callahan, living in Decatur, cannot possibly avoid knowing just how serious it is. An attempt to kill the Scottsboro boys and the attorneys might be made even in open court, since there will be no soldiers there for protection.

The only conclusion the newspaper men could come to, considering all angles, is that Judge Callahan made his decision to keep the press from within the barred enclosure because he himself fears that shooting might start in court and does not want reporters where they might be in the way of spraying bullets.

And having reached that conclusion, the newspaper men cannot understand Judge Callahan's decision not to call soldiers to protect the boys, Leibowitz and Brodsky.

Samuel S. Leibowitz and Aid Make Plea to the Public

11-15-33

A plea for financial assistance for defense of the Scottsboro boys at Decatur was made here Monday by Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the boys, and his co-counsel, Joseph R. Brodsky.

They said: New York

"The preparation of the trial is no simple matter; witnesses from various parts of the country are required to be called; expert medical testimony must be prepared and doctors called to testify; various motion papers and other legal documents must be dictated, typed and prepared; investigation must be intensified and brought up to date.

"In short, if the Scottsboro defendants are to receive adequate defense, then those who are interested in their cause must provide the financial means necessary to properly prepare this case for trial.

"Moneys collected, however, are required to pay witnesses' fees, stenographic services, transportation costs of many witnesses from far distances and generally to cover all of the multitude of expenses incidental to adequate preparation of so important a trial.

"We think that aproximately $5,000 is urgently needed in order to proceed to accomplish the ends that we have set forth."

Mr. Leibowitz received nothing for his previous work at Decatur, and will donate his services again.

Alabama Officials In Open Invitation For Lynching Orgy

Only Quick Protest Action Can Save Boys and Defenders

BULLETIN

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 17.—Judge W. W. Callahan late this afternoon, refused a formal request made by David Schriftman, I.L.D. attorney, that sufficient protection for the Scottsboro boys and the I.L.D. attorneys be supplied.

The Judge said that deputies would be sufficient but declined to say how many would be assigned. The Morgan County Sheriff has only five at the jail.

Schriftman made a last plea that he hear evidence proving that the lives of the Scottsboro boys and Liebowitz and Brodsky are in grave danger before he orders the boys brought to Decatur Monday morning. He refused to entertain the plea.

(Special Correspondent of the Daily Worker.)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 17. — No additional deputies have been sworn in to protect the Scottsboro boys and the International Labor Defense Attorney Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky when they arrive in Decatur Monday morning for the arraignment, Sheriff "Bud" Davis of Morgan County stated today over the long distance telephone.

Morgan County has five deputies and "two or three others out in the county" the sheriff said, though he understands that Sheriff J. F. Hawkins of Jefferson County, (Birmingham) who will bring the Negroes to Decatur, may be asked to remain with them to help out the Morgan County sheriff. "We may have twelve, maybe fifteen deputies" Sheriff Davis concluded. "I haven't anything to say about it. Attorney General Knight is handling the whole matter of protection."

Officials Contradict Each Other

All of the very strange arrangements which have been made for protecting the prisoners and the I. L. D. lawyers seem even more strange when one considers the discrepancies in the statements between officials. Attorney General Thomas E. Knight says that he has no authority to order out of the guard or to say whether the prisoners are to remain in Decatur or be removed to Birmingham after the arraignment to be kept safely until the trial starts a week from Monday. On the other hand Sheriff Davis, in whose care the prisoners will be in Decatur, says that all arrangements for protection are in the hands of the attorney general.

The more one probes into this very complicated and tense situation the more peculiar it looks.

I. L. D. Attorneys Arrive in Birmingham

Despite this extremely grave indifference to provide sufficient protection and in view of the intense lynch sentiment seething in Decatur, Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky arrived in Birmingham by plane late this evening ready to go into court in Decatur Monday morning. Immediately upon their arrival they went into conference with David Schriftman, I.L.D. attorney who has been here during the past month. General George W. Chamlee, Southern counsel from Chattanooga, is expected tomorrow to join in the conferences and lay plans for the coming arraignment and trial.

Whether Leibowitz will remain in Birmingham until the 27th when the actual trial starts or return to New York and come down again has not yet been determined.

To Demand Miller Afford Protection

Due to Judge W. W. Callahan's announcement that he does not intend to have soldiers in and around the courthouse and jail during the arraignment and trial and Sheriff Davis' statement that there probably will not be more than a dozen or so deputies it is believed that I. L. D. counsel will seek an audience with Governor Miller in Montgomery tomorrow or Sunday to demand that proper steps be taken to protect the defendants and themselves since the threats against the lives of the counsel have been more open than against the defendants.

At the last trial not only did Sheriff Davis have all available deputies on hand but there were some 35 soldiers heavily armed always around the courtroom and jail. Even at that, two mob movements started which were stopped with difficulty. And at that time the sentiment was nowhere near as bitter as it is now.

Simultaneously many leading citizens of Alabama, fearful that the seeming set-up may result in a shocking massacre are urging the Attorney General Judge Callahan and the governor to see to it that proper protection is afforded both the defendants and their attorneys.

"State Has Perfect Set-up for Slaugther"

In a last minut effort to forestall the imminent danger David Schriftman left this morning for Decatur to confer with Judge Callahan on the question of protection though he had little hope that the presiding judge would change his mind.

"It seems that the State has a perfect set-up for a slaughter," Schriftman said before he left.

Sheriff "Bud' Davis, during the telephone conversation in which he said he was taking no special precautions to protect the defendants or their attorneys said that he had not even asked the National Guardsmen stationed at Hartselle, some 13 miles away, to be in readiness for a call. "Of course they're always there," he explained, "but I am under orders from the court and I have received no orders to ask them to be in readiness. The whole matter of protection is in the hands of Attorney General Knight," he repeated.

Judge Bars Tables for Press

"Will the Scottsboro boys be kept in jail in Decatur betwen the time they are arraigned on Monday morning and the time they go to trial a week later or will they be returned to sheriff said. On the question of newspapermen not being allowed press tables within the trial area space Sheriff Davis said:

"I can't put up press tables if the judge won't let me. He's running the court." the sheriff was asked what the sentiment was in Decatur. "Oh, there's no sentiment against the Negroes," he said genialy. "How aobut Leibowitz and Brodsky," he was asked.

"Oh, I don't know. I don't think there's any sentiment against Leibowitz here. No, I don't think so. I haven't found any."

Sheriff Vague on Protection

"You don't think that five deputies you have around the Decatur jail will be sufficient to protect the Negroes in the event of trouble do you?" "There may be other deputies from another county," the sheriff explained. "Maybe there'll be a total of twelve or fifteen?"

That Judge Callahan planed to ask Sheriff Hawkins of Jefferson County to remain with the prisoners and cooperate with Sheriff Davis has been rumored for several days. Sheriff Hawkins himself says that he has not yet received orders to transport the boys to Decatur nor whether he would stay with them or return to Birmingham. The fact that Sheriff Davis is of the opinion that "deputies from another county may be asked to stay' with him is but one more link in the chain tending to show that the whole thing was carefully planned out and the orders that will be issued probably agreed upon long in advance otherwise how did the rumor about Sheriff Hawkins being asked to stay with Sheriff Davis get out—and those persons who had the rumor were influential Alabama citizens with excellent sources of information.

Decatur Hourly Growing More Tense

During the past three days the attorney general has been in Decatur conferring and laying plans for the araignment and trial.

Reports from Decatar show that the town is hourly growing more tense as Monday mornings draws nearer though there is a possibility that nothing may happen at the time of the arraignment lest it look too much like the state deliberately led the defendenas and their attorneys into a trap to be slaughtered. Leibowitz sems to be hated in Decatur right now with a greater intensity than they hate the Scottsboro boys and the I. L. D. no one can foretell what will happen Monday morning when Leibowitz walks into court.

All Nine Boys To Be Taken to Decatur

Judging from last minute information all nine Scottsboro boys will be arraigned. The attorney general plans to ask for the Heywood Patterson case first, Patterson was tried this spring, convicted, sentenced to death and then the conviction set aside by Judge Horton who had presided over the trial. So far as can be learned the State has little or no additional evidence besides what it introduced at the spring trial and which Judge Morton found insufficient to sustain a conviction. The state does, however, intend to produce Orville Gilley who is supposed to have been in the now famous gondola car where the alleged "rape" upon Virginia Price and Ruby Bates occurred. Where Orville Gilley is now is a closely kept secret.

Birmingham "Age Herald" Admits in Editorial Lynch Danger Great in Decatur

Lynchers Fear Organization of Defense by 6,000 Organized Negro Share-Croppers

(Special Correspondence to the Daily Worker.)

DECATUR, Ala., Nov. 15.—Alabama seems to have set the stage here for the bloodiest massacre in recent American history when the Scottsboro boys and International Labor Defense Attorneys Samuel Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky appear in this little town for the arraignment and the trial of the internationally famous case on November 20 and 27 respectively.

So tense is the situation which would make it possible to slaughter the defendants and their attorneys that a number of civic leaders of the state, fully aware of the danger, have been trying desperately to persuade Attorney-General Thomas E. Knight Jr., and Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan to postpone the trial until the tension is at least somewhat alleviated. The Attorney-General says that he "see no reason for a postponement." And the judge who will preside has no comment to make.

When one considers the line-up which faces the defendants and their attorneys at the coming trial it is difficult to see how trouble can be avoided.

Daily Worker

Officials Seek "Quick End" of Case

11-16-33

1—Leibowitz and the I.L.D. are hated with a fervency bordering on fanaticism by a great many Morgan County citizens not only because Leibowitz and Brodsky are "northern Jews defending niggers," working for an alleged Communistic defense organization, but because Leibowitz had figuratively slapped their faces at the conclusion of the last trial by a statement attributed to him which referred to them in uncomplimentary phrases.

N.Y.

2—Decatur and Alabama are heartily sick of the Scottsboro cases. Negroes as a result of this famous case are becoming "cocky," to employ the expression used by one of Alabama's leading white citizens, and "too damned uppity," to use the phrase of Morgan County citizens. Alabama wants to see this case ended and the sooner the better.

Lynchings Prepare Trial Atmosphere

3—Intense feeling exists here since this spring, when the conviction of Heywood Patterson, one of the nine defendants, was set aside by Judge Horton. Since that trial one Negro boy was shot down in Decatur by a mob of hoodlums whose identity was never investigated; feeling runs rife that "northern Jews and the International Labor Defense" by defending the Scottsboro boys are "encouraging niggers and trying to put them on juries."

To put Negroes on juries would mean that the black man would get a finger into the operation of the law. Sooner or later the white South, which now zealously controls the operations of the law, would have to face a showdown on this question of allowing Negroes to participate in the legal life of the county and state and the general sentiment is that if a showdown is inevitable it might just as well come now.

Daily Worker 11-16-33

Bosses Fear Rising Militancy of Negroes

4—The state of Alabama knows that some 6,000 Negro share-croppers are secretly organized. State officials have been trying for a long time to catch the organizers or learn the identities of the members. They have failed. This secret organization of Negro croppers, which is growing rapidly, partly because of the economic conditions and partly because of the Scottsboro cases, constitutes a grave menace to the powerful white landowners and the white supremacy theory of the state. A smashing blow against the Scottsboro boys and the I.L.D. attorneys might act as a terrifying warning against Negro organizational activities and so would be welcomed by the state.

These, roughly, are some highlights which make it possible to understand the causes that might have influenced preparations for the Scottsboro trials. These preparations, which arouse more than just grave apprehension in the minds of leading citizens of what might happen, follow:

1—Judge Horton, who voiced opposition to two mob threats to lynch the Scottsboro boys during the last trial this spring by his orders to the National Guard to shoot any one attempting to get them illegally, was removed. (Details of how he was removed from the case will be told in a subsequent story.)

2—Judge W. W. Callahan of Decatur was appointed to take Judge Horton's place. (Editor's Note: Judge Callahan is a member of the Ku Klux Klan.)

Daily Worker

3—Where Judge Horton is reported to have ordered soldiers to shoot if any attempt was made to lynch the boys, Judge Callahan says that he sees no reason to have soldiers at the trial to protect either the defendants or the attorneys.

11-16-33

N.Y.

4—Attorney General Knight insists that the defendants come to trial and that he sees no reason to postpone it.

5—Attorney General Knight is running for Lieutenant Governor. A conviction in a state where lynch threats are being made against the defendants and the I.L.D. attorneys would make him a state hero to a great many voters and help his candidacy.

6—In the absence of soldiers to protect the defendants and their attorneys, protection will be in the hands of Sheriff "Bud" Davis of Morgan County. The number of deputies the sheriff will use has not been announced and it is problematical whether white deputies from Morgan County will shoot into white lynchers from their own county in defense of "niggers" and "No'thern Jews," whom they have come to hate.

7—Judge Callahan announced that he views this coming trial as "an ordinary criminal case" and added that he will take no other precautions than such as are taken at "ordinary criminal cases."

Officials' Acts Invite Lynching

With these facts, especially the one that Judge Callahan does not intend to call soldiers to protect the defendants or their attorneys, and in view of the extremely tense istuation here, it amounts to what is tantamount to an invitation for mob action in the opinion of many leading citizens. This very morning the Birmingham Age-Herald, one of the state's leading newspapers, pleaded editorially for a postponement of the trial. It said in part:

"We hope Judge Callahan is right in his assumption that the situation does not warrant a request for military protection. But remembering the circumstances which prevailed during the last trial and remembering what has taken place since that time, most informed Alabamians will be inclined to think that the judge ought to prefer being sage to being mistaken. . . . What we are facing in this particular affair is something so complicated and explosive that any lack of diligence in safeguarding the prisoners would be profoundly regrettable.

"As a matter of fact, many of us are wondering whether, everything considered, the case should not be postponed. In the light of all that has happened in the premises, no one can justly complain that the state has failed to move with sufficient vigor. Would it not be the part of wisdom to continue the hearing?"

Boys May Be Removed to Decatur at Once

The Scottsboro boys will be brought to Decatur from Birmingham on the 20th for arraignment. So strangely is the state arranging this whole matter that Sheriff J. F. Hawkins of Jefferson County, in whose custody the Negroes are, does not know whether the Scottsboro boys will stay in the Morgan County jail in Decatur or be returned to Birmingham for safety until the trial opens on the 27th.

In view of the lack of advance proper precautions for the protection of the defendants and their attorneys, it is significant to consider how long it would take to get state troopers to Decatur if the emergency arose.

If, in the event of an attack, the sheriff of the county would have to get in touch with Judge Callahan. Judge Callahan, in turn, would have to communicate with the governor for permission to call out the National Guard. That permission granted, the sheriff would thereupon have to communicate with the commanding officer of the nearest National Guard, which is in Hartselle, some 12 miles away.

Considering the time spent in these telephone conversations, providing there was no delay in connections or that any of the personages were not at home, and the length of time it would take for the soldiers to be called, arm themselves, pile into cars and make the trip to Decatur, barring all accidents on the road like logs placed in the way, approximately one hour at the minimum would elapse before soldiers could appear.

Investigators Posed as Soap Salesmen to Interview the Decatur Residents.

Attorneys for the nine Negroes in the Scottsboro case have in their possession evidence indicating that their own lives as well as those of their clients will be in danger if they are forced to retry the case in Decatur, Ala., it became known yesterday.

This evidence consists of seven affidavits sworn to by four men, who, posing as brush and soap salesmen, have interviewed more than 500 residents of Morgan County since Circuit Judge James E. Horton reversed the verdict of the jury which convicted Heywood Patterson last Spring.

To Ask Change of Venue.

The affidavits, it was learned, will be submitted to Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan in Decatur, Nov. 20, when seven of the nine Negroes are to plead before him to the charge that they attacked Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, two white girls, on a freight train near Scottsboro, March 25, 1931.

They will be used by Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defense, to support a motion for a second change of venue to some other county where feeling is less bitter against the accused Negroes, whose original conviction in Scottsboro, Jackson County, was reversed by the United States Supreme Court.

Although the Alabama statutes provide for but one change of venue, Mr. Leibowitz, it was understood, was prepared to challenge the constitutionality of the State law on the ground that it contravenes the "due process" clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Feeling is stronger against the Negroes in Morgan County now than it was in Jackson County at the time of their first trial in Scottsboro, according to the affidavits.

The four men who made the country-wide survey of public sentiment for the defense were Victor Elwood, John Williams, Jim Jones, operatives for a private detective agency, and David Schriftman, a New York attorney. The affidavits which they turned over to Mr. Leibowitz contain the names and addresses of scores of Morgan County residents who have declared openly that the Negroes could not receive a fair trial at Decatur.

Among the persons they interviewed were storekeepers, barbers, farmers; Negroes who said they had lived in fear since Judge Horton's reversal of the jury's verdict, and half a dozen National Guardsmen and officers who said they would offer only sham resistance to a lynching mob. One man whose name is listed in the affidavit said he was ready to organize a mob himself to lynch the Negroes and "their damned Jew lawyers from New York."

Women's Comments Reported.

Several persons, whose names and addresses are given in the affidavit, admitted they had fixed opinions on the guilt or innocence of the defendants, but said they would conceal their feelings in order to get upon the jury and help send the Negroes to the electric chair. Several women were quoted as saying they did not care what happened to the Negroes so long as they were killed, because if they were freed the South would not be safe for white women.

Not only were threats made against Mr. Leibowitz and the defendants, but, according to the investigators, the sentiment often was expressed that the Bates girl, who turned from a prosecuting witness to a defense witness between the first and second trials, should receive the same treatment. Some residents of the county said they would favor lynching Lester Carter, the white youth who testified for the defense at the last trial.

Mr. Schriftman, who filed an affidavit based on conversations he had in Morgan County, expressed the opinion that an impartial juror could not be found there, and said that "anybody associated with the defense will be exposed to serious danger," if the case were to be tried in Decatur.

Continuing, the affidavit said:

"Intense hatred was manifested for counsel for the defense. As one resident in Decatur said: 'If them lawyers, especially that Jew lawyer, Leibowitz, comes here, it will be a one-way trip. We missed him last time at the trial. He will never go back to New York if he comes here again and we'll take the others, too.'

"Your deponent is of the opinion that if the 'Scottsboro' cases are brought to Decatur for trial, it will be the signal for the most horrible of catastrophies that the South has yet witnessed."

State Prepares Its Case Against Seven Negroes In Scottsboro Defense

11-14-33

Montgomery, Ala.

Atty. Gen. Knight left yesterday afternoon for Decatur to dispose of official detail matters preliminary to arraignment there Nov. 20 for retrial, of the seven Negro defendants in the so-called "Scottsboro case." The trials are set to begin on Nov. 27. Mr. Knight will be joined at Decatur today by Asst. Atty. Gen. T. S. Lawson, who will aid him in the coming prosecutions.

New trials were ordered for the defendants by the Supreme Court of the United States when that tribural reversed action of the Alabama Supreme Court in affirming judgments of the Circuit Court of Jackson County where the negroes were convicted and sentenced to death for criminally assaulting two young white women early in March, 1931.

On a change of venue to Morgan County, the first of the retrials took place last Summer with Atty. Gen. Knight personally directing the prosecution. This trial resulted in the conviction and sentencing to death for the second time, of Heywood Patterson, one of the seven defendants. Later, Circuit Judge J. E. Horton, of Athens, granted the motion of defense attorneys for a new trial, holding in effect that evidence presented by the State did not make out a case sufficiently strong to support the verdict.

The Eighth Judicial Circuit, which includes Morgan County, has two judges, Judge Horton, and Judge W. W. Callahan, of Decatur. Judge Callahan will preside at the retrials beginning Nov. 27, of the "Scottsboro case" negroes, who are now confined in the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham.

New Presiding Jurist For Arraignment At Decatur Won't Ask For Soldiers

Montgomery, Ala.

DECATUR, ALA., Nov. 14.—(AP)—Unless Judge W. W. Callahan changes his opinion, there will be no troops on patrol at the Morgan County Courthouse and jail Monday, when the seven defendants in the Scottsboro case are arrainged and in the subsequent trials Nov. 27.

Replying to a telephone query from Birmingham today, Judge Callahan, who will preside over the trials, said he did not believe troops were necessary to maintain order.

"While I do not care to make a definite statement at this time, I am opposed to having troops at any trial," said Judge Callahan, who replaces Judge J. E. Horton, who presided at the trial of Heywood Patterson, one of the defendants last April and subsequently set aside the verdict of death.

Judge Callahan supplemented his statement with a proviso that he would issue a statement later and that, if he thought circumstances warranted it, he would change his decision and ask for troops. He said, however, he had heard nothing that led him to believe extra guards were necessary.

Troops have been called three times in the case already, first on the night of March 25, 1931, when the seven defendants and two juveniles were held in the Jackson County Jail at Scottsboro on charges of attacking the girls, and again at Scottsboro, when they were tried and eight of the nine were sentenced to death.

In the trials here last Spring, a detachment was on duty at the Courthouse and Jail to preserve order, and to provide additional security at the Jail.

Only seven of the nine defendants in the case, transferred here from Scottsboro on a change of venue last March 8, are now in the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court. The other two, adjudged juveniles, are in custody of the Morgan County Juvenile Court.

The negroes are charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Buby Bates, of Huntsville, Ala., aboard a Southern Railway freight train as it traversed Jackson County, March 25, 1931.

Save the Scottsboro Boys!

This Monday morning the nine Scottsboro boys will be taken from their jail cells and brought to Decatur for arraignment.

Openly, cynically, and with savage anticipation, the leading businessmen, plantation masters, and officials of Decatur are preparing to "put a quick end" to the Scottsboro case. They are ready for the Monday arraignment!

Daily Worker 11-18-33

For more than two years, only the unrelenting vigilance and ceaseless protests of the masses of the world has kept the nine Scottsboro boys alive, out of the hands of the Jim-Crow executioners.

If in the next two days this vigilance relaxes but for one moment, it is a horrible certainty that the Scottsboro boys will be flung to hangmen and lynch torturers!

New York N.Y.

Scores of affidavits have been produced by the Daily Worker proving that Decatur is ready for the lynching.

The sheriff in whose custody they will be, has refused to give any assurance that he will fire into any lynch mob that attempts the life of the boys. He thus promises the lynch mob full protection in advance!

Both, Judge Callahan and Governor Miller of Alabama, have refused to pay the slightest attention to the International Labor Defense warnings that adequate protection must be granted in view of the obvious danger to the boys.

The situation is gruesomely like the recent state of affairs in Maryland, where George Armwood was tortured to death and lynched, after the leading state officials had previous information of the lynch preparations and participated in the lynching!

On Monday morning nothing will stand between the Scottsboro boys and torture, agony, and death, but the might of your protest!

From every factory, every working class street, neighborhood and organization, must pour an avalanche of mighty protest! Every hour is fraught with danger! Send your cry of anger to the lynch Governor Miller of Alabama, demanding protection and release of the Scottsboro boys!

The Governor of Alabama must know that you hold him personally responsible for the safety of the innocent Scottsboro boys!

Why All the Speed? Who's Guilty, Anyway?

WE ARE informed by a headline in the daily press that a "SPEEDY DEATH" is planned for Lloyd Price the 22-year-old youth who has already admitted that he attacked and strangled six-year-old Helen Sterler. The story states that the Brooklyn district attorney, William F. X. Geoghan, is out to make a record for speed between the commission of the crime and the electric chair.

We ask why? Is it possible that the district attorney believes that by rushing this lad to the chair he will deter other depraved men from committing similar crimes? Maybe so, but we doubt it.

The same week which saw the Sterler slaying solved also saw a white former policeman charged with a similar attack on a five-year-old girl in the presence of a child of seven and on Sunday a mob of 200 white men and women were frustrated in an attempt to lynch a white Coney Island shoemaker accused of a similar offense. Price's predicament did not deter them at all.

What purpose will be served by rushing Price to the electric chair? The unfortunate lad appears to be beyond punishment, anyway. The important thing to be done is something to prevent the recurrence of this type of crime and Price is as good a subject to begin on as any.

Men in their right minds do not attack little girls. The state may be justified in demanding the life of men who attack children or who slay them in the perpetration of loathsome deeds. If Price is found guilty and sentenced to death, he should die. But why the rush? The question organized society should ask itself is: "Is Price solely to blame for this crime?" and "What can be done to deter such crimes, since the fear of capital punishment does not deter them?" And, there are scores of men of all races waiting a chance to commit crimes of this sort.

Since 19[illegible] we are informed, Price has been in prison twice for unnatural crimes against children. In that year he was sent to the reformatory for eighteen months and in 1930 he was sent to jail for six months for impairing the morals of a minor. Both convictions indicated the bent of his mind; and yet, the state twice turned him back upon society without adequately satisfying itself that it had helped him to overcome his weakness. The state itself cannot escape a part of the responsibility for his later crime.

Yet, the state is not on trial for the murder, though it should be, for it is as guilty as Price. It has neither performed its duty to Price nor to itself. It now wants to rush the victim of its own negligence to the electric chair to cover up its own deficiencies.

NEW YORK.—Among the many letters received for the Scottsboro boys in Birmingham Jail by the International Labor Defense, are those written by members of the MOPR, the ILD of Soviet Russia, and especially by the children in Pioneer organizations attached to MOPR.

The children write that they have read about the Scottsboro boys, the frame-up against them, and the international fight for their release in their local Red Aid newspapers.

Among the tasks set themselves by these children, says the latest letter received from the "Young Friends of MOPR," Pioneers' School No. 6, Anapa, in the North Caucasian Region, is the collection of dues and other funds for the MOPR.

Board Goes South to Start Probe on Lynchings

Defender 11-4-33

Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—A delegation representing the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, 156 Fifth Ave., this city, left Thursday, Nov. 2, for Tuscaloosa, Ala. In that city, the recent scene of four lynchings, the committee will conduct an investigation.

It is the state purpose of the delegation, according to Alfred Hirsch, secretary of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, "not only to investigate, but to make clear the causes of the lynchings and to fix the true responsibility for them."

"It is our aim," Mr. Hirsch said, "to surround our findings on this lynching with the broadest and most searching publicity. We want to bring these crimes before the court of world opinion so clearly and sharply that extra legal lynchings—which are becoming a recognized short cut to terrorization as the fight for Negro legal rights grow—may become impossible.

"Above all," Mr. Hirsch's statement concludes, "we will avoid a 'library shelf report' which leads to no immediate and pressing action."

Of the seven national committee investigators, four are southerners and three are women. The four southerners are Bruce Crawford, editor of Crawford's Weekly, Norton, Va.; Howard Kester, southern secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation of Nashville, Tenn.; Grace Lumpkin, South Carolina novelist, and Vann Woodward, former professor at the Georgia school of technology. Other members of the committee are Hollace Ransdell, Jessica Henderson and Alfred H. Hirsch.

PROBE FAILS TO BARE MARYLAND LYNCHERS

11-29-33

Atlanta, Ga.

PRINCESS ANNE, Md., Oct. 28. (AP)—State's Attorney John B. Robins today expressed the opinion that the Somerset county grand jury would never be called upon to act in the investigation of last week's lynching of George Armwood, negro, taken from the jail here, unless more evidence was discovered.

"The investigation so far has not turned up a bit of evidence which implicates anyone in the actual lynching," declared Robins.

"Frankly, I don't feel like spending the county's money in having the grand jury recalled if we haven't any more evidence than we have now."

Of the 40-odd witnesses that have been questioned by Robins, all said they were not able to identify any member of the lynching mob, he said.

BALTIMORE, Md.—(ANP)—The administrative board of the Baltimore Urban League, led by Judge Joseph N. Ulman of the Supreme court, met with Governor Ritchie in Baltimore recently, and presented strong resolutions deploring the lynching of George Armwood at Princess Anne. They asked the Governor to sponsor an anti-lynch law to prevent the occurrence of such happenings in the future.

Of the Urban League protest, the Baltimore Sun, leading daily paper of that city said in the leading editorial: "The delegation from the Baltimore Urban League which waited on Governor Ritchie yesterday, presented in a dignified and intelligent manner, the attitude of responsible members of the white and colored communities on lynching and the duty of the state to assert its power to stamp it out.

"In contrast to another to another interracial group which tried to tell the Governor the other day that a Negro who had been twice convicted of murder had been 'framed,' the Urban League's representatives held to the point, which is that the intelligence and moral conviction of the state must be effectively enlisted against such atrocious outrages upon the public authority as occurred in Princess Anne last week."

Alabama Paper in Threats Against I.L.D. Attorneys

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., Nov. 12.—Two direct threats against the International Labor Defense attorneys in the Scottsboro Case, are contained in the "Community Builder," a paper published in the interests of the Alabama landlords, whose preparations to lynch the Scottsboro boys, the defense attorneys and witnesses, have been exposed in the Daily Worker.

> "In the face of the feeling that exists at Decatur, as well as throughout the Tennessee Valley, against any lawyer claiming to represent the International Labor Defense, we suggest that it will not be well for these lawyers to again show up on any soil at any point within this valley. We do not need that type of cattle down here, and their further appearance is wholly unnecessary. There are plenty of able lawyers here in the North Alabama, who, if employed or appointed by the court, will see to it that the negroes to be tried at Decatur are given the proper representation."

An editorial, similarly featured a week previously, warned the I. L. D attorney "to stay at home."

I. L. D. Head Appeals for Immediate Contributions

NEW YORK.—"A mass lynching is being prepared for the Scottsboro Boys," William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense declared yesterday in an appeal for immediate organization of mass defense and the collection of funds to save the Scottsboro Boys.

"The Scottsboro boys will be led into court again on Nov. 27.

"The facts proclaiming their innocence have been piled high, one upon the other by the International Labor Defense and now on top of these, rests the opinion of Judge Horton granting Heywood Patterson a new trial. This opinion not only substantiates the facts accumulated by the International Labor Defense it annihilates the testimony of Victoria Price, the state's star witness.

WILLIAM L. PATTERSON

"This will be less than the mockery of a trial. It is the preparation for a mass legal lynching.

A Challenge to Toiling Masses.

"Against this, only the organization of thousands of more Negro and white workers will suffice. The slogan, 'the Scottsboro Boys shall not die,' must not have been launched in vain. It becomes a challenge to the Negro masses and the working class of America, an acid test of their courage, of their will to fight for their very lives against the denial of their constitutional rights, for their liberty and against lynch terror.

"Organization must bring finances. Delegations must be prepared to carry the irrefutable truth of the lynch preparations before the government. There must be no avenues left open through which the leaders of this government can escape and say, 'we are not prepared for this thing.'

"The plans of the lynchers' press, the tales of incitement to mob violence, the proof of lynch preparations secured by the unceasing, tireless efforts of the International Labor Defense, must be placed in the laps of those who are most responsible.

"The International Labor Defense sends out a clarion call to every Negro and white man, woman and child in America: repudiate that leadership that does not call at this hour for organization and heroic struggle against the enemy.

"Close ranks with the militant organization whose banners carry the call for full social, political and economic equality for Negroes.

"Link up the struggle of the 'plowed under' Negro masses with the struggle of the oppressed native and foreign-born white workers.

"Organization and funds, funds and organization for the defense of Scottsboro, for the struggle for equal rights for Negro people. Rush funds at once to the International Labor Defense, Room 430, 80 East 11th St., New York City."

FEAR' VIOLENCE IN DECATUR, ALA.

New York Lawyers Show Affidavits, Claiming Change of Venue Needed.

New York, Nov. 10.—(LP)—Mob violence against nine Negroes and their attorneys in the Scottsboro case if the case is retried in Decatur, Ala., as set for November 27 was predicted today in affidavits made public by New York lawyers.

Three private detectives and a lawyer posed as brush and soap salesmen and interviewed 500 residents of Decatur and Morgan county to ascertain prevailing sentiment, it was said.

The investigators reported violence directed toward "those interfering New York lawyers" as well as the Negroes, and representatives of the International Labor Defense were certain to accompany retrail of the case at Decatur.

They reported existence of intense and bitter resentment against Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defense, who took the case at the request of the International Labor Defense.

Leibowitz, it was learned, will use the affidavits to support a motion for a change of venue to some other Alabama county.

He will present them to Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan in Decatur on November 20, when seven of the nine Negroes plead to a charge of attacking two white girls, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, on a freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., March 25, 1931.

Heywood Patterson, another of the accused, will be retried November 27. His conviction last Spring when Leibowitz entered the case to defend him, was reversed by Circuit Judge James E. Horton.

SCOTTSBORO AGAIN

A BIRMINGHAM correspondent reports that Alabama is undergoing a "soul-searching." Citizens of many shades of opinion join in worrying about the third trial of the Scottsboro Negroes set for November 27. Judge Horton, who conducted the second trial last April, will not preside. Judge W. W. Callahan, an unknown quantity in the controversy, is assigned to the case, presumably at the instance of Attorney-General Knight. This alarms the Birmingham Post:

> "Critics of our courts will now charge that the State Supreme Court permitted Attorney-General Knight to shop around until he found a judge who combined some of the qualities of a prosecutor with those of a jurist. . ."

The soul-searching is worth while, even though it produce nothing more than this comment. Judge Horton's fairness to the defendants throughout the second trials earned him nation-wide praise. It is good to see that any departure from that standard will be protested by responsible elements in Alabama. Lynchings have occurred there recently. Interference in the Scottsboro case by Northern labor and radical organizations has stirred up bitterness. Under these circumstances it would be fatally easy for Alabamians to permit the third Scottsboro trials to degenerate into farce. That would be a loss to State prestige, doubly deplorable because of Judge Horton's fine service last year.

Daily Worker 11-11-33 New York, N.Y.

By BILL DUNNE

II.

The mass of evidence in the hands of the Daily Worker shows that the murder terror against Negroes in and around Decatur, Alabama, is part of a conspiracy to lynch the innocent Scottsboro boys, and part of a general campaign of lynch and murder terror throughout the South.

Three recent events link the evidence in the hands of the Daily Worker, showing organized lynch sentiment in and around Decatur, Alabama, encouraged directly by Attorney-General Knight, to name only one of the Alabama state officials, with the Tuscaloosa lynching and the torture and murder of George Armwood on the Eastern shore of Maryland, with Governor Ritchie, who gives the same kind of open and covert support to the lynch gang as Attorney-General Knight furnishes them in Alabama.

The first event is the refusal of Attorney-General Knight to allow the recently formed committee of Southern liberals to examine the grand jury records in the Tuscaloosa case and his refusal to furnish protection for the committee.

The second event is the statement made in the report of the Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching which, while saying "a consuming fear of Communism, injected by the attempt of the International Labor Defense to force its way into the case," was a factor in the Tuscaloosa lynchings, has, because of facts that could not be concealed, to make the following statement:

"Immediate responsibility for this situation and probably for the lynchings themselves, rests upon a local secret organization with an elaborate system of espionage and intimidation."

The International Labor Defense has proved that the deputies and a private detective shot down the Tuscaloosa prisoners themselves, carrying out a well-organized murder plot aided and abetted by Sheriff Shamblin.

The third event confirming the charges of the Daily Worker, is the cynical and impudent letter sent by Governor Ritchie of Maryland to Robert Minor, trying to deny responsibility for the legal and extra-legal lynch terror in Maryland when the evidence collected by the Daily Worker shows that Governor Ritchie had knowledge of the preparations to lynch Armwood hours before the lynching occurred.

The Nine Scottsboro Boys Threatened By Alabama Lynch Mobs

The state of Alabama now intends to go through with the trial of the innocent Scottsboro boys in Decatur. This in spite of, and certainly because of, the guilty knowledge Attorney-General Knight and other state officers have of the whipped-up lynch sentiment against the Scottsboro boys in and around Decatur, and of the preparations made to lynch them through a farcical trial or by extra-legal means.

The intentions of the state authorities of the State of Alabama are shown in a telegram just received by Osmond K. Fraenkel from Thomas E. Knight, Alabama's Attorney-General, and the moving spirit in the whole lynch conspiracy. The telegram states: "Have recommended payment of costs taxed against State of Alabama Scottsboro cases. My recommendation approved by Governor. Costs will be forwarded to the clerk of the Supreme Court."

Since one of the main issues locally was the cost of a new trial, the decision of the state authorities to pay the costs indicates their decision to bring the Scottsboro boys before the bar of lynch justice again.

The overwhelming proof of the innocence of these boys does not sway the Alabama authorities. They are going to bring the boys to trial once more in a county where the Daily Worker can prove preparations are under way to lynch them.

The Daily Worker yesterday published a few statements of residents of Morgan County in the towns of Decatur and Hartselle. They were chosen at random from more than five hundred such statements secured during a three-week investigation in and around Decatur.

More than this: The evidence in possession of the Daily Worker shows that through use of the Jewish issue sentiment has been created and the foundation laid for organizing the lynching of attorneys for the Scottsboro boys and anyone else who appears in their defense.

Today the Daily Worker furnishes further unimpeachable evidence, taken from sworn affidavits, of the lynch conspiracy and of the connection of Attorney-General Knight with this conspiracy:

"The restaurant owner on Main Street, Hartselle, said that they ought to 'burn Ruby Bates and them niggers all together'. He also said: 'Tom Knight should have hit that damn Jew lawyer in the mouth for calling them niggers 'mister.' "

E. L. Perryman, Danville, said that he believed "the Scottsboro niggers should be sent to the hot seat," and that he hoped that Attorney-General Knight would send them there.

On the 31st day of August "Mr. Couch, of Falkville, said that he was a good shot with the pistol and that he would like to kill all of the Scottsboro negroes. He said that if he got a chance he would kill them and that every white man should do the same."

Between the 29th and 30th of August "A clerk in 'Brothers Meat Market,' in Hartselle, said that 'the people wouldn't stand for them New York lawyers come down here again and do as they did before. They were trying to tear down our customs of the South and make the niggers have social rights with the white people.' "

An officer of the National Guard, a resident of Hartselle, said he would like to see the Negroes taken out and killed and that he didn't "have no use for any of the black bastards."

Raymond Moore, Route 2, Decatur, stated between October 22nd and 27th, that "all of them niggers and their Jew lawyers should be killed and the country wouldn't miss anything, and it would learn the other niggers to stay in their places."

Griffith, Route 2, Decatur, said between the above dates that "if all of the niggers was dead, why the South would be better off and them Scottsboro niggers has caused lots of trouble with the rest of the niggers."

Joe Burt, Route 2, Decatur, said between the above dates that "if they ever turn those niggers loose, why it will make the rest of the niggers do worse than ever before."

C. R. Penn, Route 3, Hartselle, said that he was of the opinion that not only should the Negroes be killed, but the lawyers also.

Patrick, Falkville, said that the Negroes should be hanged, "by their necks and that it would end this trial and teach the rest of the niggers a lesson."

W. T. Tucker, Route 1, Hartselle, said that if "the New York Jews come here again, they ought to be taken and lynched along with the niggers."

On June 27th, W. G. Roberts, agent for the Louisville and Nashville Railway Company, said that he would be very glad when they burn those niggers so it would stop the noise from the North and so the niggers would be kept in their place without any trouble.

On June 28th, Oscar Pearson, 615 Vine Street, said he would like to see all of them niggers burned and all of their lawyers with them.

On November 3rd, "The Community Builder" of Huntsville, said editorially:

"And in the face of the feeling that exists at Decatur, as well as throughout the Tennessee Valley, against any lawyer claiming to represent the International Labor Defense League, we suggest that it would not be well for these lawyers to again show up on any soil at any point within this valley. We do not need that type of cattle down here, and their further appearance is wholly unnecessary."

It is with such indisputable evidence of sentiment and organized efforts, involving officers and men of the National Guard called by the Governor to furnish "protection," to lynch the Scottsboro boys and their attorneys, that the state officials continue the preparations for holding the trial in Decatur.

The Daily Worker has thrown a search-light into the lynch-ridden community of Decatur and the State of Alabama. It has found out where the lynch sentiment comes from and by whom it is being organized. It has published only bits of the great collection of this kind of evidence it has on hand. It will continue to publish more of it day by day.

The main thing now is to organize the mass support for the Scottsboro defense, to flood the state authorities and President Roosevelt with demands that this murder conspiracy end at once and the Scottsboro boys be released unconditionally, with whatever arrangements to protect them from the lynchers and lynch leaders may be necessary—including the right of Negroes to arm in self-defense.

On the 18th and 19th of this month, there will be held a public investigation and trial in Baltimore of the Armwood lynching on the Eastern shore of Maryland. There will also be an anti-lynch conference, organized and held under the auspices of the League of Struggle of Negro Rights.

The common attitude of Governor Ritchie and Attorney-General Knight in states so widely separated show the spread of lynch and murder terror throughout the South and its encouragement by the responsible authorities.

The increase in lynch and murder terror, and the growing mountain of evidence of the connection of the authorities with it, as part of the drive against the living and social conditions of the Negro masses, the increasing use of force against all sections of the working class, both white and Negro, in their struggles for better lviing conditions, has made it necessary to begin at Baltimore a mass counter offensive against lynch and murder terror. This will be the main purpose of the conference of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights.

Scottsboro Defense To Ask Change Of Venue

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Nov. 8—(AP)—When the nine negroes charged with criminal assault in the Scottsboro case are arraigned before Judge W. W. Callahan at Decatur, Ala., Nov. 20, a petition for a change of venue to Birmingham will be filed and argued, George W. Chamlee, International Labor Defense League lawyer, announced today.

Chamlee said a motion had been filed in Washington asking the Supreme Court to grant authority for the United States marshal to make an execution on property owned by the State of Alabama to satisfy a judgment representing expenses of printing transcripts by the defense, accruing when the original death sentence on the negroes was reversed by the Supreme Court.

Leibowitz Will Seek Change Of Scottsboro Hearings To Mobile

11-11-33

NEW YORK, Nov. 10—(AP)—Samuel S. Leibowitz, defense attorney in the Scottsboro case, will seek removal of the retrial from Decatur, Ala., to Mobile, he said today.

Montgomery

His clients, nine negro youths, were charged in two previous trials with attacking two white girls on a freight car.

Leibowitz will go South for the arraignment at Decatur Nov. 20. His request for another change of venue will be on the ground that they "can't a get a fair trial in Decatur," he said.

Previously the trial was shifted from Scottsboro to Decatur. Only one change of venue is allowed under Alabama law.

If his petition is refused, Leibowitz said, he plans to carry the case to the United States Supreme Court. He said mob feeling around Decatur is high.

He refused to comment on a series of affidavits made by private detectives here yesterday on the ground that they are not yet filed in court.

The Daily News said the affidavits list threats by Alabama National Guard officers and troopers to deliver the nine defendants to a lynch mob.

OFFICIALS CONSPIRE WITH LYNCH GANGS TO MURDER 9 SCOTTSBORO NEGRO BOYS

By BILL DUNNE

A three weeks' investigation in and around Decatur, Ala., discloses widespread preparations for lynching the Scottsboro Boys when their new trial opens in Decatur, Ala., Nov. 27, and also probably their attorneys and all those working in their defense.

The investigation, probably the most thorough ever carried out in a lynch-ridden southern community, reveals obvious connections between lynch sentiment, organized lynch gangs and the authorities.

They reveal without possibility of refutation, that since the indictment of the innocent Scottsboro Boys and especially since the exposure of the murderous frame-up against them, an organized campaign of lynch and murder terror has been conducted throughout the State of Alabama but centering in Decatur, where the trial took place, as a result in the change of venue.

Boys in Hourly Danger

The Daily Worker has a huge collection of material, secured with the cooperation of the League of Struggle for Negro Rights and the International Labor Defense, which proves, beyond a shadow of a doubt, the impossibility of the Scottsboro Boys receiving anything in the nature of a fair trial in Decatur. This material, secured in an investigation financed by the dimes and quarters of Negro and white workers and sympathizers responding to the appeal of the Daily Worker, proves that the innocent Scottsboro Boys are in hourly danger from lynch gangs and that, for the most part, the authorities await merely better organization of the lynch terror to turn them over to the hands of organized murderers.

Today the Daily Worker gives only a few quotations from the mass of material in its possession. Tomorrow it will carry more extensive news stories and articles as the beginning of a most sensational and detailed exposure of the conspiracy to electrocute the innocent Scottsboro Boys or turn them over to an organized lynch gang for torture and death.

State to Utilize Lynch Gangs

Outstanding also is the evidence of an organized attempt to utilize organized lynching against the Scottsboro Boys, their attorneys and defenders, Negro and white, as part of a planned campaign to crush the rising struggles of the Negro masses in the Black Belt of the South against lynch and murder terror and other special forms of oppression and robbery.

"Won't Stand for Another 'Trial'"

"On June 19th one, Smith, proprietor of a lunch room on Molton St. in Decatur, known as Heany's Lunch Room, said: 'There shouldn't be any trial for them damn niggers, that 30c worth of rope would do the work and it wouldn't cost the county much.' Also that he was ready to help lynch them. 'If the state don't kill them then the people here will—if they only bring them back. Those god-darn New York Jews will be killed too if they try to come down here and clear those black bastards'."

"On June 21st one, Winton, on Fifth Ave., Decatur, said that 'the people won't stand for another trial of the Scottsboro niggers here. That the people will mob the niggers and the lawyers too'."

Neck-tie Party for Boys and Attorneys

"On June 21st the proprietor of the American Cafe in Decatur said that 'If those Jews come down here again the people will lynch them and the niggers too.' He said that 'The sentiment of the people is very bad towards the niggers and if they are tried again in Decatur there will be a neck-tie party'."

"On the same date one Lawrence Frahn, proprietor of Frahn's Garage on Second Ave., Albany, Ala., said that he is ready to go with a mob to 'lynch them any time and also those damn Jew bastards who are defending the niggers'. He said that 'the niggers needed no trial—only a rope around their neck'. He said that 'there are no 12 men in Morgan County who will listen to the defense side of the trial'."

"On June 21st Jonh [illegible] Wicker, proprietor of a hardware store on Bank and Main St., said that, 'the niggers got a fair trial and there isn't any use spending lots of money in re-trying them. That they should have strung them up when they caught them in Scottsboro, Ala'."

"On June 27th W. M. Mosely, 603 Line St., said that 'those niggers should be killed so that there would be no trouble between the blacks and the whites'. He said that he believes that they got a fair trial in Scottsboro."

"On June 27th Frank Price, 208 W. Ninth St., said that 'The Scottsboro niggers and those Jews lawyers are putting meanness in the minds of the rest of the niggers here in the South so we got to get rid of them before it causes some serious trouble'."

"Will Be Killed" If They Are Brought Here"

"On June 28th Oscar Pierson, 615 Vine St., said he 'would like to see all of them niggers burned and all of their lawyers with them'."

"On June 29th R. B. Graves, 1202 Second Ave., West, said that 'We ought to deal with the niggers like our grandfathers did and we would be rid of the whole thing'."

"On June 29th Jim West of the St. Joseph Cave, said he 'would lead the mob just to see the niggers killed' and he 'believes they will be killed if they come back here'."

"On June 29th Charles Sherman, Wilson Ave., said that 'those niggers should be lynched on general principles if for nothing else'."

I. L. D. "Making Niggers More Militant"

"On June 27th Miss Elizabeth Morris, 101 Prospect Drive, said 'she didn't care what they did with the niggers for she didn't follow the case very closely—but she said it is making the rest of the niggers meaner and harder to manage."

"On July 1st J. H. Riddle, Route 3, said that 'if there is a white man in Morgan County that would turn the niggers loose, he ought to be lynched himself'."

"On June 29th R. L. Smith, 405 Grove St., said he 'wants to help lynch these damn Jew sons-of-bitches'."

"On July 3rd Mr. Clopton, 205 Third Ave. South, said, that 'there was a mob at the first trial of these niggers and that there would be one at the next one to do what they intended to do at the first'."

"On the 22nd of August in Hartsville (Morgan County), W. T. Stewart, a dealer in farm tools, said 'Something ought to be done with them Scottsboro niggers, for it's ruining the other niggers here in the South.' He also said that 'they should be hung to teach the rest of the niggers that's what they can expect if they don't stay in their places'."

Part of the material in the possession of the Daily Worker consists of 31 names of persons living in and around Decatur given by one, A. J. Banby, 108 West Cherry St., as being those who took part in the attempt to lynch Thomas Brown. Many of those whose names are on this list have expressed themselves as follows, in regard to the Scottsboro case: "It should be handled like it's always been handled, take them out and finish the job."

Workers Must Answer Lynch Plans

These few examples taken at random from the mass of material in the possession of the Daily Worker, show conclusively that the charges made by the International Labor Defense, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights and the Daily Worker cnncerning the impossibility of securing a fair trial for the Scottsboro Boys, are correct. They show further, and the additional material that we shall publish from day to day will prove conclusively a conspiracy by state and county officials and organized lynch gangs to use the Scottsboro case as an example to terrorize still further the Negro workers, sharecroppers and tenant farmers and all those who rally to their defense against the system of lynch and murder used in the South to bulwark the semi-feudal class and social relationship maintained by these methods.

The evidence in the possession of the Daily Worker shows the need for the most rapid organization in defense of the Scottsboro Boys and the launching of a nation-wide campaign against lynching and other special forms of oppression of the Negro masses used to throttle their struggle for liberation.

Buy the Daily Worker to secure the most detailed exposure of conditions in a typical lynch-ridden community ever published in this country.

NAMES OF NEGROES FOUND ON DISPUTED JACKSON JURY LIST

Circuit Clerk's Testimony Is Surprise At Hearing In Attack Case

BY RALPH E. HURST
The Birmingham News Staff Writer

DECATUR—Alabama jury rolls contain names of Negroes, it was testified by three Jackson County officials Thursday afternoon when they identified two persons listed in Jackson's 1931 roll as being black.

Their identifications came after tedious hours of scouring through the voluminous book during the Scottsboro defense counsel's arguments to quash the indictments against the nine Negroes charged with attacking Ruby Bates and Victoria Price.

The motion, like the unsuccessful motion to quash the venire, was based on the contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury rolls because of race and color in violation of the fourteenth amendment.

Pointing to the book containing the roll from which the Jackson County Grand Jury that indicted the Negroes was drawn, C. A. Wanna, Jackson Circuit Court clerk, identified the name of Hugh Sanford as that of a Negro.

A few minutes later J. E. Moody, Jackson jury board member, pointed to the name of Mark Taylor. J. E. Snodgrass also said they were Negroes.

Names in the book had been studied by the two officials, called as defense witnesses, since shortly after 9 a.m. as they went through the list and specified those they knew personally and stated whether they were white or black.

Following this, Defense Attorney Leibowitz discovered several names which he said were of Negroes whom he had called as witnesses in the previous trial here.

The discovery of Sanford's name, coming just before court recessed late Thursday, marked the first definite proof since the inception of the fight against Alabama's jury system that Negroes were enrolled as prospective jury members.

That a handwriting expert would be called in and an effort to show the entries were irregular was indicated by Leibowitz's questions to one query about the handwriting, Moody replied, "I do not know."

"That's all right" Leibowitz said, "I will have some one here who knows all about those things."

The indictment attack, insofar as is now known, is the final play of the defense to prevent trial of the cases set for next Monday when Heywood Patterson, twice sentenced to death, will face prosecution for the third time on a severance.

Meanwhile instanter attachments had been ordered by Judge Callahan for several Jackson Countians, including county officials, who failed to answer subpoenaes as defense witnesses. These witnesses are to be used in an effort to show that Negroes have never been called to serve on juries.

The motion to quash the indictments, based on allegations that Negroes were systematically excluded from the jury roll because of race and color in violation of the fourteenth amendment, attacks the application of Alabama's jury laws and involves the same principles as in the move to quash this county's venires.

Denial of the motion to quash the venire came early Thursday after J. A. Tidwell, Morgon jury board member, had testified that J. J. Sykes, a Negro, was not on the jury roll because he was "badly crippled," and because the board had information reflecting on his character.

Judge Callahan held that the defense's move was against the administration of the jury laws, rather than the constitutionality of the laws and that evidence had not been produced to show Negroes had been discriminated against.

Moody began going through the book shortly after 9 o'clock, and was still calling names at noon, when court recessed until 1 p.m.

Denial of the motion came in a lengthy decision after J. A. Tidwell, Morgan Jury Board member, had testified that J. J. Sykes, Negro, was not on the jury roll because he was crippled and of questionable character.

The state has shown, he said, that the jury board did not know whether some on the roll were white or colored.

Judge Callahan said he had not been satisfied that the jury board was delinquent in its administration and therefore must overrule the motion as he did the motion for a change of venue.

Several postal cards were received at the sheriff's office Thursday morning, reading: "We did it. Free 'em or we burn U." The cards, mailed in New York at 4 p.m., Nov. 20, were forwarded from Scottsboro.

Some were addressed care U. S. Troops in Alabama, some to the governor and some to the judge.

A state witness subpoena for Orvil' Gilley, white youth said to have witnessed the alleged attacks, was returned from Jackson County with a report he could not be located.

Gilley has been in the state recently and conferred with Atty. Knight.

For its motion to quash the indictments the defense had subpoenaed Circuit Solicitor Bailey and the following Jackson Countians: Probate Judge Money and clerk, Sheriff McBride, E. E. Young, S. S. Gist, C. A. Wann, Judge A. E. Hawkins, Hambin Caldwell and County Solicitor Thompson.

When court was reconvened Thursday morning Judge Callahan said he found he was mistaken, under the agreement between counsel, in holding that Tidwell should tell why Sykes was not on the jury roll but would let Tidwell answer.

Tidwell replied that Sykes was "very badly crippled" and that there was information reflecting on his character.

Judge Callahan refused to let the defense go further and the state closed.

Judge Callahan then began delivering his decision, reciting that the defense assault was not on the state's laws, but on the manner in which they are administered.

There is evidence that there are quite a number of Negroes in Morgan County eligible to serve on juries, Judge Callahan said, this evidence being largely that of J. J. Sykes, Negro.

"If the evidence stopped there, I would quash the venire; I would be very much inclined to feel the law had not been properly administered," Judge Callahan said.

J. E. Moody, jury commissioner of Jackson County, was the first defense witness and produced the jury roll of Jackson County for 1931, from which the Grand Jury that indicted the Scottsboro Negroes was drawn.

It is the defense contention that the roll contains names of no Negroes; that the county has Negroes eligible for jury duty but that they have been excluded by the jury board because of race and color.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief defense counsel, who left here Monday, returned Thursday morning. He announced before leaving he was going to Louisiana in connection with the case.

Leibowitz immediately took over the questioning of Moody, which had been started by Defense Attorneys Chamlee and Brodsky. He asked Moody details about his education, residence and work.

Moody, after explaining the methods of preparing jury rolls, admitted he had never brought a man before him personally to determine his fitness as a juror.

Moody, at the direction of defense attorneys, then began going through the red tome of jurors, pointing out those he personally knows, and stating whether they are white or black. All were white.

The first witness of the afternoon was C. A. Wann, circuit clerk of Jackson County, who was questioned about selection of the Grand Jury.

Wann testified he made lists of Grand Juries, about 11, since he has been in office, and that no Negro was on any of them. A lifelong resident of Jackson, he said he knew of no instance of a Negro serving on a Grand Jury there.

Leibowitz conducted the direct examination of Wann, finally being stopped by Judge Callahan, who said the questions of detail were not important.

Chamlee then started Wann through the jury roll to see if any of those listed and known by him are Negroes.

On a severance, the state will bring Heywood Patterson to trial first.

Patterson was tried here last April following a vigorous fight on the Alabama jury system, and was given a death sentence. Taking cognizance of sentiment developed by remarks of the defense counsel and replies of the prosecutors, Judge Horton indefinitely postponed trial of the other cases and later set aside Patterson's death sentence and granted him a new trial.

This was followed by Judge Callahan replacing Judge Horton and the defense gathered here this week to seek a change of venue to Birmingham. The seven defendants were arraigned Monday, pleading not guilty and after hearing a motion to transfer the trials, Judge Callahan declared there was no evidence that they could not get a fair and impartial trial in Decatur.

The charges on which the Negroes will be tried involve only the alleged attack upon Victoria Price. Ruby Bates, who testified at Scottsboro in 1931 that both she and Mrs. Price were attacked by the Negroes while they were riding on a Southern Railway freight train, March, 1931, repudiated her testimony here last April when she made a dramatic appearance for the defense.

Motions To Quash Venire And Indictments To Be Argued In Morgan Court

Montgomery Ala

DECATUR, ALA., Nov. 22.—(AP)—Arraignment of another of the seven negro defendants in the "Scottsboro case" today was set for tomorrow by Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding in the Morgan County Circuit Court, who said proceedings would be kept at a steady pace to clear the docket of the trials.

The announcement was made in a one-day recess of the special term of Circuit Court called for the new trials of the negroes, who are under indictments charging that they attacked Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville, Ala., mill workers, on a hobo trip on March 25, 1931. The attacks are alleged to have occurred in Jackson County aboard a Southern Railway freight train.

On reconvening of court tomorrow, the last obstacle to disposition of a pending motion to quash the venire of 100 drawn for the third trial of Heywood Patterson, twice convicted and sentenced to death, will be cleared and then a motion to quash the indictments against the defendants will be argued.

Both questions were argued here in March before Judge James E. Horton, based on allegations that negroes were systematically excluded from the Grand Jury that returned the indictments in Jackson County and the petit juries in Morgan County "solely because of their race and color," and that such alleged exclusion constituted a violation of the constitutional rights of the defendants.

Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, member of the counsel retained by the International Labor Defense to defend the negroes, who entered the motion yesterday, on reconvening of court tomorrow will be permitted to ask A. J. Tidwell, a member of the Morgan County Jury Board, why J. J. Sykes, negro theater operator, was excluded from the jury rolls.

The same question was put last March and Judge James E. Horton, then presiding, sustained the objections of Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., to permitting Tidwell to reply.

Judge Callahan, in announcing that another of the seven defendants would be arraigned tomorrow, said a third would be arraigned Monday and venires would be drawn for each case on arraignment. The cases will be set for hearing on successive Mondays.

COURT OVERRULES PLEA OF NEGROES' COUNSEL TO QUASH

No Fraud Proved In Placing Six Names On Jackson Jury List. Decision

TRIAL OF PATTERSON IS SET TO START MONDAY

Orville Gilley, Who Was Missing At Former Trial, Will Testify For State

BY RALPH E. HURST
The Birmingham News Staff Writer

DECATUR—Holding that there was no fraud proved in the placing of six Negroes' names on the 1931 Jackson County jury rolls and that the names were there when the Grand Jury which indicted the nine Scottsboro defendants was drawn two years ago, Judge Callahan Saturday overruled the defense motion to quash the indictments.

This cleared the way for beginning the actual trials Monday, following a week of preliminaries in which the defense also filed motions for a change of venue and to quash the Morgan County venires. Heywood Patterson is docketed for trial Monday and Clarence Norris for Thursday.

Orville Gilley, said to be the only white witness to the alleged attacks except the two victims, has been in Decatur several days and is expected to share star witness honors with Victoria Price for the state. Gilley could not be located for the former trial here.

Saturday's session was devoted entirely to a nationally-known handwriting expert of New York, John V. Haring, presented by the defense in an effort to show that the Negroes' names on the roll were forgeries.

The original motion to quash, based on a contention that Negroes were excluded from the jury roll from which the Grand Jury was drawn because of race and color, was amended to include the fraud charge.

Haring testified in effect that the names of the six Negroes found on the roll were written in after the roll had been closed and a new roll started March 20, 1931.

President Asked To Order Guard At Decatur Trial

Leibowitz Wires Roosevelt For Protection; Wants Miller To Call Troops

Fears 'Massacre'

Situation Is Called 'Tense' On Eve Of Arraignment For Scottsboro Negroes

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Nov. 19.—(AP)—Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel in the Scottsboro case, tonight made public a telegram that he had sent to President Roosevelt asking that he intercede and ask Gov. B. M. Miller to order troops to Decatur, for the arraignment tomorrow and for the trials beginning Nov. 27.

Advertiser 11-20-33

Leibowitz also announced that he had sent telegrams to Gov. Miller in Montgomery, and to Chief Justice John C. Anderson of the Alabama Supreme Court asking that national guardsmen be sent to Decatur to furnish adequate protection for the nine negro defendants.

In addition to the change of venue to be asked at Decatur tomorrow, Leibowitz said notices of motion for interrogatories to take testimony in New York from Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims, of the attack for which the negroes are being tried, and to quash the indictments on grounds that no negroes were on the jury finding the true bills would be filed in Decatur tomorrow at the arraignment.

"We earnestly ask your good offices to persuade Gov. Miller, of Alabama, order cut sufficient national guardsmen provide adequate protection for nine Scottsboro boys and their attorneys, who appear Decatur, tomorrow morning for arraignment and for trial Nov. 27.

"At previous trial this Spring circuit Judge Horton presiding took judicial notice of incipient mob action to lynch defendants and attorneys by ordering soldiers in open court shoot if necessary to preserve peace. Shortly after Trial Judge Horton, who has since been supplanted, adjourned court on own motion because of temper of citizens.

"Since last trial two negroes in custody of Sheriff were recently lynched in Tuscaloosa cases. Negro named Royall lynched in very city Decatur in August and mob visited Decatur jail to lynch negro named Brown. Only his removal to Huntsville jail before mob arrived prevented his assassination. Situation now infinitely more tense.

"Have affidavits naming many persons Decatur and neighboring towns who have openly voiced intention of "getting the niggers" and attorneys. Editorials today in Birmingham Age-Herald and Post show their appreciation of imminence and urged officials call out militia.

"Despite this situation Governor has rejected plea for state troops to guard prisoners and attorneys. Probability of massacre of defendants and attorneys extremely grave. We urge your intervention."

"Samuel S. Leibowitz,
"George W. Chamlee,
"Joseph R. Brodsky, attorneys."

Jackson County Jury Lists Show Seven Negroes

Two Officials Reveal That Several Of Veniremen In 1931 Were Not Whites

Fraud Is Charged

Chamlee Declares Names Were Added After Roll Originally Was Drawn

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

Advertiser 11-24-33

DECATUR, ALA., Nov. 23.—(AP)—Seven names, identified as those of negroes, late today were pointed out on the 1931 Jackson County jury rolls as two officials of the county pored over it under questioning by attorneys for the seven defendants in the "Scottsboro case," seeking to establish proof of exclusion to support a motion to quash the indictments.

Montgomery, Ala.

The announcement of finding the names of the negroes came late in the day after C. A. Wann, circuit clerk of Jackson County, had spent the earlier afternoon session in going through the book, calling names of persons he knew and all had been designated white.

Scottsboro Janitor Identified

Hugh Sanford, a janitor in Scottsboro, was the first of those found identified as a negro by Wann and then J. E. Moody, a member of the Jackson County Jury Commission, under questioning by Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, designated several others.

Leibowitz said he had no comment to make when asked if his line of questioning indicated a handwriting expert would be called to determine whether the names had been added to the roll since the original list was drawn.

"It looks as if the names of two or three negroes had been added," said George W. Chamlee, associate defense counsel, who, throughout the six-hour session with Moody and Wann, had conducted the examination.

Flipping pages rapidly, Leibowitz asked Moody, who was recalled while Mann was asked to step aside, if certain names which he said were negroes were not written just above or on a red line, on those pages. (The jury rolls were impounded at Leibowitz's demand). Moody reported once that he could not tell whether the name or the line had been written last.

The red line was down across each page below the 1931 jury list by the Jury Commission, of which Moody is a member when the new jury was compiled.

Defense Witnesses On Lists

Several of the names Leibowitz mentioned as negroes were those of witnesses called last March when a similar motion was denied by Judge James E. Horton, then presiding over the cases, in which the seven defendants are accused of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, both white, in Jackson County March 25, 1931.

The jury roll was the same that the defense had sought to subpoena last March, which Judge Horton declined to permit.

The defense seeks to quash the indictments against the negroes returned on March 31, 1931, charging them with attacking the women on the grounds that negroes were systematically excluded from the jury roll "solely because of their race and color."

The defense contends that such alleged exclusion was a violation of the constitutional rights of the defendants.

All of the seven defendants now in the jurisdiction of the Morgan County Circuit Court, under a change of venue from Jackson County, have been under sentence of death once, and one, Heywood Patterson, whose new trial is set for Monday, has been sentenced to the electric chair twice.

First Sentence Set Aside

The U. S. Supreme Court set aside the first death sentence on the grounds that the defendants were not given adequate counsel and Judge Horton, who passed the second sentence on Patterson, set aside the verdict on the grounds of insufficient evidence to warrant the penalty.

11-24-33
Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

With several other witnesses from Jackson County waiting to be called, Wann was again on the stand, examining the book, when court was recessed.

The witnesses called the names of persons inscribed therein that they knew personally and after each, called whether white or negro. The early afternoon search had disclosed the names of no negroes. Moody spent two and a half hours in the forenoon going over the list, but found the names of no negroes that he could identify. Moody checked the roll in 12 of 39 precincts.

Leibowitz questioned each witness minutely as to his length of residence in Jackson County, his familiarity with the courts there and invariably asked, "have you ever seen a negro serving on a grand or petit jury in Jackson County?"

All Answer In Negative

The answer in each case was "no."

Judge Callahan overruled the motion to quash the venire drawn for Patterson's trial shortly after court opened this morning, holding that the defense had not established proof that negroes were excluded from the Morgan County jury rolls solely because of race or color.

The judge said two questions could be raised, whether the qualification of jurors, before placing their names in boxes, was violative of the Federal Constitution and whether, in the administration of the Alabama jury law, officials abused it by excluding negroes solely because of race and color.

Evidence offered was reviewed by the judge as he pointed out the points made by the defense and countered by the State to lay a predicate for his decision.

Before he handed down his decision Judge Callahan permitted Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, one of the defense counsel, to ask A. J. Tidwell, Morgan County jury commissioner, why the names of J. J. Sykes, negro theater operator was excluded from the rolls.

Tidwell replied that Sykes was crippled and there was other information as to his character. The question had been asked last March, and Judge Horton, then presiding, sustained the objections of Atty. Gen. Knight, but, in reading the record Tuesday Judge Callahan ruled that Tidwell should have answered.

Before permitting the question today, Judge Callahan said he had been in error on his ruling, but would permit the question anyway.

Sheriff Bud Davis today received a return on the summons for Orville Gilley, white youth, who was alleged to have witnessed the attacks, marked "not in Jackson County." Gilley was the white youth who remained on the car after a fight between the negro defendants and seven white youths, six of whom were thrown or jumped from the train before the alleged attacks.

Former Clerk Testifies

Kelly Morgan, former clerk of the Jackson County Jury Commission, under questioning of Leibowitz testified he never had seen a negro on a jury in Jackson County.

Morgan said he had served as clerk of the commission from 1927 to March, 1931. He identified the jury roll as the one in which he had posted the names of qualified jurors.

There were only five spectators in the court room for the night session, as Morgan began inspecting the jury roll.

Morgan, at Leibowitz's request, wrote on a separate sheet of paper the names of several of those on the jury roll and the paper was introduced in evidence.

One of the names Morgan wrote was that "Mark Taylor," one of the names Leibowitz had pointed out in the afternoon was super-imposed on the "red line" which designated the end of the 1931 roll.

Morgan said on questioning "the last entries I made were in green ink." The names previously identified as those of negroes were in green ink.

Handwriting Specimen Taken

As each of the controverted names was reached, Morgan was asked to write the name on a sheet of paper.

"It looks like my handwriting," said Morgan when asked by Leibowitz concerning several of the names.

Morgan said he had not written in the books since he retired.

Later Leibowitz announced a handwriting expert will be asked to pass on the entries in the 1931 jury roll that were identified as the names of negroes.

Leibowitz announced tonight that James Haring, of New York, expert chirographist employed in the Hall-Mills murder case, was en route here.

Prior to his announcement, Leibowitz had, during the questioning of Morgan obtained specimens of his handwriting. Morgan, however, said he believed the entries which are controverted were in his handwriting.

"Believed" It His Writing

After leaving the stand, Morgan, whose testimony was not audible at the press table at times, said he believed the eight names idehtified as Jackson County negroes were in his handwriting.

The identification of the names of negroes on the jury roll, after a day in which two witnesses had monotonously thumbed the big volume in which the qualified jurors were listed, created a mild sensation.

Questioning proceeded faster in the session ordered tonight by Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding, in an effort to speed up preliminaries so the third trial of Heywood Patterson can begin Monday.

On cross-examination by Atty. Gen. Knight, Morgan said he compiled a preliminary list "without regard to race or color."

Judge Callahan put a question to Morgan "where did you get the names?"

"I object," said Leibowitz.

"Objection overruled. I certainly wouldn't sustain an objection to my own question," said Callahan, as the crowd laughed.

Wann was recalled for the third time after Morgan had testified that the temporary list was made from the list of qualified electors, the registrars records, and telephone directories.

Hamlin Caldwell, court reporter for the Ninth Judicial Circuit, including Jackson County, followed Wann and said in his 24 years as court reporter he had never seen a negro on a jury in Jackson County.

Court recessed at 9:30 p.m., with Caldwell still on the stand scanning the jury roll for persons he knew personally.

JURY SERVICE

The Scottsboro cases prove how important the jury is in our national life. Whether these Negro boys were acquitted or convicted, if Alabama was known to have a good jury system the nation would long ago have regarded the outcome of the trial as just. As it is Negroes believe prejudice directed the verdict, and whites do too. The result is money for prosecution and for defense is being poured out and another strife breeding sore is started.

The basic principle of American law is "trial by a jury of his peers." Juvenile courts were instituted on the theory that special consideration ought to be given special people. All juries are selected for experience, so they will react properly to the facts to be presented. Yet such a master is prejudice that a white man in Alabama insists on being juryman to try Negro offenders. Call him "peer" of Negroes, he would be highly insulted, a fact which proves that Alabama violates the basic principle of American law.

Injustice is a hideous thing, yet it is seldom premeditated. It is the system which is at fault. Alabama set out to have a white man's government. Once it justified that purpose, it followed that whatever kept Negroes from being considered equal, was right. The denial of equality before the law destroyed Negroes' usefulness and at the same time limited whites' opportunity. A backward southland results, wedded to its idols and making little progress wholly because it is trying to maintain an inequitable and unchristian system of relations between the races.

The Call early in its existence recognized denial of jury service as a wrong with far-reaching consequences. For two years it devoted itself to correcting that condition here in Jackson county. Lawyers said it could not be done. Our answer was that it must be done. Citizens said what's the use. We replied that Negroes ought to appear in courts in some other role than that of prisoner or whites would think us all criminals. We triumphed. For years Negroes have been serving on the jury in this community.

Wrongs are to be fought the harder where a basic principle is involved. The loss of a penny takes on importance if an evil principle is behind the taking. Whatever Negro feels no loss when refused opportunity to serve on the jury, contributes his bit to the monstrous injustice that makes the Scottsboro case the Negro parallel of the celebrated Mooney case in California. The law is the same for all. The jury is the cross on which Negroes in southern states are done to death. Alabama is not trying the defendants, it is crucifying a race.

A Blow to Justice

It is useless for any one, either in or out of Alabama, to pretend that the verdict of guilty rendered against the first of the nine Negroes to stand retrial in the Scottsboro cases will not be received with a profound sense of shock by justice-loving Americans.

The case admittedly presented an extraordinarily difficult problem to the small northern Alabama community into whose hands it was confided. It had become involved, over a period of two years, with nearly every kind of racial and political prejudice; its history had developed in such a way as to entangle it accidentally in all sorts of extraneous considerations which might interfere with a fair verdict, and the evidence itself was not the sort through which it would be easy to find the straight path of justice.

The presiding judge did find that pathway, nevertheless. Though evidently feeling himself under strong local pressure to do otherwise, Judge Horton made every effort to see that the accused was given a fair trial; he emphatically repressed any hint of mob action and guaranteed the protection of the prisoner and his counsel with the lives, if necessary, of the court officers. His charge to the jury was eminently fair in dealing with the evidence, and in its appeal to put aside every consideration save the merits of the case it reflected honor upon the standards of the Alabama bench.

Its effect, unfortunately, has now been destroyed by the verdict. On the basis of the evidence as reported it is simply impossible to believe that the guilt of the accused was established "beyond reasonable doubt." Outside observers cannot tell the State of Alabama or the people of Alabama what they ought to do. One may, however, revert to the Attorney General's declaration that the new trial would demonstrate to the world the impartiality of Alabama justice; and to those Alabamans who are interested in outside opinion it seems legitimate to point out that the actual result has been the precise opposite. The fairness with which the trial itself was conducted only throws into higher relief the astonishing finding—as it will be universally regarded outside of Alabama—of the jury. Whatever the real merits of the case may have been, the fact is that national opinion everywhere will accept this outcome as proof of the impossibility of securing a really just verdict in Alabama in a case of this kind.

We shall still hope that this conclusion is unwarranted. There are countless high-minded men and women in the State of Alabama sincerely desirous—as was Judge Horton—of seeing justice done, and sensitive of the regard in which their state is held by national opinion. The right of appeal offers one source of hope, especially in view of the courageous dissent of the Chief Justice of the state upon the appeal from the verdict in the last trial. The Governor's power of commutation and pardon offers a second method of correcting the verdict. Moreover, the present trial concerned only one of the nine defendants. It does not seem too much to ask of Alabama opinion that it insist of its own accord that the venue for the remaining trials be changed from the northern counties where the public psychology has been so desperately embittered. We believe that it is possible for Alabama to conduct the remaining trials in an atmosphere which will be free from the threats of lynching, the intensity of local issues and local fear and anger which marred the present case, and to arrive, with no outside help, at a verdict which the nation at large will receive as just and honorable to the state.

SCOTTSBORO CASE IS GIVEN TO JURY

Severances Granted to Other Defendants and Trial of Weems Set For April 17

4-9-33

Macon, Ga.

DECATUR, Ala., April 8 [illegible]—The bizarre Scottsboro case Saturday night was in hands of a jury charged by an Alabama judge to ignore race and color and state lines in its deliberation of evidence against a Negro boy accused of assaulting a white girl hobo.

And while the jurors deliberated the case of Haywood Patterson, first of seven Negroes to face retrial, Judge James E. Horton granted severances to the other defendants. Charlie Weem's case was set for April 17 and counsel entered a plea of not guilty for him.

The courtroom was startled late Saturday when a defense counsel told Judge Horton that flaming crosses burned on Alabama hills Friday night.

Joseph R. Brodsky of New York, who helped defend Patterson, told the court that crosses of fire were burned in Huntsville and Sottsboro.

Brodsky Reports Threats

He said he had received threats against his life since Solicitor Wade Wright of Decatur "made his speech in this courtroom against my race."

Wright said Friday that defense testimony was "bought with Jew money."

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of defense counsel who volunteered his services, joined Brodsky in a statement that he had been told "only intervention of the national guard prevented a mob of 200 from entering Decatur the other night."

The counsel's dramatic announcement that fiery crosses had been burned nearby Friday night came only a few hours after the judge instructed the jury that color, creed and race must not be considered in its deliberations.

Charge Broad But Simple

Judge Horton—his soft southern voice stern as he gave instructions—told the jury "it (the case) has come to you as jurors and you are going to face it like men."

The jury retired to its work at 12:45 p.m., Central standard time.

The charge was broad, but simple. The case came to this county on a change of venue and the judge said: "Decatur did not want it, Morgan county did not want it."

The courtroom was still. Judge Horton spoke deliberately so all could hear—the Negro defendant, the eight other Negroes charged with a similar crime, the mixed crowd in the courtroom, the attorneys and the accuser.

"We are not trying whether the defendant is white or black," said the judge. "We are not trying lawyers. We are not trying state lines. The great thing this court desires to see done, is justice."

Frame-Up, Says Liebowitz

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight closed the state's plea. "We aren't lynching people in Alabama legally or illegally," his voice rang, "but the name of Alabama has been lynched."

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, whose volunteer services were accepted by the defense, closed for the side.

"There would have been no Scottsboro case if it had not been for the stupidity of Negro and white hoboes," he said ". . . the whole damnable thing is a frame-up of two irresponsible women."

Arguments consumed the entire morning it was noon before Leibowitz, his voice strained with exertion, closed his plea.

The judge told the jury it must consider the contradictory testimony of the girl principals in the two-year-old case that has commanded international attention since the women told a story of attacks aboard a freight train they were riding—Alabama bound from Tennessee.

Women's Records Mentioned

One woman testified for the state and said she was assaulted by Patterson. The other who two years ago said she also was assaulted, repudiated her oath and swore this time she was not molested by the Negroes and added that she did not see her companion harmed.

The judge said one woman "admitted on the stand she perjured herself."

The other, he said, was shown by evidence to be a "woman of easy virtue." "Evidence was introduced to show that she made false statements," he said.

"The law has a stern duty to perform," said the judge slowly, "and when women of the underworld come before it, the law says it is the duty of the jury to consider the fact, not that the law would trample them."

All of the Negroes in the case except Patterson, Saturday night were quietly removed to Birmingham under military escort, to remain until April 17, when Weems faces trial

NEGROES' TRIAL IS CARROUSEL TO LEIBOWITZ

Will Carry Defense on Appeals to Highest Court and Back "ad Infinitum."

MIGHT BE SHOT, HE SAYS

Lawyer Avers Issue in Scottsboro Case Now Is Sociological and Political.

By MARGUERITE YOUNG,
World-Telegram Staff Writer.

Samuel S. Leibowitz sat in his Brooklyn home today and announced he will carry the defense of the Scottsboro negroes on appeals to the United States Supreme Court and, if successful there, back through the Alabama Courts "ad infinitum."

"It'll be a merry-go-round," he asserted, "and if some Ku Kluxer doesn't put a bullet through my head I'll go right along until they let the passengers off. In the end, of course, the verdict must come from an Alabama jury, and, frankly, I don't know when we can get one there to acquit these innocent boys. But we can make them mighty tired. The fight is just beginning."

A moment earlier he had turned to his wife and said, "I'll tell you right now, Belle, I couldn't leave this case now if it meant the loss of all my practice." He is to be representing without pay the Negroes accused of assaulting two white women in a freight car two years ago.

Met by 2,000.

As he stepped from the train from Decatur, Ala., a redcap put into his hand a letter expressing gratitude on behalf of 400 porters. About 2,000 Scottsboro sympathizers met him.

Mr. Leibowitz spoke of the social and political implications of the case.

"The last trial we fought on technical, legal grounds," he said. "From now on every sociological, religious and political issue will be dragged right out into the open. We'll hold those bigots right up to the mirror of public opinion.

"I am not a Communist, but I want to say this for the International Labor Defense—had it not been for the International Labor Defense, those nine Negro boys would be in their coffins now, buried back of the county jail.

White Against Negro.

"The International Labor Defense brought this case to the attention of the world,' and now, with the more intelligent public opinion solidly behind the defense, the issue is no longer confined to this case. It has become a question of the bigoted whites of the South against the 14,000,000 Negroes of the nation.

"To get justice in the South, the Negro will have to go out and take it, the same as the Americans took their freedom from Great Britain. Mind you, I'm not a 'Red.' I'm not advocating revolution. But unless the whites leave a little slack in the chain they're holding taut around the Negro's neck, the creatures at the other end . . . well, once they break loose, heaven help Alabama!"

On behalf of Haywood Patterson, convicted on a second trial ordered by the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Leibowitz will ask the State Supreme Court to pass on "three vital questions."

Questions He'll Ask.

They are:—Whether the right to sit on juries had not been systematically denied to Negroes? Whether the weight of evidence in the case is not "overwhelmingly" in favor of the defendant? And whether the conduct of the case was not such as to be "a mockery" of a fair trial?

On the last ground he will cite "that the prosecutor repeatedly applauded witnesses for the State," and "that the County Prosecutor hurled an inflammatory statement—that about 'Jew money from New York'—into the faces of an already prejudiced jury."

He expects to hear whether the second trial must begin next Monday, as tentatively set. If it does, he will go to Alabama, regardless of threats.

"The plight of these poor blacks is more than a symbol of the oppression of that race in the South," he added. "It symbolizes the plight of my own people. It symbolizes the enslavement of all oppressed peoples throughout the world."

Protest on 'Lynch Verdict' Arranged for Union Sq.

A mass demonstration has been called for 6 P. M. tomorrow, by the International Labor Defense to protest against the "lynch verdict" in the Scottsboro case.

Last evening, hundreds of Negroes fought police along Broadway from Times Sq. to 86th St. when the police tried to disperse a parade that began at Pennsylvania Station after a turbulent welcome to Samuel Leibowitz, chief counsel for the "Scottsboro boys," on his return from Decatur, Ala.

One Arrested.

George Northcroft, Negro house painter, of 215 W. 140th St., was arrested by Patrolman William Griffin, who charged that he kicked him ni the mouth during fighting at Broadway and 46th St. In Night Court, the case was adjourned until today in West Side Court.

In Columbus Circle, the paraders were joined by men and women listening to speakers attacking the Alabama verdict. Fully 1,000 were gathered in the Circle when police drove them from the Circle to 86th St., where they dispersed. Rebecca Butler, Negro, of 2,026 Seventh Ave., was treated for cuts and bruises by an ambulance surgeon.

The Presbytery of New York expressed "surprise and sorrow" at the conviction of Haywood Patterson, averring that the verdict had been "influenced by race and other prejudices" and protesting against the barring of Negroes from jury service.

The resolution was adopted after the Rev. Dr. Edmund Chaffee, pastor of the Presbyterian Labor Temple suggested sweeping condemnation of the verdict.

Recalls Sacco-Vanzetti Case.

"The Scottsboro case is well on the way to being a Sacco-Vanzetti case that brings scorn from every enemy of the United States," said Dr. Chaffee.

Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President in 1932, said:

"A country which has rightfully protested the outrageous anti-Semitism now triumphant in Germany is proving once more that it does not come into court with clean hands. We ourselves practice worse discrimination against our own colored fellow citizens than those which now disgrace Germany."

Sees no Justice.

Eugene Knickle Jones, executive secretary of the National Urban League, said the verdict "indicated that justice for the Negro in certain types of cases is impossible in some sections of the South."

Roger N. Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union said, "the verdict may rightly be characterized as 'lynch justice.'"

Meanwhile, as plans continued for a march of Negroes on Washington to present petitions asking a fair trial for the Scottsboro boys, the I. L. D. announced that speakers at the Union Sq. mass meeting tomorrow would include Joseph Brodsky, of defense counsel in the Scottsboro case.

Another mass meeting to protest against the verdict will be held tonight in St. Luke's Church, 125 W. 130th St. Speakers will include Edward Sagarin, a member of the National Students' League, who was arrested in Decatur while attending Patterson's trial.

SPECTATORS IN DECATUR COURT SHOW CONTEMPT

Baltimore, Md.

DECATUR, Ala.—The first indication of what was to be expected of the Morgan County courtroom, where the Scottsboro trial was held this week, took the form of a jim-crow fountain in the main hall-way on the first floor.

Its water was just as cold as that coming from the white pipe system but it was of smaller size and not so well scoured.

Both devices have one point in common, however, and those persons with tender stomachs who approach either of them lose the desire to drink because of the proximity of a huge cuspidor well filled with tobacco juices and other evil smelling substances.

The courtroom is on the second floor of the building and at one time in its history it was a clean yellow-walled place, with polished hardwood floors. Now it bears the scratches of many feet on the seats and on the floor while the walls are filthy with hand prints.

Three-fourths of the room was devoted to white spectators while the the remaining fourth was given over to colored people. Judge Callahan when facing the court had the former on his left hand and the latter on his right.

Pants Worry Clerk

Smoking was permitted and windows were constantly raised by special order of the court, to permit the escape of the dense blue clouds which emanated from corn cob pipes cigarettes, and cigars. Spittoons were not present, so expectorators sprayed the floor when their mouths became too full.

The court clerk persistently chewed gum and had great difficulty in keeping his pants on. If suddenly called to some duty he found it necessary to hold his trousers with one hand, seize his records with the other and start on his way with much puffing.

Ate Pecans

Almost any member of the police department, the salaries of which do not permit members to afford uniforms, acted as bailiff but their vigilance was never directed against fruit eaters who indulged in oranges or bananas undisturbed. Pecans being cracked between strong teeth once or twice caused a small stir from these officials, but nothing was done to prevent their consumption.

None of the colored witnesses were called by anything other than their first names or sometimes, at rare intervals, their last names and as the trial warmed up Ruby Bates and Lester Carter, two white witnesses for the defense, also lost their titles

DOOM SCOT TSBORO BOY

Decatur, Ala., Jury Orders Maximum Penalty

By TOM CASSIDY.

(Staff Correspondent of The News)

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 1.—The State of Alabama—through the medium of twelve Morgan County hillsmen—tonight condemned Haywood Patterson, chief defendant in the world-famous Scottsboro case, to death for the third time.

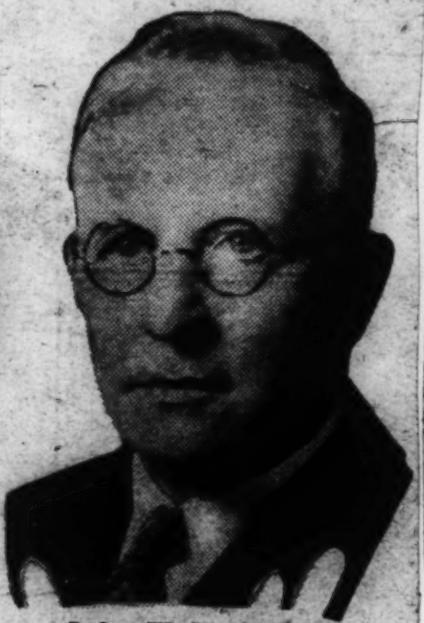
He was accused with eight other colored youths of attacking two white women aboard a freight train near Scottsboro in March, 1931.

Stern-visaged John Russell, the strong man of the lily white rural panel, handed the verdict to the clerk of the court at 6:10 P. M. New York time. The clerk intoned:

"We find the defendant, Haywood Patterson, guilty as charged and fix the penalty at death in the electric chair."

All eyes were trained on the huge doomed colored youth of 20 for the first time since his trial began last Monday morning.

His ebony features formed an enigmatic smile and then an open sneer as he looked at the toil-seared faces of the white folks who doomed him.



Judge W. W. Callahan

Overrules change of venue for another Scottsboro boy.

The sneer held as his gaze shifted toward the bench and around the courtroom full of pleased but non-demonstrative whites and grave, silent members of his own race.

"Gentlemen," said Judge W. W. Callahan to the jurors, "that ends your services here for this term of court. Thank you for your services. You may stop at the clerk's office for your certificate."

Jurors Avoid Boy's Glance.

The jurors passed by the manacled Patterson on their way out. He looked up at each but received no answering glance. In a few minutes he was on his way back to the county jail, manacled to Clarence Norris, a co-defendant whose trial began today.

The jurors had been out altogether 26 hours and 5 minutes since the case was first given into their keeping Thanksgiving afternoon at 4:05 P. M.

Bitter wrangling was heard emanating from the jury room on several occasions, and from a nearby grassy knoll overlooking the yellow penthouse, guarded by the statue of a Confederate veteran, many watched the deliberations—the table pounding, the finger-shaking, and other signs of hard, serious men in disagreement.

Punishment Only Question.

Their differences, though, it was reliably reported tonight, were merely over the punishment, which could have been set at anything from ten years to the chair.

Like the two previous juries which acted as arbiters of the colored youth's fate, this one reached its guilty decision in the expected fashion. These men of the soil, however, did not smile, as did the townsmen who reached a like verdict here last Spring.

Patterson had nothing to say as he was led away. Chief Counsel Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York smiled rather wryly and refused comment.

"I'll do my talking in the Supreme Court of the United States," he said. "I have nothing further to say."

The jurymen had knocked on the door in token of a verdict at 6 P. M., but were held inside for ten minutes while a newly picked jury of nine farmers and three townsmen in the Norris case were led out and locked up for the night.

Leibowitz, who took exception to Judge Callahan's charge to the Patterson case jury yesterday on the ground of unfairness, again demanded a change of venue in the case of Norris.

He did this after one entire venire and part of another had been exhausted in the case of Norris, due mainly to the insistence of a majority of these questioned that they had such fixed opinions that they could not render a just verdict.

Victoria Price

Accuser of nine Scottsboro boys.

With only twenty-nine talesmen qualified out of 135 drawn, the defense interrupted the drawing.

"The defense now resumes its plea for a change of venue," Leibowitz declared, "because it has been shown here that opinions of prospective jurors are so fixed as to make it impossible for a fair decision on guilt or innocence."

"The very fact that the prospective jurors have been honest enough to indicate their true feeling," Judge Callahan responded, "indicates that the defendant can get a fair trial. I deny the motion."

Meanwhile letters were received threatening the life of Leibowitz, who has been under constant guard during his sojourn in this hostile territory. His wife and 8-year-old daughter Margaret were included in the threats. The letters will be turned over to postal authorities.

Mrs. Leibowitz has been a constant visitor at sessions of the celebrated trial here. The small daughter is now in Brooklyn with other members of the family, including the Leibowitz twin sons.

Girls to Clash Again.

The missives refer particularly to the attorney's defense summation in which he said that while he might defend any man for murder, he would not defend a guilty attacker of a woman because he had a "wife and a little girl of my own."

Detective Harold Fox of the New York homicide squad is guarding Mrs. Leibowitz here.

Victoria Price, the persistent accuser of the Scottsboro boys, and Ruby Bates, who recanted, will again clash tomorrow—Victoria in person, and Ruby by depositions taken from her hospital bed in New York where she is recovering from an operation.

Patterson was the first of nine colored men to be retried on charges of attacking Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates, Huntsville, Ala., mill workers, aboard a Southern Railway freight train near Scottsboro on March 25, 1931.

Persons along the railroad right-of-way had noticed what they called a fight aboard the train, which was stopped by officers at Paint Rock, Ala.

There the girls and colored men told varying stories of what had occurred. Police finally believed that the colored men came upon the girls, threw from the train a group of white youths accompanying them, and attacked them. The colored men denied the attacks.

Twelve days later eight of the colored men were convicted and sentenced to death at Scottsboro in a courthouse protected by National Guardsmen with machine guns. A mistrial resulted in the case of the ninth, when the jury was unable to decide between life imprisonment and death because of his age.

The Alabama Supreme Court reversed the verdict for another, on the grounds that he was a minor.

Last year, the United States Supreme Court ordered new trials for the other seven, on the ground that they had no time for adequate defense.

Judge A. E. Hawkins of Scottsboro granted a change of venue to Decatur for re-trial. The defense had made repeated attempts to take the trial to Birmingham or Mobile.

Judge James E. Horton presided at Patterson's second trial last Spring. He sentenced the youth to death, but ordered a new trial a few months later on grounds that the State's evidence was insufficient for conviction. Trial of the others was postponed at that time on the ground that remarks by Leibowitz had prejudiced the case.

Doomed a Third Time

Waiting anxiously for jury's verdict in famous Scottsboro case are Haywood Patterson, defendant, and Chief Counsel Samuel Leibowitz. The jury decided Patterson was guilty.

Her Life Threatened

Letters threatening life of Samuel Leibowitz, defense attorney in famous Scottsboro, case, his wife, Mrs. Belle Leibowitz (right) and their daughter have been received. Leibowitz has been under guard in Alabama. The daughter is in Brooklyn.

Tried to Appeal Only to Reason of Panel Without Oratory Wept When Death Verdict was Returned

DECATUR, Ala. — Samuel Leibowitz, slightly bald and close to forty, neat of dress and possessing a confidence-winning smile, talked in conversational way to the jury during the trials of Haywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, alleged rapists of Victoria Price, white, ex-factory girl, last week.

Mr. Leibowitz pointed out that he was not trying to make an appeal to their prejudices or their sentiments. "I am not waving the American Flag or anything else," he said.

He talked to the jurors as one would talk over the dinner table in an even voice.

He showed them how illogical it was to suppose that nine or even six men had raped a woman of Victoria Price's size without having left some kind of marks behind in the way of cuts, bruises and other physical evidence which things an examination by Doctor R. R. Bridges white, failed to reveal immediately after the alleged attack.

"Let us talk as man to man," he reasoned, "and if I cannot convince you by reason, I will not try to convince you by speech making." Throughout his plea he followed just that course, frequently addressing the jurors by their names.

Believes Boys Innocent

He did his best without a twinge of fear or hopelessness. All the while he knew that grave personal danger awaited him from the citizens of Decatur, so grave that Judge Callahan doubled his personal guard on the night before.

"I would rather defend a murderer than a rapist," he declared," and I would not be defending these boys if I did not believe them to be innocent."

While waiting for the verdict to be brought in, he softly whistled "Lazy Bones" and tried not to look worried, he even joined the practical jokers who tried to set fire to the feet of several sleepers.

When the first verdict of Patterson was announced he had tears in his eyes and chokingly said, "We'll be back, we'll be back." He took the death sentence of Norris more easily and filed his application for an appeal in both cases.

Threatening notes and explosives have not served to keep him out of Alabama. He is a man fighting for a cause that he believes to be right.

Suave Bearing Lost When He Make Appeal to Prejudice.

DECATUR, Ala. — A soft-voiced young man, who seems nearing thirty, limped to a table in the courtroom at Decatur while someone whispered, "There he is." I turned on the speaker and asked the man's name. "That's Attorney-General Thomas Knight," was the answer.

He was a disappointment. His shadow before had been greater than the man. I had expected to see a giant—a big man who had dared to go down into lynch-maddened Tuscaloosa, Alabama not so long ago to arrest mob participants.

That mellow. Southern voice of his drawled some comment on the case and his associate counsels laughed. I liked that voice and I felt sure that this man was not interested in seeing innocent men convicted but only prosecuted them out of duty in public office.

He was polite and debonair at all times. One would have expected him to snarl when he addressed the defendants or their counsel, Samuel S. Leibowitz. He didn"t, though. He just smiled and bowed. So much so that I ceased to wonder why Alabama politicians are planning to make him governor.

Turns to Man

Throughout the trial, he maintained his air of polish until he made his summary before the jury. He started as a gentleman and ended as a maniac. "It is your duty," he cried to the jury at one point, "to stay the hand of this rapist from other women."

"I move for a mistrial, your honor," Mr. Leiwowitz shouted from his seat. "That is an appeal to prejudice and passion."

Then Mr. Knight turned and his true colors were shown in every quivering fibre of his contorted face. He was snarling hate and spitting venom. "I mean it for an appeal to prejudice and passion," he snapped, while Mr. Leibowitz recoiled with contempt on his face.

The courtroom was still—with that stillness which precedes a destructive thunderstorm. Men were on their toes waiting. Surely, even in Alabama he couldn't get away with that. But he did—because Judge Callahan overruled the motion and Mr. Knight continued his harangue.

Before he made that statement, I could see why he was a logical

Leibowitz To Carry Cases To State And Federal Supreme Courts Again

By T. M. DAVENPORT

DECATUR, ALA., Dec. 6.—(AP)—Two of seven negro defendants in the Scottsboro case tonight were under sentence to die in the electric chair in Kilby Prison, at Montgomery, under verdicts of Morgan County juries.

Judge W. W. Callahan, presiding, passed the formal sentences on Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris a few minutes after the jury in the latter's case had convicted him of participating in the alleged attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates in Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

All Previously Convicted

Both negroes and their five co-defendants were convicted in April, 1931, and sentenced to death at Scottsboro, but the U. S. Supreme Court set aside the verdict.

The words hardly had died on the lips of the Judge today, however, before a legal step was taken to stay the executions set for Friday, Feb. 2, 1934, and carry the fight to the higher courts.

As Judge Callahan pronounced the final words of the formal sentence, "and God have mercy on your soul" on Patterson, Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, gave notice of an appeal, automatically staying the sentence.

Similar procedure was followed in the case of Norris, whom the jury convicted after being out 41 hours, and an hour later all of the defendants, who had been brought here for retrial under a change of venue from Jackson County, were en route to the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham.

The formal sentences and the notices of appeal ended for an indefinite period proceedings in Morgan Circuit Court, as Judge W. W. Callahan, on Leibowitz's motion, yesterday postponed further action.

Leibowitz, after the formal sentences, asked Judge Callahan to designate the Jefferson County Jail as the place of incarceration for the prisoners.

Judge Callahan informed him that the law specified Kilby Prison at Montgomery, where executions for capital offenses are carried out in the electric chair, as the place for imprisonment of condemned men.

"I am merely following the request of the defendants, who claim they were mistreated in Kilby Prison," said Leibowitz.

The negroes were held in Kilby Prison for several months while the first death sentences were being appealed to the Alabama Supreme Court, where they were confirmed, and later set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court, where counsel for the negroes said the cases again would be taken if necessary.

Says Prisoner Threatened Him

Patterson, in a personal plea to Judge Callahan, said, "there is a prisoner down there that said he would kill me if I was ever brought back to Kilby Prison."

Judge Callahan replied the warden would protect him, and Atty. Gen. Knight said he would be treated the same as every other prisoner in the penitentiary.

Leibowitz, with a request to the Judge that counsel for the negroes be permitted to leave the court before the spectators, caused a momentary stir among the 50 or so persons in the courtroom.

When there was delay, however, court was adjourned and the spectators filed quickly out, before the attorney, accompanied by four deputies assigned to protect him, left the courthouse.

Judge Acts After Leibowitz Says Appeal to Supreme Court Is Certain.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. 5.—While an idle court-room crowd amused itself with story-telling and puzzle-solving here today, a jury of farmers weighed the evidence for and against Clarence Norris, one of the Negroes whose conviction at Scottsboro was set aside by the United States Supreme Court.

As the jury argued and wrangled behind locked doors, Heywood Patterson, the Negro convicted last Friday of criminally attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, waited in his cell in the county jail for Judge W. W. Callahan to sentence him to death.

The case of Norris, one of the nine Negroes jointly indicted at Scottsboro in the Spring of 1931, will be the last to be tried at this term of court. The others were postponed indefinitely by Judge Callahan after Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defense, declared that the constitutional questions involved made an appeal to the United States Supreme Court certain unless the Supreme Court of this State reversed the convictions.

Declaring that evidence adduced from State's witnesses at the Norris trial and the testimony of two of the defendants, Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson, established their innocence of the charge, Mr. Leibowitz asked that these youths be admitted to bail.

Attorney General Knight opposed the application and Judge Callahan said he had no jurisdiction to grant it.

Habeas Test Is Threatened.

"I suppose the proper thing to do is to test that out at the earliest possible date on a writ of habeas corpus," said Mr. Leibowitz.

"That's the only way I know," said Judge Callahan.

Montgomery and Roberson testified at Patterson's trial that they did not enter the gondola car in which the girls allegedly were attacked.

At the trial of Norris, Tom Dobbins, a white farmer, and Sam Mitchell, his Negro plowhand, testified for the State that they saw "three darkies" in an empty box car far behind the open car in which they discerned the figures of white men and Negroes engaged in the combat which the State charges was the prelude to the mass attack upon the women.

Mr. Leibowitz was late in reaching court this morning and he arrived just as Judge Callahan was preparing to put the case of Charlie Weems, another of the defendants, on the calendar for trial.

It was then that he asked for a postponement, explaining that the defendants were "paupers" and asserting that to force them to trial would be a "hardship."

Judge Yields an Delay.

"These trials may be only an empty gesture," he said, "after the higher courts have reviewed them."

"I'm not inclined to press you to trial if you're not ready," said Judge Callahan, pointing out that the stenographer had told him the task of preparing the record for appeal would consume at least a month.

The cost of printing the record would be considerable even in Patterson's case, the court considered.

The New York attorney had planned to leave for his home on the 2:30 train, but as the morning hours passed with signs of a deadlock among the jurors growing, he changed his mind. The jury retired yesterday afternoon at 6:17 o'clock Central Time, but did not begin its deliberations until this morning at 8:20.

Soon after entering the jury room, the jurors sent out for the exhibits in the case. Torn clothing, which the State offered to support the story of Victoria Price, and photographs of views of the railroad right of way from various haylofts and woodpiles from which State's witnesses said they saw the melee were sent to the jury.

A knife which Victoria Price said was held against her throat was ruled not in evidence by the judge.

Throughout the morning the jury wrestled with its problem. No sound came from the room, but from the lawn outside the coatless men could be seen arguing in groups of two and three and more. At 12:10 Judge Callahan ordered them taken to lunch.

The door of the jury room opened and the jurors straggled out, pulling on their coats as they came. They lined up before the bench and received Judge Callahan's admonition to refrain from discussion of the case until they returned, and then they filed out to eat.

As they passed Mr. Leibowitz, three of them smiled pleasantly at him.

Reporters Take Straw Vote.

In the afternoon, while Mr. Leibowitz and Mr. Knight waited nervously for the knock which would signal an agreement among the jurors, eight newspaper men, four from New York and four Southerners representing press associations and a Birmingham newspaper, took a straw vote among themselves.

Two questions were asked on the ballots, which were secret. These were:

"What is your guess on the jury's verdict?"

"How would you vote as a juror?"

On the first question six predicted a verdict of guilty and a sentence of death, while two foresaw a disagreement.

On the second, five reporters said that if they were jurors they would acquit the defendant, while three said they were "undecided."

At 6:17 P. M., when the jury had been out exactly twenty-four hours, Judge Callahan remarked that he was "getting hungry," and was about to instruct the bailiffs to take the jury out for dinner and then march them back to Mason's boarding house, where they are staying for the night. He was against allowing juries to deliberate far into the night, he said.

Mr. Leibowitz objected to an interruption in the deliberations and Attorney General Knight said it was a matter for the defense to decide. Judge Callahan then ordered the bailiffs to go out and get a gallon of coffee and enough sandwiches for twelve hungry men.

COUNSEL FOR DEFENSE GIVES APPEAL NOTICE

Birmingham, Ala.

Execution Set For Feb. 2 Is Automatically Stayed By Attorney's Move

DECATUR—With the state having scored a death verdict for the second time within a week, the Scottsboro cases came to an indefinite close here at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, when a jury proncunced the electric chair for Clarence Norris. A similar verdict had been given for Heywood Patterson last Friday.

With a steady rain falling outside, only a few spectators were present to hear the fatal verdict. Norris was seated in a chair beside the wall just outside the jury room with Heywood Patterson beside him. Neither of the Negroes showed any emotion.

Judge Callahan then called them before the bar to pass formal sentence.

Defense Attorney Leibowitz walked over to the two defendants, who were talking and laughing together, and conversed with them in a low tones. A New York newspaper reporter was with him.

"Gentlemen, I do not want you interviewing the prisoners under such conditions," Judge Callahan said.

Patterson was sentenced first, standing with hands clasped behind him and answering questions in a calm voice, although he constantly shifted his feet.

"Heywood, the jury has found you guilty and it becomes my duty to pass the sentence of punishment for you. Have you anything to say?" the court asked.

"Yes, sir, I am not guilty. I have been sentenced to the electric chair three times for something I am not guilty of," the prisoner replied.

The formal death sentence, setting his execution for Feb. 2 at Kilby Prison and ordering him confined there until that time, followed.

After the manner of death by electricity was prescribed, Patterson returned to his seat without any further remarks.

The defense noted an appeal.

This stays the execution, pending outcome of the appeals, and such an order was entered by the court.

Norris had prematurely walked before the bar twice to receive his sentence, being sent back each time.

Finally called, Norris held his cap in one hand. Asked if he had anything to say, he replied he was not guilty of the charge. His execution was also set for Feb. 2, but was suspended by a notice of appeal.

Leibowitz then asked that the defendants be confined in Jefferson County Jail, saying they claimed they had been mistreated at Kilby. Judge Callahan replied that the law provides for them to be held at Kilby.

Birmingham
Ala.

Leibowitz then asked that defense attorneys be permitted to pass out of the courtroom before the audience "and the defendants likewise," which the court agreed to.

There were hardly 50 spectators present and nothing on the surface to explain the attorney's request.

Patterson, before being taken out told the court he had been threatened with death if he returned to Kilby.

The International Labor Defense Communist agency which is conducting the defense, has often circulated written charges, always unproved that the defendants were also mistreated in Jefferson County Jail, but this was not mentioned here.

The defendants were taken out and with the five whose trials were postponed, loaded into the Jefferson County patrol wagon for transfer to Birmingham, bringing the proceedings here to a final close.

Although the jury received the Norris case early Monday night, deliberations were not started until Tuesday morning on orders of Judge Callahan.

Further perpetuation of the highly sensationalized cases which grew out of alleged wholesale assaults on Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on a freight train in Jackson County March 25, 1931, is promised in the defense declaration that the verdicts here will be carried to the United States Supreme Court unless reversed by the Supreme Court of Alabama. Points of constitutional law are involved, the defense claimed.

Habeas corpus proceedings are also to be instituted for release of two defendants, claimed by the defense to have been cleared in evidence at the trials here. Atty. Gen. Knight disputed this and Judge Callahan ruled he had no power to grant bail for them, as requested.

Indefinite postponement of the remaining cases was announced by Judge Callahan, but this does not necessarily mean that they will not be taken up until the outcome of appeals is determined.

Nine Negroes were arrested at Paint Rock and charged by the two girls with assaulting them as they hoboed from Chattanooga to their Huntsville homes.

Eight were convicted at Scottsboro and given death sentences, a mistrial resulting for one because of his youth. On appeals the Alabama Supreme Court granted a new trial to one of the eight condemned Negroes on account of his youth and the others were sent back for new trials by the United States Supreme Court.

Trials Postponed

Patterson was brought to trial here last April on a change of venue and given a death sentence. Judge James E. Horton postponed the other trials following an exchange of inflammatory remarks between Defense Attorney Leibowitz, of New York, and Atty. Gen. Knight, and soon afterward the judge set aside Patterson's conviction, holding the state's evidence was not sufficient.

The youngest defendants have been transferred to the Juvenile Court, leaving disposition of their cases up to Probate Judge Malone, of Decatur. He can take up the cases at any time, but the severest punishment he can inflict is to commit them to a reformatory. He can, however transfer them back to the Circuit Court's jurisdiction and leave it to that tribunal to make the disposition.

If the Alabama Supreme Court should reverse the cases on points of evidence, the cases would come back here for trial, but if the reversal should come from the Supreme Court of the United States on a point of constitutional law, it would mean sending the cases back to Jackson County and probably new indictments.

The point of constitutional law referred to by the defense is an allegation that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury rolls of the state in violation of the fourteenth amendment. This point was argued in defense motions to quash the indictments and the trial venires. Both motions were denied. During the proceedings the names of six Negroes were discovered in a record examination of the Jackson County jury roll.

A member of the Negro quartet that sang for defense attorneys and some friends at their apartment Sunday night was fired on three times after leaving the apartment, it was learned Wednesday, but was not hit. Sheriff Davis, who investigated, said he had learned that the shots were fired by a white man after he and the Negro had bumped into each other on the sidewalk, and it was not believed the incident had any connection with the singing.

An extra guard for Leibowitz resulted from Judge Callahan's instructions to officers Tuesday night to "double their energies" to protect the attorney. Judge Callahan said he had no reason, other than precaution, for his instructions.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., Dec. [illegible] — Testimony given by Ruby Bates from a hospital bed in New York will be presented here tomorrow to the jury of farmers before whom Clarence Norris is being tried for his life.

The deposition, taken by Julius Applebaum, New York lawyer, arrived here too late for use in the trial of Heywood Patterson, the Scottsboro case defendant who was convicted for the third time Friday afternoon.

Circuit Judge W. W. Callahan, who is presiding at the trials at a special term of court, refused a defense request to postpone completion of the Patterson trial twenty-four hours so the deposition might be offered in evidence.

The court's ruling provided one of the many points on which Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defense, is depending for a reversal of the verdict on appeal. In her deposition, the Bates girl reiterated her testimony, given before Circuit Judge James E. Horton, who presided at Patterson's trial here last April.

At that trial, she made a surprise appearance in the court room to contradict Victoria Price's charge that the nine Negroes who have been in jail for nearly three years, attacked her on a Southern Railway freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock, on March 25, 1931.

Recanting the story she told at the first trials of the Negroes in Scottsboro, Ruby Bates asserted that Victoria Price had "framed" the case against the Negroes to protect herself from the danger of arrest for vagrancy. She had "just told what Victoria told," said Ruby Bates, asserting that the whole story was a fabrication.

Bates Deposition Counted On.

The defense is counting upon the deposition to place before the jury the essence of a story which Judge Callahan has held to be immaterial and irrelevant. This is a story of the relationship among the two girls and Orville Gilley and Lester Carter.

Tomorrow's court session may end the battle here for the Negroes' lives. It is possible that the jury will receive the case by nightfall.

After the jury has reported its verdict Judge Callahan is expected to postpone the other cases, allowing the next skirmish to be held before the Alabama Supreme Court, and eventually the United States Supreme Court, before placing the other Negroes on trial.

With court in recess over Sunday, Mr. Leibowitz attended the morning services at the Shiloh Baptist Church, whose Negro congregation interrupted the singing of a hymn to make a special place for the white visitor on the mourners' bench.

Leibowitz Addresses Service.

The church is a dilapidated, barn-like structure, a Red Cross poster, with the words "Join now" still upon it, serving for a cross upon the pulpit.

At the invitation of the Rev. E. D. Duvall, the pastor, Mr. Leibowitz addressed the congregation, telling them he was glad to be among them and asserting that while they were praying audibly he was praying silently that "justice may be done to all mankind."

A visit to the jail disclosed the seven Negroes studying their fan mail and receiving visitors from Decatur's Negro section. One caller, Mattie Johnson of Ask Street, a muddy alley in a section known as Buzzards' Roost, said she hoped to marry Patterson "when he gets out."

Patterson confirmed this and when asked if he had been carrying on a courtship through the bars, replied:

"Yes, sir, that's the best I could do."

The big Negro, who has been condemned to death three times, is confident that he will not die in the electric chair. He has complete faith that the most recent verdict against him will be set aside by the higher courts and that he will be tried again.

Willie Robinson, another of the Negroes awaiting a new trial, said he was writing a book about the case and hoped to have it finished in about three weeks.

"How much have you written?" he was asked.

"Oh, I ain't exactly started yet," he said.

The pen in which the Negroes are confined is on the ground floor of the jail. Each has a cell about six feet by eight, but in the daytime the doors are opened and they are permitted to visit one another.

It is so dark that it is almost impossible for visitors to distinguish their features. The Negroes said they were not complaining, however; that they got "plenty of sleep," good food and considerate treatment from Sheriff Bud Davis.

White prisoners are not keep in the jail, but are taken to the lockup in Huntsville, thirty-odd miles away.

Orvel Gilley Says Patterson Held Pistol On Him During Assault

Ala

BY RALPH E. HURST
The Birmingham News Staff Writer

DECATUR—For the second time within the last four days, a Morgan County jury took up deliberation of the highly sensationalized "Scottsboro cases," when the fate of Clarence Norris was placed in the hands of 12 talesmen at nightfall Monday. A jury received the case of Heywood Patterson, first of the defendants to be retried here, last Thursday afternoon, and returned a death verdict the following day.

Completion of the Norris case was expected to be followed by an indefinite postponement of the remaining cases, which had been scheduled to be taken up next Monday. Defense Attorneys Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, and George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, planned to leave here late Monday night.

The Norris trial, which got under way Saturday, moved swiftly with attorneys taking "short cuts" through the proceedings. Whereas, he had himself argued more than four hours at the Patterson trial here last Spring, Leibowitz Monday afternoon suggested only 30 minutes be allotted each side for summing up and then agreed on 45. He took all the defense time, however, and spoke to the jury for one hour and 10 minutes.

Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatur, opened for the state and attacked the written testimony of Ruby Bates introduced in the Norris trial after arriving too late to get here before the Patterson jury. Attorney General Knight concluded and Judge W. W. Callahan charged the jury.

Monday's session was featured by Judge Callahan sending the jury from the room to administer a stern rebuke to Leibowitz for his courtroom manners, which the judge said were designed to provoke the court to improper remarks and rulings.

A flurry of excitement was also created for the audience when Judge Callahan suddenly noticed that the defendant was missing while a witness was testifying. It developed, however, that Norris had only gone to an adjoining washroom, and after he returned the judge spoke to the deputies about keeping a better guard and had the testimony repeated.

Norris, like the other defendants, is charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price on a freight train in Jackson County March 25, 1931, as she and Ruby Bates were hoboing from Chattanooga to Huntsville. Heywood Patterson, first of the defendants to be retried here, was given a death sentence last week, Ruby Bates' testimony not having been received in time for his trial.

The state rested its case at mid-morning, reserving the privilege of presenting one witness out of order when he arrives, and the defense was opened and evidence presented rapidly. Two defense witnesses had been introduced out of order during the state's presentation and it appeared the trial might reach the argument stage during the late afternoon.

Looking straight at the attorney who has displayed an unpleasant mood from the time he entered court, Judge Callahan told him he had noticed the throwing of pencils on the table and other evidences of resentment to the court's rulings. The judge has frequently throughout the proceedings here, admonished the attorney to merely make exceptions when he wished and withhold his remarks.

The "call down" came during Leibowitz's cross examination of Orvel Gilley after the attorney had asked the witness if he was "trying to get smart" with him.

Newspaper men had commented on the defense attorney's attitude several minutes before the judge took open cognizance of it. The attorney had shot his questions like barbed darts during his cross quiz, and prior to that, had objected to nearly every direct question from the prosecution, had been overruled almost as often, and had entered exceptions with a grating emphasis.

This court, Judge Callahan said, is not trying these cases for publicity and is not maneuvering to obtain newspaper headlines. He declared he would not further tolerate any improper tactics and ordered all attorneys to conduct themselves in a legal and judicial manner.

Leibowitz devoted some time to questioning Gilley about where he had recited poetry and how he passed the hat for collections afterward.

"You and Victoria were very friendly weren't you?" Leibowitz asked.

"Well, we were not mad with each other," Gilley answered.

Leibowitz asked Gilley if he could pick out the defendants from a group of 50 Negroes.

"Yes, sir, every one of them, and you could too, if you had been through what I have," the witness answered and was permitted to quit the stand.

Gilley, Albertville youth, who was on the gondola car where Mrs. Victoria Price is alleged to have been attacked, was placed on the stand Monday.

Gilley was removed from the stand long enough to permit the defense to present Dr. R. R. Bridges, Scottsboro physician who examined Mrs. Price and Ruby Bates after the alleged attacks on a freight train in Jackson County, March 25, 1931.

Dr. Bridges testified he found no blood or cuts on Mrs. Price, although the girl had testified that she "bled a little" from a pistol butt blow on the forehead. Dr. Bridges, who up until last week had been a state witness, is now considered by the defense to be one of its most important witnesses.

On cross-examination, Dr. Bridges said there were several small scratches on one wrist and one forearm and bruises in the small of the back.

Dr. Bridges was questioned as to other physical facts, but could not say whether there had been an attack. Mrs. Price showed evidence of a recent act, however, he said.

Before hearing of testimony was started Monday, the defense attempted to [illegible] some exceptions to Judge Callahan's charge to the Patterson jury, contending the court had agreed to this. The court denied any such agreement and held any exceptions should have been made at the time of the charge.

Gilley began his story at 9 a.m., giving approximately the same version as Mrs. Price. Patterson held a pistol on him, he said, while the defendant attacked the girls.

"Explain what you mean by attack—tell exactly what you saw them do," the court prompted.

Gilley then identified Norris as having attacked either Mrs. Price or Ruby Bates, but could not say which one.

Defense Attorney Leibowitz objected to nearly every question put to Gilley, was overruled almost as often and always excepted.

"How many times have you rehearsed this story you have told here today, you and Victoria Price together?" Leibowitz began his cross-examination.

The defense attorney was apparently in an unpleasant mood from the beginning of the morning session and he mercilessly plied his questions at Gilley.

When Gilley testified he was a reciter of poetry and sometimes made it up, Leibowitz said:

"You are capable at making things up, aren't you?"

Next Leibowitz asked Gilley if he had been to Montgomery and the witness said he had been there to see Knight.

"You aren't trying to get smart with me, are you?" Leibowitz asked.

This exhausted Judge Callahan's patience and he sent the jury from the room so that he could speak his mind.

The jury was then returned to the courtroom and Leibowitz began his cross-examination.

The defense opened by presenting the written testimony of Ruby Bates.

Ruby Bates' testimony was produced in written form on defense plea that she was too seriously ill in a New York hospital, to come here and testify

At the original trials in Scottsboro, she testified the defendants attacked her and Mrs. Price. Later she gave a Chattanooga pugilist a written repudiation of the charges, then repudiated the repudiation, claiming she was drunk, then appeared for the defense here last April and changed her story for the fourth time, testifying there were no assaults.

In the written testimony she gave her present age as almost 20, and told where she first knew Mrs. Price, Gilley, Lester Carter and other principals in the cases. Answers to questions about illicit relations and events on the day preceding the alleged attacks were ruled out on state objections.

"On the morning of March 25, 1931, Orvel Gilley and Lester Carter again went to get some food while Victoria Price and I washed our hands and faces in a branch that ran through the place where we spent the night," she began her story of the day's events, the place she had reference to was the hobo jungle of Chattanooga

Knight obtained exclusion of everything prior to boarding the freight train. Leibowitz explained it was not offered to impugn the chastity or veracity of Mrs. Price, but to explain the sexual condition found by Dr. Bridges.

Ruby Bates described the fight between the white boys and Negroes, saying that Gilley did not get off.

On arrival at Paint Rock, "Victoria made out like she fainted," she said, but the doctor found nothing wrong except high blood pressure. She then told of being carried to Scottsboro and examined by Dr. Bridges and Dr. Lynch.

Ruby's admission to the doctors of relations in the hobo jungles was ruled out by the court.

Boy In Cell

Describing events in the Scottsboro jail, she said Victoria told the sheriff that one of the white boys was her half brother and also made the assault charges. Testimony that the white boy was placed in the cell with the two girls was excluded. Ruby said her mother had the boy removed to another cell.

She said Victoria Price "made up" the story of the attacks and told her what to say, but that she did not agree because "it was not true." Victoria, she said, also instructed the white boys as to how to testify. She said that Victoria and one of the boys had "love affairs" in the jail.

Ruby said Lester Carter protested against the false charges. Ruby then said her first testimony at Scottsboro was false. The question of why she told a false story then was excluded.

To the question of whether any of the nine defendants, all being named, had attacked her or Mrs. Price, she answered "no".

Cross interrogatories, the same as a cross examination, were then read by the state.

Ruby admitted accusing the defendants in Scottsboro. The question reviewed her direct testimony in the original trials.

"Do you know Danny Dundee?" the state asked. This was the name of the pugilist who obtained her repudiation.

"I don't know whether I could identify him or not," she said.

She admitted signing the repudiation, saying she did so because she was "terrorized by the chief of police of Madison County" at Huntsville.

Lester Carter, one of the white youths who quit the train after the fight, was the next witness, and told of events after he boarded the train with the two girls and Gilley.

Carter testified he heard the plans made for Odell Gladwell to pose as Victoria's brother and said that when he was asked to testify about the attacks, he refused, declaring he would "tell the truth."

Carter's testimony was completed after court resumed at 1 p.m., following the lunch recess.

Leibowitz spent Sunday evening listening to the singing of spirituals by Decatur Negroes.

The defense was trying to show the attack charges were framed up to prevent the girls, Gilley and Carter from being prosecuted for violating the Mann act.

"Saw No Attacks"

Gilley was put on the stand for a minute and admitted to Leibowitz that he saw Carter in California but denied he told him he saw no attacks take place. This ended Carter's direct testimony.

Carter was asked by Knight about who paid for the clothes he wore when he appeared here last April, how much money he obtained from the defense attorneys, and who he rode with from New York last April. The witness said he bought his own clothes, that Defense Attorney Brodsky gave him "some four dollars" and that he rode from New York to Birmingham with "two New York boys," whom he admitted were associated with the defense. He denied he traveled South with Ruby Bates.

Questions about who bought his Ford were overruled and Knight said he wanted to show a "continuous association" between the witness and defense attorneys.

Morris was one of the witnesses testifying to seeing Negroes and white boys fighting in a car that contained two girls as the train moved from Stevenson toward Paint Rock. The girls were crying, he said.

Carter had testified the girls were not in the car where the fight took place.

In resting the defense did not put the defendant on the stand. Morris was the witnesses for whom an attachment had been issued and whose presentation out of order had bee agreed upon.

After Morris had finished Judg Callahan premitted the defense t reopen its case insofar as Morri testimony was concerned and W. S Sullivan, Decatur photographer, wa called to identify pictures of Morris' barn and views from it. Morr had testified that what he saw w from his barn.

Sullivan testified the level o the barn window was below the to of a gondola car on the nearby tracks and that one could not se into the car from the window.

During this testimony Judge Ca lahan discovered the defendant wa missing and stopped proceeding The defendant came out of a wash room and Judge Callahan, wh ordered deputies to keep up wit him better than that, had Sullivan repeat his testimony. The law requires the defendant's presenc throughout a trial.

A stir went through the audienc which had not noticed Norris' dis appearance, but the spectators re laxed when he came back in.

This was one of the best illustra tions of how the defendants sit court, the least noticed of the man principals in the cases.

W. H. Branum, Paint Rock policeman, opened the state's rebuttal t testify as to measurements of distances at the Paint Rock Railroa Station where the defendants wer arrested.

At 2:25 p.m., the state restec Branum being the only rebuttal witness, and the way cleared for arguments, with three fourths of an hou to each side.

Opening arguments for the stat Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatu attacked the repudiating testimon of Ruby Bates, and scoffed at th idea that Victoria Price could coi coct the story of the attacks.

Opening for the defense, Leibowitz announced he was not going to do any loud speaking, that he would not "do any yelling and bellowing," or attempt to appeal to emotions or passions. He followed a theme that has ruled defense arguments throughout—that no one cries insult as quick as a lewd woman.

"I am not going to get mad o excited—I will let Mr. Knight ge excited and wave the American flag and all that," he said.

Leibowitz then attacked the character of Victoria Price, not, he saic in contention that one has a right tc assault a prostitute, but to show the jury the type of woman whose veracity they must decide.

"There was no more rape on tha car than there has been in thi courtroom, and I tell you gentlemer there has been rape in this courtroom," he said. "Victoria Price, multiplied by Orvel Gilley, is just sc much junk," he said.

"Why should Victoria Price come in here with lies, unless she is lying to hang some innocent Negroes tha she cares nothing about?" Leibowit asked. "She would swear a saint' life away to serve her purpose."

"Don't be afraid of what the newspapers may say, or the man whe stands out on the courthouse grounds," Leibowitz urged on th jury in conclusion, "there are th eyes of the world on you, sitting a that press table."

Although Leibowitz had suggeste only 30 minutes for each side an then accepted, he took one hour an 11 minutes to deliver all of the defense summonings.

When Leibowitz finished, he, lik Solicitor Wright, was speaking the top of his voice and with emotion.

Knight began with a declaratio that there was no doubt but wha the alleged crimes had been committed and told the jurors to rende a verdict that would protect othe women. He then reviewed the evidence.

Although the large staff of reporters, photographers and newsreel me already here was augmented las week following outbreaks of violenc in other sections of the country, ther has not been one untoward inciden and interest in the proceedings ha been less than would be expected a an ordinary criminal trial.

Protests

Protests against "the mob spirit here and demands for release of th prisoners continue to come from a sections of the country, including Sa Jose, Calif. Some of these ar threatening and insulting in natur and Judge Callahan's wife has bee the recipient of several.

Chief Defense Attorney Leibowit of New York, and his assistants, Joseph Brodsky, New York, and George W. Chamlee, Chattanooga, are obviously conducting their case with a view to building up a record for appeal, and after the death verdict was announced for Patterson, Leibowitz told newspaper men "I will do my talking before the United States Supreme Court and have no misgivings about the outcome."

NEGROES' DEFENSE LOSES BAIL MOVE FOR TWO ACCUSED

Leibowitz To Seek Freedom Of Montgomery, Roberson On Habeas Corpus

DECATUR—After announcing that the two Scottsboro cases tried here during the last week would "positively be carried to the United States Supreme Court," unless reversed by the Supreme Court of Alabama, defense attorneys lost an effort to have bail granted for two defendants and declared habeas corpus proceedings would be instituted for them.

These developments took place Tuesday morning, as a jury deliberated the fate of Clarence Norris in the same room where a jury last week decided on a death verdict for Heywood Patterson.

Defense Attorney Leibowitz's announcement of the appeals, which means that the cases are still to be kept alive many months, if not years, contained a declaration that there are points of constitutional law involved.

The two defendants for whom bail was asked are Olen Montgomery and Willie Roberson, declared by the defense attorneys to have been cleared by evidence in the trials here. Atty. Gen. Knight disputed this contention, and Judge Callahan ruled he had no power to grant bail, which resulted in the habeas corpus announcement.

All the defendants will be returned to the Jefferson County jail in a patrol wagon following disposal of the Norris case.

When the state announced ready to try the case of Charlie Weems, Leibowitz asked for postponement.

"There are points of constitutional law involved, and unless the Alabama Supreme Court reverses the two cases already tried, they will positively be carried to the United States Supreme Court," Leibowitz said, adding that the defendants are paupers and without funds.

Judge Callahan said he was not inclined to push the cases unless the defense wished.

Leibowitz then asked the court and attorney general to fix "a reasonable bail" for Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery, declaring evidence had cleared them.

The court replied it had no power, and in opposing, Knight disputed that their innocence had been shown.

Leibowitz then said he would institute habeas corpus proceedings.

Judge Callahan then passed the remaining cases.

He then discharged all witnesses "until further notice."

The Norris jury received the last of the judge's lengthy charge shortly after 6 p.m. Monday and was sent to its hotel, at its own request, with instructions not to begin deliberations until Tuesday morning. Exhibits and written evidence were withheld until Tuesday morning.

Defense Attorney Leibowitz offered several exceptions to Judge Callahan's charge, to some of which the judge replied by adding to his instructions.

One of the exceptions was to the court's charge that unchastity of the prosecutix was not admissible, except where the defense consisted of consent, and that her character was not an issue because consent was not the defense. Another exception was taken to the charge that the jury "may and must consider the reputation" of this and all other witnesses in giving weight to their evidence. His instrutcions on conspiracy in the alleged attack was excepted to.

Leibowitz suggested at the close of evidence that arguments be limited to 30 minutes but agreed to the state's suggestion for 45 minutes and then, taking all of the defense's allotted time, spoke for more than an hour. At the trial of Patterson here last April he consumed more than four hours of the allotted six.

Knight Closes For State

Solicitor Wade Knight, of Decatur, opened arguments for the state and Atty. Gen. Knight closed.

Judge Callahan told the jury it must consider the written testimony of Ruby Bates, repudiating her charges of the attacks, just as if she had given it in person. This testimony was received too late for the Patterson jury and was first read here Monday, following affidavits that she was too ill in New York to come here.

She denied that she or Victoria Price was attacked on the train, declaring the charges were framed up to avoid their prosecution for violating the Mann law.

The defense presented Lester Carter to testify that Orvel Gilley told him in California that there were no attacks, but Gilley replied with a denial when called to the stand by the state.

These two boys left Chattanooga with the girls and Gilley remained on the car at the time of the alleged attacks, Carter testifying that he jumped off during the fight between Negroes and seven white boys which the state contends was followed by the assaults.

Two Additional Deputies To Attend Leibowitz As Long As He Is In State

DECATUR, ALA., Dec. 5—(AP)—Unable to reach a verdict after 12 hours of deliberation the jury sitting in judgment in the case of Clarence Norris second of seven negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, to be re-tried here, was ordered locked up a 9:30 p.m., with instructions to resume at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow.

A verdict was not apparent after the jury had deliberated over nine hours so Judge W. W. Callahan ordered supper sent the jury at 6:35 p.m., and declared a recess of an hour and 15 minutes. They resumed deliberations at 8 o'clock and at 9:30 were locked up.

Only twice during the day was the door to the jury room opened, once when the 12 Morgan County citizens sent for the exhibits and documentary evidence, and the other when Judge Callahan sent them to luncheon.

While the jury deliberated this morning Judge Callahan granted a motion of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, retained by the International Labor Defense, for an indefinite postponement of the remaining five trials, sent here under a change of venue from Jackson County

Two additional deputies to watch over Leibowitz, tonight were ordered to attend the attorney until he left the State.

Judge Callahan, who presided throughout the trials of Haywood Patterson and Norris, on charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price in Jackson County, March 25, 1931, assigned the additional guards.

In ordering the additional deputies to guard the attorney, Judge Callahan anstructed them specifically to attend him at all times.

Already Had Two Guards

Two guards were assigned to Leibowitz by Judge Callahan when the trials began here on Nov. 20, and they have been in constant attendance.

The Judge did not state why he had doubled the guard assigned to the attorney when the proceedings opened here.

Norris was tried on an indictment charged with participating in mass attacks of Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a Southern Railway freight train between Stevenson, Ala., and Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931.

The negro and his co-defendants were convicted by a jury in Jackson County in April, 1931 and sentenced to death. The convictions were set aside by the U. S. Supreme Court which held that the negroes did not have benefit of adequate counsel.

Norris is the second of the defendants to be brought to trial here.

Heywood Patterson, the first one, was twice convicted by a Mongan County jury and sentenced to death, the second conviction having been returned last Friday.

In moving for a postponement today Leibowitz told the court that, if the Alabama Supreme Court confirmed Patterson's sentence, it would be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Leibowitz said that in view of this "further trials at this time would be but a futile gesture." The attorney called attention to the constitutional questions raised in preliminary motions before the Patterson trial.

Motions to quash the indictments returned in Jackson County in 1931 and to quash the venire drawn for both the Patterson and Norris trials were overruled by Judge Callahan.

Racial Issue Involved

Each of the motions was based on allegations that negroes were "systematically excluded" from the juries in Jackson and Morgan Counties "solely because of race and color" and that exclusion violated the constitutional rights of the defendants.

A motion that Willie Roberson and Olen Montgomery be admitted to bail was denied by Judge Callahan, who told the attorney he was without authority to grant it. Leibowitz contended that their stories—Roberson that he was ill and remained in a box car from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Paint Rock, where all of them were arrested, and Montgomery that he was partically blind and rode in another box car—were substantiated in part by two State witnesses in the two most recent trials.

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., interposed objections to granting bail, contending that the State had not conceded that their stories were substantiated, and the "ends of justice demand that they be kept in jail."

Judge Callahan, as he granted postponement, said he would "merely pass" the cases on the docket, since the law "is very exact on me, and does not allow me to permit a man to remain in jail too long without trial." The next regular term of Morgan Criminal Court is in the early Spring, but it is doubtful if the Alabama Supreme Court will have acted on the Patterson case by then.

TROOPS SENT TO DECATUR

New York

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 25.—Attorney General Thomas E. Knight ordered a Statewide search today for Ruby Bates, missing witness in Alabama's cause celebre, the Scottsboro case, involving nine Negroes.

Exactly two years ago today, the Bates girl and Victoria Price, her companion on a freight-train riding expedition, charged they were attacked by a dozen Negroes who threw seven white hoboes off the train after a furious fight.

For the second time in two years the State is ready to proceed against seven of the accused Negroes, and once more the prosecution will demand that they pay the penalty provided by the law of Alabama—death in the electric chair at Kilby Prison.

The first trial held in the feverish excitement which prevailed in Scottsboro after the prisoners and their victims were taken from the freight train by an armed posse, resulted in the conviction of all the prisoners save one, who then was only 13 years old. The sentences of death meted out by Judge A. E. Hawkins were set aside by the United States Supreme Court after the International Labor Defense entered the case.

While he made no secret of the fact that he was extremely anxious to locate the Bates girl, missing from her home in Huntsville since Feb. 28, Attorney General Knight did not regard her absence as an insurmountable barrier to a successful prosecution. He issued an order to the Sheriff of every county in the State to search for her.

Relies on First-Trial Evidence.

Should they fail to find the young woman, it was understood that he would attempt to introduce the evidence she gave at the first trial against those of the Negroes whom she accused of attacking her. This move probably will be fought by the defense.

While everything appeared quiet on the surface of this Tennessee River town, officials were not inclined to overlook the possibility of trouble when the Negroes are brought here from the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham early next week.

Coroner Miller issued an order from the Capitol at Montgomery this morning, ordering a detail of thirty National Guardsmen to Decatur for duty Monday morning. They are to report to Judge James E. Horton, the troal judge. This precautionary measure was taken at the request of Judge Horton and Sheriff Bud Davis with the approval of Attorney General Knight.

The guardsmen will keep a twenty-four-hour vigil about the jail from which escape has been easy and frequent in the past.

A capacity crowd is expected to swarm into the second floor courtroom, where the trial is to be held, and orders have been issued to deputies to maintain order at all costs.

Among the townsfolk the attitude is that there will be no trouble unless it is started by "outsiders." By that they mean the Communist sympathizers of the Negroes. While the Negroes are not radicals themselves, they are being defended by lawyers for the International Labor Defense. Communists have been making the most of the opportunity the case has afforded them to carry on organization work among the Negroes of this and neighboring States.

Look for "Reds" at Trial.

Recently pamphlets were circulated in Southern cities announcing that a "labor jury" would be present in the court house to render a verdict after the trial. It would be composed, the announcements said, of Negro and white workingmen, professional men and white-collar workers and it would be representative of a cross-section of the country.

The Sheriff's forces will be especially watchful for radicals from New York, it was said.

Before the opening of the actual trial a defense motion to quash the indictments against the Negroes will be argued by Samuel Leibowitz and Attorney General Knight, both of whom have subpoenaed witnesses to support and contradict the contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service in the State. This contention was one of the points on which the case was carried to the nation's highest tribunal, and it may well prove the peg on which to hang a second appeal if the motion is denied and the Negroes are convicted again.

In reviewing the original verdict, the Supreme Court based its decision solely upon the "inadequacy of the defense counsel "provided by the court in Scottsboro. The court have held, however, that the establishment of a color line in selecting jurors violates guaranties of equal rights provided by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Florida Case Will Be Cited.

In the case of Tarrance against Florida the Supreme Court ruled:

"An actual discrimination by the officers charged with the administration of statues unobjectionable in themselves, against the race of a Negro on trial for a crime by purposely excluding Negroes from the grand and petit juries of the county, will not be presumed but must be proved. An affidavit of the persons under inducement, annexted to a motion to quash the indictment on the ground of such discrimination, stating that the facts set up in the motion are true 'to their best knowledge, information and belief,' is not evidence of the facts stated."

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, intends to supply the lacking "proof" by examining twenty odd witnesses and attempting to prove that some of them, although Negroes, were qualified to serve as jurors and have never been called for such service.

In another case the court held that a Negro, who charged exclusion of members of his race from the grand and petit juries which indicted him and convicted him, waited too long before raising the issue. The court held:

"If appellant had desired to take advantage of discrimination against him because he was Negro it should have been taken in advance of his conviction."

While the question of racial discrimination was not raised in the Scottsboro case until after the conviction of the Negroes, the defense is prepared to cite the Supreme Court decision holding that the defendants were not adequately defended in denying that they waited too long to raise the issue.

Knight to Defendt Jury System.

Attorney General Knight, who is understood to feel that the defense motion challenges the jury system of his State, is prepared to defend it. He holds that the statute defining the qualification of jurors—a statute the constitutionality of which has been upheld by the Supreme Court—does not discriminate against Negroes as such. He will maintain also that the law is administered fairly.

Arthur Tidwell, one of the three jury commissioners of Morgan County, declared this afternoon that he did not know whether the venire from which the trial jury will be drawn would contain the names of any Negroes. While he admitted that he could not recall when a Negro had served on a jury here, and conceded it "was a long while back," he said, he never inquired about a man's color in placing his name in the jury box.

"As long as I know he is a man of good character and sound judgment, like it says in the law book, I put his name in the box," he said. "I don't never ask whether he is a Negro or not and I don't ever see them. I don't know very many persons in this county."

Notwithstanding Mr. Tidwell's assertion, court attendants declared that Negroes never have served on juries here.

RENEW FIGHT TODAY IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Defense to Attack Jury System in Effort to Quash Indictments.

WITNESS STILL MISSING

Ruby Bates Is Widely Sought—Leibowitz Charges Witnesses Have Been Threatened.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 26.—The fight to save the lives of seven Negroes once condemned to death for ~~alleged assault~~ upon two white girls will open tomorrow in the Morgan County Court with an attack upon the jury system of Alabama.

He charged that some of the twenty-six witnesses he had subpoenaed in an effort to prove that some Negroes qualified by Alabama law to serve as jurors had been barred because of their black skins, have been subjected to threats and intimidation since they were served.

He said he would ask the protection of the court for these witnesses and declared that, if necessary, he would call on Governor Miller to ask for Federal troops to supplant the National Guardsmen, who have already been ordered here.

The accused Negroes, in prison for two years as a result of charges made against them by Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, their accusers, will be brought here some time before Tuesday morning.

Whether their arrival will be the occasion for an outbreak of violence is an open question, but the answer depends to some extent upon the behavior of Negroes and sympathizers of the Communist party, which has come to the aid of the defendants.

Governor Pledges Fair Trial.

Judging from the comments of representative citizens of Alabama the case of the Negroes has ceased to be an isolated matter of jurisprudence and has become entangled with several extraneous matters.

Nevertheless, a fair trial has been promised by Governor Miller and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who is making desperate efforts to find one of his star witnesses, the Bates girl, missing since Feb. 28.

The original verdict of guilty returned against eight of the nine prisoners at Scottsboro nearly two years ago has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Alabama, with the prevailing opinion of the court written by Justice Thomas E. Knight, father of the Attorney General who will prosecute the second trial.

This decision was overruled by the United States Supreme Court, which, reversing the original verdicts, set aside the death sentences and ordered new trials.

To many of the leading citizens of the State the Supreme Court decision was accepted as a rebuff to Alabama's highest court. To them the only satisfactory outcome of a new trial would be a second conviction and new sentences of death.

Also interwoven with the case is the South's traditional attitude toward the Negro—an attitude of benevolent paternalism which refuses, however, to recognize the equal rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment and invoked by the defense in its motion to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury.

The Factor of Communism.

Most important of all is the implicit challenge to the State's jury system contained in the defense motion. It is that which brought Attorney General Knight into a case which otherwise would have been prosecuted by the regular circuit solicitor, and it is that which the people of Decatur really are agitated about to a much greater extent than the fate of the Negroes.

Another factor enters into the case which is about to go to trial. That is the fact that it was the International Labor Defense, an adjunct of the Communist party, which first came to the defense of the Negroes after they had been convicted and sentenced to death in the electric chair of Kilby prison.

The South is irrevocably committed to a policy of rugged individualism. Alabama is devoted to the protection of States' rights and is resentful of outside interference in the administration of its laws. Its officers are determined to administer them without "outside interference."

Its officials, from Governor Miller down, regard as "outside interference" the deluge of telegrams sent to them by Communist sympathizers and which threaten their lives if the accused Negroes are not acquitted.

These threatening telegrams and letters have been almost as important a factor in crystallizing sentiment against the Negroes as has been the nature of the crime charged against them.

Both Sides Ready for Trial.

The organization work being carried on by the Communist party among the share-croppers of the Black Belt—organization work that has already resulted in bloodshed—has had its effect, too.

The Scottsboro case, with its attendant threat of winning Negroes to the Communist cause, has come to hold a threat to the peace and security of the South, and the demand of the defense for equal rights under the law for peoples of all races and color has accented that threat.

It is in that sort of atmosphere that the trials of the accused Negroes are to open here this week. In spite of all the extraneous matters that have intruded upon a simple matter of guilt or innocence, Attorney General Knight is certain that the people of Decatur and Morgan County will be able to give the accused men a fair trial.

Mr. Knight, besides being Attorney General of the State, is chairman of the Board of Pardons, and he is determined that, regardless of the verdict of the jury, no Negro will be executed until both he and the Governor are convinced of his guilt.

The prisoners are now in Birmingham jail awaiting their transfer here. The first order of business before the court is the disposition of the defense motion to quash the indictments. If that is denied, the defendants will be arraigned for pleading, a jury will be drawn and the trial will start immediately. Both sides claim to be ready.

SPEAKERS PLEAD JUSTICE FOR BOYS FACING TRIAL

By Staff Correspondent

The voices of countless liberal minded citizens were raised in the big mass meeting on Sunday after Commission, was the next speaker, and again earned the respect of all citizens of Birmingham, as a Christian gentleman in behalf of fairness. Dr. Edmonds, unlike the vast majority present, said he felt no apprehension over the trial being held in Decatur, because Decatur was a railroad and labor town, no race trouble had ever been there, and it was quite different from Scottsboro. He said that sentiment had been expressed by Rev. W. G. McDowell, bishop of the diocese of Alabama, who had recently returned from Decatur, and also by J. Ward Nelson, State Secretary of Y. M. C. A.

Dr. Kenneth Barnhart, professor of Sociology at Birmingham-Southern College, was the next to speak, he said, "We are not here because we belong to any party, but because we believe in justice and we would clear the fair name of our state." He reviewed the high spots in the decision of the Supreme Court of the U. S., which caused it to render its opinion that the trial at Scottsboro held April 26, 1931, had not been a fair trial, as there were no due process of law, no proper defense, and was against the Constitution of the United States, and the judge and jury had been swept away by the passion of the mob."

Dr. E. W. Taggart, president of the local branch of the N. A. A. C. P., spoke of the interest of his organization, adding that $1000 had been given to help on the expense of the appeal. He spoke of the prevailing practice of dealing with the Negro, and said this ante-bellum notion "of knowing the Negro, what he can do, and keeping him in his place," often outweighs evidence that the shrewdest council may introduce to the contrary. He made a strong appeal as a loyal citizen and World War veteran. At this point an appeal of funds was made by Rabbi Goldstein. As the economic condition which had been touched upon by Dr. Taggart, should be the concern of all who were interested in seeing the boys get a fair trial this time. At this point a solo, "Been in the Storm," was sung by Mrs. Louis Jackson. Mrs. H. C. Bryant, president of the Y. W. C. A., voiced the sentiments of the motherhood of the country when she said, "It might have been your sons, it might have been mine." She made a strong appeal for loyalty, hope and faith in the ultimate triumph of righteousness and called upon everyone to lay aside the daily task, and give a few minutes to silent prayer, during the trial. The closing remarks were made by Lawyer Taub, of New York, one of the young assistants, who promised that "the boys this time would have their day in court."

DEMANDS THE CHAIR FOR SEVEN NEGROES

Accuser of Scottsboro Case Defendants, on Eve of Second Trial, Repeats Charges.

OTHER WITNESS HUNTED

Sheriff Will Ask for Protection of Militia When Decatur Court Proceedings Start.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., March 24.—Victoria Price, who alleges that she and Ruby Bates were assaulted by a dozen Negroes on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago, told her story again here today and expressed the hope that the men she accuses will die in the electric chair.

Seven of the nine Negroes who were seized by an armed posse near Paint Rock and are accused of the crime are to go on trial before Judge James E. Horton at Decatur next week, and Mrs. Price is the State's chief witness. Ruby Bates has mysteriously disappeared. Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who will prosecute the second trial of the Negroes, spent the day here directing efforts to locate her.

Meanwhile at Decatur, thirty miles away, the statement was made that Sheriff Bud Davis, whose responsibility it will be to protect the defendants from mob violence and guard against their escape from the dilapidated Morgan County jail during the trial, had decided after a conference with Judge Horton to ask Governor Miller to order thirty National Guardsmen to the city for special duty next week.

The understanding is that the Sheriff is swayed more by a realization of the danger of escape from the jail, which was condemned two years ago, than by fear of an attempted lynching. The order for the militia probably will not be issued until next week, since the defendants are not likely to be taken to Decatur from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham until Tuesday or Wednesday, although argument on a motion to quash the indictments against them is set for Monday morning.

Deaf to Changing Venue.

The International Labor Defense, an organization with Communist affiliations which has interested itself in the case of the accused Negroes, has been campaigning actively for another change of venue to Birmingham, but thus far Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, has not moved in that direction before any court. The International Labor Defense, however, made public in Birmingham a telegram to Mr. Knight, urging him to consent to a transfer of the trial "in the interest of fairness and justice."

The telegram was signed by Kenneth E. Barnhart, Professor of Sociology at Birmingham-Southern College; David Hutto, a student; L. J. Baptiste, pastor of the First Congregational Church, and Ernest W. Taggart. Mr. Knight's only comment was:

"I shall not ask for a further change of venue from Morgan County to Jefferson or any other county.

"The citizens of Morgan County did not ask that the trial be held there, and I am sure the defendants will receive from them a fair and impartial trial."

So fearful is the State of losing its remaining star witness before the trial opens that a deputy sheriff has been assigned to watch night and day at the barely furnished little shack where Mrs. Price lives with her mother, a widow for seventeen years. Mrs. Price is her mother's sole support. She earns $6.50 every other week, when she works as a hand in a local cotton mill. She has been twice married.

She told her story of what took place on the afternoon of March 25, 1931, when she and Ruby Bates boarded a freight train in the yards at Chattanooga to return from a fruitless job-hunting expedition to the latter city without mincing words or sparing details, while her mother rocked to and fro before a dull fire in the coal grate.

Tells Story of Attacks.

She and Ruby Bates, Mrs, Price stated, decided to seek their fortunes in Chattanooga when the mill where she had been employed after leaving school at the age of 14 was closed. With their clothing covered by men's overalls, they made their way to Chattanooga on freight trains, spent the night at the home of one Callie Broches, whose address Mrs. Price could not remember, and were told that there was no more chance of finding work in Chattanooga than in their home town of Huntsville.

Without so much as going to a mill in Chattanooga, Mrs. Price admitted, they decided to give up their search and return home "because Ruby wanted to go right back." About 11 A. M., clad once more in overalls, the two girls boarded an oil tank car in the yard at Chattanooga and rolled out with the train when it started for Memphis.

"We didn't see no white boys or colored boys either then," she said. 'But when we got to Stevenson we were getting cold and we decided to look for a box car when the train stopped there. The box cars were closed up, but we did see a gondola car and got into that."

"A few minutes later some white boys—I think there were seven of them—climbed in and said:

" 'Hello, girls, do you mind if we ride with you?'

"Ruby and I said we didn't care if they behaved themselves. We were sitting at the rear end of the car and the boys went to the front and lay down. They were singing 'Pass Around the Bottle,' when we heard some yelling and a big Negro jumped into the gondola car from the roof of a box car, shooting a pistol.

"There was a big fight and the Negroes pushed all the white boys off the train about two miles and a half past Stevenson—all of them except one, I mean. Two of them held me and one held a knife over my throat. I don't remember much until at Paint Rock the train stopped."

Insists on Identification.

Mrs. Price denied that she or the missing Bates girl had been guilty of any improprieties with the white men on the train and asserted she never had seen any of them before. She had told nothing but the truth at the first trial, where she identified one after another of the defendants, and she said she would do so again next week at Decatur.

"Nothing ain't going to stop me from telling my story," she declared with emphasis. "They made me suffer and I want to see them punished. They deserve to be electrocuted."

A few blocks away is the cabin where the Bates girl's mother lives in apparent poverty on "thickening gravy and bread," as she explained. The last she saw of her daughter, she said, was on Feb. 28, when a voice called to her from an automobile at the gate and Ruby ran out of the house.

"I was lying down with a sick headache and I don't know who it was who called," said Mrs. Bates. "None of the boys she had been going with since last Fall is missing."

Mrs. Bates is convinced that her daughter was "kidnapped," but by whom she professed to have no idea. She was greatly worried by her daughter's continued absence, especially since the girl, she said, had been under a physician's care since her journey in the freight train, but it was a week after Ruby had vanished before her mother informed Sheriff Giles of the disappearance.

Then she sent him a letter which she had received from her daughter, postmarked in Montgomery. In the letter Ruby advised her mother not to worry, but said she was afraid she might die. According to Mrs. Bates, the girl took with her only the clothes on her back. Her delay in notifying the authorities of her daughter's disappearance, Mrs. Bates said, was caused by fear that publicity might bring harm to the girl.

7 NEGROES FACE 2D TRIAL TODAY

By CARTER JONES,

Universal Service Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., Mar. 26.—The case which Left Wing labor organizations all over the world have taken up—the second trial of the seven Scottsboro Negroes, charged with assaulting two young white women—will open tomorrw morning, with Alabama militiamen guarding the courthouse.

The first trial brought a death sentence for the seven, but the United States Supreme Court granted a new trial on the ground they had not been allowed to prepare an adequate defense.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer, arrived today to take charge of the defense. He said he would ask that the Negroes be placed under protection of the National Guard because of death threats made against them.

Thomas E. Knight, Jr., Attorney-General of Alabama, heads the prosecution. The prisoners are being held in the Birmingham jail for safe keeping.

Ruby Bates, one of the two young women assaulted while bumming from Chattanooga to their homes in Huntsville, Ala., on a freight train, disappeared from her home two weeks ago. Wide search for her was under way. The other asserted victim, Victoria Price, is under guard at her home.

JURORS FIND NEGRO GUILTY; DECREE DEATH

By CARTER BROOK JONES.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9 (INS).—Another Alabama jury said guilty and decreed death today in the Scottsboro case.

The case of the seven Negro hoboes, who won new trials from the United States Supreme Court and enlisted the sympathy of labor organizations all over the world, suffered another setback.

The 12 men from Morgan County, taking the case on change of venue from Jackson County, imposed the extreme penalty on Haywood Patterson, first of the Negroes to be retried.

The verdict was guilty of criminal assault despite the fact that Ruby Bates, Huntsville mill girl, changed her testimony she gave at Scottsboro and denied she and Victoria Price were attacked by a group of negroes on a freight train two years ago.

Mrs. Price stuck to her original story of attack. This time, instead of deliberating 20 minutes, the jury stayed out 21 hours, but its finding was as inexorable.

Turns to Defense

Ruby Bates who retracted story of attack by Negroes.

APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT.

The defense will seek to carry the case to the Supreme Court again.

The nine townsmen and three farmers deliberated from 12:45 o'clock until 11:30 last night, when they were sent to their hotel for the night. Three of the men did not take off their clothes all night. The jurors were back in their room at 9 o'clock this morning, and shortly after 10 o'clock came the rap on the door that signalled a verdict.

The attorneys were present, but there was a delay of an hour while Circuit Judge E. Horton drove from his home at Athens.

(International)

Showing little sign of emotion, Haywood Patterson, negro, in Decatur, Ala., court, heard jury give death sentence in criminal assault case. He is pictured with defense attorney. Samuel Leibowitz.

PRISONER SMILES.

The young Negro was the least concerned of all. He smiled broadly once or twice at the guards who sat beside him on a bench against the wall, only a few feet from the locked door of the jury room.

The verdict took the town by surprise, and the courthouse was almost deserted when the jury was brought over from the hotel. Less than 30 men sat in the courtroom on the second floor of the trim brick building. The courtroom seats 300. Outside the Sabbath tranquillity was unbrokn. There was not a person loitering around.

The National Guard captain detailed 10 more men to guard the single entrance to the courtroom.

JUDGE APOLOGIZES.

The Judge in his informal way apologized to the jurors for keeping them waiting. Instead of taking their seats in the jury box they stood in a group around the bench, which is customary in the County.

"Gentlemen, you have agreed upon a verdict?"

The foreman stepped forward and handed the paper up to the bench.

Judge Horton read it deliberately, then announced:

"We the jury find the defendant guilty as charged and fix his punishment at death."

The jury could have set the punishment of life imprisonment or at any term from 10 years.

NO DEMONSTRATION.

There was no demonstration, a breathless hush hung over the room for a moment.

Then Judge Horton gave the jurors the customary thanks for their diligent attention to the case and dismissed them. They would not discuss their deliberations, but there was a report that at first several had held out for acquittal and that later the wrangle was mainly over the degree of punishment.

Patterson dropped his head slightly when the verdict was announced, but gave no other sign of emotion. He and his six companions were held in the death house at Kilby Prison in Montgomery for nearly two years while the legal forces enlisted in their behalf fought the case until the United States Supreme Court set aside the conviction, holding that they were not allowed an adequate defense at Scottsboro.

Samuel S. Libowitz, the New York attorney who headed the defense staff, seemed amazed at the verdict, he said:

"This is another black chapter in American Justice. It is a triumph of bigotry. It means that because a man's skin is black he can be brought in here, and no matter what the evidence may be, smirking hypocrisy will go out and condemn him to death. I shall fight these Scottsboro cases as long as there is breath in my body and as long as I live."

Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel of international labor defense, and G. W. Chamlee, Chattanooga attorney, were associated in the defense of Patterson, but neither took an active part in the trial. Chamlee made a brief summation.

PUBLIC INFLAMED.

Brodsky told the court that feeling had been inflamed by the appeal of Wade Wright, local circuit solicitor, in his summation for the jury to show them that Jew money from New York can't buy and sell justice in Alabama."

The spectre of violence hung over the Patterson trial, but Decatur remained calm and there was no trouble. Several times Judge Horton made speeches from the bench warning the community that no interference with the trial would be tolerated and the guardsmen would shoot to kill if necessary.

The Patterson trial began last Monday, after a week of arguments on preliminary motions. The defense sought to quash the indictment and the jury venire on the ground that Negroes were excluded from Grand and Petit juries in Alabama. This is expected to be one of the main issues in the attempt to have the Supreme Court review the case again.

While the attorneys and court officials were waiting for the judge to receive the verdict, a score of telegrams lay on his desk. These were from liberal and radical organizations all over the country. They demanded protection for "the Scottsboro boys and their attorneys" from mobs and urged acquittal.

VICTORIA PRICE.

Protest

PLANS were under way in Harlem, last night, to have 50,000 Negroes from all parts of the country go to Washington to protest to President Roosevelt against the conviction in Decatur, Ala., of Haywood Patterson, in the Scottsboro case.

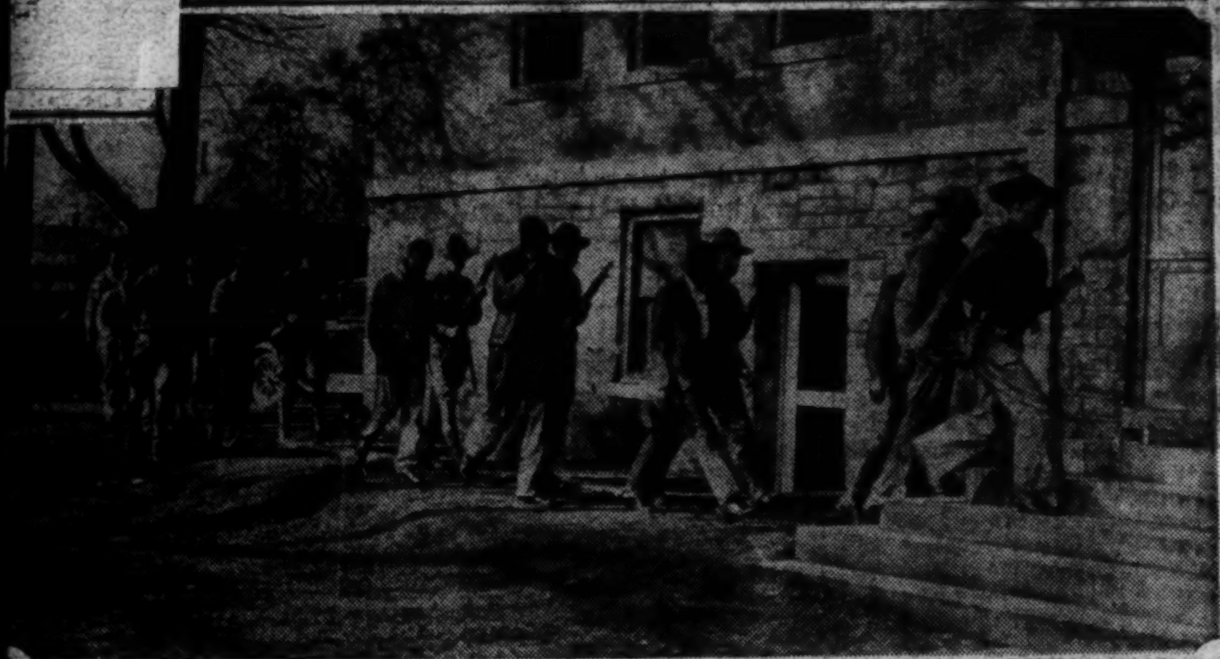
William Davis, publisher of The Amsterdam News, put up a notice outside his office, calling on persons to sign a petition and signifiy their intention of going to Washington. By evening more than 20,000 persons had signed.

The International Labor Defense announced that an appeal will be taken immediately in the Patterson case.

EIBOWITZ EXPLAINS.

Leibowitz told the jury in his ummation that he had taken the ase without fee and did not represent any of the organizations hich were enlisted in the defense, ut was acting only for himself. He was hopeful of an acquittal, specially when Ruby Bates, the white mill girl, took the stand dramatically for the defense and repudiated her testimony at Scottsboro that a group of Negroes had ttacked her and Victoria Price on a freight train between Chattanooga and Pwintrock, Ala., tw years ago.

Jury Convicts Patterson in 21 Hours



NEGRO FOUND GUILTY; TO DIE—Haywood Patterson, first of 7 Negroes to be retried on charges of attacking Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, white girl hoboes, was convicted and condemned to die by a Decatur, Ala., jury which was out 21 hours. TODAY'S EDITORIAL MAY HELP EXPLAIN.

Manhattan: That Scottsboro colored boys' case bewilders and grieves me. The prosecution's star witness takes back her first story, claiming intimidation before the first trial. If that wouldn't blow up any criminal case, what would? Yet the jury goes out, and eleven of its twelve members immediately vote for conviction. They stay put until the twelfth comes around. It just looks as if the South in this case is taking out some kind of revenge on the North, probably for sending Northern money and lawyers down there. If the Northern lawyers hadn't gone down there, the seven colored boys would have been dead long ago. In spite of all the law and two-thirds of the evidence, the Southerners seem determined to get these boys anyway. What can anybody do about such a situation? JUSTICE.

GOAL YET TO BE REACHED.

Down at Decatur, Ala., nine Negroes are on trial for their lives on charges of which they once were convicted. They still live by virtue of a supreme court decision that their first trial was not conducted in a fair manner. The opening skirmishes of the present episode indicate that the attorneys for the defense are seeking a similar supreme court decision with reference to this trial.

Most of the sparring thus far has been over the contention of the defense that the indictments should be quashed because they were drawn by a jury from which Negroes were systematically excluded. Efforts have been made to show that no Negro in the last twenty-five years has served on a jury in the county in which the nine defendants originally were indicted and convicted on charges of attacking two white girl hoboes. The Alabama law places several important restrictions on jury service. In prescribing the qualifications of jurors, it says:

> The jury board shall place on the jury roll and in the jury box the names of all male citizens of its county who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men and are esteemed in its community for their integrity, good character and sound judgment; but no person must be selected who is under twenty-one or over sixty-five years of age or who, being afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness, is unfit to discharge the duties of a juror; or cannot read English or who has ever been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude. If a person cannot read English and has all the other qualifications prescribed herein and is a freeholder or householder, his name may be placed on the jury roll and in the jury box.

The defense in the present case contends that the 666 Negro men between twenty-one and sixty-five years of age in the county where the defendants were indicted are discriminated against solely because of their color. The state denies that. One witness' explanation of the fact that no Negro had served on a jury in the county, within his recollection, was:

"I don't believe there are any Negroes in our county that I'd care to risk in any case which involved justice and law. Some have the education and they might have the character but they would not have all the qualifications. . . I don't think Negroes have been trained for jury duty. . . You could not depend on their judgment. They haven't made a study of justice and law and such."

Further questioning disclosed that jurymen in that county get the "training" which results in sound judgment by "attending court, listening to cases and discussing public questions at the country store and at crossroads all the time." It is most unfortunate that this system of training, evidently so successful in Alabama, does not prove more successful in other sections of the country.

What all this questioning and testimony proves or disproves is not for us to say. It does convince us that if we were a Negro citizen of that county we should not care to serve on a jury, even if the jury commission decided that we were fully qualified under the law. We should say it would be a courageous Negro juryman who would cling to his own opinion if it happened to conflict with that of a majority of his white colleagues. All of which perhaps is none of our business, except insofar as it leads to the conclusion that despite Lincoln's emancipation proclamation, and the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth amendments to the Constitution, the last word on racial equality in the United States is yet to be said.

DEFENSE TO ASSAIL SCOTTSBORO VENIRE

Plea That Failed to Quash Indictments Will Be Used in Attack on Trial Jury.

LEIBOWITZ GETS THREATS

He Smiles at 'Crank's' Warnings—Bates Girl's Father Seeks to Aid Hunt for Her.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 29.—A petition asking Circuit Judge James E. Horton to quash the venire from which a jury is to be drawn to try Haywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes accused of an attack on two white girls, was drawn up today by Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel.

Mr. Leibowitz, who has lost one fight to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand jury which returned the true bills against them, leveled the same objection to the venire drawn from the trial jury.

With the court in recess today, Mr. Leibowitz spent his time preparing to carry his fight on Alabama's so-called "selective jury system" into Morgan County, where the present trial will be held. He was ready, he said, to subpoena nearly 200 Negro citizens of the county to testify that, while qualified in every way to serve as jurors, they have been excluded from the rolls.

In connection with his motion to quash the indictments the defense attorney presented evidence from thirteen witnesses in an effort to prove that racial discrimination in Jackson County, where the alleged attack on Ruby Bates and Victoria Price took place two years ago, kept Negroes off the juries in that county.

New Circumstances Different.

While the new petition raises a question similar to that already disposed of by the court, the circumstances are different. In arguing the motion to quash the indictments Mr. Leibowitz was handicapped by his inability to prove that no Negro names were on the jury rolls of Jackson County.

Judge Horton's ruling came after he consented to issue a subpoena duces tecum for the jury rolls of Jackson County, but before they had been produced or any ruling made regarding their admissibility as evidence.

The defense lawyer had rested his case with the reservation that he would submit further proof when the jury rolls were produced.

In arguing the new petition Mr. Leibowitz will have before him the names of all prospective jurors and it will be possible for him to establish definitely the color of each man on it.

Leibowitz Gets "Crank" Warnings.

During the day while his associates, Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel for the International Labor Defense, and G. W. Chamlee, former Attorney General of Chattanooga, were preparing motion papers and conferring with their witnesses, Mr. Leibowitz visited the jail where the defendants are imprisoned under guard of militiamen and deputy sheriffs.

He conferred briefly with the prisoners and upon leaving the jail declared it was "unfit for human habitation," saying that he would ask the court to set aside a room in the court house where he might consult his clients without the necessity of visiting the jail again.

Mr. Leibowitz said that since his arrival here he has received half a dozen threatening letters from "cranks," who warned him against continuing his attack on the laws and customs of Alabama and advised him to "stay home where you belong."

The defense attorney dismissed the letters with a shrug and a smile.

"It should be understood though," he said, "that I have no interest in attacking either the customs or laws of this or any other State.

"I am doing only what any lawyer would do in this case—demanding the full protection of the law for my clients."

Renew Hunt for Girl Witness.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., the young Attorney General who is prosecuting the Negroes, spent the day in conference with his associates, Wade Wright, J. G. Bailey and Thomas E. Lawson. They interviewed several witnesses and prepared their arguments against the expected defense assault upon the venire.

Among the witnesses interviewed was the father of Ruby Bates, who gave Mr. Knight several addresses at which he said he thought his daughter, mysteriously missing since Feb. 28, might be found.

Miniature Train to Be Shown.

In order to illustrate graphically the testimony of the witnesses regarding what happened aboard the freight train on which the crime is said to have been committed, Mr. Leibowitz brought with him a miniature of the train.

It is complete in every detail, consisting of a locomotive with brass fittings and thirty cars, replicas of the box cars, flat cars, tank cars and gondolas which figure in the testimony of witnesses at the earlier trial.

Assembled, the model freight train is about thirty-two feet long, about half the width of the courtroom inside the rail.

State's Witness at Decatur Trial Screams Denial of 'Framing' Negro Defendants.

MORAL ATTACK RULED OUT

Judge Rejects Court Records as Not Affecting the Credibility of Her Testimony.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 3.—Victoria Price, whose testimony two years ago at Scottsboro led Jackson County juries to condemn eight of nine Negro defendants to death, repeated her charges today before Judge James E. Horton and a jury in the Morgan County Court House at the first of the retrials ordered by the United States Supreme Court.

Called to the witness stand by Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. as the main witness against Haywood Patterson, the first of the nine prisoners placed on trial, she identified him unhesitatingly as one of six Negroes who, she testified, had attacked her on a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock.

Her direct examination took just twelve minutes of the court's time. When it was finished she settled back in her chair, crossed her silk-stockinged legs and met a day-long attack upon her character and credibility with angry defiance. At times when Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, pressed searching questions regarding her past, her lip curled and she snapped her answers in the colloquialisms of the "poor white."

Mrs. Price entered an angry denial when Mr. Leibowitz asked if she had not concocted the whole story of the mass attack by the Negroes and forced Ruby Bates, the other victim of the alleged crime, to corroborate her in order to forestall the danger of her own arrest for vagrancy or a more serious offense. She joined the Attorney General in challenging Mr. Leibowitz to produce the missing Bates girl to "ask her about it."

Shouts Answers to Questions.

"That's some of that Ruby Bates' dope," she shouted in a voice that shook with anger.

"You can't prove it," she shouted another time when Mr. Leibowitz promised to show the court that the condition in which doctors found her when she was examined at Scottsboro after an armed possé had taken the girls and the Negroes off the train on which the attack supposedly took place, was the result of her misconduct the night before in a hobo jungle on the outskirts of Chattanooga.

Certified copies of court records from Huntsville where Mrs. Price lived with her widowed mother were offered by Mr. Leibowitz to show that prior to March 25, 1931, she had been arrested for offenses against the moral code.

Judge Horton rejected one of the copies on the ground that an offense under the prohibition law is not a reflection on the credibility of a witness and barred the others on the ground that they charged violations of city ordinances rather than State laws.

Mrs. Price came to court wearing a black dress with a fichu of white lace at the throat. The little blue straw hat on her head was enlivened by a small red feather sticking above the crown. A string of glass beads adorned her neck and on three fingers of her left hand were large and showy rings.

She defended the testimony she had given with as much fire as she defended her reputation, heatedly denying at one moment that she had wrecked the home of a married woman with two babies, and in the next breath thrusting aside seeming inconsistencies in her testimony with apologies for her lack of education and faulty memory.

Doctor Describes Injuries.

Although Mrs. Price insisted that she had fought the Negroes off until her strength gave out, and declared that her head was cut open by a blow from the butt of a pistol wielded by Patterson, Dr. R. R. Bridges, the Scottsboro physician, who testified just before adjournment, said he had found only superficial bruises and scratches when he examined her.

While the doctor was on the stand Judge Horton took a hand in the examination, showing particular interest in the physician's statement that neither Mrs. Price nor her companion, the Bates girl, were hysterical or nervous when they were brought to his office. Not until the next day, he said, did either of them show any signs of nervousness and then, after a night in jail, it manifested itself in tears.

The star witness for the State told the sordid details of the crime before a crowded court with unabashed frankness and plain-speaking. She repeated the lewd remarks she said the Negroes made to her without the flutter of an eyelash and in a voice that carried to the furthest corner of the court room. The only women in the crowd which heard her story and the very clinical medical testimony which followed it were two visitors from New York. At times they looked as though they wished they had not come.

There was little that was new in the testimony Mrs. Price gave under direct examination by Mr. Knight. She and the Bates girl, a mill worker like herself, decided, she said to go to Chattanooga in search of employment. Wearing overalls over three dresses they wore to avoid carrying hand luggage, she said, they hopped a freight train and arrived in Chattanooga on the evening of March 24, 1931.

Sought Work in Chattanooga.

There, Mrs. Price said, she was directed to the home of Mrs. Callie Brochie, where she and Miss Bates spent the night. In the morning upon finding that jobs were as scarce in Chattanooga as in Huntsville she and her companion retrieved their overalls from the corner of the station where they had hidden them and started homeward on an outgoing freight train.

They were in a gondola car with seven white boys, Mrs. Price declared, when Patterson, with the other Negroes at his heels, jumped in from the top of a box car waving a pistol and ordering the white boys to "unload." Mrs. Price related all the rest of the conversation that she could remember without sparing any of the details. One of the printable remarks she attributed to the Negroes follows:

"We're going to take you girls up North and make you our women."

There was a fight in which all the white boys except one named Orville Gilley were thrown off the train soon after it left Stevenson, a way-station between Chattanooga and Scottsboro. Gilley, according to Mrs. Price, was afraid to jump off the train and said he would "rather stay in the car and die with these girls." Mrs. Price said that she too told the Negroes that she was "going to get off at Huntsville or die."

The seven white men were rounded up and held in the jail at Scottsboro until the first trial of the Negroes was over. Only one of them, Gilley, was called upon to testify in the first trial, but it was indicated today that Lester Carter, another of the white hoboes, would be a surprise witness for the defense, if the State does not locate and call him first.

Refuses to Go Over Crime Again.

Mr. Leibowitz opened his examination of Mrs. Price, who had testified that she was 21 when the attack occurred, by asking if she was now 27 years old.

"I ain't that educated that I can figure it out," she replied.

The New York lawyer asked her to describe in detail how she resisted the Negroes.

"Judge, your Honor, I've answered four times and I ain't going to say no more," she said as she turned to face Judge Horton.

Once she protested that she could not understand the questions of Mr. Leibowitz.

"Do I use words you don't understand?" he asked.

"You speak them too fast," she said.

The witness refused to identify a miniature train of box cars, gondolas and tank cars as similar to the freight train and the identification was made later by R. S. Turner, conductor of the train the girls had boarded at Chattanooga. He also testified that he had heard no shots or screams as he rode in the caboose, twenty-six cars behind the gondolas in which the attack is alleged to have occurred.

Several times Mr. Leibowitz, angered at what he termed Mrs. Price's "speech-making," asked the judge to warn her to confine her remarks to answering questions. Twice Mr. Knight warned her to "be calm." When she leaned forward and screamed that Patterson had attacked her, Mr. Leibowitz said:

"You're a little bit of an actress, aren't you?"

"You're a pretty good actor yourself," she retorted.

Mr. Leibowitz asked how many mills she visited in Chattanooga in search of work.

"It's been two years ago and I disremember," she answered.

Denies Accompanying White Boys.

Mr. Leibowitz sought vainly to get Mrs. Price to admit that she and Miss Bates left Chattanooga with Gilley and Carter, but the witness insisted that she and her "friend girl" were "the onliest ones on the oil car" in which they started out.

Denying intimations that the whole case was a frame-up, Mrs. Price declared she had urged Miss Bates to "tell nothing but the truth," and she denied that she had quarreled with Gilley and Carter in jail because "they wouldn't commit perjury."

Mr. Leibowitz asked the witness if she had not known Negroes and spent considerable time with them in Chattanooga. This she strongly denied.

Before Mrs. Price left the witness stand she identified photographs of herself and Ruby Bates, produced by Mr. Leibowitz and offered in evidence. One, showing one of the girls with a Negro, was marked for identification and will be introduced in evidence later.

When Attorney General Knight objected to introduction of the pictures, Mr. Leibowitz replied that he would use them to show that Mrs. Price was on friendly terms with Negroes.

Court adjourned until tomorrow after the testimony of Dr. Bridges

BAILIFFS ISOLATE SCOTTSBORO JURY

Judge Forbids Talk of Case and Movies and Jigsaw Puzzles Fill In Their Time.

NEW YORKERS ARRESTED

Pamphlets Are Taken From Muriel Rukeyser and Others Seized by Decatur Police.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 1.—Remote from the discussions of their fellow-citizens of Morgan County regarding last week's assault upon its jury system, the twelve jurors who will begin hearing evidence against Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes, at his second trial next Monday, amused themselves today with jigsaw puzzles and playing cards.

This evening they were taken to a motion picture show and tomorrow they will be escorted from the hotel where they have a suite of eight rooms to church by the bailiffs whose duty it is to protect them from outside influences and contacts. Judge James E. Horton has warned them against discussing the case before then, even among themselves.

Judge Horton's exhortation to the people of the community to do nothing to impede the course of justice has made the local folk determined that nothing shall happen here to reflect discredit upon the county or the State.

Nevertheless, there is beneath the surface a smoldering resentment at defense efforts to open the jury rolls to the Negro population and at the accounts of the proceedings in the court published in some Negro and radical newspapers. The community is particularly incensed at a story published in a Negro newspaper in Chicago, indicating that Decatur prepared for the trial in holiday mood—"the kind of holiday Morgan County likes."

Hold Negroes Dare Not Be Jurors.

As a matter of fact, thus far the townfolk have shown little interest in the proceedings, except for a small minority which is on hand each morning to scramble for seats in the court room.

Most of the residents of Decatur gain their information about the proceedings exclusively from The Decatur Daily, which, as a matter of policy, has printed only The Associated Press accounts and has refrained from editorial comment.

The tactics of the defense in moving to quash the venire from which the jury was chosen, on the ground that Negroes were barred from service by maladministration of the jury law, has had the effect of shifting whatever feeling existed toward the nine Negro defendants, accused of assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price two years ago, to the lawyers who are defending them.

It was amusing during the long legalistic arguments and conflicting testimony regarding the right of Negroes to do jury duty, to hear the comments among the spectators.

While Arthur J. Tidwell, the president of the jury board, was disavowing racial exclusion and admitting that he knew of not one Negro in the county who could qualify as a juror, one man in the front row turned to his neighbor and said:

"We've never had niggers in our juries yet and we never will."

His friend bent over and whispered:

"If we told them they could, there isn't a nigger here who would dare to try to sit on a jury."

Leibowitz Wary of Radicals.

It was because of the resentment engendered by Samuel Leibowitz's determined fight to produce a court record showing systematic exclusion of Negroes in the event that he has to appeal from a verdict of guilty, that Captain Joseph Burleson, who is commanding the National Guardsmen on duty at the trial, decided to assign a guard to the New York lawyer.

At the request of Mr. Leibowitz, it was withdrawn after a few hours and he continued to go about town on foot and by automobile without encountering any open hostility.

Mr. Leibowitz is more concerned over the possible activities of visiting radicals than he is over the unfriendliness of the people of Decatur. He has repeatedly asked that these persons stay away from the court house and abandon any plans they may have for demonstrations or agitation among local Negroes.

With the same desire to preserve the peace, police officials took five persons into custody early this morning for investigation.

Three of them, two men and a woman, said they were New Yorkers here in the capacity of observers with journalistic aims. The other two were Negroes from Birmingham.

The three New Yorkers, who were released and ordered to appear before Judge Horton Monday morning, described themselves as Muriel Rukeyser, Edward Sagarin and Hank Fuller. Fuller says he was run out of Scottsboro two years ago.

The two Negroes said they were James Cooper and William A. Christal of Birmingham. Patrolman A. S. Brazelton saw the three white New Yorkers in the Negro section of Decatur with Cooper shortly after midnight and took them to Police Headquarters for investigation.

Literature is Seized.

Miss Rukeyser, according to Brazelton, had in her possession some literature of the National Students League and letters relating to the Scottsboro trial.

Christal was found at the address given by Cooper and in the room, Brazelton said, was a quantity of pamphlets and appeal for funds for the Scottsboro Negroes, together with enrolment cards of the Workers Ex-Servicemen's League.

The Negroes and the others were held at Police Headquarters while Wade Wright, circuit solicitor, was notified.

After questioning them, Mr. Wright ordered all five released, but he confiscated the literature found on them. He ordered them to appear in court Monday and said that the pamphlets would be offered to Judge Horton.

NEGROES TESTIFY IN ISSUE

Point Raised Over Jury System in South Brings Request for Briefs to Aid Virginia Trial.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 30.—Samuel Leibowitz, chief counsel for the Negroes whose conviction two years ago at Scottsboro for an attack on two white girls was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, won the right today to inspect the secret roll from which jurymen are chosen in Morgan County.

Circuit Judge James E. Horton, who is presiding over the Negroes' second trial for their lives, ordered the jury roll produced over the objection of Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., while Arthur J. Tidwell, one of the county's three jury commissioners, was on the stand.

Mr. Leibowitz, who has lost one fight to quash the indictments against the Negroes on the ground that members of their race were excluded from the grand jury and is now waging another similar battle to quash the venire for the jury for Haywood Patterson's trial, immediately set about the task of proving that all of the 2,000-odd names inscribed upon the rolls are those of white men.

Mr. Tidwell was called by the defense after J. H. Green, clerk of the Circuit Court, and eleven Negroes, most of them boasting college educations, testified that for as long as they could remember there had been no Negroes on the juries of Morgan County.

List of Negro Witnesses Checked.

Three physicians, two preachers, a dentist, a bill poster, a motion-picture exhibitor, an undertaker, a high school principal and an operator of a billiard parlor were among the witnesses whom Mr. Leibowitz sought to prove were qualified to perform the duty of citizens on juries, except for the fact that they were Negroes.

From what might be described as an impromptu blue book of the Negro citizenry of Morgan County, prepared last night by the defense attorneys, the witnesses read into the record the names of about 180 colored acquaintances, whose qualifications, they averred, were as good as theirs.

When the procession of witnesses stopped at the direction of Judge Horton, who ruled that further testimony along this line would be merely cumulative, Mr. Leibowitz announced for the record that he had requested subpoenas for about 400 other Negroes whose qualifications for a place upon the jury roll he was prepared to prove.

The court allowed the names of all these uncalled witnesses to be entered upon the record with as much probative force as though they had testified.

Ever since the defense, supported by the International Labor Defense, an adjunct of the Communist party, raised the question of the right of Negroes under the Fourteenth Amendment to sit on juries in State courts officials have maintained that it was a challenge to the selective jury system of the entire South.

Today they found justification for that belief in a letter from John Galleher, Commonwealth's Attorney for Loudon County, Va., who wrote asking briefs on the matter in the Scottsboro case. He wanted the brief to aid him in preparing to meet the issue in the case of a Negro now awaiting extradition from Boston, Mass., to answer a charge of murdering two white women in their beds in Virginia.

The letter, received by John K. Thompson, Solicitor of Jackson County, was turned over to Mr. Knight, who indicated that he would comply with the request.

Communist "Observers" at Trial.

Meanwhile the peaceable atmosphere that has marked this proceeding against the Negroes, who are accused of criminally assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on a freight train, continues to exist not only in the court room but in the town as well. A noticeable increase in the number of Communist sympathizers and "observers," coupled with reports that agitators were trying to arrange "mass demonstrations" among the Negroes, however, led to concern in some quarters regarding its preservation.

Mr. Leibowitz, who is not a sympathizer with the Communists, however, has made it clear he will remain in the case only so long as demonstrators are held in check, and that, more than anything else, is counted upon here to prevent unfortunate developments. The Communist sympathizers who were in court during the day conducted themselves circumspectly and quietly, and there was no parading or displaying of placards.

The climax of the day's session came with the production of the jury roll, a huge loose-leaf tome bound in red leather. It was borne into the court by the towering Sheriff, Bud Davis, who stooped a little under its weight and bulk. Tuesday, when Mr. Leibowitz sought to obtain a similar volume from Jackson County, where the first trials were held, Judge Horton granted his request, but then denied the defense motion before the rolls were producd in court.

At the outset of his examination, Mr. Tidwell, who was appointed to the jury board by Governor Miller, testified that the list, from which Judge Horton had culled a venire of 100 names for the trial of Haywood Patterson, was made up last January and February and that it had not been tampered with or changed.

"I ask you to produce that list," said Mr. Leibowitz.

Jury Roll Offered in Evidence.

Mr. Tidwell sat stock still, darting puzzled looks first at Attorney General Knight and then at Judge Horton. Judge Horton said that the jury roll was in the custody of the Sheriff, and he directed that official to bring it into the court room. As soon as Mr. Tidwell had identified it, Mr. Leibowitz offered the document, which under the Alabama law is protected from public scrutiny, in evidence.

Mr. Knight objected on the ground that the jury roll was immaterial evidence, even though a study of it should disclose that there were no names of Negroes written on its pages. He argued that, since the commissioners held discretional powers, "which no one can go behind," the absence of Negroes from the list could not show an arbitrary misuse of power. Judge Horton, however, held the roll to be "proper evidence."

"You and your fellow-commissioners are required to place on that roll the names of all citizens who possess the qualifications prescribed by law—all citizens—isn't that true?"

Mr. Tidwell conceded that such was his understanding of the law.

"Now, isn't it a fact," demanded the New York defense attorney, "that all the names written in that book are names of white citizens?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Tidwell.

"Do you mean that for an honest answer?" shouted Mr. Leibowitz.

Tidwell Resents Question.

Mr. Tidwell swung around in his chair and seemed about to rise. Several onlookers in the first row of spectators leaned forward.

"Do you mean to say that I would swear falsely?" demanded the Jury Commissioner, color rising in his cheeks.

"I don't mean to say anything, I'm asking you a question," snapped the defense attorney with a rising voice.

The heated colloquy abated when Mr. Knight objected to the "badgering of this witness" and what he called an "attempt to grill him" on the operations of his mind. Judge Horton's calm voice quieted the brewing storm, and Mr. Leibowitz asked:

"Can you point to the name of any colored citizens on that page?"

The defense lawyer's finger was pointing to the first sheet in the book, and Mr. Tidwell bent forward to study it better.

"I don't know whether they are white, black or yellow," he insisted.

The witness then explained that many of the names were placed upon the rolls without any personal examination by him. There was no member of the commission, he declared, who could say from an inspection of the names which represented white citizens and which, if any, denoted Negroes.

Mr. Leibowitz interrupted his examination to ask that the Attorney General stipulate on the record that the rolls contained the names of only white men. This Mr. Knight refused to do, asserting that he regarded the whole line of inquiry as "immaterial, anyway."

Mr. Leibowitz explained that he made the request only in the interest of saving time in order that the trial of Patterson, which is being held up pending the outcome of the fight on the jury system, might proceed. Then he added:

"If you are going to put me to my proof, all right. It is my purpose and intention to prove that no Negro's name appears upon that jury roll, and I'll do it if it takes till doomsday. Go ahead."

Scrutiny of Roll Begun.

A little later Mr. Tidwell conceded that some persons whose names appeared on the roll were known to him, and under the direction of Mr. Leibowitz, he began a page-to-page scrutiny of the book, telling the color of those whose names were familiar to him. While this was going on, the judge left the bench, the lawyers gathered about the jury commissioner and the stenographer joined the huddle.

When court recessed until 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning Mr. Tidwell had failed to point to any Negroes on the roll, but there were many names which he alleged were unfamiliar to him. This evening the volume was being checked by defense attorneys in an effort to discover whether any of the Negroes, whom the defense holds to be qualified for jury duty, are included in the roll.

Tomorrow it is planned to call the other two jury commissioners to continue the process of elimination. When that is done, Mr. Liebowitz said, it is his intention to cause subpoenas to be issued for all those on the roll whose color remains in doubt, in order that there can be no doubt that no Negroes are included; then this court and those above it may decide whether their absence results from a recognized system of exclusion or mere coincidence.

Unofficial estimates placed the number of names upon the roll as between 2,000 and 2,500 and it was a question of some concern to residents of this State, already in such financial straits that it is threatened with a shutdown of its schools, how far Judge Horton would allow the defense to go. It was hoped that some compromise could be effected to shorten the proceedings, but Mr. Liebowitz was determined to complete his record and Mr. Knight was unwilling to surrender.

Negroes Called As "Qualified."

The Negroes whose qualifications for jury duty Mr. Liebowitz sought to prove in court were Dr. Frank S. Sykes, Dr. N. E. Cashin and Dr. N. M. Sykes, physicians; Hulett J. Banks, bill poster; the Rev. L. R. Womack, J. J. Sykes, motion picture exhibitor; W. G. Wilson, a lay preacher; J. D. Pickett, high school principal; Robert Bridgeforth, billiard hall proprietor; George H. Reynolds, undertaker, and Dr. Willis James Wood, dentist.

The testimony which these men gave differed only in minor details of personal experience. All had a wide acquaintance among the Negro population of the county and all were able and willing to name scores of other Negroes, who in their opinion were "esteemed in their community for their intelligence, good character and sound judgment." None of the men they named, the witnesses all said, could be disqualified because of their age, unsound mind or convictions for offenses involving moral turpitude.

Each of the witnesses declared he had never seen a Negro on a Morgan County jury. Objections from the State, upheld by Judge Horton, prevented each of the witnesses from answering the following hypothetical question propounded by Mr. Leibowitz:

"If it should be proved conclusively that the names of none of the Negroes you have named appear on the jury roll of this county, would you not be forced in all honesty to believe that they were excluded solely because they were members of the African race?"

In cross-examination, Mr. Knight drew admissions from each that he had no first-hand knowledge regarding the inclusion or exclusion of his name for jury duty. Each admitted also that, if his name were excluded, he could not name the specific reason for which it was barred by the jury commissioners.

Status As Voter Insufficient.

Mr. Leibowitz in re-direct examination of his witnesses, two of them veterans of the World War, one a former student of Phillips-Exeter Academy and Howard University and one a leader of the local Negro Civic League, established that none had ever been called upon to submit to examination on his qualifications. Several of the witnesses were voters who, Mr. Leibowitz maintained, had won the right to suffrage only by demonstrating their ability to interpret the Federal Constitution, but Judge Horton would not let them display their knowledge on this subject, holding that the qualifications of voters and jurors were different.

Dr. N. M. Sykes, who attended the University of Illinois, was asked by the prosecutor:

"Did you ever serve on a jury while you were in Illinois?"

"I was called, but didn't serve," was the answer.

Before ordering Mr. Leibowitz to submit proof of his charge that Negroes are systematically and arbitrarily barred from jury service, Judge Horton denied a motion by the defense to try all the defendants jointly, as they were indicted.

The day's proceedings concerned only Patterson, whose case is the only one thus far set down for trial. He was the only one of the nine defendants, two of whom will be tried in Juvenile Court, who was brought to the court room from the nearby jail. He sat through the proceedings, taking no part in them and showing little interest

One Negro Gets Horseshoe; Eight Prefer Rabbit's Foot

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 30.—G. W. Chamlee, Chattanooga attorney helping defend the prisoners in the Scottsboro case, presented Haywood Patterson, who is being tried first, with a horseshoe for luck at the opening of court today.

A rabbit's foot was presented earlier to each of Patterson's eight co-defendants in the county jail.

Mr. Chamlee explained that, in his conversations with the prisoners in jail yesterday, when the hearing was in recess, he had asked if there was anything they wanted especially. Eight of them said they would sleep easier at night if they had a rabbit's foot to stroke, but Patterson said he preferred to put his trust in a horseshoe.

Testimony Begins Today At Decatur Courthouse In Case Of Negro Youth

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

DECATUR, ALA., April [illegible]—Once within the shadow of the electric chair, Heywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga negro, tonight again faced trial with his life at stake as one of nine negroes indicted in the "Scottsboro attack case."

With his eight companions, Patterson was in the Morgan County Jail, less than a stone's throw from the courtroom in which his appearance tomorrow will attract world wide attention.

Less than five months ago the negro, with six of his companions, was confined in Kilby Prison at Montgomery under sentence of death which the U. S. Supreme Court set aside, ordering a new trial.

Unlike the previous trial, when he was defended by attorneys appointed by the court, the negro tomorrow will be flanked by four attorneys, three employed by the International Labor Defense, which for nearly two years has been active in the case, and a fourth who volunteered to defend them without cost.

Samuel S. Liebowitz, of New York chief of counsel, who is directing the defense, volunteered to defend the negroes on invitation of the I. L. D., but without remuneration. The attorneys associated with him are Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York; George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga; and T. C. Almon of Decatur.

On the opposite side of the courtroom, Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., represents the State, with T. E. Lawson, assistant attorney general, Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of the Ninth District, who prosecuted the negroes in Jackson Countyo two years ago, and Solicitors Wade Wright, of the Eighth District, assisting him.

As in the trials in Jackson County two years ago, in which the negroes were convicted and sentenced to death for an alleged attack on two white girls aboard a Southern Railway freight train, Patterson will be the first to face trials.

Atty. Gen. Knight, who asked a severance for Patterson, indicated the other six would be tried jointly. They are: Andy Wright, 19, and Clarence Norris, 19, both of Chattanooga; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 19, both of Atlanta; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga., and Willie Roberson, 19, of Columbus, Ga.

Liebowitz who sought trial of all seven at once, has indicated that, since Patterson was granted a severance, he also might seek separate trials for the other six. If each is tried separately, the trials undoubtedly will continue into the next week.

The court has the question of the age of the other two negroes, Roy Wright 16, and Eugene Williams, 16, both of Chattanooga, to determine before any disposition may be made of their cases

Wright was given [illegible] two years ago and Williams's death sentence was reversed by the Alabama Supreme Court because of the question of his age.

Under Alabama laws, a juvenile must first be brought before a juvenile court which, at its discretion, can place him in the jurisdiction of a circuit court for trial. Both gave their ages as 14 when arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., two years ago and charged with attacking the girls.

The first trials of the negroes charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Miss Ruby Bates aboard a freight train on which they were "hoboing" their way to Huntsville from Chattanooga were held in Scottsboro, from which the trials have taken their name "Scottsboro case."

Only four weeks ago, Judge A. E. Hawkins, probably the first judge in Alabama to sentence eight men to death simultaneously for the same offense, granted a change of venue to Morgan County on allegations by the defense that they could not be given a fair trial in Jackson County.

Mrs. Price was ready tonight to take the stand as the principal witness for the State, but the Bates girl, wso disappeared on Feb. 27, 1933, still was the object of a widespread search.

Approximately 35 witnesses have been called to testify, but whether each side would use all the persons they have subpoensed to testify was a matter of speculation.

Except for the presence of national guardsmen around the jail where the negroes were confined, Decatur today was as quiet as any other bustling North Alabama city

Citizens of the city for the most part have remained away from the courthouse during the time motions to quash the venire and the indictments were argued. Outsiders from the rural sections, and even distant States, have filled the courtroom to capacity, however, each day as the defense argued absence of negroes from Alabama juries deprived the defendants of their constitutional rights.

Both of these motions were denied by Judge James E. Horton, presiding, and a jury was empanelled late Friday for the Patterson trial on charge of attacking Mrs. Price.

The jurors spent yesterday and today in custody of bailiffs waiting the opening of court tomorrow, when the actual trial begins.

What Scottsboro Means To America

SOME of our readers may already be weary of the Scottsboro case, now being retried at Decatur, Alabama, because so much has been written and printed about it and the public [illegible] tired of even great human questions with [illegible] Scottsboro case — involving the fate of nine Negro boys accused of a capital crime about which there are strong elements of doubt — means more than the ordinary criminal court trial. It means more than just acquittal or conviction of those nine defendants. It means more than the vindication of Alabama's course in hurrying the boys on to the electric chair under the pressure of inflamed public opinion.

Upon the outcome of the Scottsboro case depends whether Negroes accused in the South shall have fair and impartial trials; whether they shall have the benefit of proper counsel and whether this counsel shall have a full opportunity to defend them; whether the Negro shall have a right to be tried by a jury of his peers—the right to serve on juries; whether in the estimation of those having in their hands the fate of all Negroes accused of crime a Negro is ever competent to serve on a jury; whether after all the infamous Dred Scott decision is dead or yet alive. All of these constitutional questions, these questions of procedure and of policy will be thrashed out in the trial of the Scottsboro boys. In addition to the very natural interest which attaches to the outcome as far as the boys themselves are concerned, there is the larger interest aroused on account of the fundamental questions of the law and the constitution which are involved. The Scottsboro Case has a large meaning for America.

The Verdict in the Scottsboro Case

If the Scottsboro case is to become historical, whatever may be the ultimate fate of the accused Negroes, the charge of Judge James E. Horton to the jury will always stand out as the act of a brave man and an American of the purest type.

While at a distance it seemed the Communist agitation worked almost as strongly as race prejudice against Heywood Patterson, higher courts will have to decide the justice of the verdict. Nevertheless it was apparent that throughout the trial there hung over the courtroom the threat of lynch law should there be an acquittal.

We of the North cannot appreciate the social phases of that Alabama trial, nor the character and intensity of feeling engendered by it. In the face of this, Judge Horton, a Southerner in every fibre, pleaded for tolerance, human rights and justice with an eloquence born of love of country.

"On both sides," said Judge Horton toward the close of his charge, "as far back as I know, my people have always been a Southern people, and I have no desire to live anywhere else. I am getting old, and it is my home, my native land, and I want to see righteousness done and justice done...It seems sometimes as though love has deserted the human bosom and hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because in the great things in life it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies. Truth forever lasts. We should have faith in that."

The verdict of guilty may not have been just. But the condemned man had a fair trial so far as it lay in the power of one great and fine human being to give one.

TammanyFrameNegro to 25 Years in Local Scottsboro Case

Daily Worker
4-24-33
New York N.Y.

NEW YORK.—A local "Scottsboro," the kind of Negro oppression here in New York that many who thunder their "concern" for the Scottsboro boy,s remain silent on; the case of Edward Griffin, has also found the revolutionary workers of New York napping. The Daily Worker prints the fa[illegible] to Party sections not to lose sight of the fact that there are daily acts of Negro oppression which we must fight if we are to prove our leadership to the Negro masses.

Edward Griffin, 18, of 183 Mckibben St., was sentenced Wednesday April 12, to 10 to 15 years for manslaughter and 5 to 10 years for carrying [illegible]. Griffin was accused of slaying Benjamin Salite, 202 Varet St., on Dec. 3 of last year. A cap was found on the body of the slain man with the initials of the owner and the name of the store from which it was purchased. the initials were not those of Griffin.

The police interviewed the store in which the hat was sold. The storekeeper claimed to know who had bought the hat. He "identified" Griffin. This was a store in Griffin's neighborhood and the storekeeper would not have to put other initials in the hat if it had been Griffin who purchased it, since he claimed to know Griffin. Griffin was at the funeral of an aunt at the time of the crime.

The facts are clear. The Daily Worker printed the story months ago. The ILD issued a statement that the case was a frame-up. The court made it impossible for anyone to see Griffin except the Tammany lawyer who got $1,000 whether Griffin got the death chair or went free. Despite this information being published in the Daily Worker, the section in which the case occurred did not carry on a wide protest activity for Griffin, linking his case with Scottsboro and the local struggles.

Here and There

The Scottsboro case has about engaged the attention of the entire country and of course every reader of the papers was looking to see what the verdict would be in the recent trial of one of the accused boys. Nearly all the comments upon the outcome heard by this [illegible] were [illegible] that the verdict was no surprise. Well, I confess I was surprised because I cannot see for the life of me how any jury would convict one who had been exonerated of a crime by one of the plaintiffs. There could not help but be some element of doubt. Why believe one woman more than the other? The fact that the one who had elected to change her testimony had been to New York and had had a conference with one of the greatest preachers in America surely would not ordinarily influence a jury of intelligent men to believe that she was influenced by money to change her testimony. It is altogether too plain a case of race prejudice and hatred dictating a verdict of guilty in the face of the charge of the judge that the defendant must be believed to be guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt. The case of the next defendant has been postponed because of the alleged criticism uttered by the chief counsel for the accused. The judge avers that this counsel would be a veritable millstone around the neck of the accused and hence a fair trial could not be held at this time. I doubt very much whether time will have anything to do with making this any different. The long time that has elapsed since the first trial did not seem to have any effect. An impartial jury could not have given a verdict of guilty in the face of the vidence submitted in this recent trial. But the people of the South may as well admit now that a colored man has little chance of an unbiased verdict where he is accused of a crime against a white person unless there are some people of his own color on the jury since color seems to be a part of his crime. In some cases he can secure justice if the person against whom he commits a crime is also colored. And there have been cases where this was not even true because the jury had a higher regard for one colored man than the other. In other words it is difficult for one colored man to get justice when he is accused of a crime against what is sometimes called "a white man's Negro." Of course the last word is not really the one used but simply the translation of that ugly epithet usually applied to folk of color. I would say again it would be a fine thing if a white person could wake up some morning and find himself changed into a colored man and have the experiences of such a one for a year or so. I do not doubt but that he would [illegible] change his entire racial attitude. I would not like to see him continue throughout the remainder of his life as colored because that would seem like vindictiveness; for the remainder of his life would be a veritable hell on earth especially if he were unfortunate enough to have high ideals. The colored man of ambition and education suffers intensely because it seems that no account is taken of his efforts to make himself a good citizen of the republic.

Political, Fraternal, Religious Groups Form Conference to Aid Condemned Negroes.

MARCH TO CAPITAL APRIL 28

New York

Benjamin Davis Heads Group, With Heywood Broun and William Patterson Aides.

Representatives of political, fraternal and religious groups interested in obtaining the acquittal of the nine defendants in the Scottsboro case, joined forces yesterday afternoon and formed the Scottsboro Unity Defense Conference, at a meeting at the Harlem Masonic Temple, 310 Lenox Avenue. About 250, both Negro and white, attended.

The principal aim of the conference, as voiced by Heywood Broun of the Socialist party, is to create favorable opinion among all classes for the release of the Scottsboro defendants. After that, he added, the conference should work for "the freedom of the Negro race in the South."

Friday, April 28, was set tentatively as the date on which the march to Washington to protest the alleged violation of certain constitutional rights of the defendants in the case, will start. Those participating hope to petition President Roosevelt to take immediate steps "to guarantee the Scottsboro boys and the Negro people full constitutional rights."

The march will be under the auspices of the Scottsboro Unity Defense Conference, the International Labor Defense, the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners, and supporting organizations. These groups are working now to obtain 1,000,000 signatures protesting the recent conviction of Haywo[illegible] [illegible]rson, the first of the defendants to be retried, to present with their petition to the President.

Congress also will be urged to pass a bill providing for immediate and strict enforcement in the South of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution.

The speakers at yesterday's meeting emphasized the march must be a peaceful one and that no disorder of any kind will be tolerated by the sponsoring organizations.

Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, also spoke at the meeting. Among the other speakers were John Brown, of the Tom Mooney Molders Defense Committee; A. J. Muste, head of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, and John Gerber, of the same organization, all white men, and the following Negroes: Benjamin Davis, Atlanta, lawyer; William Patterson, of the Labor Defense; Bishop Collins, of the Samaritan Rescue Episcopal Synod; Edwin Welsh, of the Harlem Interracial Forum; Adrian Johnson, secretary of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, and James Ford, 1932 vice presidential candidate of the Communist party.

Mr. Davis was elected chairman of the conference, Mr. Broun and Mr. Patterson, vice chairman, and Miss Louise Thompson, assistant secretary of the National Conference for the Defense of Political Prisoners, secretary.

Judge Says Leibowitz Criticism of Jury Makes Fair Trial Now Impossible.

SENTENCES NEGRO TO DIE

DEFENSE WILL 'CARRY ON'

Attorney General Scores New York Lawyer Who, Here, Reiterates Bigotry Charges.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 17.—Judge James E. Horton sentenced one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes to death today in accordance with the finding of a jury which found him guilty of attacking a white girl two years ago and postponed the trial of his eight co-defendants indefinitely.

In doing so, Judge Horton declared that statements issued by opposing counsel since Palm Sunday when the jury convicted Haywood Patterson, the first of the Negroes to be retried in accordance with a United States Supreme Court order, made an impartial trial here and now impossible.

Some time between now and July 6, when the next regular term of court opens, defense counsel, who already have obtained a change of venue from Jackson County, where the alleged crime was committed, will move once more for a transfer of the case to Mobile or Birming[illegible]

[illegible] week ago last Sunday, [illegible] jury considering Patter[illegible] reported, driblets of in[illegible]on regarding the activities [illegible]uel S. Leibowitz, chief of de[illegible] counsel, have been trickling [illegible] Decatur. Persons here have read that he has addressed meetings of Negroes in Harlem churches and that colored women have embraced him in New York.

This has prejudiced the populace against him and this morning, when Joseph Brodsky, International Labor Defense lawyer, declared that Mr. Leibowitz believed in social and economic equality between black and white, there was a tense situation in the courtroom, relieved only by Judge Horton's hasty adjournment of the proceedings.

Death Sentence Mandatory.

The session opened with Judge Horton on the bench ready to pronounce sentence upon Patterson, who was found guilty a second time and condemned to death by the jury after the United States Supreme Court held that his first trial was unfair. The verdict of the jury left Judge Horton no choice, since under the Alabama law the jury has the power to fix punishment as well as decide the guilt or innocence of the accused.

Patterson, escorted into the court room by National Guardsmen, leaned upon the bench, his eyes focused upon a corner of the court room remote from Judge Horton. When the court asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was pronounced, he said:

"I ain't had a fair trial. Ain't seen no girls on that train. I ain't had a fair trial."

Judge Horton, unperturbed by the Negro's statement, outwardly at least, informed him that the jury which convicted him had decided otherwise and said that it was the judgment of the court that he should die in the electric chair at Kilby Prison on June 16.

Mr. Brodsky then filed notice of appeal and offered a "skeleton motion" for a new trial. Judge Horton said that he would not hear motions "piecemeal" and called the trial of Charlie Weems, for which 100 veniremen had been summoned. Before anything could happen, however, Judge Horton read a statement from the bench.

Judge Horton's Statement.

"Gentlemen, there has been set for trial this morning the case of the State vs. Charlie Weems," Judge Horton said. "This is the second of what are known as the 'Scottsboro cases.' Something over a week ago the case of the State vs. Haywood Patterson was tried by a jury of this county. The nature of these cases, being a case where a Negro is accused of the rape of a white woman, is such as would naturally excite resentment, and it is always difficult, even under the most favorable circumstances, to obtain a fair and impartial verdict.

"The law has always recognized in cases of rape, whether committed by one on a person of their own [illegible] for [illegible] r, and it enjoins upon the court to see to it that this undue influence is removed so far as the court may be able to do.

"There is a great deal of misinformation in the minds of the public generally in regard to rape cases in the South. I have been on the bench for over twelve years; more than ten of these years among my duties has been the trial of criminal cases. The district which I now serve is composed of four counties lying on both sides of the Tennessee River, and the counties contain a mixed population. Formerly Madison County was also in this district, and it is one of the larger and more populous counties of the State, and it also contained a great number of Negroes.

Recalls Previous Cases.

"During this period I have had only three cases where a Negro was accused of an attack upon a white woman. Two of the indictments were for rape, and one was for an assault with intent to rape. This assault with intent to rape occurred within Limestone County, the county of my residence. This was a case where a young Northern girl, unsophisticated, and who was making a long trip for the first time, went aboard an L. & N. train at Cincinnati to come South. There was a Negro porter on that train. As the train entered Limestone County the porter followed her into the dressing room, and tried to take liberties with her. Her screams caused him to desist and brought help. He was tried and convicted.

"The other cases were tried in this the county of Morgan. In one of these cases a woman accused a negro of committing rape upon her, and the trial was had before a jury. During the taking of the evidence many facts casting doubt upon the guilt of the accused were introduced, and after the case went to the jury a former solicitor, Daven Almon, a man with a big heart, who now sleeps in your city cemetery, came to me and told me that some things he had heard convinced him of the innocence of the accused, and he was much disturbed lest the jury convict. The jury stood eight for acquittal and four for conviction. Afterward upon the motion of the same solicitor, the case was dismissed.

Holds Ideas of South Erroneous.

"There was another case in this court. I will not go into details, but the evidence was of such a nature that the innocence of the accused appeared certain and the unwholesome case was thrown out of court. I live in the county of Limestone, across the river from this city, and that county has between 30,000 and 35,000 population, about one-third of whom are Negroes. That county has contained a mixed population 115 years.

"During that entire period, except for the one instance I have cited to you that occurred on the L. & N. train, the parties to which were residents of far-distant States, there has not been a single instance, so far as my information goes, and so far as I have been able to find out from diligent inquiry, of either rape or an attempted rape by the fac[illegible] sufficient to [illegible] the egregiously erroneous [illegible] which exist in regard to the relations of the races in the South, and that conviction follows accusation.

"On account of certain influences, many of which to this court appear sinister and are actuated by a desire to stir up and foment strife between the races in the South, it has been difficult to try what are known as the Scottsboro cases upon the real facts. I am not now passing judgment upon the verdict in the case already tried. I know the court had great difficulty in preventing extraneous influences having some effect on the jury. With these influences still existing, with the public mind still disturbed, with thousands of true and deeply patriotic citizens desiring that justice be done and that the South appear in its true light, there has come to my attention a statement published, which to my mind makes it impossible at the present time to fulfill the high purpose of a court of justice.

Defense Counsel's Statement Cited.

"I do not know whether the leading counsel for the defendant made the statement imputed to him. I am not stating that he did, but so far as it might influence this trial it could make little difference whether he actually made it or not. The effect will be the same. The published statement was uncalled for. It was addressed to a panel of highly intelligent jurors, and men who wished to do what was right in the case.

"But the statement itself must of necessity make impossible any just and impartial verdict to be arrived at at this time. The accused Negro must be the victim of this statement. His leading attorney would be a millstone about his neck.

"It therefore becomes the unquestioned duty of this court at the present time to enter of its own motion a continuance of this case until such a time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had. Therefore the case of the State of Alabama vs. Charlie Weems is continued, and the court so orders."

Judge Horton also deplored a statement attributed to the Attorney General which was published in a Decatur newspaper. This, he said "contributed to the already heated atmosphere which surrounds this case."

Knight Protests "Slur."

As soon as Judge Horton had finished, Attorney General Knight was on his feet. He said that he could not sit idly by and hear an Alabama jury maligned.

"No," said he, "the people of Jackson and Morgan Counties—of Alabama are not bigots. Jackson County and the people of Morgan County—of the South have been and will be fair. I have no apologies to make for any statement I have made."

The statement to which Judge Horton referred and over which all Morgan County is steaming is the one Mr. Leibowitz [illegible]ade immediately after the verdict of guilty was returned. He said nothing else could be expected of twelve men swayed by considerations of race prejudice after Wade Wright, Cir

Negro upon a white woman.

"I think th[illegible] reflection of [illegible] justice [illegible] Alabama."

After Mr. Leibowitz's statement was published in newspapers of Alabama, Attorney General Knight said:

"A statement in The New York Herald Tribune quoting Samuel Leibowitz as reflecting upon the people of Morgan County and members of the Haywood Paterson jury has been called to my attention.

"Leibowitz is quoted as stating, when asked how the jury could find the verdict it did, that 'if you ever saw those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"If this statement was made by Leibowitz it can be taken only as a wail of a contemptible loser, particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies.

"I was very glad, indeed, that Leibowitz's insincere flattery of the court, myself and the jury could not swerve the jury from a just verdict in this case when they believed, as I do, that Haywood Patterson was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

Patterson and Weems, brought here from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, where they and their fellow defendants are imprisoned for safekeeping, were taken back there tonight under heavy guard.

After they had gone, and the National Guardsmen on duty here had been dispersed, a fiery cross was burned on the viaduct over the Southern Railroad tracks. Alec Brazelton, night Police Chief, said investigation disclosed that the cross was set off by two Negroes, unknown here, who jumped into an automobile and drove away.

Leibowitz Reiterates Charges.

"The millstone around the necks of the Scottsboro boys is that Alabama attitude which made twelve Decatur jurors guffaw as they push Haywood Patterson toward the electric chair," he stated. "It is a piece with the action of Attorney General Knight in gleefully clapping his hands during the trial and in calling a defendant made in the image and likeness of God 'that thing.'

"I respect Judge Horton and the fair-minded people of the State who are willing to extend to their colored fellow-citizens the protection of the law which we take as a thing for granted in New York. As for the rest, the baying pack, the wolves of bigotry, who raised the Hitler cry of 'Jew money from New York' because we dared to demand a square deal for a poor unfortunate whose skin was black, I stand pat. They are bigots. Their very faces do betoken it.

"We have fought the good fight. We have kept the faith and we will carry on. 'The nine innocent Scottsboro boys will not die so long [illegible] your land.'"

Mr. Leibowitz had just boarded a train en route for Decatur when word of the postponement was received at his office. A telegram was dispatched to the train and he got off at Manhattan Transfer and returned to this city.

Rabbi Alexander Lyons of the Eighth Avenue Temple, Brooklyn, himself a Southerner, asserted in a formal statement that it was impossible for Patterson to have obtained a fair trial in view of the "atmosphere of prejudice and antagonism" which obtained at Decatur.

"The decision at this late day of the presiding judge to postpone the trial indefinitely is to me a confession of weakness," he said. "It implies an acknowledgment of an atmospheric condition where justice could not obtain. Mr. Leibowitz may have contributed to this by his remarks. If he did he simply reacted naturally to a situation which prevailed."

WHAT'S HAPPENING in ALABAMA

by PERCY TAYLOR

The coming week will see the second of the Scottsboro case trials get under way at Decatur and on April 25 there will be brought to trial at Dadeville five Negroes charged with assault with intent to murder in connection with the racial disorders of Tallapoosa County last December. Behind both trials are the forces of Communism with the International Labor Defense supplying defense attorneys.

The attack against Alabama's jury system, argued for a week at Decatur, will be renewed at the second Scottsboro trial and at the Dadeville trials. In both instances the defense allegations are the same—that jury commissions of Alabama have systematically excluded Negroes from the jury rolls because of their race and color. The United States Supreme Court has held that a Negro is not deprived of a fair trial simply because there is no Negro on his jury, but the question of systematic exclusion because of race is another question. The trial of Charlie Weems, beginning at Decatur Monday, will probably be ended by the close of the week and further trials there are likely to be halted for the time being. This will shift interest on this question to Dadeville where proceedings in some phases may transcend in importance the Scottsboro trials. Convictions in the Scottsboro cases will be appealed. They will again be carried to the United States Supreme Court if necessary, defense attorneys avow. This means that it will be a long time before Alabama will find itself rid of this unfortunate affair.

Negro Found Guilty, Condemned to Die In Scottsboro Case

DEFENSE SHOCKED

Retrial of Second Defendant to Begin Next Monday.

By CARTER BROOKE JONES,
Universal Service Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9.—An Alabama jury brought in a verdict of guilty today in the case of Haywood Patterson, first of seven Negroes granted a retrial by the United States Supreme Court, on a charge of attacking two white girls.

The penalty again was fixed at death. The Southern jury deliberated twenty-one hours.

The verdict came as shock to Defense Counsel, headed by Samuel Leibowitz of New York, who had been confident of an acquittal after the surprise testimony of Ruby Bates, one of the two alleged victims. She repudiated her statements at the original trial, denying that either she or the other young woman, Mrs. Victoria Price, had been attacked by the negroes.

PLANS APPEAL.

Immediately after the verdict Leibowitz, whose entrance into the [illegible] has aroused resentment in this little Alabama town, announced his intention of carrying an appeal to the United States Supreme Court again he said:

"This is another black chapter in American justice. It is a triumph of bigotry. It means that because a man's skin is black he can be convicted to death by smirking hypocrisy, no matter what the evidence may be."

The young negro evidenced little concern as he heard the jury foreman pronounce the words which doomed him for the second time to death.

He smiled broadly and shrugged before he was led from the courtroom, to be taken back to the jail at Birmingham, where his six companions are held.

TOOK THREE BALLOTS.

Under the Alabama law the jury could have fixed the penalty at anything from ten years imprisonment to life, or death.

It was learned that the jury took only three ballots. The jurrors agreed on a verdict of guilty at the first ballot and the argument was over the question of the penalty. The second ballot was 11 to 1 for the death penalty and the third was unanimous.

There was no demonstration at the verdict, and the Sunday calm of the sleepy little Southern town was unbroken.

Today's verdict climaxes a two-year fight against the convection and sentencing to death of the negroes, first tried in Scottsboro, Ala.

2ND TRIAL NEXT WEEK.

The International Labor Defense, championing the "Scottsboro boys," took the fight to the highest court, where the original verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered for each of the

The retrial of the second Negro of the group, Charlie Weems, is scheduled to open a week from tomorrow.

The trial of Patterson began last Monday, after a feek of arguments on preliminary motions. The defense sought to quash the indictment on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the jury panels. This is expected to be one of the main issues in the attempt to have the Supreme Court review the case again.

MOB DANGER GROWING IN DECATUR; WHITE RULERS RESENT "NEGRO ISSUE"

Pick All-White Jury for Haywood Patterson Trial; Scottsboro Lynch Gang Formed

Decatur Police Arrest 5 for Aiding Defense; Negroes Support I.L.D. Fight

(By Special Correspondent)

DECATUR, Ala., April 2.—The tension which has existed during the past week in this little Southern town is gradually breaking through the illusory peaceful exterior which has prevailed here.

With a jury picked to try Haywood Patterson, first of the innocent Negro Scottsboro boys to be tried, the state is expected to begin the presentation of its case Monday morning. The defense, on the other hand, is marshaling its evidence to tear to shreds the frame-up case which Prosecutor Knight is building in an effort to send the Negro boys to the electric chair.

The superficially easy-going, languid atmosphere which for a time lulled some into a sense of false security is rapidly passing. Rumblings are beginning to reveal a volcano which, if it erupts, will set fire to the accumulated passions and prejudices engendered by the Southern white ruling class.

Floodlights Over Jail.

On Saturday night five floodlights illuminated the little Decatur jail with extra guardsmen around it—indicating the growing tension which has arisen as a result of the bold fight being made by the International Labor Defense on the question of Negroes on jury—an issue which brought out into the open the whole system of national oppression of the Negroes in the South.

Officials announce that when court opens in the morning everyone entering will be searched for weapons.

All-White Jury.

Alabama legal procedure resulted in swift "selection" of the jury. Following a hasty examination of 100 prospective jurymen by the judge for general "qualifications," they are turned over to the attorneys for the state and defense. First the prosecution struck off one name, then the defense eliminated two until 12 were left. This constituted the jury, and this method left, of course, little opportunity for the defense to guage the nature of the jurors.

One out of three veniremen on examination admitted prejudice and stated a conviction that the evidence could not change his opinion. These were dismissed.

The all-white jury and the occupations they gave are as follows: Eugene Bailey, Jr., draftsman, of Decatur; John J. Bryant, farmer, of Falkville; Eddie Edwards, hosiery mill worker, of Decatur; William L. Grimes, bookkeeper, of Decatur; Robert L. Lander, unemployed, of Decatur; James F. Steward, Jr., merchant, of Hartselle; G. Forman Wallace, farmer, of Danville; Irwin Craig barber, of Decatur; Cecil B. Crawford, farmer, of Joppa; John Davis, bookkeeper, of Decatur; Eugene E. Graves, bank cashier, Decatur; Robert L. Kitchens, automobile salesman, of Decatur.

Judge Admits Mob Danger.

The undisguised prejudice of the veniremen was shown when, during the questioning by Leibowitz, a prospective juror arose and objected heatedly, declaring: "We are not accustomed here to choose jurors that way."

The first official admission of the danger of mob action was made by Judge Horton when, in addressing the jury following their selection, said: "The citizens know their duty is to abide by the decision of the court. There is no other way to enjoy liberty. It would be a blot on any of you to let anything, any action of yours, mar the course of justice."

Feeling Running High.

Feeling in Jackson County, where Scottsboro is located, is running high with resentment growing due to the mounting cost of the trial which this county—and not Morgan County, where the trial is being held—must bear. Characteristic sentiment among Jackson County residents who are bitter at the prospect of a long, drawn-out trial is: "We should have strung up those niggers long ago."

Especially after the heated arguments in the court on the issue pressed by the defense showing systematic and deliberate exclusion of Negroes from Morgan County juries, Leibowitz, I. L. D. attorney, was called a "Russian Jew Nigger who ought to be hung."

Scottsboro Mob Formed.

Further evidence of the sinister forces growing which endanger the lives of the Scottsboro boys is seen in the fact that immediately after Judge Horton on Friday over-ruled the defense motion to quash the venire of white jurors, an organized crowd of 50 left Scottsboro following their declaration that they would come back "about the middle of the week," thus revealing the extreme danger of extra-legal action in the vent that Haywood Patterson is acquitted.

Photographers hired by the defense to take pictures in Paint Rock, Jackson County, the scene of the arrest of the Scottsboro boys, were threatened by a menacing crowd. In Decatur "poor whites," steeped in decades of vicious prejudice against the Negro—as a result of ruling class propaganda—declared: "If they don't burn we'll string 'em up. They'll never get out alive."

Following the receipt by defense attorney Leibowitz of threatening letters, and as a result of verbal threats muttered in the courtroom, Judge Horton placed seven members of the national guard and plain clothes men before the apartment in which Leibowitz is living, but the atorney requested that the guard be removed.

Negroes Back Defense.

Negro leaders of the community, as well as the Negro masses, are responding enthusiastically to the issue of the right of Negroes to serve on juries, and Negro witnesses remain unmolested due to the world-wide attention which the Scottsboro case is receiving.

One locally prominent Negro declared: "If a mob comes from the outside to try to attack the boys they won't have it so easy." Another said: "If the Reds are responsible for all this, I'm with the Reds."

Despite the efforts of the leading whites to influence the Negro Ministers' Alliance here, many are openly sympathetic to the defense, and state so in their churches.

Friday night, William A. Christol, a Negro bearing credentials from the Birmingham I. L. D.; Muriel Rukeyser, a member of the National Student League who is writing about the trial for the National Student Review; two other white workers and one Negro, were arrested and held four hours by the police, who later released them after confiscating their personal papers. They were ordered to appear before Judge Horton tomorrow morning. Christol, who was authorized to raise funds for the Scottsboro case, declared that he will appear in court.

Defense Moves.

Two moves to be made by the defense in proving that the nine Scottsboro Negro boys are absolutely innocent of the charges against them, and that these charges were framed, have been revealed by the I. L. D.

An important exhibit in the case it was stated, will be a miniature train, a replica of the now famous freight from which the nine boys and two girls were taken by a sheriff's posse in April, 1931. Using this miniature, the defense will prove that it was impossible for any such attack as is charged by the state to be made, and that the movements of the boys over the train as described by prosecution witnesses were impossible.

It will be proved by this replica also that the testimony of witnesses at the first trial, who claimed they saw the "attack" from such various points as haystacks and farm roofs along the right-of-way, must be false since it was impossible for them to view portions of the train they claim they looked into.

Another important move by the defense will be the introduction of medical evidence which will prove the impossibility of the stories told by the two girls, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, at the original trial about the mythical "attack."

Four-Hour Quiz Fails To Shake Attack Victim's Story

DECATUR, ALA., April 3.—(AP)—Under a lengthy cross-examination, Mrs. Victoria Price, 23, of Huntsville, Ala., today clung to her story that six negroes attacked her aboard a freight train two years ago, and that Heywood Patterson, one of nine indicted in the "Scottsboro attack case" was one of the six.

Montgomery

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York chief of counsel, supplied by the International Labor Defense to defend the negroes, led the woman through a maze of details covering a three-day period culminating in the attack.

Advertiser

Just before Mrs. Price left the stand after nearly four hours of questioning, Leibowitz introduced as an exhibit the record of the other trials in Jackson County two years ago in which Patterson and seven others were convicted and sentenced to death.

4-4-33

Introduction of the record was not objected to by Atty. Gen. Knight, directing the prosecution, who insisted immediately that it be marked as an exhibit.

Montgomery, Ala.

Calm through the recitation of sordid details of the attack on direct examination, Mrs. Price frequently displayed flashes of temper as she [illegible] negative answers to Leibowitz's questions.

While the long questioning went forward, Patterson, flanked by National Guardsmen, sat stolidly behind the defense counsel table.

Examination of Mrs. Price was interrupted to permit R. S. Turner, of Sheffield, conductor of the freight train on which the attacks were purported to have taken place, to testify.

As Turner called off the location of various types of cars Leibowitz assembled a miniature train on a table before the jury. The train assembled with its brightly colored cars looked like a circus train just out of Winter quarters for the Summer tour.

Frequent clashes between Leibowitz and Atty. Gen. Knight interrupted the cross-examination of Mrs. Price in which her veracity and general reputation were subjected to a search.

Twice Judge James E. Horton warned the attorneys that objections must be directed to the court and not to each other personally.

On direct examination, Mrs. Price said she and Ruby Bates had gone to Chattanooga aboard a freight train to seek work, but failing, had begun the return journey the following day on a freight.

They started on a tank car, but at Stevenson, Ala., moved to a gondola car, half filled with chert. As the train pulled away from the water tank at Stevenson, she said, seven white youths piled into the opposite end of the car from her and her companion.

"Five or 10 minutes" out of Stevenson, she said, 12 negroes came running over the top of box cars and jumped into the gondola.

"Heywood Patterson was one of them and he carried a pistol which he fired over the top once or twice," she testified. In the fight that followed, she said, six of the seven white boys were knocked from the car. Orrville Gilley, she said, was the seventh youth and he remained, because he was afraid he would be killed if he jumped, and said "I'll stay here and be killed with these girls."

In a clear voice but with eyes downcast. she told a gruesome story of the happenings after the youths were forced from the train.

The spectators leaned forward as she related her story.

When the train halted at Paint Rock, where nine of the 12 negroes were taken into custody, Mrs. Price said she climbed from the gondola but collapsed unconscious as she reached the ground.

"I didn't know nothing more until I woke up in a grocery store at Paint Rock." she said.

Leibowitz opened his cross-examination seeking to have Mrs. Price identify cars of the miniature train as similar to those making up the freight on which she averred she was attacked.

"Them are toys and don't look like the train we rode," she said.

The first show of temper came from the witness as Leibowitz persisted in his questions as to whether she bit, scratched or kicked any of the negroes, and raised her voice to reply "I don't know. I won't say. I just fought."

A cross-examination of minute details as to her struggles during the alleged attacks was begun by Leibowitz and once the witness, with eyes flashing and lips drawn tight shouted "I answered you four times."

Frequently throughout the three-hour cross-examination the witness protested she was not educated and that Leibowitz was talking too fast. "I ain't got no education." she said.

A long question was put to Mrs. Price concerning her alleged actions the night before she and Ruby Bates left for Chattanooga to seek work.

"That's some of Ruby's dope," she retorted.

"Ruby who?" Leibowitz asked.

"Ruby Bates and where is she?" shouted Knight as he rose from the State counsel table.

"Didn't you concoct this story after the negroes were arrested in Paint Rock because you feared you would be arrested for vagrancy?" Leibowitz shot at her suddenly near the end of his examination. The witness was not permitted to reply. Just before leaving the stand she identified photos of herself, Ruby Bates, and the latter with a negro.

Conductor Turner told of finding a snuff box in one of the eight "chert" cars near the front of the train and that a pistol also had been found. Evidence on the pistol was ruled out when it was proven hearsay.

Roscoe Allen, a member of the train crew now on vacation, found the pistol, Turner said on cross-examination.

The examination of Turner was brief. Under redirect examination Mrs. Price told of oaths the negroes used as they piled into the car and a knife she identified as one held at her throat was identified as evidence.

Dr. R. R. Bridges, of Paint Rock, who examined the two girls after they were taken from the train at Paint Rock, said that neither woman was hysterical at the time, but the following day appeared nervous.

Leibowitz cross-examined him on the technical phases and the court also questioned the physician.

The Scottsboro Trials

America rather than the [illegible] Negro boys who were arraigned in Decatur, Alabama, on Monday last is on trial. The fate of these unfortunates, as important as this is, is but an incident in the mighty issues underlying those cases which have attracted the attention of the civilized world. Can the Negro get justice in the prejudiced-ridden, intolerant Southland? Is there any chance of civilizing its barbarous people who rule the section? These are the important questions as the trials proceed.

Only a confirmed optimist after following the incidents of the first two days of the trial will answer the questions in the affirmative. The verdict will again decree a massacre, unless all present signs fail and again give the lie to America's profession to justice, equality and fair play.

The world must look to the Supreme Court of the United States to act summarily and dismiss the cases. It is the only hope of escape from the disgraces continually heaped upon the country by an unregenerated and shameful section.

SCOTTSBORO LYNCHING THREAT CALLS TROOPS

By TOM CASSIDY.
(Staff Correspondent of The News)

DECATUR, Ala., April 5.—This mill city was an armed camp tonight as an impassioned speech by the presiding Judge in the famous Scottsboro case trial decreed death for mobs who have just threatened to lynch the seven prisoners and ride out of town on a rail Samuel S. Leibowitz, New New York attorney.

Machine guns were ordered placed on the roofs of apartments where the defense counsel and newspapermen reside and two extra companies of militiamen have been ordered ready for duty as the result of mass meetings of citizens held secretly late Tuesday night and early this morning.

Judge Dismisses Jury.

The voice of Judge James E Horton, presiding in the retrial of the seven Scottsboro colored youths charged with assaulting two white girls on a train two years ago, quavered with emotion as he halted the trial to take cognizance of the situation reported to him by National Guard officials.

"The Court wishes to make an announcement," the fair and Lincolnesque Justice declared, after ordering the jury from the room. "It is known that these prisoners had protection at the former Scottsboro trial, and the Sheriff's force and the National Guardsmen are to protect them now.

"The Court also wants it known that it will protect any one else connected with this trial. Whether or not the reports of impending trouble have any foundation, the Court does not know. But sometimes rumors reach the point where notice must be taken of them."

Here the jurist paused for effect, and then raised his usually easy drawl to a high pitch.

Calls Lynchers Murderers.

"Any group of men—and I don't say there are such," Judge Horton continued, "who attempt to take the law into their own hands, are unworthy of the protection of the State of Alabama. Men who would join in anything that would cause the death of these negroes are not only murderers but cowardly murderers.

"I haven't any tolerance for mob spirit. Your very civilization depends upon the carrying out of your laws in an orderly manner. I am going to strengthen the guard if necessary, and remember (this latter is almost a shout), you've got to kill these guards before you get these prisoners. The guards understand that. When it comes to a question of right and wrong, there can be no compromise. If these defendants are guilty, they should be punished, if they are not guilty, they should be acquitted. The court intends to protect them."

Meetings Called by Phone.

Late tonight Capt. Joseph Burleson, in charge of the guardsmen here, revealed he had been informed mass meetings were planned in adjoining communities.

"I have never [illegible] statement to the press," Burleson said, "but I think this situation calls for it. I want it to go abroad that, because we are Southerners and these defendants colored men, has no bearing on our oath to protect them. We are still wearing the uniform of the United States."

Today's proceedings at the trial consisted for the most part of denials by the four of the septet doomed to the electric chair for attacks on Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, and their cross-examination.

Denies Attacking Girl.

Haywood Patterson, the one of the seven being tried on the present indictment, candidly admitted fighting with some white male hoboes on the train and throwing them off just before the supposed attack in a gondola car.

He denied seeing any girls on the train and, although his testimony in the first trial was read to dispute this, under re-direct examination by Leibowitz it was brought out he had said he had seen no attacks and took part in none.

After telling Attorney General Knight that a white boy was on the train with him, he said: "I wouldn't attack no white woman with a white boy on board would I, I aint that much of a fool."

"You were tried at Scottsboro?" he was asked. "No, he rejoined, I was framed at Scottsboro."

Dr. E. F. Reisman, Chattanooga gynecologist, was called as the last witness of the day. He testified that Victoria Price's story that she was attacked by six colored men an hour or two before her examination at Scottsboro was inconsistent with medical evidence offered by the prosecution.

Missing Witness in Scottsboro Case Appears and Recants Assault Story

DECATUR, Ala., April 6 (AP)—In a dramatically tense courtroom, the long missing witness in the "Scottsboro case" Thursday denied her testimony in previous trials in which eight of nine Negroes indicted for an attack on two girls, were sentenced to death.

The girl, missing since Feb. 27, appeared just as the defense was prepared to rest its case in behalf of Heywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga Negro, and the first of the Negroes to face retrial.

"No, sir," she replied, raising her voice slightly, in reply to a question from Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of defense counsel, "Were you attacked aboard the freight train that afternoon?"

"I told it because I was excited," she replied to Leibowitz's question as to why she testified in the trials in Jackson county two years ago that she had been attacked by six Negroes.

Through a long cross examination during which at times she was obviously flustered and hesitated on some questions, she reiterated that she was not attacked.

"I Can't Remember"

"I can't remember," she replied to several questions propounded by Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., particularly the surname of a woman for whom she said she worked while in New York. "[illegible]rite, is all I remember," she said.

The court was in informal recess at the time she entered. Judge James E. Horton, presiding, but a minute or two before had said "the court will wait eight minutes" to a whispered request from Leibowitz.

That remark was the only inkling the spectators who took every available seat had that something unusual was impending, less than 10 minutes before Leibowitz had rested for the defense "with reservations."

The girl, clad in a grey coat and close-fitting hat to match, was accompanied by Mrs. May Jones, social workers of Birmingham, who said she had driven her here at the request of Rev. Charles Clingman rector of the Episcopal church of the Advent there.

Minister Will Be Summoned

Mrs. Jones was sworn to testify that she drove the girl here from Birmingham and Attorney General Knight immediately asked a subpoena for the Birmingham minister.

Taking the stand the girl identified herself, then in a hushed courtroom faced her companion on the freight train, which Patterson was charged with attacking, and identified her.

Lester Carter, of Knoxville, Tenn., who was on the stand during the morning, was brought in and the girl identified him.

Carter in the forenoon had told of a clandestine meeting with the girl and of intimacies with her.

Taking up a recital of her movements from March 23, 1931, until she was taken from a Southern railway freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., two days later and with the other woman accused the Negroes of attacking her, she admitted intimacies testified in the forenoon by Cater.

She said she spent the night with Carter, Jack Tillery and the other woman in a box car when the "hobo" trip was planned.

On March 24, 1931, she said, she, the other woman and Carter caught a freight train to Chattanooga and there they met Orville Gilley (Carolina Slim) and spent the night in a "hobo swamp."

Unable to find work, she said the quartet boarded a freight train the next day to return to Huntsville and rode a box car to Stevenson.

"Me, ——, Lester, and Gilley boarded a box car which we rode to Stevenson, and there we got in a gondola," she said. The fight between the Negroes and seven white boys occurred in the next car, she testified.

When taken from the train at Paint Rock, she said she was excited and continued in that state in jail.

"She (the other woman) told me if I didn't say it (that she had been attacked) they would put us in jail," the girl testified when asked by Leibowitz if any one told her what to say.

The girl said she came here from New York, leaving there Monday and going to Birmingham.

"I certainly did," she said, when Leibowitz asked her if she met Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of Riverside Baptist church, in New York.

The girl said she told him her story and that Dr. Fosdick sent her to Birmingham to Dr. Clingman.

National guardsmen Thursday night were placed on duty at the apartment hotel of Leibowitz as reports were received here that a crowd had formed at Huntsville to come here.

The alleged victim of the attack who appeared here unexpectedly Thursday afternoon at the trial was under Leibowitz's protection until court opens Friday.

Captain Joe Burleson, commanding the guard, said early Thursday night he had checked the reports and believed them unfounded but guards armed with automatic rifles were kept stationed at the apartment as a precautionary measure.

Hunsville police announced that rumors of a crowd forming there to move on Decatur were without foundation.

Fosdick Supports Her Story

NEW YORK, April 6 (AP)—The Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside church, confirmed Thursday night that Ruby Bates called upon him but said he regarded what she told him as confidential.

"I can make no statement further than to confirm the fact that Ruby Bates came to me for a private confessional conference concerning her testimony at the trial," Dr. Fosdick said.

"That was on Friday, March 24. To the best of my knowledge and belief, she came alone and of her own free will.

"She was disturbed in her conscience about her testimony in the previous trial. Of course, when she came and told me her state of mind about her previous testimony, I, as a clergyman, advised her to tell the truth. She promised me that she would go back to the second trial and do so."

Dr. Fosdick said she called upon him at his home. He knew nothing about her stay here, he declared beyond the one visit she made to him.

Here are the 12 Morgan county men chosen to weigh the evidence in the trial of Heywood Anderson, 19, first of seven Scottsboro, Ala., Negroes to face re-trial on charges of attacking two white girls. The trials were transferred to Decatur, Ala., on a change of venue. Judge James E. Horton, presiding at the trial, is shown in the lower photograph.

Police Disperse I. L. D. Lawyer's Negro Admirers

Montgomery

3-11-33

NEW YORK, April 10.—(AP)—Disorder attended the return of Samuel Leibowitz ate today from Decatur, Ala., where he defended Heywood Patterson in the "Scottsboro case."

A group of negroes carried the lawyer on their shoulders from his train to a taxicab and then whites and negroes which police numbered at 3,000 formed a parade on Broadway, starting at 34th Street near Pennsylvania station.

Police in the 30th Street precinct, taken unawares by the marching column of four, telephoned ahead to the 47th. Street station. When the column reached Times Square police charged them with night sticks and ordered them to disperse.

Hand to hand fighting followed. Patrolman William Griffin was beaten by a group of negroes until white pasers-by fought them off. Griffin arrested George Northcroft, 36, negro house painter, as the man who had kicked him in the mouth and knocked out a tooth.

The parade reformed and got as far as 53rd Street before the police charged again. Half the marchers scurried into side streets but the others reassembled, marched on to 59th Street and attempted to hold a meeting in Columbus Circle.

The emergency squad from the 88th Street precinct reinforced the policemen already on the scene and attempted to disperse some 1,000 persons listening to speakers. Many of the marchers fled as policemen swung night sticks at their legs, but the others marched on.

At 68th Street they tried again to hold a meeting and the police broke them up. At 86th. Street the final set-to occurred. The harried marchers broke up into pairs and small groups and continued quietly up-town toward Harlem.

THE MOCK TRIAL ENDED

When the Decatur (Ala.) jurors announced their verdict in the now celebrated Scottsboro case, it was no surprise to either America or the rest of the civilized world. It did not matter that the defendant was innocent, or what the testimony showed, the results would have been the same. The very environment in which the case was tried precluded any other kind of verdict.

The temple of justice itself was charged and surcharged with hate, hypocrisy and prejudice. The very atmosphere was per-of centuries of bigotry and sham. The word LAW when applied to a black man in the state of Alabama means the sophistry by which the ruling class of the South explains its murderous acts.

No black man can get a fair trial in the South so long as those who make and execute the laws drink from the fountain of hate. In a country where Jim Crowism is allowed to thrive all the people who live under its baneful influences will be affected by the poison it emits. The savage instinct of Decatur called for blood, which means that it ran true to the system of southern conception of chivalry and honor.

No judge can be free to act in the performance of his duties under the shadow of such slimy influences. The whole trial was a mockery, a pretension of justice and a crime against our national honor. The prosecuting attorney—in keeping with the spirit of the state—spewed from his lips all the additional racial antipathy he thought essential to consummate his purpose. He not only attacked the black man, but went out of his way to blaspheme another.

In fact the verdict had been arrived at when the jury was selected, therefore no evidence was required. Samuel S. Liebowitz, the New York attorney who headed the defense staff, said: "This is another black chapter in American justice. It is a triumph of bigotry; it means that because a man's skin is black he can be brought in here and no matter what the evidence may be, smirking hypocrisy will go out and condemn him to death. I shall fight these Scottsboro cases as long as I live."

A community in which such a verdict could be obtained on such evidence shows that the civic morality of that community has reached a decadence in ethical ideals. The American people should organize to fight against the "Hitler spirit" in this country instead of in Germany. Our fight is to prevent America from returning to the jungle thought and action of barbarians who once fed upon human flesh.

To all decent minded people Decatur, Ala., will forever be looked upon as a place from which justice has fled, where truth has no standing, morality no incentive, and honor and respectability no place of abode.

Alabama (Haywood Patterson)

ALABAMA WINS HER CASE.

Columbus

Imagine a jury of white men deliberating for twenty-one hours over the guilt or innocence of a Negro accused of criminal assault by white women complainants; and after having deliberated twenty-one hours return a verdict of guilty. That is what happened in the celebrated case Alabama vs. Patterson tried recently at Decatur in the sovereign state of Alabama. Haywood Patterson is the first of the boys now internationally known as the Scottsboro boys to be retried under the ruling of the United States Supreme Court granting them a new trial.

In the light of the conduct of the Patterson trial it is our opinion that if a jurist were ever justified in rendering judgment "non obstante verdicto" (notwithstanding the verdict), the trial judge in that case had been more than justified in adjudging Patterson not guilty in spite of the jury's verdict of guilty.

No power of divination is needed to know that on that jury there were those who considered the evidence in the case and contended for Patterson's acquittal, but what with intimidation, threats and other forms of torture capitulated before the force of superior numbers and local color. Some day it will be known that those jurors had the disposition but not the guts to do by a fellow human what was right.

Whatever may be said about the International Labor Defense, it must be said to their credit that their fight for justice for the man farthest down has been valiant. Its representatives have given the enemy no quarter. If in the end they lose they will have shown the world just how sub-normal is the universal Southern mind. They have already causd white juries to become more deliberative over cases given them for consideration where Negroes are concerned. Fully deserving was Samuel Leibowitz of the great ovation given him on his return to New York where thousands of Negroes and whites took him and placed him on their shoulders to triumphantly bear him to his conveyance. Leibowitz had the courage to face the cowardly pack and scourge their idea of justice with his Herculean brain and rapier like tongue. So devastating was his aetack that his adversaries were stripped of every defense save their traditional appeal to prejudice. They wanted to know if Alabama justice could be bought with Jewish money. They stated frankly that if these Northern Jews came down there and won their case Alabama justice would be lynched. These rabid fulminations of a hysterical Negrophobe were actually made part of the Court record. This, of course, is cause for reversible error being allowed and a new trial granted on appeal.

Whatever Ruby Bates may have been, her testimony in this case certainly stamps her as a woman of some little courage to say the least. Although the prosecution accused her of having "sold out," it is more likely that at last the poor girl discovered that she had such a thing as a conscience and when the proper appeal was made to that conscience decided that even though death be her reward she must tell the truth and liberate from durance vile, if she could, those whom she knew to be innocent of the charge she and Victoria Price had placed against them. When the final chapter has been written in this case it will be found that these United States of America have crept a little nearer to the ideal of operation in accordance with the spirit and the letter of its Constitution.

Calls Them 'The Wail Of A Contemptible Loser'; Defends Morgan Jurors

Montgomery

DECATUR, ALA., April 15.—(Special)—Resenting the slurring reference by Samuel Liebowitz as reported in The New York Herald Tribune, to the people of Morgan County and the jury in the case of Heywood Patterson, first of the seven Scottsboro negroes to be retried. Atty.

Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., in a statement issued here this afternoon, denounces the quoted remarks of the principal defense counsel for the negroes as "the wail of a contemptible loser."

Whatever excitement the declarations of Liebowitz may cause in Harlem, they will have no effect whatever upon Morgan County citizens, he says.

Following is the text of Mr. Knight's statement:

"A statement in The New York Herald Tribune quoting Samuel Liebowitz as reflected upon the people of Morgan County and the members of the Heywood Patterson jury, has been called to my attention.

"Liebowitz is quoted as stating when asked how the jury could find the verdict it did, that: 'If you ever saw those creatures; those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"If this statement was made by Liebowitz, it can be taken only as the wail of a contemptible loser. Particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury, he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies. Referring to members of the jury, he characterized them as highly intelligent, painstaking and honorable men.

"This was before the jury returned a verdict sentencing Heywood Patterson to death for raping Mrs. Victoria Price.

"I, like every other Southerner, resent his despicable slurs. However, we must remember that whatever excitement his forensic discourse causes in Harlem it cannot and will not cause the citizens of Morgan County and Alabama to deviate from the orderly and dignified course which was followed in the Patterson trial.

"I was very glad indeed that Liebowitz's flattery of the court, myself and the jury could not swerve the jury from a just verdict in this case when they believed as I do, that Heywood Patterson was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

"Liebowitz, having borne his gift of compliments, now wishes to take it back."

THE DECATUR TRIAL

The Scottsboro case affords no grounds for criticism of Alabama justice. The people behind the whole agitation—the I. L. D. and the Communists—are not concerned with justice. They do not care a rap for the accused Negroes. What they are attempting to do is to stir up strife between all races and creeds in the United States.

They had engaged the services of the greatest criminal defense lawyer in the country, Clarence Darrow, who, after learning what they wanted to do, withdrew from the case. Why? Because he was willing to try it only on its merits. That did not suit them.

The most irritating, unbearable, arrogant overbearing human being in the world is a smart, shrewd, New York attorney, thoroughly exemplified in Mr. Leibowitz. His conduct during the trial was about the same as after he had lost his case. Reread his caustic comments, "The jury spat on the tomb of Abraham Lincoln," "Bigots, Morons," and more of like savour. You will note that he could not but praise the fairness of the judge, yet I am told on good authority that the jury was made up of the same kind of people. As a matter of fact it was one of the most intelligent juries ever to try a case in Alabama.

If this crowd had really been interested in defending the negroes, they would not have sent a lawyer from New York, who, in the judgment of most people familiar with the case, mishandled matters by attempting to put on trial the State of Alabama and the people of the State, who was continually playing to the gallery—in New York—but would have engaged the services of competent Alabama lawyers who could play rings around Mr. Leibowitz. Mr. Leibowitz tried his case in New York newspapers to make a name for himself. If he lost, he was a hero. If he won, fame, renown, and principally, riches.

The chief idea of the I. L. D. and the Communists is agitation, strife, trouble—here, there, everywhere. Take the Mooney case in California, the Sacco-Vanzetti case in Massachusetts, this Alabama case. They do not know whether there was guilt or not, and do not care. Smiply a chance for them to ply their trade. Note how they had the whole world flood the Governors, and the courts, with telegrams and letters demanding the instant release of "these innocent people," before the trial, and without even hearing the evidence.

As to the merits of the Scottsboro case itself, I will confess that I do not know. Do you know? Does anyone in New York, or Maine, or Kansas, or Oregon? Most people in Alabama state frankly that they do not know—that is why we have law—courts and juries—to find out, and to do the uttermost to reach the truth, after hearing the evidence.

The opinion here among fair-minded, honest, God-fearing people (and there are the same proportion of them here as elsewhere) is that this is a matter for Alabama to handle. I believe that most people think that the Negroes are guilty, but do not want them executed. They are unanimous in wanting them punished if guilty, and quickly released and acquitted if innocent. They feel that the women are a rotten pair, but under the law, no man has the right to rape them.

Do these New York feature writers realize that in this city last year a white man was convicted for raping a Negro woman? Did you read then that Lincoln's tomb was spat upon, or that we were then bigots or morons?

There is another angle to this case which would bear inspection. How clean are the skirts of New York, or New Jersey, Colorado Michigan, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, or any of the rest of the States? When a New York gangster shoots down a baby on the sidewalks of New York and a jury acquits him; when the Mayor steals everything in the city but the Empire State Building and as punishment is sent on a trip to Europe, with his mistress, all expenses prepaid; when gangsters are more important and more influential and make more money than the outstanding professional men; when the presidents of some of the largest banks of the United States are a crowd of crooks, by their own confession; when in an adjacent State babies are stolen out of their cribs and knocked in the head; when, in Illinois, a dozen men are lined up against a stone wall and mowed down with machine guns and gangsters own the courts and the police departments; when cold-blooded money-making murder goes unpunished, and bribery and graft flourish—in these States, and in many more in the same sections, it would seem that the press of other sections has plenty to worry about, without concerning themselves so much about Alabama's justice.

Alabama Justice

WHEN the Scottsboro case was appealed to the United States Supreme Court in November, three points were raised: (1) there was not a fair, impartial, and deliberate trial; (2) the boys were denied the right of counsel; and (3) qualified Negroes were systematically excluded from the jury. The court chose to put aside as "without merit" the first and third points, although, as Morris L. Ernst pointed out in our issue of December 7, they were socially much more significant than the second. A new trial was ordered on the ground that the defendants were denied the right of adequate counsel. In the trial which has just ended at Decatur, Alabama, Haywood Patterson had the right of counsel. The defense of Samuel Leibowitz was a brilliant example of legal art. He succeeded in dramatizing the utter helplessness of nine Negro boys, innocent or guilty, once they were caught in the destroying passion of race hatred.

Judge James E. Horton was scrupulous in his conduct of the case, and his charge to the jury indicated his own awareness of the violent forces at work in his court. The most casual reading of newspaper accounts of the testimony—and the press is to be highly commended for its covering of the Decatur trial—indicates reasonable doubt of the guilt of Haywood Patterson. The girls involved were common prostitutes. Their testimony was flatly contradictory and one of them repudiated her previous testimony. Yet the jury not only brought in a verdict of guilty, but imposed the savage sentence of death, although Alabama law provides an alternative sentence for rape of ten years to life imprisonment.

In so doing the jury expressed the will of a community which hates and fears the Negro because it has wronged him so deeply through so many generations. Mr. Leibowitz obviously foresaw this all-too-probable conclusion. By his insistence on bringing out convincing evidence that Negroes have been systematically excluded from jury service in Alabama, he established that issue so firmly that the Supreme Court will find it difficult to dismiss it as "without merit" when the case again goes to Washington—as it will unless the Alabama Supreme Court should reverse the Decatur decision. Furthermore, in the course of his defense Mr. Leibowitz was careful to hold up to the public view the race prejudice of more than one variety that showed itself on every hand. Aside from the continuous threats of mob action, two remarks by the prosecution in the course of the trial should be sufficient for any person of sound mind outside of Alabama. "Show them that Alabama justice cannot be bought and sold with Jew money from New York," shouted Solicitor Wade Wright. "I don't care what her [Victoria Price's] previous convictions or actions may have been," said Attorney-General Knight, "but she never lived with niggers." Surely no human being, though he might be guilty of the worst crime, should be forced to submit his right to live to the passions that were flaunted inside and outside the courtroom at Decatur.

The Scottsboro boys still have a chance for liberty, but it may be a matter of years—and years pass slowly in the cells that the South reserves for its Negro "citizens." Meanwhile, we urge our readers to contribute as generously as they can to the Scottsboro defense fund.

Laughter from the Jury Room

DURING the forty minutes he waited for the judge to arrive, Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old Alabama Negro, heard frequent laughter coming from the jury room where twelve white men had decided whether he would live or die.

It was Palm Sunday, and folks were at church. The jury had been out for hours and now had completed its work. The courtroom clock ticked off the seconds. The judge arrived, the jury came in, some of the men smiling, and the foreman handed the judge a slip of paper upon which was written:

"We find the defendant guilty as charged and fix the punishment at death in the electric chair."

Another chapter had been written in the famous Scottsboro case in which nine Negroes were charged with attacking two white girls in a gondola freight car. One girl denies she was attacked.

The sovereign state of Alabama has spoken. Counsel for the defence publicly thanked the presiding justice, Judge James E. Horton, but bitterly condemned the jury.

At this distance it is difficult to approve of the verdict in the face of what appeared to be reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. If the rights of the defendants were ignored or jeopardized, we have the United States supreme court at hand to uphold these rights. It has done so once, in this same case. If the facts warrant further intervention, we have confidence that the highest court will not hesitate to protect the defendant. There the case is best left.

AT DECATUR

It is hard for Alabama to be patient under the trying circumstances of the trials at Decatur. Yet Alabama must by all means be patient. The second verdict of guilty just rendered by a jury composed of representative citizens of the Tennessee valley is going to arouse another storm of outside interference. It is going to mean further effort to try these cases th[illegible] telegraph and mail intimidation and through the lowest forms of appeal to race prejudice and intolerance and sectional abuse.

Unfortunately the leading defense counsel in his comment on the verdict indicates the line that future abuse of Alabama is to take when he said: "It is only a pity that, amid these beautiful surroundings and glorious country, where there is on every hand hospitality and courtesy, such race hatred and bigotry should live."

The International Labor Defense has been the chief offender in seeking to make capital out of these cases and by prejudice and false propaganda to prevent them from being decided upon their merits. This organization is frankly subversive, communistic and unpatriotic in its purposes and objects. What but [illegible]tempt can lovers of justice feel for [illegible] expressions as this official statement [illegible] by this league following Sunday's ver[illegible] at Decatur:

> The demands will be made not only to the courts and state authorities of Alabama, but to President Roosevelt, who, as chief executive, will be called upon to give protection to the boys, their witnesses and lawyers, whether they are menaced with lynching by a jury or by extra-legal agencies.
> The lynchers of the South, the landlords and mill owners, whose system of oppression and terror against the negro people and the poor whites has been most sharply challenged in the fight to save the lives of the Scottsboro boys, are determined to murder them.
> These rulers of the South have common interests with the rulers of the North. The United States supreme court is the common tool of both.

Even under such provocation as this Alabama must remain patient; must bear the enormous expense that this interminable litigation involves; must see that every possible means is exhausted to insure that the truth is determined and justice is permitted to rule in these cases. It is a trying time for every one concerned with the cases. The people of Alabama, in spite of misrepresentation on a world-wide scale, are fortified by the knowledge that all they seek is justice. They know there is not a qualified juror in the state who would want these defendants injured if they are innocent. There is likewise no such juror who would want them to go unpunished if they are guilty of the crime charged.

Even a layman can see that this Sunday verdict of guilty is probably destined to run the gamut of another trip to higher courts, and confidence in having the verdict sustained is measurably lessened by recollection of various incidents of the trial such as the clapping of hands by the attorney general of the state when an answer which pleased him was given by a witness, and such as the open appeal to race prejudice by the solicitor in his conspicuous reference to New York Jews in his argument before the jury.

Conflict in testimony of the two prosecuting witnesses and the reversal of her previous statements by one of them no doubt have helped to cause a certain amount of confusion in the minds of those not actually present at the trial. Under such circumstances we can only trust in the wisdom and fairness of a Morgan county jury. After all, we must abide by the judgments of our juries in these and other matters, or our courts of justice become a farce.

A Little Progress.

Heywood Patterson, the first of the Negroes to be retried in the Scottsboro, Ala., case, has been found guilty by a jury which voted the death penalty for him. It looks as if local resentment of outside criticism will cause all seven of the defendants to be sentenced to death. (Nine were accused of attacking two white girls, but two were turned over to the authorities in charge of juvenile offenders.)

Alabama apparently is taking the same attitude as Massachusetts took toward Sacco and Vanzetti. Southern race prejudice is reinforced by alarm over participation of Communists in the defense. Southerners not only are anti-Communistic but are alarmed by the fact that the reds are avowedly using the Scottsboro case in an appeal for Negro members.

Because she is a person of bad reputation, the jury evidently concluded that the repudiation of her testimony by one of the two women allegedly attacked was worthless, forgetting that her first testimony would be subject to doubt for the same reason. Meanwhile, additional race prejudice has been aroused by attacks upon some of the defense lawyers because they are Jews.

There is one encouraging thing in the Scottsboro case, however. It is that the Negroes have actually been tried, though the first trials were travesties, and are now being retried with deliberation. Not many years ago they would have been lynched, militia or no militia. That is some gain, at least.

JUDGE HORTON OF ALABAMA.

(From The New York Times.)

Judge Horton of Alabama may be said to belong to the oldest American stock, being descended from those who ventured beyond the mountains instead of clinging to the seaboard. An ancestor of his, he said, was "the first that came down that country." It could be wished that in a passage of his charge to the jury he spoke for all America to the world: "We are a white race and a Negro race here together—we are here to live together— our interests are together. The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because the great things in life, no matter what they are, it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that."

The Scottsboro Case

If a change of venue meant removal of a trial to another state, then justice might be done with reasonable speed in the "Scottsboro cases." But the law allows only a switch of counties and for that reason the case of Heywood Patterson, 19, colored and under penalty of death, must again be carried to the United States supreme court.

Unthinking, frenzied race prejudice is the only possible explanation for the Patterson guilty verdict which not only went against the evidence but against the implications of the judge's charge. Unless the supreme court intervenes again, that act of bigotry will forever remain a stain on American justice.

AN UNFAIR BURDEN

One of the sad and deplorable features so far as Jackson county is concerned is the terrible cost the negro trial is inflicting upon our county. Our county has already borne the cost of one trial and now having to bear the cost of the one at Decatur. The cost of taking witnesses to Decatur is enormous. Some of the witnesses will cost the county $20 to $25 each. We have to pay the jurymen and all the costs of the trial except possibly the state pays for the National Guard. It comes at a time when our county needs every dollar it can possibly get and we are the sufferers. The state ought to help us.—Scottsboro Progressive Age.

Scottsboro and Jackson county have been innocent victims of circumstances all through the ugly mess of these cases. The name of Scottsboro has resounded around the world simply because of incidents occurring on a train which happened to be passing through the county of which Scottsboro is the county seat.

The county is really entitled to sympathetic consideration in its suggestion that some help should come from the state in caring for the enormous and undeserved financial burden which has been placed upon it.

PREJUDICE AND INJUSTICE

The dramatic turn that the Scottsboro case has taken in Decatur, Alabama, is of the sort that would seem improbable if placed in a work of fiction. Occurring as a fact of authentic history, it arouses a thrill as an incident in a trial of national concern. More than that it becomes of great social importance as an illustration of the way in which prejudice almost inevitably leads to injustice.

The two words, prejudice and injustice, are derived from the same Latin word "jus." They are far more alike in meaning than some of those who rather pride themselves on their prejudices realize. If a man is prejudiced, it is impossible for him to deal justly.

Many of those in the southlands of our country glory in their prejudice against the colored folk. The result is that the colored people in those Southern states have had to suffer under a long series of unjust laws and conventions. It apparently is a custom in Alabama to reject Negroes as members of a jury. The excuse is that the Negro juryman would be prejudiced. The actual result is that the Negro who is being tried fails to obtain justice at the hands of prejudiced white jurymen.

Two years ago eight Negro young men were condemned to die for a crime laid at their charge by two girls whose testimony was open to suspicion and whose testimony was also extremely "fishy." Fortunately it became possible on a technicality to bring the case before the Supreme Court of the United States. This Court ordered a new trial which has been going on now for several days with every obstacle thrown in the way of the defenders of the eight Negro youths.

The end of the second trial had come. The position of the defense appeared hopeless and the lawyers for the defense were about to rest their case, when suddenly one of the two girls, who had brought the charges, the one who had been missing for this second trial, appeared in the court room. It is reported that the Southern judge, who had appeared throughout desirous of upholding the dignity of Southern justice, left the bench and joined the excited throng who craned their necks to watch the advent of this girl who came as a witness for the defense.

It seems that she had been in New York City, and there, under the constant goadings of her conscience which assailed her for her false charges against the eight Negro youths, she went to the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick for advice. He advised her to go right back to Alabama and to tell the truth. Her seeking out in Birmingham the Rev. Charles Clingman for further advice corroborates the impression of complete sincerity on her part.

On the witness stand she repudiated her testimony of two years ago and gave what appeared to be sufficient reasons for her perjury at that time. It is difficult to see, in the light of what has taken place, how even a Southern jury can avoid bringing in a verdict of not guilty. The counsel for the prosecution did what he could to inflame the jury by speaking of the defending counsel as a Jew and a Communist. It may be that the Southern courts will pursue with relentless vigor this girl, Ruby Bates, on her confession of perjury, but the trial as a whole ought to be a new reminder to the country at large of the incompatibility of justice and prejudice.

Again and again have those eight Negro young men been in jeopardy of their lives, either at the hands of a senseless mob bent on lynching, or at the hands of a tribunal manned by white officials, supposedly seeking to administer justice but with no serious effort to fight their prejudices. It is possible that if the counsel of the International Defense organization of New York City had not intervened in an effort to give the young men a fair trial they would all have been electrocuted, and even the mere lad of sixteen years of age, who was with them, would have been condemned.

Editor, The News:

THANK YOU for the splendid reporting of the Scottsboro trial.

This is not the first instance in which the Negro has been the instrument of bringing American justice back to bed rock. In 1787, slavery caused the insertions of restrictions into the Northwest Ordinance that later resulted in strong union sentiment in five states.

In the Dred Scott case, the unjust obiter dictum aroused the entire nation to the tyranny of the cotton aristocracy, and the Anthony Burns capture as a slave in free Boston, under the fugitive slave laws, aroused abolition enthusiasm and secured increased Americanism and democracy,

ANOTHER TRIAL FOR NEGRO SEEN BY DR. FOSDICK

Pastor Believes Ruby Bates 'Told Truth This Time'; Protest Signed by 9,000 Here

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of Riverside Church, declared yesterday "There probably will be, and ther should be, another trial" in the case of Haywood Patterson, Negro, first of the seven Scottsboro defendants to be given a retrial.

Patterson was found guilty in Decatur, Ala., yesterday, the jury's verdict decreeing death as the penalty.

Dr. Fosdick was mentioned at the new trial in the testimony of Ruby Bates, one of the two women allegedly attacked by the Negroes. She said she went to the minister to ask him what she should do about the case, and was advised to return to Alabama and "tell the truth." The minister she said, gave her a new coat and hat.

BELIEVES SHE TOLD TRUTH.

Dr. Fosdick said yesterday:

"I have followed the trial closely. I believe Ruby Bates told the truth this time, although I am unable to understand why she said I bought her the hat and coat. Apparently, though, the jury chose to believe Victoria Price's testimony and to discredit that of Miss Bates."

The Bates girl repudiated her testimony at the first trial and denied either she or Mrs. Price had been attacked by the Negroes.

News of the verdict against Patterson brought vigorous protest here yesterday. William Davis, publisher of the Amsterdam News, a Negro paper, put up a sign outside his office at 2293 Seventh ave., calling on persons to signify their intention of going to Washington to protest to President Roosevelt.

9,000 SIGN PROTEST.

The notice by last night had been signed by about 9,000 persons.

The International Labor Defense announced last night that an appeal will be taken, and the case fought to the United States Supreme Court if necessary. William L. Patterson, national secretory said:

"The immediate demands of the I. L. D. now will be for a new trial, a change of venue to Birmingham for the remaining boys to be tried, adjournment of their trials until after the appeal in the Patterson case, and immediate, unconditional, safe release for all the nine boys.

"The demands will be made not only to the courts and State authorities of Alabama, but to President Roosevelt."

Arthur Garfield Hays, of the Civil Liberties Bureau, said of the verdict

"Nothing worse has happened in other countries under Stalin, Mussolini or Hitler.

"Shocking as was the first verdict when these boys were railroaded, this is worse. This time the evidence proved a frame-up, and still there was a conviction."

NEW YORK CITY POST

OUTDOING ALABAMA

We said yesterday that the apparently race-prejudiced verdict of guilty, against one of the nine young Negroes in the Alabama rape cases, was largely due to the unnecessary passions thrust into the trial by the International Labor Defense Committee's choice of a defending attorney who was a political radical, a Northerner and a Jew. Our opinion was strongly buttressed yesterday when that attorney was interviewed by a reporter for the Herald Tribune. Asked how the Alabama jurors arrived at the verdict of guilty, he said: "If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like a frog's, whose chins drop tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it." We submit that no one who talks thus of Alabama can expect to get from Alabama anything but what Alabama has already given himself or his client. Because he is just as bad as, if not worse than, Alabama at it's worst.

Doubtful Method Of Defense

Calling names is not going to do the accused Negroes in the "Scottsboro Case," nor the convicted one, much good.

Samuel Leibowitz, who defended the Negro Patterson at Decatur, is no doubt wholly sincere in his indignation over the verdict, but the language he chose to express himself on his return to New York, if it ever reaches Alabama, and it probably will, will do more to inflame race and political hatred than the tirade of any prosecuting officer.

"When I got home," said Mr. Leibowitz, after vividly describing the physical characteristics of the people of Decatur, "I felt that I needed a moral, mental and physical bath."

In the circumstances, abuse will not further the cause of justice, if an injustice was done.

Scottsboro and Mooney.

The retrial of the so-called "Scottsboro case" at Decatur, Ala., has been begun almost simultaneously with the announcement that a new trial is to be granted to Thomas J. Mooney, who now is serving a sentence of life imprisonment in California in connection with the bombing of the San Francisco Preparedness day parade in 1916. Although the charges involved are entirely different, the two cases have several points of similarity, including the use of both for political purposes by the Communists and the consequent tendency of obscuring the real issues of justice raised in each of them.

In the Scottsboro case seven Negroes were sentenced to death by juries in the trial court, located in the small Alabama town of that name, on charges of assaulting two white girls, and the sentences subsequently were affirmed by the state supreme court. Communists, as well as many defenders of civil liberty, interested themselves in the case on the general ground that the Negroes had been denied a fair trial bcause of racial prejudice. The case was appealed to the United States supreme court, which held that in view of the failure of the trial court to give the defendants "reasonable time and opportunity to secure counsel" they were denied due process of law and must be given a new trial.

In the Mooney case, while the United States supreme court did not interfere, a special committee of the Wickersham commission, as well as President Wilson's mediation commission, reported that the original trial had been unfair. The new trial of Mooney, however, has come on another indictment than the one upon which he was convicted. In both cases, it should be noted, many persons who have no sympathy with Communism have been convinced that justice was denied in the original trials and will welcome the new hearings. The tactics of Communists whose interest in abstract justice may be doubted should not be allowed to prejudice either the Scottsboro or the Mooney case before the bar of public opinion.

Declares the Latter Concocted Her Testimony to Avoid Arrest on a Moral Charge.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 6.—Making a dramatic reappearance in the Scottsboro case today, Ruby Bates, previously missing State's witness, repudiated all her testimony given at the first trial two years ago and swore that Victoria Price had "framed" the Negro youths condemned to die at that trial for an alleged criminal attack on the two women while they were "hoboing" on a freight train.

Just before her entrance, Lester Carter, her former friend, produced by the defense as the first surprise witness, had given evidence before Judge James E. Horton and the jury trying Haywood Patterson, one of the Negroes, which was borne out by the story of Ruby Bates on the stand. Greed for witness fees was one of the motives attributed to Mrs. Price by Carter.

The Bates girl had been missing from her Huntsville home since Feb. 28. She declared she had come back to Alabama on the advice of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Church of New York City.

On his advice she said she had traveled from New York to Birmingham by motor bus "all by myself," and reported to Dr. Charles Clingman, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Advent, at 6:30 this morning. There she was met by Joseph Brodsky, counsel for the International Labor Defense, whom Dr. Clingman notified of her arrival.

When Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the accused Negroes, called her name in the crowded court room, the consternation of the lawyers for the State, seated with Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, was apparent.

Through that door, guarded by militiamen with business-like bayonets, Ruby Bates walked slowly, a trim, girlish figure with dark complexion and downcast eyes.

Behind her, in some confusion at the attention she was attracting, there walked a stout, middle-aged, bespectacled woman, who obviously had the missing witness under her matronly wing.

Identifying herself as Miss May Jones, the elderly woman testified that she had been called upon by the Rev. Dr. Clingman to deliver the missing witness at the court house "because he could not come himself."

Miss Jones made her retreat from the tense court room and Ruby Bates took the witness stand to declare that her former friend and fellow-accuser of the Negroes had concocted the whole story of the attack.

The Price woman was brought into court from an ante room to be identified, and for several minutes the two women, one in stylish clothes and the other in a calico skirt and black woolen sweater, glared at each other.

Mrs. Price was panting with anger and excitement. Attorney General Knight edged his way in between the two women and cautioned the State's main witness to "keep your temper." The Price woman was hurried out of court and the Bates girl continued her sensational evidence.

From the testimony of the girl and her friend, Carter, the defense spread upon the record an entirely new version of what happened on and just before March 25, 1931, when the Negroes were taken from a freight train by an armed posse after a fight with seven white hoboes.

They had met, Carter and the Bates girl testified, some time before the alleged attack, when Victoria Price took the Bates girl to visit the former's friend, Jack Tiller, working with Carter in a chain gang on a road near Huntsville. It was decided that all four would go hoboing together when Tiller and Carter were released from the chain gang.

Says Mrs. Price Inspired Tale.

When the men regained their freedom, all four spent the night of March 23, 1931, at Huntsville, both the girl and Carter testified. They decided to go to Chattanooga in the morning.

Both testified that Victoria Price's statement that she and Miss Bates spent the night of March 24 at the home of "Callie Brochie" in Chattanooga was false. They declared they slept instead in the hobo jungle near the railroad yard described by previous witnesses.

There they met Orville Gilley, a young hobo known as "Carolina Slim," who accompanied Carter and the two women on their journey to Huntsville, which ended in the arrests at Point Rock, Ala.

Ruby Bates described the tussle between the Negro and white hoboes in the next car of the freight train to the one on which they were riding, and then, in answers to Mr. Leibowitz, denied that any of the Negroes had attacked them.

When Attorney General Knight confronted the Bates girl with the testimony she had given at the first trial, she answered:

"I told it just like Victoria did because she said we might have to stay in jail if we did not frame up a story after crossing a State line with men."

When the witness had described going to New York, finding work there, visiting Dr. Fosdick because "she had seen his name in a paper" and her return to Alabama, under Mr. Knight's questions, the court stenographer protested that he could not take another word and court adjourned.

Troops Act on Mob Reports.

The defection of Ruby Bates caused an immediate and bitter reaction among residents of this and neighboring counties.

Tonight the situation was so alarming that Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, had a National Guardsman for a room-mate and Cornelian Court, where most of the defense lawyers and newspaper men are staying, was guarded by nine militiamen with riot guns.

Just before midnight the Bates girl was taken from the apartment house by a detail of deputy sheriffs and guardsmen and hidden. The reason for these precautions, Captain Joseph Burleson, commanding the troops, revealed, was a report that mobs were forming in Huntsville and neighboring towns to storm the jail.

Attorney General Knight was certain that the mob spirit would exhaust itself in talk, but the atmosphere in Decatur was tense. Mr. Knight offered to Mr. Leibowitz the protection of his apartment, but the latter declined it.

It was reported that a detail of deputies and National Guardsmen had left town to head off any invasion from Huntsville, but newspaper men patrolling the highways encountered no signs of trouble.

Dr. Fosdick Urged Girl to Appear.

The Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Church, confirmed reports from Decatur, Ala., yesterday that Ruby Bates had called upon him here, but regarded her admissions as confidential.

"I can make no statement further than to confirm the fact that Ruby Bates came to me for a private, confessional conference concerning her testimony at the trial," said Dr. Fosdick.

"That was on Friday, March 24. To the best of my knowledge and belief, she came alone and of her own free will."

Dr. Fosdick said that she came to his home, not to the Riverside Church.

"She was disturbed in her conscience about her testimony in the previous trial," Dr. Fosdick explained in answer to another question as to her motive in seeking him. "Of course, when she came and told me her state of mind about her previous testimony, I, as a clergyman, advised her to tell the truth. She promised me that she would go back to the second trial and do so."

Dr. Fosdick knew nothing of her stay in New York beyond the one visit which she made to him.

Alabama Trial 'World Issue,' Leibowitz Says

Asks Jury to Disregard Race and Creed as He Gives His Final Argument

Perjury Issue Is Raised

State Sums Up Today, Deliberations Will Begin

By The Associated Press

DECATUR, Ala., April 7.—Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief of defense in the retrial of the Scottsboro case, closed his argument to the jury tonight with the statement that a "world issue" was involved in its decision on the fate of Heywood Patterson, nineteen-year-old Negro charged with attacking a white woman.

Leibowitz had called attention of the jurors to the international interest in the case and added: "You are deciding more than the guilt or innocence of this Negro. You are deciding a world issue."

Since March, 1931, when Patterson and eight other Negroes were taken from a train at Paint Rock, Ala., and charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, individuals and organizations throughout the world have sent protests on the handling of the case to Alabama authorities.

Jury Likely to Get Case by Noon

Even during the current trial, as reports of mobs forming have been circulated, Thomas E. Knight jr., Attorney General, has received many telegrams demanding protection for the defendants and their counsel. The Negroes have been under protection of National Guardsmen throughout the trial. There was no demonstration during the arguments.

Leibowitz asked the jury to disregard race or creed and pleaded for tolerance and reason. Previously he had shouted his defiance of "any mob."

After three hours of arguments the court recessed until tomorrow and Leibowitz said he would consume about one hour more. After he finishes Attorney General Knight will close for the state. The jury probably will get the case by noon tomorrow.

Machinery of the trial whirred swiftly following the surprise appearance yesterday of Ruby Bates, who had been missing from her Huntsville, Ala., home for several weeks.

The girl walked into court yesterday saying she had just arrived from a hitch-hike trip to New York. Before tense jury and spectators she repudiated her testimony in the first trial of the Negroes at Scottsboro, that she and Mrs. Price had been attacked on a freight train.

Mrs. Price, in this second trial, has reaffirmed her previous testimony, declaring the Negroes attacked her after they had thrown several white boys from the train as it sped across Sand Mountain.

Alternate pleas for death in the electric chair and acquittal were presented as attorneys summed up the evidence late today.

"The State of Alabama wants you, if this testimony shows the defendant innocent, to turn him loose," said Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of Boaz, Ala., who was prosecutor in the Negroes' trials in 1931. "But, on the other hand, if he is guilty, the State of Alabama wants you to send him to the electric chair. I believe you will be fair."

Mr. Bailey spoke of "sinister influences" in New York and contrasted the appearance of Mrs. Price, in obviously cheap attire, with that of Miss Bates.

"She (Mrs. Price) didn't come here in New York clothes," Mr. Bailey said. "She could have rouged her lips and cheeks and stood on the streets of Huntsville without going out to seek honest toil. We don't say that she is what she should have been. She has erred, but our laws say no man shall lay a hand on a woman against her will."

The argument of Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatur, was twice interrupted by Leibowwitz to enter motions for a mistrial, both of which were overruled by Judge James E. Horton. When Judge Horton overruled his motion for a mistrial, Mr. Liebowitz said, "I submit, your honor, that a conviction in this case will not be worth a pinch of snuff."

A moment later, as Wright disparaged the testimony of Lester Carter, a defense witness, he referred to him as "Mr. Carterinsky, now," and again Mr. Leibowitz entered a motion for a mistrial on the grounds that it was raising prejudice. Mr. Wright had previously referred to witnesses being "bought with Jew money."

He declared Ruby Bates had perjured herself. The charge was declared by George W. Chamlee sr., of Chattanooga, first speaker for the defense, to be a "fabrication."

Lynchers Ready, Roosevelt Told

Charges that "Ku-Klux Klan lynch mobs are being organized to murder the Scottsboro boys" were contained in a telegram sent to President Roosevelt last night by William L. Patterson, secretary of the International Labor Defense, according to The Associated Press.

The International Labor Defense, which has provided counsel for the Negro youths, announced that demonstrations would be held today in New York and other cities in protest against these "lynch attempts."

The demonstrations also will demand "freedom and safety for Ruby Bates, who has been threatened with injury because she had the courage to repudiate her framed testimony . . against Scottsboro boys."

SURPRISE DEFENSE WITNESS MAKES DRAMATIC APPEARANCE IN DECATUR COURT; STATE'S CASE SHATTERED

Denies Victoria Price's Story and Repudiates Her Own Testimony at First Scottsboro Trial; Defense Rests Its Case

Lynch Gangs Menace Scottsboro Boys As Collapse of Frame-Up Infuriates Southern White Rulers and Klan Supporters

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

DECATUR, Ala., April 6.—Ruby Bates walked into the Morgan County courthouse here today, took the stand, and categorically denied that any of the nine Scottsboro boys had attacked either her or Victoria Price as charged by the prosecution.

Thus she completely repudiated all the testimony she gave at the first trial.

Her testimony fell like a bombshell in the crowded courtroom. She was called as a defense witness and appeared in custody of Mrs. May Jones, a social worker for the Episcopal Church of the Advent at Birmingham, Ala. Mrs. Jones was called to the stand as a state rebuttal witness and said she brought Ruby Bates here at the request of Dr. Chas. Clingman, rector of the church.

Dramatic Entry

Originally one of the two star witnesses for the prosecution at the first Scottsboro frame-up trial which doomed the nine innocent Negro boys to the electric chair two years ago, the 19-year-old Ruby Bates made her dramatic entry into the courtroom—after having disappeared from her home two weeks ago—as the state opened its rebuttal.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief trial counsel of the International Labor Defence, had announced at the afternoon session of the court that the defense rested its case, but added he reserved the right to call any tardy defense witnesses appearing before the state completes rebuttal testimony.

Ruby Bates, who was along with Victoria Price during the time of the alleged attack on a moving freight train near Scottsboro, Ala., in the Spring of 1931, declared that if her companion was assaulted, "I knew nothing of it."

Bates and Price Were Not Where Fight Occurred

Delivering a body blow at the prosecution's frame-up, Ruby Bates swore on the witness stand that she and Victoria Price were in a different part of the train from that in which a fight occurred between the Negro and white boys.

As this testimony, completely demolishing the prosecution's frame up case, was being presented in the courtroom, Decatur officials were forced to admit that Capt. Burleson had brought him reports of a plan to storm the jail Friday at midnight, distracting attention from the attack on the jail by a simultaneous hostile demonstration in front of the place where Defense Attorney Leibowitz is staying. The lawyer's wife left Decatur for New York yesterday.

Late tonight Capt. Burleson, in charge of the state militia, revealed that he had been informed K.K.K. mass meetings were planned in adjoining communities.

Confirmation of this report came from participants in the plot who boasted of it.

Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, now on trial, appeared in the courtroom for the first time today. "I'm afraid of what will happen if I am free," the boy told his mother. The mother wept.

LESTER CARTER

More than a score of protest telegrams denouncing lynch preparations against the Scottsboro boys were received today by Prosecutor Knight in the courtroom from I.L.D. branches in Chicago, Boston, New York and other cities. Similar wires continued to pour in throughout the day.

Hates Protest

During the height of cross-examination, Knight was handed another wire of protest which angered him so he slammed it down upon the desk without uttering a word.

Taking the witness stand in the trial of Haywood Patterson earlier in the day, Lester Carter, one of the white youths thrown off the freight train following a fight between the Negro and white boys, took the stand in the trial of Haywood Patterson, also flatly contradicted the story told by Victoria Price.

Leibowitz, questioning Carter, drew from him significant admissions of intimacies with Victoria Price prior to the time she charged she had been assaulted by the Scottsboro boys. Although Mrs. Price previously had testified that she had spent the night before the asserted attack in a Chattanooga boarding house, Carter declared that she spent the night with him in a hobo camp. He also testified that he had been a frequent visitor at her home.

Met Price Girl in Jail

Carter told how he met another white youth, Jack Tiller, on a chain gang in Huntsville, Ala., while serving a 50-day sentence, and of meeting Victoria Price for the first time in the Huntsville jail, later making the acquaintance of Ruby Bates, who came to the jail as a visitor. He then related how, after his release from jail together with Tiller, he renewed acquaintance with the girls, spending the night of March 23 with them in a "hobo jungle" aboard a freight train in the Huntsville railroad yards, where they planned a trip together. Inasmuch as Tiller was married, his wife working in a textile mill, they planned to send for him later, after finding a satisfactory place to remain in.

Carter testified that they left on a freight train headed for Chattanooga on the evening of March 24, spending the night in a "hobo jungle" and bumming for food nearby. He related how, after the train left Stevenson, he saw five white boys on a gondola to the rear of them, throwing stones at a group of Negro boys. He was asked to join in the fight by the white boys, Carter said, began climbing into the car when a Negro boy swung at him, and he hopped off the train, following the other boys enroute to Stevenson, where they complained about the fight on the train with the Negro boys. He testified that they were then taken by car to Paint Rock where he overheard Victoria Price telling another white boy to pass as her brother in order to save her from being arrested for vagrancy.

Paid for Lying

Moreover, he said that while he was in the Scottsboro jail he overheard a "cuss fight" between Gilley, a white boy, and Victoria Price. Gilley, he said, wanted to know what the girls were charged with, telling her: "Do not tell anything about what happened, else you will go to torment." The witness said that Victoria answered: "We will get paid so much a day if you do as I tell you. If you don't testify the way I do I won't cook any more for you." Carter, the witness, explained that Victoria had been cooking for the boys in the jail.

Answering further arguments of Gilley, Price countered: "What do we care about Niggers. I don't care if they stick all the niggers in jail."

"You are crazy," her companion replied. "Sometimes a Nigger may have to testify for you to save your life."

When Solicitor Wade Wright of Decatur sought to insinuate that Carter had been "coached" in his story by defense attorneys, the witness heatedly denied this, and retorted that he had been kept in the Scottsboro jail for 16 days during the course of the first trial, and had been permitted neither to listen to the proceedings nor to testify as a witness.

He startled the court with the announcement that, no longer able to endure the pangs of conscience, he sought to tell his story to Gov. Roosevelt, but was informed that the latter was "too busy" to see him. Carter was impelled to seek out Roosevelt under the impression gained from hostile newspaper stories in the Alabama press about 'outsiders from New York'—that the case involved difficulties between the State of Alabama and the State of New York.

The witness further told that on his way home to Knoxville, Tenn., he met an itinerant preacher, who after hearing his story advised him to reveal the truth.

Other witnesses followed Carter with testimony confirming the fact that Mrs. Price had been seen with Carter in or near the Chattanooga hobo camp [illegible] alleged assault.

Yesterday, Haywood Patterson, under cross-examination, [illegible] denied that he said at the previous trial that he had either seen the girls at all, or that he had been a witness to any "rape." When Prosecutor Knight failed to get Patterson to change his story despite rapid-fire questioning, Leibowitz, demanding that the Attorney-General show courtesy and respect to the Negro boy. "I'm not ashamed of the way I'm treating this witness," Knight replied.

Patterson replied to the hostile and insinuating questions in a soft, calm voice. Knight's method is illustrated in the following:

Q.—Did you pick up Victoria Price in your arms and held her over the side of the gondola? A.—No, sir, I did not see any girls on that train.

Q.—Who did you see raping those girls? A.—No, sir, I told you I did not see any girls.

Patterson freely admitted the fight with the white boys who molested them, at the same time vehemently denying the "rape" charges.

Fireman's Questioning

Under questioning by Gen. George W. Chamlee, chief defense attorney, Percy Ricks, a Negro railroad fireman on the Scottsboro train added important new testimony, sharply contradicting the story told by Victoria Price.

"I saw them both (the two girls) running up toward the engine," he said. "Some of the men with shotguns came around and headed them off. Then they turned and ran the other way until another batch of men came up from that direction and stopped."

Ricks said that he was standing near the water tank in front of the train when he saw the girls climb out of the box car and run excitedly toward the engine when the train stopped. A few minutes later they were caught by deputies coming from both sides after them.

This completely supports the defense contention that Victoria Bates and Ruby Price sought to run away, fearing arrest for vagrancy, and told the "rape" story only after they had been held in jail in Scottsboro. The witness also supported the previous testimony of the defense that the boys were in different, widely-separated cars and were not found together with Victoria Price, as claimed by the prosecution.

Dr. E. E. Reisman, Chattanooga gynecologist, was also called. He testified that Victoria Price's story that she was attacked by six of the Negro boys an hour before her examination at Scottsboro was inconsistent with the medical evidence offered by the prosecution.

He showed by means of charts that it was impossible for Victoria Price to have had relations during at least eight to ten hours before she and Ruby Bates were examined by Dr. Bridges of Paint Rock.

One Story Was Believed; Other Was Not

An interesting sidelight on the trial of Haywood Patterson was the comment of one of the jurors, who said that the 12 Morgan County men did not believe Ruby Bates (right), since she had admitted perjuring herself at previous trials. They were more inclined to credit Victoria Price (left), who told same story. They are pictured at time of alleged attack.

COP CLASH ENDS LEIBOWITZ FETE

By ERSKINE GOSLING.

Overcome by tumultous feelings of gratitude 2,000 negroes yesterday afternoon marched from a protest meeting in Union Square to greet Samuel Leibowitz, New York lawyer, defender of the "Scottsboro Negroes," upon his arrival at the Pennsylvania station at 4:20 p. m.

After a dozen had lifted Leibowitz to their shoulders and proudly paraded him about, his request to be permitted to go to his Brooklyn home was granted. Fervid with joy they became involved in a series of clashes with the police over the fact that they had no permit to parade.

Sam'l Leibowitz

The first clash took place at 46th St. and Broadway. Policeman William Griffin, of the W. 47th St. station was badly manhandled. Knocked down, he was kicked and lost three teeth. He managed to hold on to George Northcroft, Negro, 36, a painter, No. 215 W. 140th St., and arraigned him later in Night Court on charges of assault.

Still 2,000 strong, the negroes marched to Columbus Circle where in another foray Mrs. Rebecca Butler, negress, No. 2026 7th Ave., was trodden under foot.

Emergency squads and radio cars came up in reinforcement order and the "Army of Harlem" was soon in rout and flying helter skelter through Central Park.

At 86th St. and Broadway occurred the "last stand," with no casualties. From there the marchers, thinned in ranks, trekked home without further disorder.

Leibowitz came directly from his legal defeat administered by 12 Alabama jurors, who disregarded defense of Haywood Patterson, alleged ring-leader of the Scottsboro defendants, and, for the second time in two years, decreed the execution of the negro youth accused with eight others of attacking two white women in an Alabama freight car.

The proposed renewed appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court will be based, this time, it was inferred, on the argument that the verdict disregarded the weight of the evidence. The defense will maintain that, when Ruby Bates, one of the original denunciators of the negroes, repudiated her former testimony and recanted on the witness stand last week, the jury was bound to find the negro defendant not guilty.

Negroes Protest Alabama Verdict

A Gigantic Fraud Is Exposed at Scottsboro

The Chicago Tribune deserves the thanks of the entire South for its vigorous and timely exposure of the gigantic fraud that has been masquerading over the country durin gthe last two years under the guise of "justice' 'to some Alabama negroes accused of criminal assault at Scottsboro. Regardles of the guilt or innocence of the accused ,the Tribune points out that the case has been made a world-wide sensation by the same organized propagandists who were responsible for the furore over the Sacco-Vanzetti and the Tom Mooney cases.

Although citizens of conscientious motives were drawn into these activities to give them repute ,the most persistent and vociferous participants in all cases were communists and radicals of other varieties. Only a very ingenuous observer of these proceedings could miss their intent. Pretending to be a defense of innocent individuals from injustice and oppression and an assertion of civil guarantee ,the objective aimed at was the disparagement of American courts and the American social conscience.

This has ben strikingly exposed in the trial just ended at Scottsboro. The attorney brought from New York by the International Labor Defense could not be as tactless as he has been save intentionally. The very fact that he was chosen in place of counsel known and respected in the region in which the trial was to be held was evidence of lack of good faith ,of a sincere concern for the fate of the defendant. In and out of court his words and actions have appeared to an impartial observer studiously provocative of local feeling, and the inference must be that he intended not to win his case but deliberately to lose it ,to mkae sure of a martyr for his cause and an excuse for more propaganda. Immediately after the verdict he gave vent to a tirade against the community amid which the trials are being held ,and, returnin gto New York, he publicly described the jury as "those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs', whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy.' Yet he is going south in a few days for the second series of trials. The employment of such an attorney for the defense promises if it does not in fact insure a miscarriage of justice. It shows no regard for the defendants but rather a deliberate determination to bring about their conviction.

At the beginning of the affair the radical agitators descended upon the community in which the trial was to be held ,insulting blatant, insolently prejudicing the case and the character of the agencies of the law. They have shown no consideration for the defendants. Pretending to defend them from mob sentiment and race prejudice, thye have done everything possible to inflame both. No Klux fanatic could do more to create conditions in which even-handed justice is impossible than these pretended friends of the oppressed.

Meanwhile the well meaning public of the north has been exhorted to donate money for the support of this murderous proceeding misnamed defense. The Civil Liberties Union published advertisements calling for funds to "help give these boys the best possible break at this second trial." Such appeals are frauds. The Civil Liberties Union is a fraud. Its managers have no regard for civil liberties except when they can be pleaded for the protection of radical mischief makers and criminals. They are communists and sympathizers with bolshevism, which has destroyed civil liberties wherever it has gained power. The active head of the Civil Liberties Union at a meeting of communists in New York has just declared that political democracy is moribund, and he wants a "united front," precious bolshevik phrase ,of communists and liberals to fight Fascism. A union of communists and genuine liberals would be a union of the snake and the bird. The Civil Liberties Union is such a union. Liberals who support it are either gullibles or they are not liberals. There are no civil liberties remaining except where political democracy exists ,and so long as the Civil Liberties Union is run as it has ben and is ,by enemies of democracy, its title is a flagrant hypocrisy which can no longer deceive any but liberal sentimentalists befogged by mere phrases. Even these ought to be shocked at its methods in the Scottsboro affair.

Defense In New Move To Shift Scottsboro Trial

Montgomery, Ala.

To Ask Change Of Venue To Mobile Or To Some Other Of Larger Cities

Weems Up Today

New York Lawyers Late At Decatur; Knight To Oppose Their Motions

DECATUR, ALA., April 16.—(AP)—A new movement to transfer the Scottsboro case from North Alabama tonight appeared certain as attorneys, witnesses and veniremen gathered for the trial of Charles Weems, 22, second of nine negroes indicted in the Scottsboro case to face retrial.

Weems's trial was set for tomorrow in Morgan Circuit Court under a change of venue from Jackson County where he and seven companions were convicted and sentenced to death two years ago.

Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, employed by the International Labor Defense in behalf of the negroes, when Weems was arraigned April 8, asked for a continuance to gather evidence to support a motion for a change of venue.

To this Samuel S. Leibowitbz, of New York, chief of defense counsel, last night in New York added the word that a change of venue "probably to Mobile" would be asked on the grounds that prejudice here would prevent a fair trial.

If the movement to move the trials to a cosmopolitan center fails, then a motion to quash the venire because of alleged "systematic and arbitrary exclusion of negroes" from juries "solely because of their race" will be filed.

This action was taken in behalf of Heywood Patterson, 19, of Chattanooga, first of the negroes to be retried, whom a jury convicted with the death penalty last Sunday.

Defense Counsel Late

None of the defense attorneys had arrived late this afternoon and the negroes still were confined in jail at Birmingham. The attorneys were expected in time for the opening of court at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow, and the negroes probably will be brought here before that hour.

National guardsmen from Hartselle who maintained. order during the trial of Patterson already were here ready to take up their duties again.

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., directing the prosecution has announced that he will oppose motions for a continuance, change of venue or motion to quash the venire.

Knight succesfully defended before Judge James E. Horton who is presiding, motions to quash the indictment against the negroes and a similar motion against the venire the week before Patterson's trial was begun.

"The State is ready," he said, "and our witnesses are prepared to be here."

Weems was arraigned on an indictment charging him with attacking Mrs Victoria Price, Huntsville mill worker aboard a Southern Railway freight train in Jackson County on March 25, 1931 the same charge on which Patterson was convicted.

Mrs. Price To Testify

Mrs. Price has accepted service on a subpoena and her testimony will be the keystone of the State's case as it was in the previous trial.

Knight announced that the State had again had subpoenas issued for Ruby Bates, also a Huntsville mill worker, and Lester Carter, of Knoxville, Tenn., whose testimony in the previous trial was directed principally at Mrs. Price's testimony.

The Bates girl made a dramatic appearance in court to repudiate in part her testimony in the trials of two years ago at Scottsboro, when she identified several of the negroes as having attacked her.

"No sir," she replied in the Patterson trial, when Leibowitz asked her if she was attacked aboard the freight train that day. She said Mrs. Price told her to testify she was attacked to "keep out of jail."

W. H. Hill, station agent at Paint Rock, where the negroes were arrested and the two women removed from the train, on rebuttal, however, testified that the Bates girl was the first one to say the negroes had molested them.

In addition to Patterson and Weems Willie Roberson, Clarence Norris, Olen Montgomery, Andy Wright and Ozie Powell are facing retrial. The United States Supreme Court set aside death sentences imposed on them and granted new trials on grounds that they were not adequately represented by counsel in the first trial.

The Alabama Supreme Court which confirmed sentences on the seven, set aside the death penalty for Eugene Williams, on grounds that he was a juvenile and Roy Wright, the ninth negro named also is a juvenile and a jury disagreement two years ago gave him a mistrial.

Since the negroes were first tried demonstrations have been held in various parts of the world protesting the convictions and Gov. Miller has been flooded with petitions from individuals and organizations seeking clemency for them.

Several of the communications received by Gov. Miller have threatened him with violence.

During the Patterson trial, Atty. Gen Knight and Judge Horton received scores of telegrams demanding protection for the negroes and their counsel, and a change of venue.

Scottsboro Agitator Jailed In New York

NEW YORK, April 16.—(AP)—Isidore Major, arrested for distributing handbills advertising a Scottsboro protest meeting, was sentenced to serve 10 days in jail for disorderly conduct yesterday by Magistrate David Hirschfield, in Brooklyn.

"In my opinion," said the magistrate in pronouncing sentence, "the whole lot of you are not really interested in those poor colored fellows at all. And if you people continue your lawlessness and your attempts to tear down our flag, our laws and our institutions, I am very much afraid some day you will bring on this country a condition such as now exists in Germany."

The magistrate said he had followed the Scottsboro case closely and was in sympathy with the negro youths but added that he saw no reason for a carte blanche to radicals in New York whose main interest is one of "unlawful agitation."

An orderly meeting of Communists listened last night in Union Square to speakers for the International Labor Defense plead for unity among white persons and Negroes to fight for the release of the "Scottsboro boys."

The mass meeting started shortly after 5 P. M., with about 2,000 in attendance, and an hour later it had grown to such numbers that the police found it necessary to halt pedestrian traffic through Union Square. They estimated the crowd at 10,000.

One hundred uniformed policemen, commanded by Captain George W. Heitzman, kept order. Other policemen were kept in reserve in near-by office buildings.

The appearance of Mrs. Jennie Patterson, mother of Hayward Patterson, convicted last week in Decatur, Ala., was the signal for prolonged cheering. She was escorted to the platform by Richard B. Moore, Negro attorney, and John Ballam, district secretary of the International Labor Defense, who presided. Mrs. Patterson spoke briefly in praise of the attorneys who defended her son, and then pleaded for funds to continue the fight.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of the Scottsboro defense counsel, who had been invited to speak, declined to do so. He told reporters he did not care to have the Communists use him to further their own ends.

"I do not make speeches from soap boxes," he said. "I will do my talking at the trial."

Others who spoke included Arthur Garfield Hays, Donald Henderson and Joseph Brodsky.

THE SCOTTSBORO ORGY

Afro-American 4-22-33

(Editorial in PITTSBURGH PRESS)

Mrs. Florence Fisher Parry often writes for the Press in her daily column sentiments with which we do [illegible].

Afro American

The other day she discussed, in connection with the Scottsboro case, the general question of Negro and white relationship in the South. Her discussion was not a defense of the Scottsboro verdict, but it was a defense of the Southern system of dealing with the so-called Negro question.

Baltimore, Md.

4-22-33

In most respects it was a sympathetic and accurate analysis of that question.

It has led to much discussion on the part of Press readers, some friendly and much of it hostile.

Today in Mrs. Parry's column is the answer of a Southern man. It is typically and violently Southern. It goes much farther than did Mrs. Parry's column. There are sentiments in it which many will respect. But there are statements with which many will disagree.

So far as this letter and Mrs Parry's column are concerned, they are printed simply as a matter of expression.

We agree with the statement that the Negro, in his relationships and daily life, is probably treated more friendly and considerately in the South than he is in the North. He is better understood and understanding has brought with it consideration.

The trouble is that no Southerner can make a good defense of the Scottsboro case—and that therefor the discussion has switched into generalities.

The arguments having to do with protection of womanhood and preservation of the peace fall flat when considered in the light of the Scottsboro evidence.

Here are eight young Negroes who, in our opinion, are to be judicially lynched unless the United States Supreme Court interferes.

They were convicted of assault against two young women of the underworld—both of them low and unreliable, who were "bumming" their way in a freight car, carrying on immoral relations with a gang of white boys.

Their whole story, to begin with, sounded far-fetched. And when one of them came into court and confessed perjury, the state's case collapsed.

At the very least, we cannot conceive how anybody would say that there was not a reasonable doubt of their guilt.

And yet, despite this, the death sentence was again imposed. Under such circumstances, the sentence is contrary both to law and to morality.

Mrs. Parry said in her recent column that there was "race line" but not "race hatred" in the South.

Generally, that is true. But in occasional specific instances, it is not.

The Southerner, when aroused over a case involving a Negro, is stubborn. Above all, he wants no outside interference. And if outside interference proves he is wrong—he still remains stubborn and refuses to yield.

Mrs. Parry's contacts with the South, we imagine, have been those fine, warm, hospitable contacts which have endeared Southern people to all of us. We wonder, however, whether she has ever seen race prejudice or mob madness when it is fully aroused.

The writer of this editorial has. He has seen a mob of more than 20,000 men and women—some of the latter even carrying their babies—burn a Negro at the stake; has seen them become suddenly mad with the lust for blood; has seen them seize bits of his bones and embers of the fire as "tokens"; has seen them scream and curse because he died "too quickly."

Of course, there followed the inevitable reaction and shame that always follows an orgy—and lynching is always an orgy, for the simple reason that it is not necessary. Usually it simply means the taking of a life by mob violence which would just as surely have been taken by legal methods.

The Scottsboro case is an example of mob madness. It is a poor case upon which to raise the question of "Unwritten Law." There is widespread sympathy with the race problems of the South; but that sympathy is being greatly strained in the Scottsboro case.

LEIBOWITZ PLANS A NEW COURT TEST

4-17-33

Times

New York, N.Y.

May Seek Ruling by Supreme Bench Before Resumption of Scottsboro Trials.

SAYS "WE MEAN BUSINESS"

"We Will Not Pussyfoot on the Constitutional Question," He Writes to Judge Horton.

Characterizing the postponement of the remaining trials in the Scottsboro case as "undoubtedly a blessing to both sides," Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the Negro defendants, informed Judge James E. Horton of Decatur, Ala., in a letter yesterday that he may utilize the opportunity offered by the postponement to bring the case before the United States Supreme Court on the issue of race discrimination. This, it is presumed, will be in the form of an appeal from the conviction of Heywood Patterson, the first of the defendants to be retried and again sentenced to death.

At the same time Mr. Leibowitz declared his belief that Judge Horton, the presiding jurist in the case, was desirous of according the defendants a fair trial and asked the judge's assistance in having the trials of the remaining cases transferred to Mobile, where "the Ku Klux Klan is practically extinct" and where "it will not be necessary for militiamen to protect the entrance to the town with machine guns against invasion by a band of hooded bigots bent upon murdering the defendants and their counsel."

Disputes Judge's Statement.

In his letter to Judge Horton, Mr. Leibowitz took sharp issue with the jurist's statement that the attack made by Mr. Leibowitz upon Alabamans for their alleged prejudice against the defendants and Negroes in general made impossible a fair trial for the remaining defendants by creating prejudice against them.

Mr. Leibowitz said "the prejudice you refer to was there long before the trials were transferred to Decatur."

"No verdict of any jury has received more universal condemnation at the hands of the enlightened press of the world than the verdict of this jury," Mr. Leibowitz wrote. "Anything said by me by way of criticism of the verdict did not create one-thousandth of the prejudice against this Negro that already existed at the beginning of the trial and that was intensified immeasurably by the conduct of the prosecution and others during the trial.

"The prosecution must now realize that we mean business; that we will not pussyfoot on the constitutional question and that we will fight honorably and diligently for the freedom of nine innocent men. Perhaps with the spotlight of public opinion now focused upon the Scottsboro case they now see that the world will not tolerate the execution of these defendants.

"The Negro as a Chattel."

"The sentiment expressed by many of the unthinking in your State that a Negro is a chattel and that he can be referred to as 'my nigger' just as the master refers to 'my dog' is symbolical of that attitude which excludes worthy citizens from service upon juries solely because their skins are black.

"As for the defense, we are delighted with the postponement because it may give us the opportunity to obtain a ruling from the highest court in our land upon this major issue which means so much to millions of Americans."

The International Labor Defense, the Communist organization which has taken a leading part in the defense, issued a statement yesterday through William L. Patterson, its national secretary, asserting that the basic reason for the postponement of the remaining trials "was solely the tremendous world protest against the lynch verdict handed down against Heywood Patterson."

Street Run to Aid Scottsboro Boys

Amsterdam News

4-11-33 New York, N.Y.

Roused to spirited protest by the infamous legal lynch verdict against the Scottsboro boys, the Labor Sports Union, an athletic organization of Negro and white spirtsmen with headquarters here, is organizing a series of street runs as protest measures.

Probably the largest of these will be the one through the streets of Harlem on Saturday, April 29. The arrangements for the run are being made by the Vesa Athletic Club, a Labor Sports Union affiliate. The run is open to all athletes, irrespective of affiliation.

All runners will have pinned to their jerseys, next to their competitors' numbers, canvas signs with the inscriptions: FREE THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS! The course will be from the Vesa A. C. club house, located at 15 W. 126th street, to Fifth avenue; north on Fifth avenue to 131st street, west to Seventh avenue, south on Seventh avenue to 110th street, east on 110th street to Fifth avenue, north on Fifth avenue to 126th street. The finish will be at the club house.

The Labor Sports Union is probably the only sports organization which stands on a four-square program of struggle against race discrimination. It already has a record of struggle in behalf of the Scottsboro Boys, having also held a similar run in Harlem last year with a field of 3[illegible] runners, most of whom were white athletes who were convinced of the necessity of fighting against race discrimination. Last year's FREE THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS STREET RUN, although frowned upon by the high moguls of the Amateur Athletic Union, was a great success, winding up at 110th street and Fifth avenue at a demonstration held under the auspices of the International Labor Defense.

Entries for the street run (the distance will be about 2½ miles) can be secured at the Vesa A. C., 15 West 126th street, at the Labor Sports Union, 813 Broadway, or at the office of The Amsterdam News.

SCOTTSBORO CASE OFF INDEFINITELY

Judge Says Leibowitz Criticism of Jury Makes Fair Trial Now Impossible.

SENTENCES NEGRO TO DIE

DEFENSE WILL 'CARRY ON'

Attorney General Scores New York Lawyer Who, Here, Reiterates Bigotry Charges.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 17.—Judge James E. Horton sentenced one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes to death today in accordance with the finding of a jury which found him guilty of attacking a white girl two years ago and postponed the trial of his eight co-defendants indefinitely.

In doing so, Judge Horton declared that statements issued by opposing counsel since Palm Sunday, when the jury convicted Haywood Patterson, the first of the Negroes to be retried in accordance with a United States Supreme Court order, made an impartial trial here and now impossible.

Some time between now and July 6, when the next regular term of court opens, defense counsel, who already have obtained a change of venue from Jackson County, where the alleged crime was committed, will move once more for a transfer of the case to Mobile or Birmingham, two urban communities where they say that they believe a trial free from extraneous issues of religion and race may be had.

Since a week ago last Sunday, when the jury considering Patterson's case reported, driblets of information regarding the activities of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, have been trickling into Decatur. Persons here have read that he has addressed meetings of Negroes in Harlem churches and that colored women have embraced him in New York.

This has prejudiced the populace against him and this morning, when Joseph Brodsky, International Labor Defense lawyer, declared that Mr. Leibowitz believed in social and economic equality between black and white, there was a tense situation in the courtroom, relieved only by Judge Horton's hasty adjournment of the proceedings.

Death Sentence Mandatory.

The session opened with Judge Horton on the bench ready to pronounce sentence upon Patterson, who was found guilty a second time and condemned to death by the jury after the United States Supreme Court held that his first trial was unfair. The verdict of the jury left Judge Horton no choice, since under the Alabama law the jury has the power to fix punishment as well as decide the guilt or innocence of the accused.

Patterson, escorted into the court room by National Guardsmen, leaned upon the bench, his eyes focused upon a corner of the court room remote from Judge Horton. When the court asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was pronounced, he said:

"I ain't had a fair trial. Ain't seen no girls on that train. I ain't had a fair trial."

Judge Horton, unperturbed by the Negro's statement, outwardly at least, informed him that the jury which convicted him had decided otherwise and said that it was the judgment of the court that he should die in the electric chair at Kilby Prison on June 16.

Mr. Brodsky then filed notice of appeal and offered a "skeleton motion" for a new trial. Judge Horton said that he would not hear motions "piecemeal" and called the trial of Charlie Weems, for which 100 veniremen had been summoned. Before anything could happen, however, Judge Horton read a statement from the bench.

Judge Horton's Statement.

"Gentlemen, there has been set for trial this morning the case of the State vs. Charlie Weems," Judge Horton said. "This is the second of what are known as the 'Scottsboro cases.' Something over a week ago the case of the State vs. Haywood Patterson was tried by a jury of this county. The nature of these cases, being a case where a Negro is accused of the rape of a white woman, is such as would naturally excite resentment, and it is always difficult, even under the most favorable circumstances, to obtain a fair and impartial verdict.

"The law has always recognized in cases of rape, whether committed by one on a person of their own race or by an attack on another race, that the accusation itself is apt to excite an undue sympathy for the accuser, and it enjoins upon the court to see to it that this undue influence is removed so far as the court may be able to do.

"There is a great deal of misinformation in the minds of the public generally in regard to rape cases in the South. I have been on the bench for over twelve years; more than ten of these years among my duties has been the trial of criminal cases. The district which I now serve is composed of four counties lying on both sides of the Tennessee River, and the counties contain a mixed population. Formerly Madison County was also in this district, and it is one of the larger and more populous counties of the State, and it also contained a great number of Negroes.

Recalls Previous Cases.

"During this period I have had only three cases where a Negro was accused of an attack upon a white woman, Two of the indictments were for rape, and one was for an assault with intent to rape. This assault with intent to rape occurred within Limestone County, the county of my residence. This was a case where a young Northern girl, unsophisticated, and who was making a long trip for the first time, went aboard an L. & N. train at Cincinnati to come South. There was a Negro porter on that train. As the train entered Limestone County the porter followed her into the dressing room, and tried to take liberties with her. Her screams caused him to desist and brought help. He was tried and convicted.

"The other cases were tried in this the county of Morgan. In one of these cases a woman accused a negro of committing rape upon her, and the trial was had before a jury. During the taking of the evidence many facts casting doubt upon the guilt of the accused were introduced, and after the case went to the jury a former solicitor, Daven Almon, a man with a big heart, who now sleeps in your city cemetery, came to me and told me that some things he had heard convinced him of the innocence of the accused, and he was much disturbed lest the jury convict. The jury stood eight for acquittal and four for conviction. Afterward, upon the motion of the same solicitor, the case was dismissed.

Holds Ideas of South Erroneous.

"There was another case in this court. I will not go into details, but the evidence was of such a nature that the innocence of the accused appeared certain and the unwholesome case was thrown out of court. I live in the county of Limestone, across the river from this city, and that county has between 30,000 and 35,000 population, about one-third of whom are Negroes. That county has contained a mixed population 115 years.

"During that entire period, except for the one instance I have cited to you that occurred on the L. & N. train, the parties to which were residents of far-distant States, there has not been a single instance, so far as my information goes, and so far as I have been able to find out from diligent inquiry, of either a rape or an attempted rape by a Negro upon a white woman.

"I think this simple recitation of the facts is sufficient to disprove the egregiously erroneous ideas which exist in regard to the relations of the races in the South, and that conviction follows accusation.

"On account of certain influences, many of which to this court appear sinister and are actuated by a desire to stir up and foment strife between the races in the South, it has been difficult to try what are known as the Scottsboro cases upon the real facts. I am not now passing judgment upon the verdict in the case already tried. I know the court had great difficulty in preventing extraneous influences having some effect on the jury. With these influences still existing, with the public mind still disturbed, with thousands of true and deeply patriotic citizens desiring that justice be done and that the South appear in its true light, there has come to my attention a statement published, which to my mind makes it impossible at the present time to fulfill the high purpose of a court of justice.

Defense Counsel's Statement Cited.

"I do not know whether the leading counsel for the defendant made the statement imputed to him. I am not stating that he did, but so far as it might influence this trial it could make little difference whether he actually made it or not. The effect will be the same. The published statement was uncalled for. It was addressed to a panel of highly intelligent jurors, and men who wished to do what was right in the case.

"But the statement itself must of necessity make impossible any just and impartial verdict to be arrived at at this time. The accused Negro must be the victim of this statement. His leading attorney would be a millstone about his neck.

"It therefore becomes the unquestioned duty of this court at the present time to enter of its own motion a continuance of this case until such a time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had. Therefore the case of the State of Alabama vs. Charlie Weems is continued, and the court so orders."

Judge Horton also deplored a statement attributed to the Attorney General which was published in a Decatur newspaper. This, he said "contributed to the already heated atmosphere which surrounds this case."

Knight Protests "Slur."

As soon as Judge Horton had finished, Attorney General Knight was on his feet. He said that he could not sit idly by and hear an Alabama jury maligned.

"No," said he, "the people of Jackson and Morgan Counties—of Alabama are not bigots. Jackson County and the people of Morgan County—of the South have been and will be fair. I have no apologies to make for any statement I have made."

The statement to which Judge Horton referred and over which all Morgan County is steaming is the one Mr. Leibowitz made immediately after the verdict of guilty was returned. He said nothing else could be expected of twelve men swayed by considerations of race prejudice after Wade Wright, Circuit Solicitor, had pleaded to them to show that "Jew money from New York cannot buy justice in Alabama."

After Mr. Leibowitz's statement was published in newspapers of Alabama, Attorney General Knight said:

"A statement in The New York Herald Tribune quoting Samuel Leibowitz as reflecting upon the people of Morgan County and members of the Haywood Paterson jury has been called to my attention.

"Leibowitz is quoted as stating, when asked how the jury could find the verdict it did, that 'if you ever saw those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"If this statement was made by Leibowitz it can be taken only as a wail of a contamptible loser, particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies.

"I was very glad, indeed, that Leibowitz's insincere flattery of the court, myself and the jury could not swerve the jury from a just verdict in this case when they believed, as I do, that Haywood Patterson was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

Patterson and Weems, brought here from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, where they and their fellow defendants are imprisoned for safekeeping, were taken back there tonight under h[illegible] guard.

Ousted From B

After they had gone, and the National Guardsmen on duty here had been dispersed, a fiery cross was burned on the viaduct over the Southern Railroad tracks. Alec Brazelton, night Police Chief, said investigation disclosed that the cross was set off by two Negroes, unknown here, who jumped into an automobile and drove away.

Leibowitz Reiterates Charges.

"The millstone around the necks of the Scottsboro boys is that Alabama attitude which made twelve Decatur jurors guffaw as they push Haywood Patterson toward the electric chair," he stated. "It is a piece with the action of Attorney General Knight in gleefully clapping his hands during the trial and in calling a defendant made in the image and likeness of God 'that thing.'

"I respect Judge Horton and the fair-minded people of the State who are willing to extend to their colored fellow-citizens the protection of the law which we take as a thing for granted in New York. As for the rest, the baying pack, the wolves of bigotry, who raised the Hitler cry of 'Jew money from New York' because we dared to demand a square deal for a poor unfortunate whose skin was black, I stand pat. They are bigots. Their very faces do betoken it.

"We have fought the good fight. We have kept the faith and we will carry on. The nine innocent Scottsboro boys will not die so long as decent men and women survive and there exists in Washington the Supreme Court of our land."

Mr. Leibowitz had just boarded a train en route for Decatur when word of the postponement was received at his office. A telegram was dispatched to the train and he got off at Manhattan Transfer and returned to this city.

Rabbi Alexander Lyons of the Eighth Avenue Temple, Brooklyn, himself a Southerner, asserted in a formal statement that it was impossible for Patterson to have obtained a fair trial in view of the "atmosphere of prejudice and antagonism" which obtained at Decatur.

"The decision at this late day of the presiding judge to postpone the trial indefinitely is to me a confession of weakness," he said. "It implies an acknowledgment of an atmospheric condition where justice could not obtain. Mr. Leibowitz may have contributed to this by his remarks. If he did he simply reacted naturally to a situation which prevailed."

Determination to carry on th fight for the nine Negro defendant in the Scottsboro case was voice last night at a protest meeting i Arcadia Hall, Halsey Street, Brooklyn, at which Mayor John P O'Brien, John H. McCooey, Democratic leader of Kings County, an Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for th defense, were the principal speakers.

A crowd estimated at 4,000 persons, most of them Negroes, packe the hall. The meeting was unde the auspices of the National Afr Protective League, of which th Rev. Dr. Thomas S. Harten is president, but representatives of th International Labor Defense an other Communist organization were conspicuous at the meeting.

"We are not looking for justic in the courts of Alabama," Mr Leibowitz said. "That is hopeless We are looking for justice to th courts in Washington, but meanwhile we are going to fight every inch of the way to protect the record of the case."

Mr. Leibowitz said that while he was not sympathetic with communism himself, the representatives of the International Labor Defense had "played fair" with him and left him a free hand to direct the defense of the case. As he was talking a newspaper cameraman touched off a flashlight, which exploded with a loud report. Many in the audience jumped in alarm, thinking a bomb had gone off, but they were soon quieted.

O'Brien Tells of City Relief.

Mayor O'Brien began by talking about the efforts the city was making for relief of the unemployed and did not get around to the Scottsboro case until he had almost completed his remarks. He told his auditors he was confident that "lion-hearted" Mr. Leibowitz would carry the case to a successful conclusion.

From his own experience as a judge, he said, he knew how disheartening it was to sit on the bench and have juries bring in unjust verdicts, but the only way this situation could be improved was by changing the hearts of the men in the jury box.

"Have faith in the country's institutions and in its leaders, and justice will eventually triumph," the Mayor said. "Let us hope that we will soon round the corner to prosperity."

A few minutes after he had closed, William Patterson, Communist candidate for Mayor last Fall, who had been sitting almost next to the Mayor, was introduced. Mr. O'Brien, who had refused to speak at meetings with Patterson last Fall and apparently had been oblivious of his presence last night, left the hall at once.

Mr. McCooey said he was present because of his interest in fair play. He was opposed to the death penalty, he said, in cases where any doubt of guilt or premeditation existed.

Groups United For Defense.

Representatives of political, fraternal and religious groups interested in obtaining the acquittal of the nine defendants in the Scottsboro case joined forces yesterday afternoon and formed the Scottsboro Unity Defense Conference, at a meeting at the Harlem Masonic Temple, 310 Lenox Avenue. About 250, both Negro and white, attended.

The principal aim of the conference, as voiced by Heywood Broun of the Socialist party, is to create favorable opinion among all classes for the release of the Scottsboro defendants. After that, he added, the conference should work for "the freedom of the Negro race in the South."

Friday, April 28, was set tentatively as the date on which the march to Washington to protest the alleged violation of certain constitutional rights of the defendants in the case will start. Those participating hope to petition President Roosevelt to take immediate steps "to guarantee the Scottsboro boys and the Negro people full constitutional rights."

The march will be under the auspices of the Scottsboro Unity Defense Conference, the International Labor Defense, the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners, and supporting organizations.

Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, spoke at yesterday's meeting. Among the other speakers were John Brown of the Tom Mooney Molders Defense Committee; A. J. Muste, head of the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, and John Gerber of the same organization, all white men, and the following Negroes: Benjamin Davis, Atlanta, lawyer; William Patterson of the Labor Defense, Bishop Collins of the Samaritan Rescue Episcopal Synod, Edwin Welsh of the Harlem Interracial Forum; Adrian Johnson, secretary of the Universal Negro Improvement Association, and James Ford, 1932, Vice Presidential candidate of the Communist party.

Mr. Davis was elected chairman of the conference, Mr. Broun and Mr. Patterson, vice chairmen, and Miss Louise Thompson, assistant secretary of the National Conference for the Defense of Political Prisoners, secretary.

DENIES NEGROES ARE REDS.

Logan Tells Conference the Race Will Not Back Communism.

Considerable hope for a "more equable" treatment of the Negro because of the "peaceful revolution" of 1933 was voiced yesterday by Rayford W. Logan, assistant director of The Journal of Negro History, Atlanta, at a conference on Negro student problems under the auspices of the National Students' League in International House, 500 Riverside Drive.

Mrs. Jennie Patterson, mother of Haywood Patterson, convicted Scottsboro youth, was applauded when she was introduced to the audience.

Mr. Logan, in answer to the urging of J. B. Matthews, executive secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, and Richard B. Moore of the International Labor Defense, that "oppressed" Negroes unite against "capitalism," declared there was no prospect of inciting communism among the Negroes in the South and that any such attempt showed "abysmal ignorance." He pointed out that the Negro had been a "passive" factor throughout American history.

VENUE SHIFT IS SOUGHT.

Scottsboro Defense Prepares for Second Trial—Guardsmen Present.

DECATUR, Ala., April 16 (AP).—A new move to transfer the Scottsboro case from North Alabama appeared certain tonight as attorneys, witnesses and veniremen gathered for the trial of Charlie Weems, second of nine Negroes to face retrial.

Weems's trial was set for tomorrow in Morgan Circuit Court under a change of venue from Jackson County, where he and seven companions were sentenced to death two years ago for an alleged attack on two white women aboard a freight train.

Joseph R. Brodsky of New York, employed by the International Labor Defense in behalf of the defendants, asked on April 8 for a continuance to gather evidence to support a motion for change of venue.

To this Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of defense counsel, added the word in New York last night that a change of venue "probably to Mobile" would be asked on the contention that prejudice here would prevent a fair trial.

If the movement fails, then a motion to quash the venire because of alleged "systematic and arbitrary exclusion of Negroes" from juries "solely because of their race" will be filed.

This action was taken in behalf of Heywood Patterson of Chattanooga, first of the defendants to be retried. A jury convicted him with the death penalty last Sunday.

Mr. Leibowitz, last night in New York, said: "We will charge our lives were threatened, that during the trial [of Patterson] it was necessary to have military protection and that this surely indicates, without doubt, that we cannot obtain fair trials in Decatur, which is a hotbed of intolerance and open prejudice."

None of the defense attorneys had arrived late today. The defendants were still confined in jail at Birmingham, but probably will be brought here before 8 A. M. tomorrow. National Guardsmen have already returned here.

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., directing the prosecution, has announced that he will oppose motions for continuance, change of venue or motion to quash the venire. He announced that the State had again had subpoenaes issued for Ruby Bates, a Huntsville millworker, and Lester Carter of Knoxville, whose testimony in the previous trial was directed principally at the testimony of Mrs. Victoria Price.

Mass Meeting Urges Trial Delay.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 16.—Resolutions urging that the remaining Scottsboro retrials be held in Birmingham only after the State Supreme Court has acted on an appeal in the case of Heywood Patterson, recently re-convicted, were adopted at a mass meeting here today under auspices of the Citizens Scottsboro Aid Committee.

Several hundred persons, white and Negro, attended.

Bishop B. G. Shaw of the African Methodist Church, Zion, expressed faith in the "new South" that "is emerging out of the education of youth, both black and white."

Other speakers included Gaines T. Bradford, Negro, editor of The Birmingham World; P. D. Davis, Negro, president of the Birmingham Civic Association; Dr. Howard Caster of Nashville, southern director of the Board of Reconciliation, and Mrs. Martha Baldwin, Mrs. Mary Cooper and Miss Jane Speed, Southern white women and representatives of the International Labor Defense.

Samuel Leibowitz, New York, head of the Scottsboro trials defense, was scheduled to speak but telegraphed regrets.

Miss Speed condemned "the vicious sentence" of Patterson and blamed "the landlords and industrialists responsible for the poverty of white and Negro workers and for the thousands of young women who are forced into the streets by starvation wages."

Reds Organizing Colored Folk in Scottsboro Case

By TOM CASSIDY.
(Staff Correspondent of The News)

Decatur, Ala., March 30.—New York Communists are organizing colored citizenry here for demonstrations as a prelude to the trial of Haywood Patterson and six colored co-defendants for attacks on two white girl hoboes.

The Red partisans disclaimed all acquaintance with Joseph Brodsky, attorney representing the International Labor Defense on the case, who is rated as a realist among the radical groups who have been sponsoring the cause of the seven youths condemned to the electric chair pending a retrial of their case. Brodsky, who is really working with Samuel Leibowitz, famous New York lawyer and chief of the defense counsel, to save the doomed septet is nationally famous as the leading counsel for the labor defense, which is connected with the Communist party.

Hearing Is Prolonged.

The trial of Patterson, on a separate indictment, did not get under way today due to the prolongation of a hearing on the motion of Leibowitz, to quash the venire of jurymen from which twelve jurors will be picked to try the seven youths.

Leibowitz, who called a dozen colored witnesses to prove they were citizens of this county of good moral repute and qualified to serve as jurors and had never been placed on the jury rolls because of their color, summoned a J. Tidwell, white Commissioner of Jurors, as his last witness for the day.

Angers Jury Commisioner.

Tidwell testified he didn't know whether the jurors picked by his commission in this, or any other case, were "black, white or yellow."

"Is that an honest answer?" Leibowitz demanded.

"Do you mean to say——?" the witness said, bristling.

The New York criminal lawyer who is defending the seven youths accused of assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price in a railroad gondola car on the night of March 25, 1931, announced:

"I did not mean to say anything, I'm asking a question."

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. said that he didn't feel that the witness was being badgered and the question was not pressed.

Influx of N. Y. Reds.

The Communist agitation was begun by imported sympathizers who have canvassed the colored communities and asked the residents to attend Red rallies for the benefit of the seven members of their race who are now getting a second trial for their lives as a result of a Supreme Court decision reversing their original conviction.

Plans for the demonstration have been accompanied by the influx of New York Red sympathizers posing as newspaper men, but refusing to commit themselves as to their newspaper connections.

Leibowitz Scores Point.

Cross-examination of defense colored witnesses today by Attorney General Knight brought out a question from the State on the "Good moral character" provision of the Alabama jury regulations.

A colored man, who had testified he was qualified for jury duty in every way except by reason of arbitrary bars against his race, was asked by Knight:

"Haven't you had trouble with your wife?"

Leibowitz objected and roared:

"If every one who has had trouble with his wife in any community was barred from jury service there wouldn't be any juries."

Wins Right to Scan Roll.

Just before court closed Leibowitz won the right to inspect the secret jury roll from which jury men are chosen in this county. Leibowitz will seek to show that not a single name inscribed upon the roll is that of a member of the colored race. Leibowitz asked the prosecution to concede that such was the case, but the Attorney General refused.

Most of the colored witnesses subpoenaed by Leibowitz for today's session were college graduates. Today's lone defendant, Patterson, and his six co-defendants in the nearby jail, who face separate trials, caressed rabbits feet and horseshoes, trial good luck omens sent them by members of their own race here.

Decatur, Ala., April 2.—Victoria Price, married Alabama mill worker, who forsook her fireside for hobo adventure, is slated to be the first prosecution witness tomorrow in the trial of Haywood Patterson, the first of the Scottsboro colored youths to go on retrial for ~~attacks on Mrs.~~ Price and her chum, Ruby Bates.

Young Patterson, who will be tried for the attack on Mrs. Price, is being defended by Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York criminal attorney, as the result of a reversal by the Supreme Court of the United States of the original conviction of himself and his six codefendants.

Decatur was quiet tonight following the action of Leibowitz in ordering from town all members of the lunatic fringe of the radical espousers of the convicted youths' cause.

Wants No Propaganda.

"I am not interested in the affairs of the Communist Party or any other group in the conduct of this case," the New York counsel said. "I am interested solely in saving these innocent boys from the electric chair, and I will do my best to see that their case is not endangered by propaganda or agitation from any quarter. I have ordered the irresponsibles away and they must stay away."

Attorney General Knight of Alabama, prosecutor in Scottsboro case, in action.

The jury of three farmers and nine townsmen, one of the latter a banker, will listen to a gruelling examination of the Price woman by Leibowitz, who has been investigating the background of her charges for weeks.

Ruby Bates, Mrs. Price's girl friend of the gondola car in which they charge the colored youngsters ravished them after chasing a group of white boys away, is still missing from the Huntsville home she left suddenly a few weeks ago.

Jurors Go to Church.

The white jurors, whose color was declared by defense counsel to be arbitrarily designated by jury boards in violation of the defendants' rights under the Fourteenth Amendment, attended St. John's Episcopal Church here this morning.

Although most of the members subscribed to other creeds, mainly Baptist and Methodist, they journeyed to the home church of Eugene E. Graves, their banker colleague.

There they listened to a sermon which in no way touched on the Scottsboro case, but in which an impassioned pulpit plea for toleration and the banishment of hatred was made.

"We must enlarge our vision," the Rev. Peter Mack Dennis, the Rector, declared, "and we must banish hatred and hypocrisy."

Leibowitz Risking His Life. Say Alabaman

By MARY HEATON VORSE

This article was especially written for the Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance.

DECATUR, Ala., April 5.—The first phase of the trial of the nine Negroes accused of attacking two white girls near Scottsboro ended with what is everywhere considered a victory for the defense.

More than the Scottsboro boys are on trial. The defense has attacked the jury system of the South. It has attacked the white control of the courts and the legal machinery of the State.

Between the opening of this famous trial, March 27, and adjournment for a week-end recess, March 31, the defense proved that no Negroes appear on the jury lists of Decatur, in direct defiance of the Fourteenth Amendment. The exclusion of Negroes from all jury lists admittedly lays the foundation for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in case the nine Negroes are found guilty.

The audience of men is tense and absorbed, fascinated by the cleverness of the defense counsel and at the same time execrating him for it. To many in the audience the courtroom has been movie theatre and lecture room in one. They are trained to appreciate the fine points of a great trial lawyer—and Samuel Leibowitz is more than a great trial lawyer; he is a supreme artist.

HE plays upon his audience with an incredible mastery. His methods are quiet, simple, unhistrionic. Whenever he opens his mouth there is the excitement of drama. He has a clever face, a fresh color, grayish hair, and he is challenging the very essence of the Southern system. No wonder the men bend forward in their seats. Two well dressed old men behind me are saying:—

"It'll be a wonder if ever he leaves town alive."

A fine looking young fellow next to me confides, "I'll be surprised if they let him finish the trial."

"Do you mean there's a movement on foot to railroad him out of town?"

"They do say there is. They ain't advertisin' or makin' speeches, but they'll know what to do when the time comes."

He has received many threatening letters. Friday night additional guardsmen were sent for to guard his apartment.

This hostility is as yet restrained and under the surface but a very real factor to be reckoned with.

Next to the officers sits the black boy Heywood Patterson. He is dressed in blue overalls, and he is so black that there is a blue bloom on his wide face.

Meanwhile all the prominent Negroes in the community are filing before the Judge, being questioned as to their fitness for jury duty and asked whether they have ever been called for such duty. There are doctors, ministers, professors, business men. Almost all have college degrees—some more than one. They are grave men, of substance, and of course not one has ever been called to jury duty. All say they would be glad to serve. One of the most significant things of this trial is the rallying to the defense of the accused Negroes of educated and well to do colored people. A company of twenty-five Negroes has come from Scottsboro to testify on this jury question. They have come in many instances voluntarily, without subpoenaes. They are willing to serve on juries, and to do these things is to face a real danger.

WARNING BY JUDGE AT ALABAMA TRIAL

THREATS ARE REPORTED

Militiamen Report Meeting Was Held Near Court House to Protest Defense Tactics.

LEIBOWITZ IS PROTECTED

Medical Witness Is Skeptical of Testimony Given by Alleged Victim of Defendants.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, April 5.—A dramatic pronouncement from the bench interrupted the trial of Haywood Patterson today as he and five other Negroes testified before Judge ~~James E.~~ Horton that Victoria Price swore falsely that they attacked her on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago.

Taking official notice of reports that a mob was plotting to lynch the nine Negro prisoners lodged in the rickety old jail and run Samuel S. Leibowitz, their chief counsel, out of town, Judge Horton ordered the National Guardsmen on duty here to shoot at the first sign of trouble and to shoot to kill.

Despite the increasing impatience of residents of Jackson and Morgan Counties with the painstaking defense prepared for the Negroes by the International Labor Defense, a Communist adjunct, today's proceedings were not marked by the slightest demonstration, not even when Patterson charged that he was "framed" at his first trial in Scottsboro.

The crowd of countrymen in overalls and blue denim shirts listened attentively as Dr. E. E. Reisman, Chattanooga gynecologist, explained to the jury that the Price woman's story of the attack contained biological inconsistencies.

Skeptical of Woman's Evidence.

The medical testimony offered by the State against the nine defendants at Scottsboro and against Patterson here, said Dr. Reisman, was sufficient in itself to make a man of science skeptical about Mrs. Price's statement that she was attacked by six Negroes an hour and a half or two hours prior to her examination at Scottsboro.

The Negroes who denied their guilt today were Willie Robertson, Olen Montgomery, Ozie Powell, Andy Wright, Eugene Williams and Patterson. The first three denied that they had engaged in a fight with the white youths or had seen the girls on the train, while the last three denied seeing the girls but admitted participating in the fracas with the white youths.

Aside from the six accused Negroes and Dr. Reisman, the only other witness of the day was Percy Ricks, fireman of the freight train on which Mrs. Price said she was attacked. He testified that when the Negroes were taken off at Paint Rock by an armed posse, the two women seemed just as anxious to get away as the Negroes.

"I saw them both running up toward the engine," he said. "Some of the men with shotguns came around and headed them off. Then they turned and ran the other way until another batch of men came up from that direction and stopped them."

While the Negroes were testifying, Judge Horton, after a whispered consultation with Attorney General Knight and Captain Joseph Burleson, commanding the militia here, ordered the jury taken from the court. He then delivered his warning in phrases that fell from his lips like the bullets he promised to lynchers.

"The court wishes to make an announcement," he began. "The audience generally has been orderly and has given respectful attention to the testimony for the most part. These prisoners were given protection at the trial in Scottsboro, and the Sheriff's force and the National Guardsmen are here to protect them now.

"The court also wants it known that it will protect any one else connected with this trial. Whether or not the reports of impending trouble have any foundation, the court does not know. Sometimes rumors occur that are without foundation, but sometimes they reach the point where notice must be taken of them.

"The court is conscious of this fact, that it is trying to arrive only at the truth in this case. If these defendants are guilty they should be punished. If they are not guilty, they should be acquitted. That is for the court and the jury to determine.

"Any one outside, who has not heard the testimony and who attempts to prejudge the case has no right to be heard. These prisoners are under the protection of the court. The court intends to protect them."

No Tolerance for Mob Spirit.

At this point Judge Horton raised his voice, and his face was stern as he continued:

"Any group of men, and I don't say that there are such, who attempt to take the law into their own hands, are unworthy of the protection of the State of Alabama. They are unfit to be citizens. Men who would join in anything that would cause the death of these Negroes not only are murderers, but cowardly murderers.

"The soldiers and the Sheriff's men are expected to defend these prisoners with their lives. Any man who defies them may expect to forfeit his life.

"I have no tolerance for mob spirit. Your very civilization depends upon the carrying out of your laws in an orderly manner.

"I am going to strengthen the guard if necessary and, remember, you've got to kill these guards before you get these prisoners. The guards understand that. When it comes to a question of right and wrong there can be no compromise.

"If there are any meetings in this town where such matters are discussed, the men who attend them should be ashamed of themselves."

From officers of the National Guard it was learned that a mass meeting, to which 200 young men of the community were invited by telephone, was held in a hall near the court house last night to "protest against the manner in which Mr. Leibowitz has examined the State's witnesses." There was talk there, the officers said, of riding the New York lawyer out of town and lynching the Negroes.

Upon learning of the meeting, Captain Burleson sent several of his men to the apartment hotel where Mr. Leibowitz is staying and doubled the guard around the jail.

Undercover men reported to Captain Burleson that the strategy of the lynchers, if they decide to flout the warning of the court, will be to start trouble at the apartment house to draw off the force at the jail. Mrs. Leibowitz, who has been with her husband here, left for New York tonight.

"We'll be ready for them if they come," said Captain Burleson. "Just because my men and I are Southerners and these prisoners are Negroes need not lead any one to think we won't do our duty. So long as we have a piece of ammunition or a man alive, those prisoners will be protected."

Arrangements have been made with the local fire department to send an engine to the jail at the first sign of trouble. The cold water treatment will be used first, Captain Burleson said. If that does not disperse the mob, tear gas bombs will be thrown. Bayonets and bullets will be reserved as a last resort but if they are used it will be to kill, said the young National Guard officer.

John Thompson, solicitor of Jackson County who prosecuted the Negroes at their first trial, said feeling was even more intense in Scottsboro today than it was two years ago, but that he had heard nothing of a lynching mob forming there. Scottsboro is more than fifty miles away.

"There might be trouble though," he conceded, "if these Negroes are acquitted or if the trial lasts too long. The first trial cost the people of Jackson County about $3,000 and this one will cost double that amount."

Each of the Negroes who testified today was confronted by the record of his testimony at the previous trial. Attorney General Knight questioned them sharply on even the most minute discrepancies, causing frequent objections by Mr. Liebowitz and warnings by the court to the Attorney General.

The Scottsboro Cases Again

THE interest of all reasonable persons, particularly those concerned with liberal doctrines and the assurance of equal rights to all, irrespective of color or creed, is focused upon the retrial of the seven Negroes in Alabama. The men were convicted once on charge of attacking two white girls on board a freight train. Their cases were appealed to the United States supreme court, where the decisions were reversed on the ground that mob sentiment swayed the outcome of the trial. The cases are being heard again at Decatur Ala.

Developments at the beginning of the present trial again establish doubts as to the strict legality of the proceedings. The attorney for one youth refused to enter a plea on the ground that the grand jury which had indicted the young man was made up entirely of white men, and the charge that negroes had been denied the right to serve on this grand jury. The judge overruled his objection, after which the same question was raised concerning the trial jury, the panel for which was made up entirely of white men. The attorney pointed out again that the banning of negroes on the jury is a violation of the spirit of the 14th amendment to the federal constitution. As this is written the point is still unsettled, the court granting a request for a subpoena of the jury rolls of Jackson county, where the trial is taking place.

No one in unaware of the reason these conditions exist, of course. The states of the south have found it expedient to evade the spirit of the 14th amendment in a number of ways. Residents of the south believe that they have legitimate excuses for the action, which is a matter for debate, with no decision in prospect. In a case of this sort, however, it would seem to most northerners that the sensible thing to do is make sure that these youths get an absolutely fair trial this time, since the decision of the Alabama courts has been overthrown once. The way to insure this is to give negroes equal representation in the drawing of jurymen, to guard against prejudicial incidents during the trial; in short, to treat these defendants as the constitution seeks to guarantee they shall be treated.

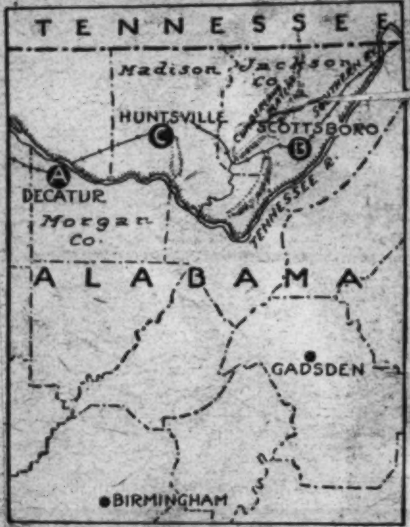
New Color Bar Fight Begins for 'Scottsboro' 7

By TOM CASSIDY.
(Staff Correspondent of The News)

Decatur, Ala., March 29.—Threatening letters from cranks in several sections of the South were received today by Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, for the seven Scottsboro colored youths charged with attacking two white girl hoboes, on the eve of the trial of the seven in Morgan County courthouse tomorrow.

Leibowitz, with whom International Labor Defense Attorney Joseph Brodsky, and Gen. G. W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, Tenn., are associated, will open tomorrow morning by filing a motion to quash the venire on the ground that colored persons are excluded from jury duty here because they are members of the African race.

This motion is similar to that already denied by Judge James E. Horton of the Circuit Court in connection with the failure of the nearby County of Jackson to include members of the colored race on the grand or petit juries which considered the cases of the seven youths now facing a second trial for their lives.



The Scottsboro trial is being held at Decatur, Ala. (A), on change of venue from Scottsboro (B), where the attack against two girls is supposed to have occurred on Southern Railway freight train. Ruby Bates, one of girls attacked, who is now missing, lives at Huntsville (C).

"I will subpoena 200 witnesses all colored and reputable and educated members of this county to prove that my clients are not getting a trial—even here—by a jury of their peers," Leibowitz announced.

As Leibowitz and the youthful and pleasant-voiced Attorney General for the State of Alabama, Thomas E. Knight Jr., prepared to lock horns today on the pre-trial motion and the actual beginning of the trial itself, a search was renewed for Ruby Bates, one of the two young feminine railroaders who has been missing a month.

Miss Bates, whose father called on Attorney General Knight this morning about his daughter, accuses the seven colored youngsters now prepared for a second trial, two other colored juveniles, and three fellow colored boys who eluded a posse of attacking them in a gondola car near Scottsboro in the early dusk of March 25, 1931.

The Scottsboro Boys Cry for Help!

Daily Worker

New York N.Y.

"Sitting on a Mountain of TNT"—Leibowitz, I.L.D. attorney, wired to the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle.

In a little town in Alabama nine Negro boys have become the symbol of working class unity.

In the Scottsboro case thirteen million Negroes and millions of white workers in America are face to face with boss-class justice in all its brutal nakedness.

The eyes of the world are on the Scottsboro boys!

These boys are now in gravest, most immediate danger.

For two years they have been imprisoned in a death-cell.

For two years the workers of the world have saved these boys from death in the electric chair which stared at them across from their cell doors.

Now their lives are in grave danger from a lynch mob organized by all the forces at the disposal of the Southern rulers.

The Alabama office of the I. L. D. is crying for help. The defense is hampered in its work through lack of funds. The situation is not only serious. The whole defense is menaced.

Chief trial attorney Leibowitz is contributing his services free in addition to paying his own expenses in connection with the case. The funds contributed by the workers go to pay for the most urgent expenses, including transportation and feeding of witnesses, court records and investigation.

The National office of the I. L. D. appeals to all workers and their sympathizers, to all organizations, to all friends of these innocent Negro boys, to collect funds and bring them immediately, today and tomorrow, to their district I. L. D. office, or rush by wire, airmail, and special delivery to the National Office, Room 430, 80 East 11th Street, New York City.

The International Labor Defense has issued a penny stamp in sheets of one hundred, which workers employed and unemployed can sell in their neighborhoods, factories, offices and at mass meetings. Each sheet sells for one dollar. Rush one dollar to the National Office of the I. L. D. for a stamp-sheet which will be sent you immediately. As you sell the stamps you will get your dollar back.

The Scottsboro boys are knocking at your door for help!

Help save them from lynching by sending telegrams of protest, demanding full protection for all defense witnesses and lawyers, freedom and safety for Ruby Bates, a change of venue to Birmingham for the cases of the other boys, immediate, safe, and unconditional release of the nine boys, to Governor B. M. Miller, Montgomery, Ala.; Judge James E. Horton, Decatur, Ala.; Attorney - General Thomas E. Knight, Decatur, Ala.; President Roosevelt, Washington, D. President Roosevelt, Washington, D.C.

Help the defense by rushing every penny, nickel, dime, dollar, you can to the Scottsboro New Trial Emergency Fund, of the International Labor Defense, Room 430, 80 E. 11th Street, New York City.

NEW YORK ATTACKED IN SCOTTSBORO TRIAL

Prosecutors Also Hint at Perjury in Its "Surprise Testimony."

MISTRIAL MOTION FAILS

But Judge Instructs Jurors to Ignore Remarks of County Solicitor at Decatur.

DEFENSE ARGUMENT OPENS

Leibowitz Will Conclude This Morning and Case Is Expected to Reach the Jury Today.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 7.—The issue of Alabama against New York City and the clothes, manners and customs of its people was brought up here today before Judge James E. Horton and the jury which is trying Haywood Patterson, a Negro, for his life.

Summing up for the State at the close of the first of the new "Scottsboro trials," Wade Wright, circuit solicitor of Morgan County, made a frank appeal to local pride, sectionalism, race hatred and bigotry.

"Show them," he said—pointing at the counsel table at which were seated Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief defense counsel, and Joseph Brodsky, counsel for the International Labor Defense, a Communist affiliate—"show them that Alabama justice cannot be bought and sold with Jew money from New York."

At this remark, Mr. Leibowitz arose and asked the judge to declare a mistrial.

"Conviction now, after what he has said, will not be worth a pinch of snuff," he asserted.

The court denied the motion and Mr. Wright continued along the same line, while Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, the chief prosecuting officer of the State, fidgeted in his chair.

When the circuit solicitor finished, Judge Horton told the jury to disregard Wright's statement about "Jew money from New York."

Mr. Leibowitz then began his appeal, urging the jurors to give the Negro defendant the benefit of the "reasonable doubts."

The New York attorney had not finished when the court declared a recess until tomorrow morning. Mr. Leibowitz will then conclude his final argument and Attorney General Knight will say the last word for the State. After that Judge Horton will charge the jurors, and they probably will begin deliberations by noon.

"New York Clothes" a Target.

Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey opened the State's argument. In his address there were several references to the "fancy New York clothes" which Lester Carter and Ruby Bates were wearing when they appeared as surprise witnesses for the defense, the girl repudiating her former story of an attack and the young white "hobo" charging Victoria Price, the other alleged victim, with a "frame-up."

His remarks were of such a nature, however, that Mr. Leibowitz took no exception to them. But when Mr. Wright, whose voice has raised him to pre-eminence among local all-day singers, began to speak all the hatred and prejudice that these cases have aroused bubbled to the surface.

Mr. Wright spoke of the reversal of the Supreme Court of Alabama by the United States Supreme Court after Communist sympathizers took up the cudgels for the nine Negro defendants, all but one of whom had been sentenced to die in the electric chair.

But it was New York City, "its sinister influence," and the Jews on which he dwelt and upon which he turned the full flower of his oratory.

Defending the story of the Price woman, Mr. Wright asked the jury:

"Did you ever hear of a more damnable effort to destroy and break down this girl? How did they do it.

"That man Carter is a new kind of a man to me. Did you watch his hands? If he had been with Brodsky another two weeks he would have been down here with a pack on his back a-trying to sell you goods. Are you going to countenance that sort of thing?"

From a front-row seat among the spectators there came a resonant "No!" uttered with the fervor of "Amen" in church.

Woman's Testimony Attacked.

Saying that Carter's rent in New York had been paid by Mr. Brodsky, Mr. Wright went on:

"Don't you know these people, these defense witnesses, are bought and paid for?

"May the Lord have mercy on the soul of Ruby Bates!

"Now the question in this case is this:

"Is justice going to be bought and sold in Alabama with Jew money from New York?"

Mr. Leibowitz interposed here with a mistrial motion and after it was denied Mr. Wright continued:

"It was Brodsky, too, who brought in Ruby Bates. The same Brodsky who put the fancy city clothes, New York clothes, on Lester Carter, and I tell you, gentlemen, that Ruby Bates was guilty of perjury right here in this court room. And there is such a thing as subornation of perjury."

The Bates girl "couldn't tell you all the things that happened in New York because part of it was in the Jew language," he said.

Mr. Wright then attacked the testimony relative to Ruby Bates's presence in "hobo jungles."

He referred to Carter as "Mr. Carterinsky, as he is now," and Mr. Leibowitz again asked for a mistrial, this motion also being denied.

Mr. Wright concluded with the statement that a verdict of guilty in this case "will resound around the world as a victory for law enforcement."

When he had finished Judge Horton said:

"The court rules that the statement regarding Jew money from New York was simply improper and unjustified, and the court asks you members of the jury to disregard it and put it out of your minds."

In opening his argument, Mr. Leibowitz explained that "all New Yorkers do not have horns."

"The least said about sectionalism and prejudice the better," he declared.

"Now, I'm not going to assault your ears with any such ranting and raising the roof as you have been forced to hear from the gentleman seated over there. I shall appeal to your reason as logical, intelligent human beings, determined to give even this poor scrap of colored humanity a fair, square deal.

"What is the argument of the learned solicitor? Change the charge and you would hear the same stereotyped phrases. 'The fair State of Alabama, foreigners,' and all the rest of that claptrap.

"What is it but an appeal to prejudice, to sectionalism, to bigotry? What he is saying is, 'Come on, boys! We can lick this Jew from New York! Stick it into him! We're among our home folk.'

"It was the speech of a man taking an unfair advantage—a hangman's speech."

Not There as "Consoler."

Mr. Leibowitz surveyed the court room crowd. He has been threatened with tar and feathers, with whipping and with gunpowder and lead.

"Now, as for the Jew money from New York, let me say this: That when the hour of our country's need came there was no question of Jew or gentile, of black or white—all, all together in the smoke and flame of Flanders Fields.

"Now, I'm not getting any fee in this case and I'm not getting a penny of expenses for myself and my wife, who was here with me.

"Mobs mean nothing to me. Let them hang me; I don't care. Life is only an incident in the Creator's scheme of things, but if I can contribute my little bit to see that justice is served, then my mission is fulfilled."

Mr. Leibowitz said he was not here as a crusader nor to ask social equality for Negroes, "but to see that the law guaranteeing equal protection to all races in our courts is observed."

In rebuttal evidence Attorney General Knight sought to introduce the testimony of a white inmate of Kilby prison, whose death sentence for murder has been commuted by the Governor to tell the jury that while Patterson was in the death house he expressed the wish that he "had killed those girls." Judge Horton refused to allow the witness, Burtus Frost, to testify and the lifer left the court room with a prison guard.

The Bates girl was recalled but quickly excused by Mr. Knight after Judge Horton ruled that her cross-examination had been concluded and that if she were to testify at all it would be as the Attorney General's witness.

W. H. Hill, the station agent at Paint Rock, where an armed posse stopped the train on which the attacks are alleged to have taken place, testified that the Bates girl, who declares now that she "only told what Victoria told" at the first trials, was the one who told him the Negroes had attacked her.

Wire Roosevelt of "Klan Mobs."

A statement that Ku Klux Klan mobs were being organized to lynch the Scottsboro defendants was telegraphed to President Roosevelt yesterday by William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense.

The message urged the President to "guarantee the safety of these people in Alabama, where law enforcement is non-existent, so far as protection to Negroes or any one interested in preventing murder of Negroes is concerned."

The International Labor Defense said that protest demonstrations will be held all over the country today under its auspices "against the attempts to lynch the Scottsboro boys."

The New York demonstration will start with a mobilization at 110th Street and Fifth Avenue at 2 P. M., followed by a march through Harlem, it was announced.

Alabama Trial 'World Issue,' Leibowitz Says

Asks Jury to Disregard Race and Creed as He Gives His Final Argument

Rule Out Death Cell Story

State Sums Up Today, Deliberations Will Begin

By The Associated Press

DECATUR, Ala., April 7.—Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief of defense in the retrial of the Scottsboro case, closed his argument to the jury tonight with the statement that a "world issue" was involved in its decision on the fate of Heywood Patterson, nineteen-year-old Negro charged with attacking a white woman.

Leibowitz had called attention of the jurors to the international interest in the case and added: "You are deciding more than the guilt or innocence of this Negro. You are deciding a world issue."

Since March, 1931, when Patterson and eight other Negroes were taken from a train at Paint Rock, Ala., and charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, individuals and organizations throughout the world have sent protests on the handling of the case to Alabama authorities.

Jury Likely to Get Case by Noon

Even during the current trial, as reports of mobs forming have been circulated, Thomas E. Knight jr., Attorney General, has received many telegrams demanding protection for the defendants and their counsel. The Negroes have been under protection of National Guardsmen throughout the trial. There was no demonstration during the arguments.

Leibowitz asked the jury to disregard race or creed and pleaded for tolerance and reason. Previously he had shouted his defiance of "any mob."

After three hours of arguments the court recessed until tomorrow and Leibowitz said he would consume about one hour more. After he finishes Attorney General Knight will close for the state. The jury probably will get the case by noon tomorrow.

Machinery of the trial whirred swiftly following the surprise appearance yesterday of Ruby Bates, who had been missing from her Huntsville, Ala. home for several weeks.

The girl walked into court yesterday saying she had just arrived from a hitch-hike trip to New York. Before tense jury and spectators she repudiated her testimony in the first trial of the Negroes at Scottsboro, that she and Mrs. Price had been attacked on a freight train.

Mrs. Price, in this second trial, has reaffirmed her previous testimony, declaring the Negroes attacked her after they had thrown several white boys from the train as it sped across Sand Mountain.

Calls New York Influence "Sinister"

Alternate pleas for death in the electric chair and acquittal were presented as attorneys summed up the evidence late today.

"The State of Alabama wants you, if this testimony shows the defendant innocent, to turn him loose," said Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of Boaz, Ala., who was prosecutor in the Negroes' trials in 1931. "But, on the other hand, if he is guilty, the State of Alabama wants you to send him to the electric chair. I believe you will be fair."

Mr. Bailey spoke of "sinister influences" in New York and contrasted the appearance of Mrs. Price, in obviously cheap attire, with that of Miss Bates.

"She (Mrs. Price) didn't come here in New York clothes," Mr. Bailey said. "She could have rouged her lips and cheeks and stood on the streets of Huntsville without going out to seek honest toil. We don't say that she is what she should have been. She has erred, but our laws say no man shall lay a hand on a woman against her will."

The argument of Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatur, was twice interrupted by Leibowwitz to enter motions for a mistrial, both of which were overruled by Judge James E. Horton. When Judge Horton overruled his motion for a mistrial, Mr. Liebowitz said

"I submit, your Honor, that a conviction in this case will not be worth a pinch of snuff."

A moment later, as Wright disparaged the testimony of Lester Carter, a defense witness, he referred to him as "Mr. Carterinsky, now," and again Mr. Leibowitz entered a motion for a mistrial on the grounds that it was raising prejudice. Mr. Wright had previously referred to witnesses being "bought with Jew money."

Perjury Charge Is Raised

He declared Ruby Bates had perjured herself. The charge was declared by George W. Chamlee sr., of Chattanooga, first speaker for the defense, to be a "fabrication."

"I want to uphold the principles of womanhood in the South," he said after telling the jury he was Southern born, and the son of a Confederate soldier.

Rebuttal by the state ended at noon after Judge Horton had sustained objections of the defense to the testimony of Vertus Frost, Kilby Prison life prisoner, as to assertions of Patterson while he was lodged in the death cell at Montgomery.

Reports of imminent mob action continued to flare here and in Huntsville, but died as quickly in the face of investigation by county officers and National Guardsmen.

Lynchers Ready, Roosevelt Told

Charges that "Ku-Klux Klan lynch mobs are being organized to murder the Scottsboro boys" were contained in a telegram sent to President Roosevelt last night by William L. Patterson, secretary of the International Labor Defense, according to The Associated Press.

The International Labor Defense which has provided counsel for the Negro youths, announced that demonstrations would be held today in New York and other cities in protest against these "lynch attempts."

The demonstrations also will demand "freedom and safety for Ruby Bates, who has been threatened with injury because she had the courage to repudiate her framed testimony . . . against Scottsboro boys."

Negroes Will Face Second Prosecution at Decatur on Change of Venue.

MOTION TO QUASH LOST

New York, N.Y.

Ruling on the Issue of Absence of Negro Jurors Is Left for the Trial Court.

From a Staff Correspondent.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 7.—The new trial which the United States Supreme Court ordered for the eight Negroes sentenced to die after conviction of attacking two white girls nearly two years ago will not be held in Jackson County, still embittered, in which they were first convicted.

In a courtroom crowded with mountaineers, Judge A. E. Hawkins granted a defense motion this afternoon for a change of venue and set the place of trial in Decature, the seat of Morgan County, some fifty miles west of Scottsboro.

Judge Hawkins, who presided over the first trials, declined, however, to rule on a defense motion to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which indicted the defendants and the petit jury which found them guilty and decreed their electrocution.

He left that issue, which leading members of the bar of Jackson County said never had been raised since the reconstruction period, to be decided by the judge before whom the new trial will be held. Judge Horton of Athens, Ala., is expected to preside at the new trial. He stated that a jury panel probably could not be convened before March 17, but expressed the opinion that arrangements would be made for bringing the prisoners from Kilby prison at Bontgomery to Decatur for arraignment and pleading in a few days.

Ruling Not Opposed.

The State, represented by its dapper young Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., a son of the Supreme Court Justice who wrote the opinion of the highest court in Alabama affirming the conviction and sentence of the accused Negroes, but was reversed by the Supreme Federal Tribunal, did not oppose the motion for a change of venue.

"I am not opposing this motion," he said, "because I want the people of all these United States to know that these defendants will get a fair trial. They had one when they were tried here and convicted and they will get a fair trial, regardless of what county of Alabama is chosen for their trial now.

"The people of Jackson County are to be commended for their restraint in this case. They have not sought to influence any one half so much as these outside organizations which have come in here and tried to influence the rest of the country to believe that an injustice has been done here.

The "outside organizations" to whom Mr. Knight referred are the radical and other groups in New York and other cities that have fought for a new trial for the defendants, especially the international labor defense which was represented by three attorneys at today's hearing. These were G. W. Chamlee, a former Attorney General of Hamilton County, in which Chattanooga is situated and two New Yorkers, Irving Schwab and Miss Carol King.

They had hoped that Judge Hawkins would select Birmingham, for the new trial in the belief that race prejudice would be less strong in an urban community and when he announced his decision to move it to Decatur, in the interest of economy, there was a slight grumble of disappointment from their table. Mr. Chamlee said that "the same need for military protection will exist there as existed here."

Promises Military Protection.

Mr. Knight interrupted him heatedly, exclaiming: "There'll be protection for them. If it's necessary to call out every company of militia in the State of Alabama to give them a fair trial, we'll do it."

The proceedings were held on the second floor of the county court house which forms the centre of the little square of buildings making up the business section of a town of some 3,500 persons.

As the hearing proceeded, the jurors, twelve bewhiskered mountaineers in the overalls and boots uniform of the countryside, lounged in their chairs on a platform facing the bench and glared at the visitors from New York. Behind them sat twelve rows of lantern-jawed men of similar mien and costume. There wasn't a Negro in the court house or near it while the case was being considered.

The case had its origin nearly two years ago on the night of March 25, 1931, when Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, two unemployed millworkers of Huntsville, who had gone to Chattanooga in a vain search for jobs, boarded a freight car to steal a ride home. Several white men were then in the box-car.

Before they had gone half-way home, according to the story the girls told, twelve negroes swarmed into the car, picked a fight with the white men and threw all of them off at Stevenson, save one named Orville Gillis. The girls alleged that the Negroes then attacked them. Although Gillis is said to have been a witness to the crime, the State did not call him as a witness at the first trial.

The white men who had been thrown off the train telegraphed the news ahead, and at Paint Rock, a little town the other side of Scottsboro, an armed posse of deputy sheriffs and citizens stopped the train and took off the Negroes. The deputy sheriffs did not tell the others in the posse of the alleged attack on the girls, letting them believe that the arrests were made for a fight with the white men on the train. If the truth had been known at the time, say the citizens of Scottsboro, there never would have been a trial.

Convicted on First Trial.

Three of the Negroes involved in the alleged crime were said to have escaped. Nine others, ranging in afe from 13 to 25, were indicted on charges which in Alabama may bring punishment of from ten years in prison to death, depending upon what are termed "circumstances." While several companies of militiamen stood guard about the court house, which was surrounded by a threatening crowd in a lynching mood, the Negroes were tried and found guilty.

Roy Wright, who at that time was only 13, was conceded to be a juvenile, and the jury which tried him stood eleven to one for conviction and death. He is in prison now in Birmingham, awaiting a new trial. Eugene Williams, who said he was 14, was tried with the others because the authorities thought he was lying about his age. The Supreme Court of Alabama, however, ruled that he must be tried as a juvenile.

The others to be tried anew are Clarence Norris, Charles Williams, Olie Montgomery, Andy Wright, Willie Robertson, Ozie Powell and Haywood Patterson.

Mingled with the racial bitterness over the trial is resentment that Jackson County and Scottsboro should bear the odium and the expense of it. All the Negroes came from points outside Alabama and the two girls were residents of Madison County which lies between Jackson and Morgan Counties where the second trial is to be held.

Shotguns in Crowd.

Feeling is still very strong and there are many in Scottsboro who declare regretfully that the old way of the rope was better than the newer way of the law. Yesterday when the motion to quash the indictment" was offered and there were rumors that the prisoners might be brought from the penitentiary to the court house a large crowd gathered in the square outside.

Many of them had shotguns and their presence caused some anxiety to timorous visitors from New York. Old timers reassured them, however, explaining that it was an old Scottsboro custom on the first Monday of every month to barter for farm implements and produce. It just happened that there were a lot of mountaineers who wanted to swap guns for things they needed more.

It was another coincidence, it was said, that led to reports being broadcast throughout the country that the people of Scottsboro made a roman holiday out of the conviction of the Negroes less than two weeks after their arrest. The militiamen were on duty protecting the prisoners from mob violence and had a band along with them.

When the trial was over the military went through the ceremony of guard mount and at the same time it happened a procession of automobiles led by a steam calliope was passing through town in connection with an advertising stunt. These were just coincidences, nothing more, say the townsfolk.

Just how it came about that the summation of Milo Moody, the lawyer of 70, who was the only member of the Jackson County bar to accept Judge Hawkins's assignment to defend the prisoners, was left out of the record of the trial has not been explained. The defense contends that he made none, but many who were present at the trial insist that he did. Attorney General Knight said he could not find it in the transcript.

Curiosity Unhealthy in Scottsboro.

Whatever one may think of these coincidences, it is well in Scottsboro not to speculate too much. A man who said he was a reporter from Atlanta but who was suspected of being "a Red from New York," was run out of town yesterday because he asked too many questions of Negroes.

In preparing his affidavits in support o fhis motion for a new trial, Mr. Chamlee said he was unable to obtain one from any white man in Scottsboro. The only white man who signed one was Wiley Sisk, a former resident of Scottsboro, who now lives across the State line in Chattanooga. He declare dhe was present in Scottsboro at the time of the trial, that a threatening mob surrounded the Court House and that threats of lynching were made openly.

Another affidavit was filed by the Rev. G. W. Buckner, a Negro preacher, who said that ever since the trial Negroes in Jackson County had been quaking in their boots in fear of mob violence. Mr. Chamlee also affixed the printed copy of an editorial which appeared in The Jackson County Sentinel on April 23, 1931, soon after the question of Negro membership in the trial jury was first raised. It follows:

"The plot thickens."

"We have no editorial this week on the 'Negro trial matter.' We just couldn't do one without getting mad as hell. And why? We refer you to the statement by the 'New York defenders,' appearing in The Chattanooga Times and The Sentinel today. Its arrogance is most astounding. It smacks of trouble. It is the most dangerous movement launched in the South in many years—it brands Jackson County citizenry as little short of being cold-blooded murderers.

"After we forget 'the rope' to pick up 'the code' for the safety and benefit of the Negroes, we are told that we must have Negro jurors on any jury trying the blacks if they are to get 'their rights.' A Negro juror in Jackson County would be a curiosity—and some curiosities are embalmed, you know."

Cannot Recall Negro on Jury.

The oldest citizens of Scottsboro said today they could not recall a time when a Negro had sat upon a jury. There was nothing odd about that, they explained, for there are only about twenty-five Negro voters in the county's population of 36,000.

The Commissioners of Election appointed by the Governor have plenary power to decide on who is eligible to vote. White men are presumed to be competent, but Negroes have to prove it by doing something easy like reciting the Constitution of the United States from beginning to end, if they are so gold as to apply. The twenty-five or so who do vote are eligible because of the "grandfather law" which guarantees the suffrage to any descendant of a soldier of the Confederate or Union Armies.

From a legal point of view, attorneys maintain that since a white man has no right to object to a Negro on his trial jury, a Negro cannot legally complain about the presence of whites. The ratio of whites to Negroes in Jackson County is about three to one, but in counties further south the Negroes outnumber the whites nearly ten to one.

Not only were there no Negroes on the first trial juries but the white men who sat in judgment were nearly all from what is known as the Sand Mountain section where the natives boast of signs reading:

"Nigger—don't let the sun go down on your head."

No doubt exists in Scottsboro that the result of the second trial will be the same as the first, regardless of the change in locale. However, a new complication has arisen. Sheriff T. W. McBryde received a report today from a deputy at Huntsville, who said that Ruby Bates had disappeared from her home there. She was reported to have sent a letter home saying that she was tired of the unwelcome publicity and did not want any more to do with it. The State's attorneys, however, were confident that they could find her.

Search for Missing Witness.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., March 7 (AP). Mystery enveloping the disappearance of Ruby Bates, a principal witness for the State in the Scottsboro case, deepened today as the police met a blank wall in their efforts to pick up her trail.

Mrs. Mary Bates, her mother, told investigators that her daughter left home on Monday night, Feb. 27, and that she had not been heard from since.

"I was afraid she had been kidnapped, and I wouldn't go to the police through fear," Mrs. Bates said.

Mrs. Victoria Price, the other alleged victim of the accused Negroes had not heard from the missing girl.

"I am afraid of trouble, and I never leave my house at night, and in the day time, only when I have some one with me," she told the police.

Change of Venue for Trial of Seven Negroes Is Not Contested by Prosecution

3-8-33

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 7 (AP) Scene of the fight for freedom of seven Negroes facing charges of attack in the "Scottsboro case" Tuesday, was shifted to Decatur, 75 miles west of here, by Judge A. E. Hawkins, who granted to defense motion for a change of venue.

Hopes of the defense for an early trial were checkmated, unless a special term of court is called, as the Morgan county circuit court does not meet again until June.

"I had just about as soon try the cases here," said Irvin Schwab, of New York, member of counsel employed by the International Labor defense to defend the Negroes. "They are the same class of people there."

Macon, Ga.

Schwab asked Judge Hawkins to designate the Jefferson county circuit court at Birmingham for the trial of the Negroes, whom the United States supreme court saved once from the electric chair.

The motion to quash the indictment because no Negroes were included in the grand jury was held in abeyance.

Knight Commends Citizens

Jackson county was commended by Thomas E. Knight, Jr., state attorney general who is directing the prosecution, for being "even tempered."

"The people of Jackson county have done less to swerve the course of justice in the courts of Alabama," said Knight, "than have outside organizations."

Knight interposed no objection to the motion for a change of venue.

The Negroes, Ozie Powell, Olin Montgomery, Charles Weems, Heywood Patterson, Andy Wright, Clarence Norris and Willie Roberson, were not brought here from Kilby prison at Montgomery.

Nine Negroes were taken from the freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., on March 25, 1931, and charged with attacking two young white girls who were "hoboing" their way home to Huntsville, Ala.

After the sentences had been passed here on eight of the Negroes, and the ninth had gotten a mistrial, an appeal to the Alabama Supreme court was made and on March 25, 1932, that court affirmed the sentences of seven, but held the eighth, Eugene Williams, was a juvenile.

The United States Supreme court reversed the death sentences of the other seven.

The ninth Negro, Roy Wright, who gave his age as 14, has been held in jail at Birmingham for nearly two years.

Girl Witness Missing

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., March 7 (AP). One of the principal witnesses in the "Scottsboro case" a young girl to whom a letter repudiating her testimony was attributed, was missing from her home here Tuesday, and police said they could find no trace of her.

Telegraph

The girl, Rudy Bates, young textile operator, police found on investigating a rumor that she was missing, left her home in a mill village here on the night of Feb. 27, and has not been seen since.

3-8-33

"I was afraid she had been kidnaped and I wouldn't go to the police through fear," Mrs. Mary Bates, mother of the girl, told police Tuesday.

Macon, Ga.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Victoria Price the other victim of an alleged attack for which nine Negroes were indicted at Scottsboro, told police she had no knowledge of the Bates girl's whereabouts, but that she feared an attempt would be made to kidnap her.

"I don't go on the streets in daytime by myself," Mrs. Price told police, "and I stay in my home at night. They won't get me."

She did not explain the "they" and said she had received no threats.

Noted Woman Concerned Over Scottsboro Case

[illegible] News

CHICAGO.—(CNS)—It is stated here in the local daily papers that Miss Jane Addams is reported as saying that she is much concerned over the matter of counsel for the seven Negro youths in Scottsboro, Ala., recently granted a new trial by the United States Supreme court from a death sentence imposed for attacking two white girls.

"The South is jumpy about horrible possibilities such as were alleged in the Scottsboro case. Consequently it is almost impossible in such cases to get a cool appraisement of the facts," Miss Addams is reported as saying.

"It would be valuable to the South itself if this case could be taken into court and given a cool, unemotional trial.

3-9-33

"For if I had to rear a little white girl in the South I should dislike having her mind turned constantly toward this evil possibility, assault. Granting that criminal assault is a possibility in any community, we do not want the whole trend of community consciousness to make it vivid in the child's mind."

CREATE LYNCH SPIRIT

Need for Increase of Mass Protest

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 8. — The new trials of the Scottsboro boys have been set for March 17 in Decatur, the seat of Morgan County, Alabama, under the decision of Judge A. E. Hawkins granting the motion of the International Labor Defense for a change of venue from Scottsboro. Forced to grant a change of venue by reason of the world-wide mass fight for the Scottsboro boys, Judge Hawkins at the same time rejected the defense proposal that the trials be moved to Birmingham, an industrial center with a large white and Negro proletarian poulation. The new trials are to be held before Judge Horton, of Athens, Ala.

Fight for Negroes on Jury.

Judge Hawkins, refused to rule on a motion by the defense for the quashing of the indictments against the boys. The defense based its motion on the ground that the constitutional rights of the boys and of the Negro People had been violated by the exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury which indicted the boys and from the petit jury which decreed their electrocution. The defense proved that exclusion of Negroes from juries was habitual. The I. L. D. attorneys will demand a ruling from Judge Horton, the new trial judge, on this motion.

Create Lynch Spirit.

As at the original trials, the town of Scottsboro was filled with a lynch crowd for the hearing, following a veiled invitation issued by the Jackson Sentinel, organ of the Scottsboro lynchers. Many shot guns were in evidence. Negroes were intimidated from attending the hearing. A reporter from an Atlanta newspaper was driven out of town because he asked too many questions of Negroes. The jury of 12 bewiskered, backward mountaineers, their minds filled with boss poison of race hatred, glared at the defense attorneys and the reporters and visitors from New York.

The boys were represented by Gen. George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, Tenn., Irving Schwab and Carol King of New York City.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 7.— The motion to quash the indictments in the Scottsboro case has not been overruled, but has been changed to Decatur, where it will be considered before the case is docketed for trial.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 7.— Judge Hawkins, who presided over the original lynch-trial of the nine Scottsboro Negro boys in March, 1931, today refused to quash the framed-up rape charges against the boys, on motion filed by the attorneys of the International Labor Defense, General George W. Chamlee, Carol Weiss King and Irving Schwab.

Under pressure of the world-wide protest against the Scottsboro frame-up, Judge Hawkins was forced to grant the demand of the attorneys for a change of venue. The attorneys asked for a venue change to Birmingham, a large industrial city, but the judge ordered the new trial to be held in Decatur, a little town of 20,000 in Morgan County, which is only two counties away from Jackson County, where Scottsboro is located.

Ruby Bates, one of the two prostitutes who were the star prosecution witnesses in the first trial, is reported as missing from her home near Huntsville since Friday night. Ruby Bates subsequently repudiated her testimony, and it is feared she may have been kidnapped.

A SCOTTSBORO CASE DOCUMENT

To the Editor of The Telegraph:

As editor of a newspaper which stands for fair treatment of the Negro, you will be glad, I am sure, to publish the following document, which throws interesting light on the Scottsboro case.

The principal witness against the nine Negro boys in the trial for alleged rape was a white girl named Ruby Bates. Eight months after the trial, this girl wrote a letter to her sweetheart, obviously (as a recent number of The New Republic points out) with the intention of bringing about a reconciliation with him. Police intercepted the letter and for a year its contents were kept secret; but attorneys for the International Labor Defense, through legal proceedings, have obtained photostatic reproductions. The following, with three words deleted, is Ruby Bates' letter as printed in The New Republic:

> dearest Earl
> i want too make a statement too you Mary Sanders is a goddamn lie about those Negroes * * * (deleted) those policeman made me tell a lie that is my statement because i want too clear myself that is all too if you want too believe me ok. if not that is ok. you will be sorry some day if you had too stay in jail with 8eight Negroes you will tell a lie two those Negroes did not touch me or those white boys. i hope you will believe me the law dont. i love you better than Mary does ore any body else in the world that is why i am telling you of this thing i was drunk at the time and did not know what i was doing i know it was wrong to let those Negroes die on account of me i hope you will believe my statement Because it is the gods truth i hope you be believe me i was * * * (deleted) but those white boys * * * (deleted) me. i wish those Negroes are not burnt on account of me it is these white boys fault that is my statement and that is all i know i hope you tell the law hope you will answer

GOOD OLD SPEAKS STICK TO BAD OLD BEER

By GILBERT SELDES

In the confusion of beers and beer bills I lost my way and found myself in a restaurant which, not to put too fine a point upon the matter, has sold alcoholic drinks for some ten years. An Englishman, recently arrived and only vaguely aware of what had been happening in America, said he would drink beer; so I asked the head waiter what brand of beer he had. "Just the same as before," he replied, "bootleg beer, you know." I considered the answer unpatriotic, but the beer was good. Drinking it in long gulps, not sipping, I thought that a great thing had happened to America, which was not that a little freedom had been returned, but that a great and solemn duty had fallen on every American, the duty of choosing and selecting the best beer. In a brief week I have tasted beers which seem to me not good beers; one in particular must have been aged in molasses, and another, I fear, had not yet renounced its cousinship to the fatal mixture known as near-beer. Experts insist that "it's all a matter of aging" and other experts say that the beer now on sale has been aged as long as any beer is likely to be. My private opinion is that, as in other commodities, there are good and less good beers, that some people know how to make beer and some do not, and that some will put better ingredients in, content with a smaller profit and looking forward to repeat orders.

GILBERT SELDES

Taste in Eating, Too.

The benefit which will come to us when we begin to taste beers, instead of guzzling them as a gesture of contempt, should be felt in other connections. The number of dishes to which beer is a proper accompaniment is limited, but at least we can begin to eat kidney pies and steaks and other sound foods with a little more discrimination. We can abandon the corrupt notion that any food is good enough, provided it isn't actually poisonous. And training in the selection of beer will go a long way to prepare us for the more delicate and more important selection of wines and whiskies when they arrive.

In all the promises of the wets (never to go back to unregulated drinking, and never to permit the return of the saloon) nothing has been said about refining the American habits of drinking. It isn't a thing you can accomplish by law; but a few months after the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed someone might bring forth the heretical idea that since drinking of wines is legal we might make the best of it instead of the worst. I hate to admit it, but some wines are hardly worth drinking.

It is now left to the counties of New York to determine whether the sitting drinker is less of a social menace than the standing drinker. The whole argument is academic, since only beer is in question. Beer can be drunk standing; so can straight short drinks and cocktails. Wines and whiskies and sodas cannot—they are at-the-table drinks. The local argument is merely a bow to the Anti-Saloon League, and I wish the League would return the bow—and shut the door as it goes.

Eternal Prejudice.

The Scottsboro decision appears to Northerners as the first reassertion of prejudice after hope had risen, perhaps illogically, that prejudice had been defeated. The new trial for Tom Mooney seemed to fall in with the liberal social attitude of the new Administration, and the universal condemnation of the anti-semitism of the Hitlerites made people feel that in America, at least, prejudice of race and of class was being slowly thrown back. We can still feel that Alabama does not faithfully represent America; but it is hard to be self-righteous now in our reproaches to Germany.

The shock of the verdict was severe. In the first case the jurors had to choose between the testimony of two women and that of nine men; in the second case one of the two women accused herself and the other woman of perjury. This is still far from absolute proof that the men were innocent—but the law in America does not require such proof. It requires the reverse—absolute proof of guilt. The thought that not one of the twelve jurors found the faintest doubt in his mind is, at this distance, inconceivable.

Everything Tried.

The jurors were not only invited to upset a conviction which obviously met with the approval of their fellow-citizens, but were given the chance to cast overboard virtually all the other prejudices they carried: against strangers from the North, against radicals, against Jews. The prosecution emphasized all these points; the defense didn't let the jurors off anything. It was perhaps too noble an opportunity for the men of Decatur, Alabama.

But people who think the verdict an outrage may still wonder whether the defense was not going a little too far—if the object was actually to save the lives of the guilty Negroes. What Communism has to do with their plight has never been made clear; why their way to freedom should involve so many extraneous prejudices is still mysterious. A new trial is wanted; but a trial of the men, an examination of the facts and not a trial of the Negro race, of Southern ideals, of Communism or anything else.

The Decatur Incident.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May we clarify and correct the report of our detention in Decatur printed in THE TIMES of April 2?

It is asserted that the counsel for the defense, Samuel Leibowitz, "has repeatedly asked that these persons (visiting radicals) stay away from the court house." In the court room, after one of the sessions, we spoke to Mr. Leibowitz, telling him we were sympathizers from New York, and at that time he made no suggestion that we remain away from the trial.

We can readily understand the concern of both the defense and the prosecution in the Scottsboro case over the possibility of local agitation and demonstration. Activity which in any way might interfere with the process of the trial must be discouraged at this time. This was not our purpose nor our activity in Decatur. There has been no outside interference nor manifestation of protest in Decatur since the distribution of malicious pamphlets on the first day of the trial, which was promptly stopped by order of the court.

We feel that as spectators and students we had complete rights to visit Decatur and to conduct ourselves as we did without being subject to detention, arrest and slander. The material found among our baggage had not been circulated by us in Decatur or in the South. We did not go to Decatur to agitate, but to report. A complete and detailed account of our activities may be found in the April issue of The Student Review.

Finally, since there was so much doubt as to what we had or had not done, we vigorously protest the treatment accorded to us, to our Negro companions and to Mr. [redacted] This treatment consisted of a series of insults directed at each of us during our detention in the police station. It is intolerable that the rights of private individuals can be so easily forgotten, simply for the crime of regarding the Negro as a human being.

CHURCHMEN SCORE ALABAMA VERDICT

New York Presbytery Censures Scottsboro Conviction, but Praises Judge's Fairness.

FIRST WOMAN ADMITTED

Mrs. A. Gardner Benedict Also Is Honored by Election to Attend General Assembly.

After a heated discussion, the Presbytery of New York, at its annual Spring meeting yesterday in the Parish House of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, at Fifty-fifth Street, adopted unanimously a resolution criticizing the verdict in the Scottsboro case at Decatur, Ala., on Sunday, which reconvicted Haywood Patterson of an attack on two white girls.

The resolution in its original form was presented by the Rev. Dr. Edmund B. Chaffee, pastor of the Labor Temple, as chairman of the standing committee on social service of the presbytery. There was no objection to the idea of criticizing the verdict but several did not wish the presbytery to go on record as criticizing the judge. One of the objectors was the Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church.

The Presbytery finally instructed Dr. Merrill and Dr. Chaffee to go out and redraft the resolution.

The resolution as adopted read:

"The Presbytery of New York has learned with surprise and sorrow of the new decision in the Scottsboro case. On the basis of press dispatches we believe reliable, it is difficult to avoid the feeling that the verdict has been influenced by race and other prejudices.

Judge's Fairness Commended.

"Fully appreciating the fairness of the presiding judge and recognizing that the trial was conducted technically in accordance with the laws of the State, we desire to protest against the custom which in so many States bars Negroes from jury service.

"We direct our social service committee to take the matter under wider consideration and authorize it to take such action as it may deem proper."

For the first time a woman sat officially as one of the presbytery members and it honored her by electing her as one of the eight lay commissioners to the 134th annual General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, to be held in Columbus, Ohio, the last week in May. She was Mrs. A. Gardner Benedict, the only woman elder in the Church of the Covenant, East Forty-second Street. The Presbyterian denomination has permitted women to be elected as elders only in the last few years.

If Mrs. Benedict goes to Columbus she will be the first woman commissioner from the Presbytery of New York and one of the first women to sit as a member of the General Assembly. Her attendance is contingent upon the withdrawal of one of the laymen who received more votes than she did, the Presbytery having agreed that of the eight ministerial commissioners and the eight lay commissioners to which it is entitled only those four ministers and those four lay members who received the highest number of votes should make the journey.

This procedure is in accordance with a suggestion made to all the 294 presbyteries in the denomination by the Rev. Dr. Lewis Seymour Mudge of Philadelphia, stated clerk of the General Assembly, as a measure of economy.

Mrs. Benedict was the fifth lay commissioner elected. William H. Parsons, an elder in the Madison Avenue Church, heads the lay delegation. The other elders named and the order in which they were elected were: Samuel A. Ritchie of the Park Avenue Church, Dr. John H. Finley of the First Church, Dr. William B. Hills of the Greenwich Church, Mrs. Benedict, J. Hageman Foster of Rutgers Church, John A. Goodell of West End Church and Emil Pons of the Waldensian Church.

Ministers Named Commissioners.

The ministers elected and their order follows: The Rev. Royal McKnight Merritt, pastor of the Church of the Sea and Land; the Rev. Theodore F. Savage, executive secretary of the Presbytery; the Rev. Dr. Minot C. Morgan, retiring co-pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church; the Rev. Maitland Bartlett, stated clerk of the Presbytery; the Rev. Dr. Edmund B. Chaffee, pastor of the Labor Temple; the Rev. Harold S. Rambo, pastor of the Adams Memorial Church; the Rev. Henry Natsch-Furnald, director of the religious education of the Presbytery, and the Rev. Frank Cheribini, Italian minister of the John Hall Memorial Chapel.

The Presbytery voted to petition the General Assembly to send an overture to the 294 presbyteries calling for a reduction per presbytery in the number of commissioners and for a biennial or triennial rather than an annual General Assembly.

Dr. Morgan was elected moderator for the third successive year.

The Presbytery received into membership from the Presbytery of Newark, N. J., the Rev. Edmund Melville Wylie and made arrangements for his installation on May 2 as pastor of the Park Avenue Church at Eighty-fifth Street.

Organizations affiliated with the International Labor Defense and labor groups in key cities of the East, Middle West and West, sent seventy-five messages to the Executive.

Rabbi Benjamin Goldstein of Temple Beth Or, who has been active in behalf of the Scottsboro Negroes, will not stand for re-election as rabbi of the local congregation after expiration of his term, Ernest Mayer, president of the congregation, said tonight. The rabbi gave no explantion of his decision.

RICHMOND, Va., April 10 (AP).—A petition addressed to President Roosevelt calling upon the National Government to intervene in what was described as "the legal farce being enacted in Alabama," was placed in circulation today by The Richmond Planet, a Negro newspaper.

It was signed by more than 100 Negroes during the day. They protested against the second conviction of Heywood Patterson and the death penalty imposed on him in the retrial of the Scottsboro cases. Their leaders said they will participate in any protest march that may be made on Washington.

LEIBOWITZ: Fighting His Hardest Case for Negroes

Up the steps of a red-brick courthouse at Decatur, Ala., goes a New York lawyer. His aggressive showmanship has brought genuine melodrama into the case of one of nine Negroes accused of having assaulted two girls and first tried and found guilty two years ago at Scottsboro.

Samuel S. Leibowitz for the defense has meant 77 straight acquittals of clients charged with first degree murder and one disagreement out of 78 murder cases.

Difficult

One of the most famous of these was the acquittal of Vincent Coll, New York gangster, who was later machine-gunned to death. Now, Leibowitz, born in Rumania 39 years ago, faces one of the most difficult cases of his brilliant career.

He was engaged by the International Labor Defense, a Communist manned and financed organization, to defend the Scottsboro Negroes whose first trial was set aside by order of the United States Supreme Court on the ground that Scottsboro's atmosphere at the time of the trial was not conducive to even-handed justice.

The short, thick-set, histrionic lawyer left his home in Brooklyn to set all Alabama by the ears with his challenge to that State's entire jury system. It was Mr. Leibowitz's charge that Negroes were excluded from the jury list for the trial of his client, the bewildered Heywood Patterson.

He had already secured a change of venue to Decatur. Now he demanded that Judge James E. Horton sitting on the case, quash the whole jury venire. He brought Arthur J. Tidwell, president of the jury board, to the court-room with a list of more than 2,000 names and challenged Mr. Tidwell, who disavowed race prejudice to name any Negroes on his lists. He put on the witness stand two Negro physicians, a high school principal, an undertaker, a dentist to prove that despite their race they were qualified to sit as jurors.

Proof

"I am ready to prove," shouted Leibowitz, "that no Negroes have served on juries in Morgan County, not only for the last five years, but for the last 25 years and I'll stay here until doomsday to prove my point." Thereupon he started on what looked like a prolonged hunt to find the name of one Negro on the venire list.

Judge Horton, quiet-spoken, told Mr. Leibowitz that the lawyer could not, as he wished, put into the record the race of every man on the Morgan County roster. "I've heard about enough evidence along this line," he said to the protesting attorney.

So an all-white jury was picked and Mr. Leibowitz went back to his hotel room, through silent crowds of white workers sunning themselves before the courthouse. There he got out his train, of which he is very proud. It is a model of the train on which troups of Negroes and white youths were riding, together with two girls, when according to the first stories of the girls, a fight started and the Negroes attacked the white girls.

One of the latter, Ruby Bates, is said to have stated in a letter that she was not attacked by any of the Negroes. Later it was reported that the girl said she wrote that letter while under the influence of liquor. Now she has disappeared. The other girl, Victoria Price, repeated at the opening of the trial this week her story of being assaulted.

ACME

Mr. Leibowitz and His Trial Train

Mr. Leibowitz's train is a 32-foot long model, containing miniature oil-tanks, gravel gondolas, and flat cars. By use of it, he hopes to prove that the girls could not have been attacked as they claim and that no witnesses could have seen the attack, if there was one.

When he defended Coll, Mr. Leibowitz used fourteen Eskimo pies for "props." A surprise witness for the State who said that he was a vendor of Eskimo pies, identified Coll as one of the men who had been shooting in the street row which led to the death of one baby, the wounding of others.

Mr. Leibowitz sent out for the pies. He gave one to each of the jurors, the prosecuting attorney and the judge and then with these icy exhibits held up he led the witness through a technical maze of Eskimo pie-making. The man finally admitted that he knew nothing about the making or selling of pies and his testimony was discredited.

Mr. Leibowitz won't accept the offer to supply him with a guard while he is in Decatur. He is no Communist and one of his chief worries is lest a Red demonstration may serve to prejudice the Southern community still more against his clients.

The International Labor Defense is flooding the mails with publicity about the trial in which the words, "Jim Crow" and "Southern lynch law," are frequently used.

JURORS FIND NEGRO GUILTY; DECREE DEATH

By CARTER BROOK JONES.
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9 (INS).—Another Alabama jury said guilty and decreed death today in the Scottsboro case.

The case of the seven Negro hoboes, who won new trials from the United States Supreme Court and enlisted the sympathy of labor organizations all over the world, suffered another setback.

The 12 men from Morgan County, taking the case on change of venue from Jackson County, imposed the extreme penalty on Haywood Patterson, first of the Negroes to be retried.

The verdict was guilty of criminal assault despite the fact that Ruby Bates, Huntsville mill girl, changed her testimony she gave at Scottsboro and denied she and Victoria Price were attacked by a group of negroes on a freight train two years ago.

Mrs. Price stuck to her original story of attack. This time, instead of deliberating 20 minutes, the jury stayed out 21 hours, but its finding was as inexorable.

APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT.

The defense will seek to carry the case to the Supreme Court again.

The nine townsmen and three farmers deliberated from 12:45 o'clock until 11:30 last night, when they were sent to their hotel for the night. Three of the men did not take off their clothes all night. The jurors were back in their room at 9 o'clock this morning, and shortly after 10 o'clock came the rap on the door that signalled a verdict.

The attorneys were present, but there was a delay of an hour while Circuit Judge E. Horton drove from his home at Athens.

PRISONER SMILES.

The young Negro was the least concerned of all. He smiled broadly once or twice at the guards who sat beside him on a bench against the wall, only a few feet from the locked door of the jury room.

The verdict took the town by surprise, and the courthouse was almost deserted when the jury was brought over from the hotel. Less than 30 men sat in the courtroom on the second floor of the trim brick building. The courtroom seats 300. Outside the Sabbath tranquillity was unbrokn. There was not a person loitering around.

The National Guard captain detailed 10 more men to guard the single entrance to the courtroom.

JUDGE APOLOGIZES.

The Judge in his informal way, apologized to the jurors for keeping them waiting. Instead of taking their seats in the jury box, they stood in a group around the bench, which is customary in the County.

"Gentlemen, you have agreed upon a verdict?"

The foreman stepped forward and handed the paper up to the bench.

Judge Horton read it deliberately, then announced:

"We the jury find the defendant guilty as charged and fix his punishment at death."

The jury could have set the punishment of life imprisonment or at any term from 10 years.

NO DEMONSTRATION.

There was no demonstration, a breathless hush hung over the room for a moment.

Then Judge Horton gave the jurors the customary thanks for their diligent attention to the case and dismissed them. They would not discuss their deliberations, but there was a report that at first several had held out for acquittal and that later the wrangle was mainly over the degree of punishment.

Patterson dropped his head slightly when the verdict was announced, but gave no other sign of emotion. He and his six companions were held in the death house at Kilby Prison in Montgomery for nearly two years while the legal forces enlisted in their behalf fought the case until the United States Supreme Court set aside the conviction, holding that they were not allowed an adequate defense at Scottsboro.

Samuel S. Libowitz, the New York attorney who headed the defense staff, seemed amazed at the verdict, he said:

"This is another black chapter in American Justice. It is a triumph of bigotry. It means that because a man's skin is black he can be brought in here, and no matter what the evidence may be, smirking hypocrisy will go out and condemn him to death. I shall fight these Scottsboro cases as long as there is breath in my body and as long as I live."

Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel of international labor defense, and G. W. Chamlee, Chattanooga attorney, were associated in the defense of Patterson, but neither took an active part in the trial. Chamlee made a brief summation.

PUBLIC INFLAMED.

Brodsky told the court that feeling had been inflamed by the appeal of Wade Wright, local circuit solicitor, in his summation for the jury "to show them that Jew money from New York can't buy and sell justice in Alabama."

The spectre of violence hung over the Patterson trial, but Decatur remained calm and there was no trouble. Several times Judge Horton made speeches from the bench warning the community that no interference with the trial would be tolerated and the guardsmen would shoot to kill if necessary.

VICTORIA PRICE.

The Patterson trial began last Monday, after a week of arguments on preliminary motions. The defense sought to quash the indictment and the jury venire on the ground that Negroes were excluded from Grand and Petit juries in Alabama. This is expected to be one of the main issues in the attempt to have the Supreme Court review the case again.

While the attorneys and court officials were waiting for the judge to receive the verdict, a score of telegrams lay on his desk. These were from liberal and radical organizations all over the country. They demanded protection for "the Scottsboro boys and their attorneys" from mobs and urged acquittal.

LEIBOWITZ EXPLAINS.

Leibowitz told the jury in his summation that he had taken the case without fee and did not represent any of the organizations which were enlisted in the defense, but was acting only for himself. He was hopeful of an acquittal, especially when Ruby Bates, the white mill girl, took the stand dramatically for the defense and repudiated her testimony at Scottsboro that a group of Negroes had attacked her and Victoria Price on a freight train between Chattanooga and Pwintrock, Ala., two years ago.

Protest

PLANS were under way in Harlem, last night, to have 50,000 Negroes from all parts of the country go to Washington to protest to President Roosevelt against the conviction in Decatur, Ala., of Haywood Patterson, in the Scottsboro case.

William Davis, publisher of The Amsterdam News, put up a notice outside his office, calling on persons to sign a petition and signifiy their intention of going to Washington. By evening more than 20,000 persons had signed.

The International Labor Defense announced that an appeal will be taken immediately in the Patterson case.

Invite N.A.A.C.P. Leadership to Back Specific Actions "In Token of Good Faith"

NEW YORK.—Acceptance of the offer of the national leaders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to raise funds for the Scottsboro defense, and to cooperate in other ways with the defense which is being conducted by the International Labor Defense was announced in a statement made public yesterdayterday by William L. Patterson, national secretary of the I.L.D.

The N.A.A.C.P. offer was made in a statement to the press released on Thursday, and a decision was made to accept it at a meeting of the Nationl Executive Committee of the International Labor Defense the same night.

Welcomes Cooperation

The I.L.D. statement points out that, while the leadership of the N.A.A.C.P. has consistently savagely attacked and sabotaged the defense of the Scottsboro boys right up to its most recent statement on the case, published in the press the day following the conviction of Heywood Patterson, many of its branches have already cooperated with the I.L.D. in the defense, and hundreds of N. A. A. C. P. members have been involved in it.

Dallas Ramsey, one of the Negro witnesses in the Decatur trial.

The International Labor Defense, the statement said, welcomes this offer of cooperation from the leaders of the N.A.A.C.P., coming as it does especially, at the height of such a mass movement as has never before been achieved behind the issues raised by the I.L.D. in the case, and behind its fight to save the lives of the boys.

The text of the statement, which reviews the previous activities of the N.A.A.C.P. in regard to the Scottsboro case, follows:

"With the announcement on Sunday, April 9, of the monstrous lynch-verdict against Heywood Patterson by an all-white jury in Decatur, the defense struggle of the Scottsboro boys entered a new phase. The world-wide protest against the frame-up of the Scottsboro boys, under the leadership of the International Labor Defense, which for two years had kept these boys alive, rose to unprecedented heights as word flashed around the world of this verdict made with complete disregard of the evidence presented at the trial.

Had Attacked Defense

"The first reaction of the national board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to this verdict was an attack upon the Scottsboro defense, in the form of a statement to the press which said that the Alabama lynchers would not have returned this verdict had not 'the Communists', as the N.A.A.C.P. statement chose to call the International Labor Defense, entered the case.

'The statement of the board of directors put forward the disruptive proposal of forming a 'new defense committee,' though the International Labor Defense has from the beginning been the authorized defenders of the boys, and has carried on a consistent and bitter fight to save their lives for two years, a fight which included a struggle against disruptive maneuvers of the NAACP leadership.

Statement Contained Falsehood

"The statement contained the assertion that the NAACP was the only organization to go to the aid of the boys in their first trial, a deliberate falsehood. The NAACP has never been legally connected with the case, and its first attempts to enter it came after the International Labor Defense had already raised a storm of mass protest against the original lynch-verdicts, and after their attorneys had been authorized to represent them by the Scottsboro boys and by their parents

"At that time the NAACP, in an effort to take over control of the case at all costs, even that of the lives of the boys, retained Stephen Roddy, a member of the K.K.K., who had appeared at the first trial, but according to the record was not defense attorney regularly employed, who failed to make any of the legal moves which might lay the basis for an appeal, and who, according to his own statement, considered his very presence in the court room to 'defend' nine Negro boys an 'unpleasant duty.'

"From that time on the NAACP 'defense' of the boys consisted solely in attacks upon the boys' authorized defenders, and in raising money, of which only $1,000 out of an admitted $7,000 raised, has been turned over to the defense. This money was raised without being at any time backed by authorization of the boys or of their parents, and against the expressed wishes of these.

Barred Boys' Mothers

"Even when it came to the question of permitting the mothers of the Scottsboro boys to appear before the NAACP meetings, the leaders would not permit any of them to speak. Mrs. Ada Wright, mother of Roy and Andy Wright, was twice refused permission to address NAACP meetings on June 28 and October 22 in New York and Newark. Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of Heywood Patterson was denied the floor at the NAACP national convention at Pittsburgh, in June and July of the same year.

"The NAACP has consistently denied, until today, that the Scottsboro frame-up involved the whole policy of the American ruling class to the Negro people, the issue of the Jim Crowing of the Negroes, of the denial of their democratic rights, including the right to serve on juries. They denied that any issues were involved besides that of the proven innocence of the Scottsboro boys.

What ILD Accomplished

"Now that the ILD has not only proved upon the record the innocence of these boys, but has raised also the question of the democratic rights of Negro and white workers, and of the right of Negroes to serve on juries as provided in the Fourteenth Amendment, now that the tide of anger of the masses against the new lynch-verdict has risen to new heights under the leadership of the International Labor Defense, the NAACP has announced that: 'The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People cannot stand by idle while this momentous struggle goes on.'

"The NAACP leadership has offered to raise funds for the Scottsboro defense, and in the words of its press release, to 'cooperate in any other way helpful to the defendants.' In this offer it has followed the lead of hundreds of individual members, and some branches of the NAACP.

Welcome Offer of Aid

"The International Labor Defense welcomes this offer of cooperation, especially coming, as it does, at the height of such a mass movement behind the Scottsboro defense and the issues of Negro rights raised by the ILD as has never before been achieved

JUSTICE REQUIRED

While a sudden hush fell over the court room in Decatur, Ala., where nine Negroes are on trial for their lives in the famous "Scottsboro case," Judge James E. Horton boomed out an edict against lynching that bore all the force of a righteous conviction. The presiding judge had heard the current rumors that a mob was forming to take upon itself the punishment of the Negroes charged with attacking two white girls. In the face of this threat, Judge Horton thundered out: "Any group of men, and I don't say there are any such, who attempt to take the law into their own hands, are unworthy of the protection of the State of Alabama. They are unfit to be citizens. Men who would join in anything that would cause the death of these Negroes not only are murderers, but cowardly murderers. I have no tolerance for mob spirit."

The Judge's vehement stand, and his call for extra guards to protect the prisoners, may prevent an outbreak of mob violence in Decatur that would be a disgrace to Alabama and the entire South. Thus far in the trial, the behavior of the simple country people in blue jeans and calico dresses who pack the courtroom has been unexceptionable. Outside observers report, however, that feeling in the countryside is running high, and that the danger of a lynching attempt is not exaggerated.

Judge Horton realizes without doubt the difficulty of persuading the people of the remote Alabama region to weigh this case on its own merits. In the first place, it is a retrial of a group of Negroes who have already been convicted at a former trial of attacking the two white women in a freight car many months ago. In some ways it is unfortunate that the accused men are being defended by a Jewish lawyer from New York, who is retained by the International Labor Defense, an organization popularly supposed to be an adjunct of the Communist Party. Every kind of prejudice thus operates against the defendants in the community where they are facing trial.

In the light of testimony brought out at this current trial, it is of the highest importance that the case be heard through down to the questioning of the last witness without interference. One of the girls, returning dramatically after a mysterious disappearance, now asserts that she perjured herself when she accused the Negroes at the earlier trial. The other girl has involved herself in a maze of contradictory and questionable testimony. A reputable gynecologist of Chattanooga has testified that this young woman, when examined less than two hours after the alleged attack, showed no signs of having undergone such an experience. However the testimony may develop justice must be made to prevail over prejudice and violence in the treatment of the defendants. The right element in Alabama and in all other parts of the country stand behind Judge Horton in his determination to secure that justice.

Fair Trial for Scottsboro Negroes!

If, as the news dispatches intimate, threats have been made against the attorney for the defense of the eight Scottsboro negro youths, on trial for assault on two female tramps, it gives color to the claim that these boys will not get a fair trial at the hands of Alabama courts.

It is something, however, that they are being tried in court and not dangling at the end of a rope or shrivelling in the fire of a race-mad mob of lynchers.

All supporters of law and order will hope that the trial will be fair and every proper recourse of the law afforded these ignorant and helpless defendants.

Decatur Jury To Get Scottsboro Case At Noon

'World Issue' Is At Stake, Leibowitz Tells Twelve In Closing Arguments

Knight To Speak

Perjury, Justice Obstruction Charged In Connection With Woman Witness

B. T. M. DAVENPORT,
Associated Press Staff Writer,

DECATUR, ALA., April 7.—(AP)—A "world issue" must be decided by the Morgan County jury trying Heywood Patterson, first of the nine negroes being retried in the Scottsboro case, Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, said today in closing the defense arguments.

Leibowitz had called attention of the jury of their photographs appearing in papers throughout the nation as the "jury trying the Scottsboro case" and the widespread interest in the case.

"Telegraph instruments throughout the world this minute are clattering with the story of this trial," he said, then raising his voice added "you are deciding more than the guilt or innocence of this negro, you are deciding a world issue."

Since March 25, 1931, when Patterson and his eight companions were taken from a freight train at Paint Rock, Ala., and charged with attacking Mrs. Victoria Price, and Ruby Bates, individuals and organizations throughout the world have become interested in their behalf.

Even during the current trial as reports of mobs forming have been circulated, Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., has received many telegrams demnading protection for the defendants and their counsel. The defendants have been under protection of national guardsmen throughout the trial. There was no demonstration during the arguments.

Pleads For Tolerance

Leibowitz asked the jury to disregard race or creed when they went into the jury room to weigh the evidence and plead for tolerance and reason.

Previously he had shouted his defiance of any mob and declared that he was receiving not one cent out of the case from any source, not even for his expenses.

"If I cannot convince you through reason of his innocence," said Leibowitz, "take that negro and put him in the chair."

Turning to the State's case he said, "if you don't believe Victoria Price, you have no case. She is the only eye witness."

Then one by one he took up and analyzed evidence of the State and turned to expert testimony on both sides and said "disregard the experts. We have to have them to complete the record. Be your own experts."

After talking for two hours the court recessed until tomorrow morning and Leibowitz said he would consume about an hour more. After he finishes Atty. Gen. Knight must close for the State.

The jury probably will get the case by noon tomorrow.

Patterson is the first of nine negroes indicted in Jackson County two years ago on charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Miss Ruby Bates aboard a freight train on March 25, 1931. Patterson and six others were granted new [illegible] by the United States Supreme Court which [illegible] the death sentences last Nov. 7.

[illegible] Asks Chair

"The State of [illegible] wants you, if this testimony shows him innocent to turn him aloose," Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of Boaz, who obtained death sentences for eight of the negroes in trials at Scottsboro two years ago, said, "but on the other hand, if he is guilty, the State of Alabama wants you to send him to the electric chair. That is what the State of Alabama wants, and I believe you will be fair."

Bailey then turned to a discussion of the evidence which led up to Lester Carter, of Knoxville, Tenn., and Miss Bates, who arrived here yesterday from New York to testify for the defense.

He spoke of "sinister influences" in New York and contrasted the appearance of Mrs. Price in obviously cheap attire, to the Bates girl, who stood the stand dressed in a grey coat with hat to match which she said she bought in New York.

"She (Mrs. Price) did not come here in New York clothes," Bailey said, "she didn't come here in a hat bought in New York. She didn't come here in any hat. She didn't come here in a New York coat, but she told you she went to Chattanooga to look for work.

"She could have rouged her lips and cheeks and stood on the streets of Huntsville without going out to seek honest toil."

"We don't say that she is what she should have been. She has erred, out our laws say no man shall lay a hand on a woman against her will."

Referring to the Bates girl's appearance in court yesterday, Bailey said, "we have witnessed in this court yesterday and the day before, a most flagrant attempt to obstruct justice."

Argument Halted

The argument of Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatur, was twice interrupted by Leibowitz to enter motions for a mistrial, both of which were overruled by Judge James E. Horton who instructed the jury to disregard the statements.

"Are you going to stand for justice being bought?" Wright asked, raising his voice until it carried to groups outside the court room as he spoke of Ruby Bates's reappearance.

When Judge Horton overruled his motion for a mistrial, Leibowitz said, "I submit, your honor, that a conviction in this case will not be worth a pinch of snuff."

A moment later as Wright disparaged the testimony of Lester Carter, he referred to him as "Mr. Carterinsky, now," and again Leibowitz entered a motion for a mistrial on the grounds it was raising prejudices. Wright had previously referred to witnesses being "bought with Jew money."

"Use your eyes," he told the jury and declared Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, member of defense counsel, "put a suit of clothes on a hobo's back."

Perjury Charged

He declared Ruby Bates had perjured herself, adding "it is perjury in the State of Alabama to swear a lie, yet Ruby Bates in her pretty clothes came in here and denied her testimony in the previous trials. She may be indicted for perjury."

The entire charge was declared by George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, first speaker for the defense, to be a "fabrication."

"I want to uphold the principles of womanhood in the South," he said, after telling the jury he was Southern-born and raised, and the son of a Confederate soldier.

His address was confined to summarizing the defense case and was completed in a short time.

The State contended that Mrs. Price was attacked by Patterson and five other negroes and that the Bates girl was attacked by a similar number.

EVIDENCE ASSAILED IN ALABAMA TRIAL

JUDGE SUMMONS JURORS

He Hears Grand Jury Evidence Favoring Defendants Was Excluded at First Trial.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 4.—The State of Alabama closed today its second attempt to send Haywood Patterson to the electric chair for a criminal attack on Mrs. Victoria Price two years ago and the defense immediately began its effort to prove her "a perjurer."

A routine motion to dismiss the indictment against Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes, on the ground that Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. had failed to establish a prima facie case, was denied by Judge James E. Horton.

After tonight's adjournment of the trial until tomorrow morning, it became known that six members of the grand jury which returned the indictments against the accused Negroes had been summoned to appear tomorrow morning before Judge Horton.

Charge of Evidence Suppression.

The subpoenas, it was learned, were issued after Judge Horton received information that evidence tending to clear the defendants had been presented to the grand jury which found the indictments two years ago, but had been excluded from the trials which the United States Supreme Court, in reversing the original verdicts of guilty, held to have been unfair.

The information, it was understood, had to do with the failure of the prosecution in the Scottsboro trial to call any of the white hoboes thrown off the train on which the alleged attack occurred, with the exception of Orville Gilley, the youth who supposedly witnessed the crime and was called only to give brief testimony in rebuttal.

The State rested suddenly today after calling five witnesses to support the story of Mrs. Price after Mr. Leibowitz accused Attorney General Knight of applauding the testimony of one of his witnesses and asked Judge Horton to declare a mistrial.

This incident occurred while J. A. Woodall, a former deputy sheriff of Jackson County, was on the witness stand. Examining a small penknife which he said he had taken from one of the Negroes at the jail in Scottsboro, Mr. Woodall said the prisoner told him he had taken it "from one of the white girls."

It was the same knife which Mrs. Price identified yesterday as hers, charging that one of the Negroes took it from her and held it against her throat while she was attacked on a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock on March 25, 1931.

Knight Applauds Evidence.

As the words fell from the lips of the witness, Mr. Knight, who had turned the direct examination over to H. G. Bailey, Circuit Solicitor, brought his hands down flat on the top of the counsel table, showed his elation and dashed into an anteroom, clapping his hands together once.

The Attorney General was out of the court room when Mr. Leibowitz made his protest, but his assistants sprinted after him and brought him back to apologize to the court and jury. He seemed nervous and chastened as he listened to the closing words of the defense lawyer's motion for a mistrial.

"Now, your honor," said Mr. Leibowitz, "I would like the record to show that when the witness gave his last answer, the Attorney General, the chief prosecuting official of this State, clapped his hands and rushed from the room in high glee. I am amazed at the actions of the chief prosecuter who, after saying he wanted these Negroes to have a fair trial, thus shamefully comports himself before the jury. It is disheartening and I now move for a mistrial."

"I never saw anything like that before in my life."

Mr. Knight apologized and Judge Horton expressed regret that the incident had taken place. He had been looking away from the State's counsel table when it occurred, Judge Horton said, but he ordered the stenographer to note on the record that he had heard a sound of the sort that Mr. Leibowitz described. Then he denied the motion for a mistrial.

Negro Identifies Mrs. Price.

It was the most dramatic moment of the day but it was almost equaled soon after the defense opened when Victoria Price stood in the railed-off space before the bench and was identified by Dallas Ramsay, a Chattanooga Negro, as one of the girls he saw with a white youth in the "hobo jungle" alongside the railroad yard in Chattanooga, on the morning of the day when the crime is alleged to have taken place.

Mrs. Price had testified that she and Ruby Bates, her missing fellow victim of the alleged attack, spent the night at the home of "Callie Brochie" in Chattanooga, denied that she had visited the "jungle" and insisted that she and her girl companion were alone when they boarded the freight train.

Ramsay testified, however, that she was with a white man when she started back to Huntsville. her home.

Mr. Knight objected vigorously to the identification without first requiring Ramsay to describe the woman he had seen.

Judge Horton ruled that the identification could be made and Mrs. Price was brought into court from the witness room.

"Yes, that's the girl. She's a little heavier now, but I recognize her all right," Ramsay testified.

Counsel Clash Over Evidence.

Mr. Knight, who had been entering objections to almost every question Mr. Leibowitz propounded to Ramsay, asked what relevancy his testimony had and Mr. Leibowitz retorted:

"I'm going to show that the State's main witness is a perjurer. That's what I'm going to show before I'm through. This is only the beginning."

When Ramsay had left the stand, Mr. Leibowitz called his first white witness, Norris Payne, clerk of the Huntsville City Court, in a new but unsuccessful effort to place in evidence records showing the conviction of a Victoria Price for vagrancy, adultery and violation of the prohibition laws. The records were barred from evidence but their import was made plain to the jury.

Judge Horton based his ruling excluding this evidence on the grounds he cited yesterday when it was first offered, that violation of the prohibition law did not reflect upon the credibility of the witness and that infractions of city ordinances were not admissible in impeaching her testimony.

Mr. Leibowitz protested that a conviction involving moral turpitude was pertinent for a jury to consider as to the credibility of the State witness.

Mrs. Beatrice Madox, married sister of two of the Negroes awaiting trial, testified that she had searched the city directory of Chattanooga and conducted a personal investigation and that she had failed to find any one named "Callie Brochie."

Defense Attorney Takes Stand.

G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga attorney who is assisting Mr. Leibowitz, testified that for twenty-five years he had occupied an office or residence on Seventh Street, Chattanooga, where Mrs. Price said "Callie Brochie's" house was located and had never heard of her. The street, he said, was "one of the wealthiest" in Chattanooga and contained public or semi-public buildings.

The witnesses called by the State in closing its case were W. H. Hill, station agent at Paint Rock, where an armed posse stopped the train with the Negroes and white girls on it; Tom Taylor Rousseau, Paint Rock storekeeper, who aided in the round-up, and Lee Adams and Orey Dobbins, overalled farmers from Stevenson, where the white companions of the girls were thrown off the train after a fight with the Negroes.

Mr. Hill, who did not testify in the first trial, declared that the nine Negroes were taken from one gondola car, but he "could not swear" that the girls were taken out of the same car.

Rousseau declared that as the train slowed down the Negroes piled out of gondola cars and ran along the tops of the box cars toward the engine in an effort to get away.

Adams, who was working in a field a quarter of a mile from the tracks as the train passed, said he saw a group of Negroes and white men scuffling in one of the gondola cars. It was too far for him to see whether there were any women in the car, he said.

N.Y.

DECATUR, Ala., Apr. 1.—Remote from the discussions of their fellow citizens of Morgan County regarding last week's assault upon its jury system, the twelve jurors who will begin hearing evidence against Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes at his second trial next Monday, amused themselves today with jagsaw puzzles and playing cards.

This eevning they were taken to a motion picture show and tomorrow they will be escorted from the hotel where they have a suite of eight rooms to church by the bailiffs whose duty it is to protect them from outside influences and contacts. Judge James E. Horton has warned them against discussing the case before then, even among themselves.

Judge Horton's exhortation to the people of the community to do nothing to impede the course of justice has made the local folk determined that nothing shall happen here to reflect discredit upon the county or the State.

Nevertheless, there is beneath the surface a smouldering resentment at defense efforts to open the jury rolls to the Negro population and at the accounts of the proceedings in the court published in some Negro and radical newspapers. The community is particularly incensed at a story published in a Negro newspaper in Chicago, indicating that Decatur prepared for the trial in holiday mood—"the kind of holiday Morgan County likes."

Hold Negroes Dare Not Be Jurors.

As a matter of fact, thus far the townfolk have shown little interest in the proceedings, except for a small minority which is on hand each morning to scramble for seats in the court room.

Most of the residents of Decatur gain their information about the proceedings exclusively from The Decatur Daily, which, as a matter of policy, has printed only The Associated Press accounts and has refrained from editorial comment.

The tactics of the defense in moving to quash the venire from which the jury was chosen, on the ground that Negroes were barred from service, by maladministration of the jury law, has had the effect of shifting whatever feeling existed toward the nine Negro defendants, accused of assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price two years ago, to the lawyers who are defending them.

It was amusing during the long legalistic arguments and conflicting testimony regarding the right of Negroes to do jury duty, to hear the comments among the spectators.

While Arthur J. Tidwell, the president of the jury board, was disavowing racial exclusion and admitting that he knew of not one Negro in the county who could qualify as a juror, one man in the front row turned to his neighbor and said:

"We've never had niggers in our juries yet and we never will."

His friend bent over and whispered:

"If we told them they could, there isn't a nigger here who would dare to try to sit on a jury."

Leibowitz Wary of Radicals.

It was because of the resentment engendered by Samuel Leibowitz's determined fight to produce a court record showing systematic exclusion of Negroes in the event that he has to appeal from a verdict of guilty, that Captain Joseph Burleson, who is commanding the National Guardsmen on duty at the trial, decided to assign a guard to the New York lawyer.

At the request of Mr. Leibowitz, it was withdrawn after a few hours and he continued to go about town on foot and by automobile without encountering any open hostility.

Mr. Leibowitz is more concerned over the possible activities of visiting radicals than he is over the unfriendliness of the people of Decatur. He has repeatedly asked that these persons stay away from the court house and abandon any plans they may have for demonstrations or agitation among local Negroes.

With the same desire to preserve the peace, police officials took five persons into custody early this morning for investigation.

Three of them, two men and a woman, said they were New Yorkers here in the capacity of observers with journalistic aims. The other two were Negroes from Birmingham.

The five, who were released and ordered to appear before Judge Horton Monday morning, described themselves as Muriel Rukeyser, Edward Sagarin and Hank Fuller. Fuller says he was run out of Scottsboro two years ago.

The two Negroes said they were James Cooper and William A. Christal of Birmingham. Patrolman A. S. Brazelton saw the three white New Yorkers in the Negro section of Decatur with Cooper shortly after midnight and took them to Police Headquarters for investigation.

Literature is Seized.

Miss Rukeyser, according to Brazelton had in her possession some literature of the National Students League and letters relating to the Scottsboro trial.

Christal was found at the address given by Cooper and in the room, Brazelton said, was a quantity of pamphlets and appeal for funds for the Scottsboro Negroes, together enrolment cards of the Workers ex-Servicemens League.

The Negroes and the others were held at Police Headquarters while Wade Wright, circuit solicitor, was notified.

After questioning them, Mr. Wright ordered all five released, but he confiscated the literature found on them. He ordered them to appear in court Monday and said that the pamphlets would be offered to Judge Horton. Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General, refused to comment on the incident, but indicated that he regarded it as of no importance.

Mr. Leibowitz and Joseph Brodsky, the International Labor Defense lawyer, started for Birmingham this morning to interview a witness there, but before they had gotten very far from town their car broke down and they were forced to return.

Mr. Knight was busy consulting the various Sheriffs whose duty it is to round up the twenty odd witnesses the State will call.

Negroes and Juries

From a dispatch about the trial of the Scotsboro negroes dated Decatur, Ala. March 29:

"Samuel Leibowitz, chief defense counsel representing international Labor Defense has moved to quash the indictments against the negroes, and later to quash the venire for the trial, on grounds that exclusion of negroes from jury service in Alabama is unconstitutional."

That same question may arise at any time in South Carolina.

If the federal government can interfere with juries in Alabama it can interfere with juries in this state.

If the federal government is to enforce laws against the liquor traffic in this state, the question may arise as to whether a negro bootlegger can be convicted unless negroes be on the juries.

Furthermore, if these encroachments on state rights now proposed for Alabama shall succeed, it is only a matter of time when the right of 793,000 negroes in this state to be represented among the prohibition enforcers will be raised.

If the South Carolinians must dictate to the New Yorkers how they shall handle their liquor traffic, shall they expect sympathy from the New Yorkers in keeping negroes off the juries?

That Scottsboro Verdict

The second conviction of Haywood Patterson, one of the seven colored youths in the notorious "Scottsboro case," came as a distinct shock to the entire country, with the exception of those parts of the South which cannot forget the "color line" even when it comes to dispensing elementary justice.

Those who followed the trial of Patterson at Decatur, Alabama, cannot fail (unless they are influenced by strong sub-Mason-Dixon prejudices) to be convinced that his conviction was the result of cheap appeals to the baser instincts of the jury, coupled with a desire to "vindicate" the State of Alabama by the strange method of repeating the offense against justice which was committed when Patterson and six other colored youths were convicted at Scottsboro more than a year ago. The first conviction, which doomed the young men to death, was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, and it seems now that those defending the helpless colored youths will have to carry the case to Washington again.

The attitude of the authorities in Alabama appears to be quite childish. When a small boy is chastised for some cruel and inhumane act, his reaction sometimes is to repeat it. The State of Alabama, much to its shame, is reacting just that way. It is telling the rest of the country, in effect, that it should mind its own business. It is boasting: "This is justice as we dispense it in Alabama, and it is no concern of yours!"

As a matter of fact, the rest of the country now knows that such is justice in Alabama, and it is hardly flattered that convictions of this kind, the result of prejudice and obstinacy, can occur anywhere in the United States. But it cannot be granted that what happens in Alabama is no concern of the rest of the country. If that were so, we might as well retire the Federal government—Congress, the Presidency and the United States Supreme Court—to the Smithsonian Institution.

Samuel Leibowitz, the New York criminal lawyer who handled the defense of Patterson in the second trial, laid a solid foundation for an appeal to the Supreme Court. He brought into the open all the basic prejudice, all the discrimination, which militated against a fair trial for the youth. Moreover, he produced one of the two young women, Ruby Bates, to testify that neither she nor Victoria Price had been attacked by the youths. Her recantation, however, failed to impress the jury, which preferred to believe the testimony of the Price woman, although the latter was hardly a credible witness.

It is difficult to believe that the United States Supreme Court, which sooner or later must review this case, will fail to upset the conviction once more as being contrary to the Constitution which does not recognize the color distinctions that are a part of the Alabama mentality. And we trust that it will denounce in no uncertain terms the theatricalism of the prosecution in employing all the tricks in the Ku Klux handbook, including the line about "Jew money," to influence the jury.

We can only agree with Leibowitz that: "This is another black chapter in American justice. It is a triumph of bigotry. It means that because a man's skin is black, he can be convicted to death by smirking hypocrisy, no matter what the evidence may be."

Alabama "Justice"

It is no surprise that the trial of Haywood Patterson, the first of the Scottsboro Negroes to stand on trial for his life the second ~~time, has re-~~ sulted in a verdict of guilty. Hope that had been aroused by the excellent work of the defence, by the repudiation of her former testimony by one of the white women involved and her declaration that neither she nor the other white woman involved had been attacked, by the doubt which she and other witnesses cast upon the veracity of the other white woman—this hope virtually disappeared when mob action was threatened in Decatur, when fiery crosses began to burn on the hillsides, and when the prosecution delivered one of the most violent appeals to prejudice and bigotry that has ever been addressed to a jury.

Paterson has been convicted, not because the jury was convinced of his guilt for nobody could be convinced of that after hearing the evidence, but because he is a Negro, because his lawyer is a Jew and a New Yorker, because a Communist organization has come to his defence, because Ruby Bates, the white woman who repudiated her former testimony and now declares that Patterson is innocent, wore New York clothes on the witness stand, and finally, because the jurymen knew what to expect in their community if they did not bring in a verdict of guilty. The prosecution knew the men with whom it had to deal when it called upon the jury, not to come to an honest verdict in accord with the evidence, but to "show them that Alabama justice cannot be bought and sold with Jew money from New York."

This has been no fair trial. It is, as the defence counsel calls it, a "judicial lynching." The fate of the eight other Negroes, two of them juveniles, who are still to be tried seems sealed if their trial takes place in Decatur. An effort will be made to obtain a change of venue to Birmingham. There it is possible that some of the sectionalism, race hatred, bigotry and intolerance that make a fair trial impossible in the little backwater town might be escaped. It may be hoped that the trial judge, whose conduct and attitude have won the respect of all, will have such regard for the name of Alabama justice in the land that he will consent to the change of venue.

JURY CONVICTS NEGRO; DEATH PENALTY FIXED

Out 21 Hours in Scottsboro Case, Took Only 3 Ballots; Defense Shocked; 6 Wait Trial

By CARTER BROOKE JONES.
Universal Service Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9.—An Alabama jury brought in a verdict of guilty today in the case of Haywood Patterson, first of seven Negroes granted a retrial by the United States Supreme Court, on a charge of attacking two white girls.

The penalty again was fixed at death. The Southern jury deliberated twenty-one hours.

The verdict came as shock to defense counsel, headed by Samuel Leibowitz of New York, who had been confident of an acquittal after the surprise testimony of Ruby Bates, one of the two alleged victims. She repudiated her statements at the original trial denying that either she or the other young woman, Mrs. Victoria Price, had been attacked by the Negroes.

PLANS APPEAL.

Immediately after the verdict Leibowitz, whose entrance into the case had aroused resentment in this little Alabama town, announced his intention of carrying an appeal to the United States Supreme Court again. He said

"This is another black chapter in American justice. It is a triumph of bigotry. It means that because a man's skin is black he can be convicted to death by smirking hypocrisy, no matter what the evidence may be."

The young Negro evidenced little concern as he heard the jury foreman pronounce the words which doomed him for the second time to death.

He smiled broadly and shrugged before he was led from the courtroom, to be taken back to the jail at Birmingham, where his six companions are held.

Under the Alabama law the jury could have fixed the penalty at anything from ten years imprisonment to life, or death.

TOOK THREE BALLOTS.

It was learned that the jury took only three ballots. The jurors agreed on a verdict of guilty at the first ballot and the argument was over the question of the penalty. The second ballot was 11 to 1 for the death penalty and the third was unanimous.

There was no demonstration at the verdict, and the Sunday calm of the sleepy little Southern town was unbroken.

Today's verdict climaxes a two-year fight against the conviction and sentencing to death of the Negroes, first tried in Scottsboro, Ala.

The International Labor Defense, championing the "Scottsboro boys," took the fight to the highest court, where the original verdict was set aside and a new trial ordered for each of the seven.

The retrial of the second Negro of the group, Charlie Weems, is scheduled to open a week from tomorrow.

The trial of Patterson began last Monday, after a week of arguments on preliminary motions. The defense sought to quash the indictment on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the jury panels. This is expected to be one of the main issues in the attempt to have the Supreme Court review the case again.

THE DECATUR VERDICT.

National attention was inevitably fixed upon the second trial of the Negroes convicted of rape in the ~~first~~ so-called "Scottsboro case." That conviction was set aside and a new trial ordered by the Supreme Court of the United States. Its reasons were that local prejudice was so violent and inflamed, and so pronounced even in the criminal proceedings against the accused men, that they did not have a fair trial. Now at Decatur a verdict of guilty, carrying with it a death sentence, has been found in the case of one of the Negroes, tried separately. This result comes as a surprise and a shock to those who had followed the evidence given in court. The case had become of such national importance that THE TIMES sent a competent and trusted and impartial member of its staff to furnish full reports of the trial. These have told their own story from day to day.

The presiding judge bore himself with impartiality, and was evidently anxious to make Alabama justice worthy of the name. His rulings, so far as can be determined at this distance, were correct. His charge to the jury was filled with strong protests against anything like mob law or the spirit of lynching, and of warnings to disregard everything but the evidence in the case. Whether the jury was swayed as much as it should have been by his injunctions to give no weight to the fiery denunciations and appeals to race hatred by the prosecution, it is impossible to say. Although Judge HORTON took the strongest ground against anything like intimidation or threats of violence on the part of the people of the vicinage, it was all too plain that the trial was conducted in an atmosphere intensely prejudiced against the accused Negro. The jurymen deliberated a long time over the tangled evidence and the manifest untrustworthiness of the chief witnesses, both for the prosecution and the defense. But the final verdict was "Guilty," and it is now difficult to see how an appeal could lie to the Supreme Court again, or to any higher power except the Governor. He might see fit, in view of all the circumstances, to commute the death sentence into a term of imprisonment.

The Verdict in the Scottsboro Case

If the Scottsboro case is to become historical, whatever may be the ultimate fate of the accused Negroes, the charge of Judge James E. Horton to the jury will always stand out as the act of a brave man and an American of the purest type.

While at a distance it seemed the Communist agitation worked almost as strongly as race prejudice against Heywood Patterson, higher courts will have to decide the justice of the verdict. Nevertheless it was apparent that throughout the trial there hung over the courtroom the threat of lynch law should there be an acquittal.

We of the North cannot appreciate the social phases of that Alabama trial, nor the character and intensity of feeling engendered by it. In the face of this, Judge Horton, a Southerner in every fibre, pleaded for tolerance, human rights and justice with an eloquence born of love of country.

"On both sides," said Judge Horton toward the close of his charge, "as far back as I know, my people have always been a Southern people, and I have no desire to live anywhere else. I am getting old, and it is my home, my native land, and I want to see righteousness done and justice done. . . It seems sometimes as though love has deserted the human bosom and hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because in the great things in life it is God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies. Truth forever lasts. We should have faith in that."

The verdict of guilty may not have been just. But the condemned man had a fair trial so far as it lay in the power of one great and fine human being to give one.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

The famous Scottsboro case in Alabama has been reopened. This case has won national attention. Eight negroes were tried and convicted of assaulting two white girls. They were sentenced to be electrocuted. Then the American Civil Liberties Union, a radical organization, as well as several other organizations, got busy, protesting against this "mass electrocution." They claimed that the negroes had not had a fair trial—that the jury was prejudiced against them. The matter was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and the defendants were granted a new trial. One of the negroes is now on trial. The state's case against all of them will be heard soon. It seems that the court is having a difficult time selecting jurors. Out of hundreds of veniremen drawn, only a few have been accepted. Local negro leaders are demanding that negroes be permitted to serve on the jury. This will not help the defendants. This case is being tried in Alabama, where race feeling is very strong. The demand that negroes serve on the jury will only arouse the slumbering resentment in the minds of the officials over the fact that the Supreme Court reversed their decision. Too many Northern radicals have meddled in the affair already. Southern whites resent the interference of these outsiders, especially of such Communists as Theodore Dreiser, who is always meddling in someone else's business.

We trust that race prejudice will not be allowed to enter into this case. These men should be tried on the evidence presented, and neither condemned nor condoned because their skin is black. But if it is proven that they are guilty of the crime of which they are accused, they should pay with their lives. If they were white men, they would be convicted just as quickly. Southern men respect the chastity of their their women and protect them at all costs. Radicals of the stripe that took part in this agitation and protest are known to have scant respect for pure womanhood.

THE SCOTTSBORO CASE.

The dramatic testimony by one of the young women involved that the whole case against nine Alabama Negro youths charged with assault is fictitious was more than even the most ardent defense groups had hoped for a few months ago when the United States supreme court ordered a new trial.

Until then, the indignation of the nation had been aroused purely by the refusal of Alabama authorities to give the youths their rightful opportunity to present evidence of innocence or to insure trial by an unprejudiced jury.

Had the nine Negroes been convicted and sentenced to death after a fair trial, little resentment would have been heard.

How many Negroes have been thus "railroaded" to the noose and the electric chair in the South during the last half century it is impossible to know.

The encouraging factor is that the barbaric inhumanity to prisoners and the ruthless injustice of the courts in the South are gradually being forced out into the light—light which they will not bear.

THE MISSING WITNESS AT DECATUR.

At the second trial of one of Alabama's seven Negroes who had remained for months under sentence of death, Ruby Bates, complaining witness, came into court at Decatur and denied the facts to which she had sworn at the first trial.

Whether she is telling the truth now or told it then is a question that remains, but all the circumstances were present that might mark this as one of the most remarkable of court incidents. The charge that these seven Negroes were railroaded to the gallows has gone around the world, has inspired organized propaganda among critics of America abroad, has enlisted the sympathy of not a few in this country who continued unconvinced in the face of a strong showing of guilt. The United States Supreme Court took the unusual action of setting aside the conviction on the ground that the influences surrounding the first trial violated the due process of law guarantee, the only ground on which it could interpose. The climaxes of melodrama's far-fetched court scenes were given realism when the repentant witness, missing from Alabama for months, appeared after the defense supposedly was completed to confess that by the verdict of the original trial Heywood Patterson's life had been forfeited on perjured testimony.

The details that may contribute to fallibility in courts as in other human agencies have not often been so startlingly held up to view. The perjurer's story of tramp life in men's clothing and among homeless and drunken outcasts threw a high light on the sordid conditions out of which the world-celebrated capital indictment grew.

LEIBOWITZ GETS THREATS

New York,

He Smiles at 'Crank's' Warnings —Bates Girl's Father Seeks to Aid Hunt for Her.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 29.—A petition asking Circuit Judge James E. Horton to quash the venire from which a jury is to be drawn to try Haywood Patterson, one of nine Negroes accused of an attack on two white girls, was drawn up today by Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel.

Mr. Leibowitz, who has lost one fight to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand jury which returned the true bills against them, leveled the same objection to the venire drawn from the trial jury.

With the court in recess today, Mr. Leibowitz spent his time preparing to carry his fight on Alabama's so-called "selective jury system" into Morgan County, where the present trial will be held. He was ready, he said, to subpoena nearly 200 Negro citizens of the county to testify that, while qualified in every way to serve as jurors, they have been excluded from the rolls.

In connection with his motion to quash the indictments the defense attorney presented evidence from thirteen witnesses in an effort to prove that racial discrimination in Jackson County, where the alleged attack on Ruby Bates and Victoria Price took place two years ago, kept Negroes off the juries in that county.

By denying that motion Judge Horton held, in effect, that Mr Leibowitz had failed to make out a case against the administration of the law by the jury commissioners of Jackson County. Whether he would consent to hear evidence of the same sort relating to Morgan County was a matter of conjecture.

New Circumstances Different.

While the new petition raises a question similar to that already disposed of by the court, the circumstances are different. In arguing the motion to quash the indictments Mr. Leibowitz was handicapped by his inability to prove that no Negro names were on the jury rolls of Jackson County.

Judge Horton's ruling came after he consented to issue a subpoena duces tecum for the jury rolls of Jackson County, but before they had been produced or any ruling made regarding their admissibility as evidence.

The defense lawyer had rested his case with the reservation that he would submit further proof when the jury rolls were produced.

In arguing the new petition Mr. Leibowitz will have before him the names of all prospective jurors and it will be possible for him to establish definitely the color of each man on it. Another factor in his favor is that Decatur is a more urban community than Scottsboro and its Negro citizens are better educated and more sophisticated.

Among the witnesses he intends to call there will be several Negro voters, and in Alabama a colored man can win the right to cast a ballot only after proving his qualification by reciting the Constitution and interpreting its meaning.

Negro preachers, doctors and business men, and one Negro teacher "with a recognized degree," will also be among the witnesses for whom the defense will ask subpoenas.

Liebowitz Gets "Crank" Warnings

During the day while his associates, Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel for the International Labor Defense, and G. W. Chamlee, former Attorney General of Chattanooga, were preparing motion papers and conferring with their witnesses, Mr. Liebowitz visited the jail where the defendants are imprisoned, under guard of militiamen and deputy sheriffs.

He conferred briefly with the prisoners and upon leaving the jail declared it was "unfit for human habitation," saying that he would ask the court to set aside a room in the court house where he might consult his clients without the necessity of visiting the jail again.

The Morgan County jail has been condemned and has not been used for white prisoners for the past two years.

Mr. Liebowitz said that since his arrival here he has received half a dozen threatening letters from "cranks," who warned him against continuing his attack on the laws and customs of Alabama and advised him to "stay home where you belong."

The defense attorney dismissed the letters with a shrug and a smile.

"It should be understood though," he said, "that I have no interest in attacking either the customs or laws of this or any other State.

"I am doing only what any lawyer would do in this case—demanding the full protection of the law for my clients."

Renew Hunt for Girl Witness.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., the young attorney general who is prosecuting the Negroes, spent the day in conference with his associates, Wade Wright, J. G. Bailey and Thomas E. Lawson. They interviewed several witnesses and prepared their arguments against the expected defense assault upon the venire.

Among the witnesses interviewed was the father of Ruby Bates, who gave Mr. Knight several addresses at which he said he thought his daughter, mysteriously missing since Feb. 28, might be found.

The trial of Patterson, the alleged ringleader of the attack on the two white girls, was scheduled to be held as soon as the motion to quash the venire is out of the way. Whether severances will be asked in the cases of the seven others awaiting trial was not learned.

Two of the prisoners, Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, are said to be juveniles and are to be tried later in juvenile court.

Mr. Knight is planning to present virtually the same witnesses and the same evidence which resulted in the original conviction of eight of the nine Negroes.

The Supreme Court of the United States reversed the conviction and set aside the death sentences imposed on the ground that the Negroes did not have adequate counsel, although Judge A. E. Hawkins, who presided, assigned "the whole bar of Jackson County" to defend them.

Miniature Train to Be Shown.

In order to illustrate graphically the testimony of the witnesses regarding what happened aboard the freight train on which the crime is said to have been committed, Mr. Liebowitz brought with him a miniature of the train.

It is complete in every detail, consisting of a locomotive with brass fittings and thirty cars, replicas of the box cars, flat cars, tank cars and gondolas which figure in the testimony of witnesses at the earlier trial.

Assembled, the model freight train is about thirty-two feet long, about half the width of the courtroom inside the rail.

The townsfolk have indicated more desire to see this train than they have in seeing the defendants.

PENALTY OF DEATH IS SOUGHT

DECATUR, Ala., March 31.—The big show is on. The town of Decatur is crowded with visitors—hot dog venders are doing a rushing business near the Decatur courthouse—men and women are in holiday attire and in the best of humor.

Their town, like Scottsboro, is now on the map, for it is here that eight boys, eight illiterate, cowed, browbeaten boys, are hearing again the story of how they "raped" two white prostitutes somewhere near Scottsboro two years ago.

It is the kind of a show that warms the hearts of white Alabama. The attorney general of the state, Thomas J. Knight Jr., has taken personal charge of the prosecution. He is surrounded by his cohorts, the sheriff of the county and a handpicked audience which was admitted to the court room by tickets issued by the sheriff. From all outward appearances, Decatur plans to eclipse the Scottsboro performance held in 1931 when, with 10,000 people milling about the courtyard of a town that has a normal population of 500, with a military band giving concerts every night to entertain the mob and with soldiers singing "There'll be a hot time in the old town tonight," the boys, eight of them ranging in age from 14 to 17, were sentenced to die in the electric chair. The jury disagreed on the 13-year-old boy, so he was thrown back in jail, where he still is.

Removed From Death Cell

The boys, Andy Wright, Clarence Norris, Olen Montgomery, Charlie Weems, Ozie Powell, Willie Robertson, Roy Wright and Haywood Patterson, were brought to Decatur from Birmingham Monday. They had been in the [illegible] two days following their incarceration of two years in Kilby prison death house at Montgomery. They were delivered at the courthouse in a large black van, and were forced to march through a cordon of soldiers with drawn bayonets into the courtroom to me[illegible]

With the opening of the trial on Tuesday, Attorney Sa[illegible]bowitz, representing the International Labor Defense, and heading the defense counsel for the boys, presented to Judge James E. Horton a motion to quash the indictments on the grounds that members of the Race are excluded from the grand juries of Alabama and specifically from the jury that indicted the boys. This motion was denied by the judge.

That the intention of the trial is to humiliate members of the Race as well as to secure another conviction for the boys was evidenced by the first witness called by Attorney General Knight to refute the charge that the Race is barred from juries of Alabama. This witness, J. S. Benson, editor of the Progressive-Age of Scottsboro, showed how he felt about the situation by stating that he didn't think "Negroes" could qualify for jury service because of their lack of "sound judgment." He added "Most all Negroes will steal."

Everybody Laughs

General laughter that greeted that remark showed how the spectators in the courtroom feel about eight boys being on trial for their life for crimes which they did not commit.

The Scottsboro case originated in 1930 when nine boys, hoboing their way through Alabama in search of jobs, were taken off the train near Scottsboro and charged with raping two white women. Although there was no evidence that such a crime had ever been committed, and the women were known to be of shady reputations, eight of the boys were herded into the courtroom at Scottsboro and sentenced. One of the girls, Ruby Bates, has since written a letter stating that she was not touched by the boys. She said that she had been forced by police at Scottsboro to make the statement against them. Shortly after writing her letter she disappeared, and her present whereabouts is unknown. At least the Alabama authorities claim they do not know where she is.

The other woman, Victoria Price, has remained silent throughout the whole farcical trial. In the meantime the International Labor Defense, through its representatives, Mr. Liebowitz, George Chamelee and Joseph R. Brodsky, is making a desperate fight to have the boys freed. The show in Decatur is so well planned and is receiving such support from the people of Decatur that there is small chance, however, of its ending as quickly as did the Scottsboro trial. The town people of Decatur know when they are well off.

The trial now going on was ordered last November when the United States supreme court decreed that the Scottsboro case had not been fairly tried. Two weeks ago attorneys for the defendants secured a transfer of the hearing from Scottsboro to Decatur.

Baltimore, Md.

It is the last rape case Communists have focused the eyes of the entire world upon this little Alabama town, because here race hatred brings civilization down to the witchcraft level.

Adding to the unusual character of this second trial which has been ordered by the United States Supreme Court, and which is held in a military atmosphere, in which only the guns of the militia will restrain lynching and burning, is the fact that Ruby Bates, one of the white girls who accused the boys of rape, is missing.

Ruby it is, who wrote the letter denying that any of the colored boys had touched her. Scottsboro police concealed the letter as long as possible. She is the chief witness against the boys, and she couldn't be found as the trial started.

Two years ago, nine black boys, one of them at that time 14 years old, were sentenced to die for rape upon two white girls they found riding on a freight train.

An alleged confession was obtained from the boys, who repudiated it later, and said they were beaten regularly before their conviction and afterwards by prison guards.

So at the Scottsboro trial unfolds a drama of world-wide interest and significance. Into this welter of Alabama prejudice, excitement, danger and mud last week motored two black newspapermen. One of them is a member of the staff of the AFRO-AMERICAN. In these columns, therefore, will be told not only the events of that trial, but its atmosphere, its setting and motives.

To many people today, Scottsboro and Decatur represent the last stops in civilization before barbarism is reached. There, toiling along with others, are our own members of the press, whose function is first and last to tell the truth about Scottsboro in such a way that America may wake up to the direction in which race hate is leading.

The Scottsboro Case And Constitutional Law

News

3-31-33

Birmingham, Ala.

For two reasons it is advantageous that the first few days of the new trial of the Scottsboro case at Decatur should have been occupied with deliberations relating to constitutional law. Interpretation of the fourteenth amendment has emerged as the central importance of the case in its wider implications. Prompt examination into the methods of the selection of juries in Jackson County, therefore, immediately gave to the trial that clear direction which should be welcome to all concerned. What is found to be the relationships between the constitution and practices in Jackson County will present a fairly representative study of the situation as it exists throughout the South.

In the second place, deliberations on intricate legal matters are not calculated to stimulate the surface emotions in such a way as to embarrass the due course of justice. Had the retrial at Decatur been commenced with a vigorous cross-examination of evidence in the criminal charges involved, the atmosphere of the court might have become surcharged with a conflicting emotionalism at the very outset. On the contrary, through the extremely competent reports of Mr. Ralph E. Hurst and other correspondents, we learn that the court proceedings, as well as the town of Decatur, have been remarkable for their calmness and restraint.

Although a minute sifting of the evidence bearing upon the criminal charges may be expected as the trial develops further, there is something decidedly reassuring in the picture of those Negro defendants, without handcuffs, "seated in chairs lined against the wall behind their attorneys," while "some of them take naps" and none of them seem to be "the least bit excited over the occasion." Now that a tone of orderliness and judicial quietness has been firmly established at the beginning of the trial, it may be confidently expected that the whole procedure will be carried through in a similar atmosphere. That such should be the case is obviously to be desired from every point of view.

Influenced by the decision of the United States Supreme Court last November, and possibly with an eye upon further eventualities before that tribunal, the defense attorneys at Decatur have attempted to base their first moves upon the fourteenth amendment. Whether the provisions of this amendment can properly be applied in such a way as to discredit the methods of selecting juries in Jackson County, of course, remains to be proved or disproved in the court.

Section 1 of Article 14 of the federal constitution, which seems to be in the background of evidence and arguments advanced at Decatur during the past few days, reads as follows:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

It was upon the celebrated "due process" clause of this section of the fourteenth amendment that the United States Supreme Court principally supported the order for a new trial of the Scottsboro case. The majority opinion of that court held that the defendants were placed in jeopardy of their lives without a properly qualified legal defense, and therefore without "due process of law."

As well as the layman can gather, the lengthy investigation of the jury system in Jackson County is predicated upon the assumption that failure to include Negroes on the jury list would constitute an abridgment of "the privileges and immunities of citizens." In other words, the early stages of the trial at Decatur have presented no fundamentally new questions. The whole problem involved is one which has long been familiar in the procedure of Southern courts.

The federal constitution, generally speaking, has grown out of three periods in our national history. The original seven articles and the first 12 amendments were enacted as a groundwork by 1804. At the close of the War Between the States, the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments were devised by those radical groups intent upon punishing the South as a rebellious and conquered province. The remaining five amendments have been passed since 1913; they refer to such conspicuously modern things as income taxes, direct popular election of senators, prohibition, woman suffrage and "lame duck" Congresses.

Whether the obviously punitive amendments, set up in the heat of passion against the South immediately following the War Between the States, shall remain inflexible at this late date, to the obliteration of the principle of state rights, is a matter of more interest to the South than to any other section of the United States.

Scottsboro Boys Take Stand, Deny Charges; "I Was Framed Up" Shouts Patterson

New York, N.Y.

NEW YORK.—The International Labor Defense today urged its more than 800 branches throughout the United States to send protests and hold meetings and demonstrations denouncing the lynch attempts at Decatur.

(By Special Correspondent)

DECATUR, Ala., April 5.—An armed gang of 200 members of the Ku Klux Klan, who had just concluded a meeting held in another section of the town, last night moved on the Morgan County court house in the rear of which—in a flimsy jail—are confined the nine Scottsboro boys

The attempted attack took place about 8 o'clock in the evening, at the time when Samuel S. Leibowitz, attorney for the International Labor Defense, was conferring with the nine Scottsboro boys in the courthouse. Previously he had won the right to confer with the boys in the courthouse instead of in the jail which, upon a previous visit, he had characterized as "unfit for pigs."

A plea by Sheriff A. W. Davis, Jr., buttressed by the threats of guardsmen to shoot if the lynch gang advanced, resulted in the dispersal of the klansmen.

Sheriff Lies

This morning, however, the sheriff brazenly denied that the gang had actually advanced on the jail, although Capt. Joe E. Burleson, in command of the national guard detachment on duty at the trials, admitted that more sentries had been placed around the courthouse and the jail. At the same time it is reported that 15 more militiamen, bringing machine guns with them, are due to arrive in Decatur momentarily.

That the action of the armed gang was not a "spontaneous" outburst, but was rather the result of systematic organization under the direction of "leading citizens" is undeniable. The courageous action of the local Negroes in testifying on behalf of the defense on the issue of the exclusion of Negroes from jury service coupled with the knowledge that Prosecutor Knight had made out a miserable case undoubtedly hastened the action of the klansmen.

Although your correspondent was informed by a participant that Davis himself spoke to the mob, threatening to shoot and urging them to disperse the local officials as well as the press are seeking to stifle the story in an effort to main the illusory, "peaceful" exterior of Decatur.

Last night Capt. Burleson of the national guard conferred excitedly with Attorney-General Knight a number of times, but the prosecutor refused to divulge the cause of the excitement when questioned by your correspondent.

Judge's Speech

Clear-cut confirmation of the threatened lynch action against the Scottsboro boys and their attorneys was seen when Judge Horton, during the morning session, after sending the jury from the courtroom, declared:

"I will give the order to national guardsmen and peace officers to shoot to kill if any violence is attempted. Any person who seeks to prejudice these cases is not a good citizen, and has forfeited his right to protection under Alabama law. If any effort is made to take these prisoners by violence, if I am present—and I will be present, I, personally, will give the orders to shoot to kill."

After the judge had finished his speech, Capt. Burleson stated in an interview with your correspondent that the meeting of the Ku Klux Klan took place last night, but that he was unable to "discover" the place where it was held. He declared that the gang's plan was to divert part of the national guard to another part of the town, leaving the jail clear for attack.

"The jail is an arsenal and we have plenty ammunition to shoot."

This, taken together with the speech made in court today by Judge Horton, with its solemn warnings against "mob action," indicates clearly that the judge is well aware of the lynch danger and makes speeches from the bench to keep up the pretense of "fairness."

When court opened this morning Haywood Patterson took the witness stand and denied that he participated in any attack upon either Victoria Price or Ruby Bates, as charged by the prosecution.

"No!" was his emphatic answer to a direct question by Attorney Leibowitz as to whether he assaulted the Price woman on a freight train in 1931. She had previously "identified" Patterson as the "third or fourth" Negro who had attacked her and Ruby Bates.

The Negro boy, who has been in prison for more than two years on the framed-up charges, readily admitted that he was on the train on which the attacks are alleged to have taken place, but denied any knowledge of the assaults.

More Frame-up

The feebleness of the prosecution's case against Patterson and the other Negro boys is indicated by the announcement made today by Attorney-General Knight that he would call as rebuttal witnesses two Kilby prison guards, who will testify that Patterson "boasted" of having participated in the alleged attacks.

Negro Boys Testify

Leibowitz today called each of the Scottsboro boys to the stand and all vehemently denied any attacks upon Price or Bates. Willie Robinson, one of the boys removed from the train by a sheriff's posse, was the first defense witness called. He denied all knowledge of the attacks upon the two women.

A dramatic moment in the questioning of the defendants came today when Prosecutor Knight was questioning Haywood Patterson, now on trial for his life.

"I Was Framed"

"You were tried at Scottsboro, were you not?" Knight asked.

"I was framed at Scottsboro!" the Negro boy answered heatedly.

This came as a culmination to the testimony of the other Negro boys who traced every moment of their actions on the freight train, using the miniature trains set up in the courtroom.

Robertson, another of the defendants, testified that he was physically unable to jump over the freight train and engage in a fight or the alleged attack, since he remained in the same flat car all the way between Chattanooga and Paint Rock.

Never Saw Women

All the boys testified they never saw the women on the train, and observed them for the first time. Immediately upon reaching the witness stand, Eugene Williams told how he was for nearly two years kept in full view of the electric chair at Kilby Prison, although he had not even been convicted. He then told the story of the fight between the white and Negro boys on the train on the other side of Stevenson. The young Negro boy told his story calmly, indicating by use of the miniature train how the white boys stepped upon Patterson's hand, while passing over the oil tank and how Patterson asked them to be careful, and how this incident led to the fight which resulted in all but two white boys and an unknown number of Negroes leaving the freight train before reaching Paint Rock.

Quiet and Confident

The bearing of the boys on the witness stand was quiet and self-confident, and they were unswerving in the main points of their story, refusing to permit themselves to be confused by Prosecutor Knight's detailed and deliberately involved questions.

Young Williams told how Patterson saved the life of Gilley, a white boy, by pulling him into the gondola train while the freight was traveling at a high speed. When Knight tried to take the alleged attack on the white girls for granted, Patterson replied:

"I never did that, did not even see the girls. You think I would save a white man and then let him witness such a thing as raping white women?"

For some time the Negro boy argued directly with Knight, all the time vigorously denying the prosecutor's charges and insinuations.

Victoria Price In Jungle

Dallas Ramsay, Negro from Chattanooga, was an important defense witness. He testified that at 6 in the morning before the freight ride he saw Victoria Price with another girl in the Hobo Jungle at Chattanooga. Wednesday, Victoria Price testified she had spent the night at the home of "Callie Broochi" in Chattanooga, not coming to the railway yards until late in the morning. Ramsay testified she asked him when her train would pull out.

He saw her again at 9 p.m. together with Ruby Bates and two white men boarding a freight train. Victoria Price has testified she never met Orville Gilley or Lester Carter, two of the boys on the train, before she got on the train.

The defense announced it would prove that she and Ruby Bates spent the night in a freight car at Chattanooga with these two men before boarding the train.

Testimony Unbroken

The prosecution tried to break down this damaging testimony but failed completely before the composure and clear testimony of Ramsay. Mrs. Beatrice Maddox, sister of Roy and Andy Wright, the next witness on the stand [illegible] had searched all of Chattanooga for such a place as Victoria Price described as "Callie Broochi's" and had not found it.

Daily Worker

She was followed by General George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga chief Scottsboro defense counsel who testified he has lived for 25 years on Seventh Street, Chattanooga where Victoria Price said "Callie Broochi" lived and has never heard of such a person. This was a wealthy business neighborhood.

Crosses Blazing As Jurors Weigh Scottsboro Case

By TOM CASSIDY.
(Staff Correspondent of The News)

DECATUR, ALA., April 8.—Fiery crosses are being burned on adjacent Alabama hills in token of the vigilance of the mob. Samuel S. Leibowitz charged in open court tonight.

In an adjoining room, twelve white jurors debated the fate of Haywood Patterson, first of the seven colored Scottsboro youths to be retried for their lives on charges of having attacked two white girls.

Samuel Leibowitz

While national guardsmen patrolled the courthouse grounds, the jurors went to supper at 7 o'clock (8 o'clock New York time) after having deliberated for four and a half hours. They returned in an hour.

Meanwhile, Leibowitz, chief counsel for Patterson, had appeared before Judge James E. Horton, the Lincolnesque magistrate who presided during the colored lad's trial, to argue for a change of venue in behalf of Charley Weems, the next of the Scottsboro septet to be brought to bar.

Brodsky Accompanies Leibowitz.

Leibowitz was accompanied by Joseph Brodsky, attorney for the International Labor Defense Council, which has espoused the seven's cause.

"We submit," Leibowitz said, "that Decatur is no place to try the defendant, Weems. Both Mr. Brodsky's life and my own have been threatened, and even now fiery crosses are burning on the surrounding hills. We have not brought these facts to the attention of the Court heretofore—and asked a change of venue—because of the hazard that the jury might be prejudiced. The guardsmen, as you know, were not brought here at our solicitation.

"But now that the case is in the jury's hands, it is proper to express the opinion that justice will be better served by granting the next defendant a hearing elsewhere."

Motion Denied by Court.

Judge Horton denied the motion and ordered the trial of Weems to begin a week from Monday.

The fate of Patterson was given into the jury's hands at 1:55 o'clock this afternoon, after the Judge had charged the jurors not to be swayed by racial or political prejudice, and had feelingly declared:

"I have acted in this trial as I believed to be right—no matter what the personal cost might be!"

Leibowitz had just concluded his four-hour summation.

"It has been stated by some that this is a race matter," the lean, Spartan jurist declared. "There is talk of whether public opinion here or there feels this or that way on this case. That is no concern of ours.

Court Often Vexed.

"The Court has been vexed a great many ways, by the receipt of a great many telegrams and so forth, but this Court desires only to see justice done in this case. We all love our land.

"I love the Southland. I want to see her good name upheld, and we're going to see righteousness and justice done in this case. Do nothing to reflect on her fair name. It seems sometimes that love which should adorn the human bosom has left it, and that hate has taken its place.

"The State must first prove beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant is guilty. Remember whatever you do, that no outside matter is any concern of ours."

Both the Judge and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. were deluged during the session with telegrams from radicals throughout the country demanding that they safeguard the prisoners from lynching in the event of an acquittal.

Victoria Price
State's star witness.

Denies Red Touch.

Leibowitz, hoarse from his oratorical labors of yesterday, apologized to the jury for his physical condition and told them that he talked on because he was fighting a "damnable frame-up by a prostitute." He called the Scottsboro trial of the youths which has been reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court a "judicial lynching."

Referring to the prosecution charge of "sinister influences in New York," he said: "Gentlemen, I've given you the evidence the best I know how. The boy is innocent. I think I've proved that. I'm not an I. L. D. I'm not a Communist. I don't belong to that tribe at all.

"I ask you to let it be spread abroad that Alabama is fair."

Attorney General Knight denounced the defendant, and called him "this thing" in his closing.

He asked that the verdict be not based on "racial prejudice or religious creed," a slap at his prosecution aid, Wade Wright, a member of the All Day Singers sect, who yesterday referred to "New York Jew money."

Knight defended his star witness, Victoria Price, and denounced Ruby Bates, the other of the two who accused the defendants at the first trial. He ridiculed the story of Miss Bates for the defense that the new clothes she wore in court yesterday were purchased for her by the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick of New York, to whom she had said she wanted to recant her story of the attack.

After declaring the case to consist of "a framed defense, rather than a framed prosecution," Knight said: "I ask you to put this man in the electric chair for the attack on Victoria Price."

Vets Wire to Scott

NEW YORK.—The National Committee of the Workers' Ex-Servicemen's League today addressed a sharp wire to Dr. E. Scott, who was charged with responsibility by the government for recruiting Negroes into the imperialist war. Scott was at one time secretary to Booker T. Washington, and is at present the treasurer of Howard University, a Negro institution.

The wire follows:

On behalf of four hundred thousand Negroes recruited in World War we demand you wire Governor Miller Alabama for change Scottsboro trial to Birmingham stop Demand De Priest others do likewise.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT.

THE conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the Negro defendants in the second trials of the Scottsboro cases, will be appealed from. It should be.

Among other things prejudicial to a fair trial, the defense attorney was able to show that the jury law apparently was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel for this case. On ~~more~~ than one occasion during the trial the State attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent orderly and judicious consideration of evidence by the jury.

In repudiating her testimony at the earlier trial Ruby Bates last Thursday swore that the other girl in the case, Victoria Price, had framed the Negro youths. Lester Carter, a white friend of the two girls, confirmed the testimony of Ruby Bates.

To execute boys on the discredited evidence of a woman of Victoria Price's character, and following a trial in which racial discrimination seemed to operate in the jury panel, would be unthinkable.

Just as the Chief Justice of Alabama dissented from the Scottsboro conviction, and just as the United States Supreme Court threw out that conviction as a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution preventing States from depriving "any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law," so the Decatur verdict yesterday appears certain to be set aside by a higher court.

HUNT GIRL WITNESS IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

All Alabama Sheriffs Urged by Attorney General to Find Accuser of Negroes

TROOPS SENT TO DECATUR

Governor Miller Orders Company to Prevent Outbreak at Second Trial, Beginning Tomorrow.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 25.—Attorney General Thomas E. Knight ordered a Statewide search today for Ruby Bates, missing witness in Alabama's cause celebre, the Scottsboro case, involving nine Negroes.

Exactly two years ago today, the Bates girl and Victoria Price, her companion on a freight-train riding expedition, charged they were attacked by a dozen Negroes who threw seven white hoboes off the train after a furious fight.

For the second time in two years the State is ready to proceed against seven of the accused Negroes, and once more the prosecution will demand that they pay the penalty provided by the law of Alabama—death in the electric chair at Kilby Prison.

The first trial held in the feverish excitement which prevailed in Scottsboro after the prisoners and their victims were taken from the freight train by an armed posse resulted in the conviction of all the prisoners save one, who then was only 13 years old. The sentences of death meted out by Judge A. E. Hawkins were set aside by the United States Supreme Court after the International Labor Defense entered the case.

While he made no secret of the fact that he was extremely anxious to locate the Bates girl, missing from her home in Huntsville since Feb. 28, Attorney General Knight did not regard her absence as an insurmountable barrier to a successful prosecution. He issued an order to the Sheriff of every county in the State to search for her.

Relies on First-Trial Evidence.

Should they fail to find the young woman, it was understood that he would attempt to introduce the evidence she gave at the first trial against those of the Negroes whom she accused of attacking her. This move probably will be fought by the defense.

While everything appeared quiet on the surface of this Tennessee River town, officials were not inclined to overlook the possibility of trouble when the Negroes are brought here from the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham early next week.

Coroner Miller issued an order from the Capitol at Montgomery this morning, ordering a detail of thirty National Guardsmen to Decatur for duty Monday morning. They are to report to Judge James E. Horton, the trial judge. This precautionary measure was taken at the request of Judge Horton and Sheriff Bud Davis with the approval of Attorney General Knight.

The guardsmen will keep a twenty-four-hour vigil about the jail from which escape has been easy and frequent in the past.

A capacity crowd is expected to swarm into the second floor courtroom, where the trial is to be held, and orders have been issued to deputies to maintain order at all costs.

Among the townsfolk the attitude is that there will be no trouble unless it is started by "outsiders." By that they mean the Communist sympathizers of the Negroes. While the Negroes are not radicals themselves, they are being defended by lawyers for the International Labor Defense. Communists have been making the most of the opportunity the case has afforded them to carry on organization work among the Negroes of this and neighboring States.

Look for "Reds" at Trial.

Recently pamphlets were circulated in Southern cities announcing that a "labor jury" would be present in the court house to render a verdict after the trial. It would be composed, the announcements said, of Negro and white workingmen, professional men and white-collar workers and it would be representative of a cross-section of the country.

The Sheriff's forces will be especially watchful for radicals from New York, it was said.

Before the opening of the actual trial a defense motion to quash the indictments against the Negroes will be argued by Samuel Leibowitz and Attorney General Knight, both of whom have subpoenaed witnesses to support and contradict the contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service in the State. This contention was one of the points on which the case was carried to the nation's highest tribunal, and it may well prove the peg on which to hang a second appeal if the motion is denied and the Negroes are convicted again.

In reviewing the original verdict, the Supreme Court based its decision solely upon the "inadequacy of the defense counsel," provided by the court in Scottsboro. The courts have held, however, that the establishment of a color line in selecting jurors viloates guarantees of equal rights provided by the Fourteenth Amendment.

Florida Case Will Be Cited.

In the case of Tarrance against Florida the Supreme Court ruled:

"An actual discrimination by the officers charged with the administration of statutes unobjectionable in themselves against the race of a Negro on trial for a crime by purposely excluding Negroes from the grand and petit juries of the county will not be presumed but must be proved. An affidavit of the persons under indictment, annexed to a motion to quash the indictment on the ground of such discrimination, stating that the facts set up in the motion are true, 'to their best knowledge, information and belief,' is not evidence of the facts stated."

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, intends to supply the lacking "proof" by examining twenty-odd witnesses and attempting to prove that some of them, although Negroes, were qualified to serve as jurors and have never been called for such service.

In another case the court held that a Negro who charged exclusion of members of his race from the grand and petit juries which indicted him and convicted him waited too long before raising the issue. The court held:

"If appellant had desired to take advantage of discrimination against him because he was a Negro it should have been taken in advance of his conviction."

While the question of racial discrimination was not raised in the Scottsboro case until after the conviction of the Negroes, the defense is prepared to cite the Supreme Court decision holding that the defendants were not adequately defended in denying that they waited too long to raise the issue.

Knight to Defend Jury System.

Attorney General Knight, who is understood to feel that the defense motion challenges the jury system of his State, is prepared to defend it. He holds that the statute defining the qualification of jurors—a statute the constitutionality of which has been upheld by the Supreme Court—does not discriminate against Negroes as such. He will maintain also that the law is administered fairly.

Arthur Tidwell, one of the three jury commissioners of Morgan County, declared this afternoon that he did not know whether the venire from which the trial jury will be drawn would contain the names of any Negroes. While he admitted that he could not recall when a Negro had served on a jury here, and conceded it "was a long while back," he said he never inquired about a man's color in placing his name in the jury box.

"As long as I know he is a man of good character and sound judgment, like it says in the law book, I put his name in the box," he said. "I don't never ask whether he is a Negro or not and I don't ever see them. I don't know very many persons in this county."

Notwithstanding Mr. Tidwell's assertion, court attendants declared that Negroes never have served on juries here.

DEFENSE OPENS FIGHT; MASS SUPPORT OF ALL WORKERS IS NEEDED NOW

Defying Threats, Negroes Occupy Third of Seats in Decatur Courtroom

Lynch Danger Exists As Organized Groups Are Mobilized by Alabama Landlords

(By Daily Worker Correspondent.)

DECATUR, Ala., March 27.—Flanked by lines of national guardsmen, the nine framed-up Negro Scottsboro boys marched into the courthouse here this afternoon.

A few moments later counsel for the International Labor Defense swung into action to save the innocent boys from the electric chair.

Highly significant is the fact that Negroes constituted one-third of the spectators in the courtroom. What is more, of the 600 persons who crowded the lawn in front of the court house, the majority were Negroes.

During the morning hours, before the trial was scheduled to begin, less than 100 Negroes were in the crowd, with the majority being whites.

Delay Causes Alarm

The trial, originally scheduled to start at 9 o'clock, did not begin until two o'clock due to the delay in the arrival of the Negro boys from Birmingham, where they have been since the defense compelled their removal from the death cells in Kilby prison.

The crowd began gathering around the courthouse at 7 o'clock when 30 national guardsmen arrived from Hartselle. By 8 o'clock the crowd had grown to 300, and tension grew as the boys failed to arrive. Most of those gathered around the courtroom were from the immediate vicinity, with about one-fourth from outside the county.

Sentiment expressed by some white residents of Decatur before the opening of the trial this morning was: "We figure they'll get what's coming to them, and if not..." Others freely declared that "if those lawyers won't attack the South and behave themselves, there won't be no trouble." All this is a direct result of the press campaign of the Alabama bosses.

As the boys arrived—alert and self-confident—the court was tense. All except Roy Wright were dressed in blue denim overalls, and when Wright, the youngest of the defendants, was led to the place assigned to him, Attorney Liebowitz for the defense shook his hand, much to the amazement of the white officials.

With four soldiers stationed beside the judge's bench, and national guardsmen surrounding the courthouse, concurrent opinion here as the trial proceeds is that the danger grows of lynch action directed by small organised groups coming from the outside towns, like Huntsville.

Demand Rights for Negroes

Citing the Fifteenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, which is supposed to grant equal political rights to white and Negro citizens, defense lawyers will soon begin the calling of Negro witnesses to prove that systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries is practised in the state of Alabama. Just how many witnesses will appear depends on the extent to which the prosecution has succeeded in terrorising the twenty-odd Negroes who have been subpoenaed by the I.L.D. attorneys.

Riding with your correspondent over the same route as the freight train which carried the Scottsboro

boys when they were jailed, Liebowitz, defense counsel, said: "Evidence that we will present will show this to be the most contemptible frame-up ever seen."

A spectacular feature of the defense courtroom fight will be the introduction of a replice of the slow-moving freight train on which Ruby Bates and Victoria Price charged they were attacked.

The defense will show that it was impossible for the accused Negro boys to have been in the gondola, or open car, during the period and in the manner charged.

Hits Troops—State or Federal

"Neither state nor federal troops is a protection for the Scottsboro boys," declared William L. Patterson national secretary of the International Labor Defense today.

"The fact is that the authorities who provide national guardsmen, or federal troops have as their objective the murder of the Scottsboro boys—whether legal or extra-legal.

"Only the mass pressure of the workers of the United States and the world, has saved the Scottsboro boys so far, and only the same force can save them now."

Dr. Duncan was not critical of the resent Legislature, but stated that they aced an especially difficult problem, the olution to which is not easily reached.

Dean Zebulon Judd, of the Auburn chool of education, who presided as oastmaster, announced at the end of of the Morgan County Circuit Court, made a total of 13 witnesses called by he defense.

The State has called only three, J. A. Tidwell, John Tomlinson, and W. J. Briscoe, who comprises the Morgan County Jury Board, which prepares the jury roll and fills the box from which the venires are drawn.

One by one, the witnesses were called to the stand to identify long lists of negroes living in the country and to tate under direct examination by Liebowitz that they had never seen a negro on a jury in Morgan County courts.

It took half an hour or more for each witness and frequently longer as Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., countered defense moves by asking the witnesses if they had any personal knowledge of whether they had been considered by the jury board and found lacking in the necessary qualifications

More than 180 names of negroes living in the county whom the witnesses described as in their opinion, holding the qualifications necessary to qualify for jury service under the selective jury statute of Alabama were read into the testimony.

Constitutional Issue Raised

During the three days court has been held this week, the same question constantly has been raised whether absence of negroes from juries constituted a violation of the rights of the defendants guaranteed under the fourteenth amendment.

In the maze of tedious testimony the names of the two alleged victims of the attack and of the defendants themselves have drifted into the background.

Patterson was the only one of the defendants brought into court today. The others, Andy Wright and Clarence Norris, of Chattanooga; Charlie Weems and Ozie Powell of Atlanta; Willie Roberson of Columbus, Ga., and Olen Montgomery, of Monroe, Ga., were left in the jail.

Patterson at times dozed during the afternoon as the proceedings moved slowly. He had before him a rusty mule shoe, and a rabbit's foot that his counsel obtained for him at his request.

An effort was made by Liebowitz, who entered the case at the invitation of the International Labor Defense but on his stipulation that he accept no remuneration, to have Judge Horton reverse his previous decision to grant the State a severance for Patterson.

Liebowitz wanted the judge to place all seven facing retrial on trial at the same time, contending that it was unfair to Patterson "to single him out." Atty. Gen. Knight yesterday had informed the court he wished to try Patterson separately as Patterson was in the first trial, which resulted in conviction and his request was granted. The other two are juveniles.

NEGRO JUROR BAN TO BE TRIAL ISSUE

WANTS NEGRO WITNESSES

Seeks Permission to Call These to Stand in Effort to Prove Them Qualified to Be Jurors.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 19.—The witnesses for whom subpoenas will be requested this week by G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga lawyer retained by the International Labor Defense to assist Samuel Leibowitz, New York criminal lawyer in the defense of the accused Negroes are, with one exception, colored residents of Jackson County where the crime occurred.

Mr. Leibowitz will attempt to show by examination of these witnesses, if Judge Horton permits that they are qualified to serve as jurors within the meaning of the Alabama statute except for the color of their skins. So far as has been learned here it will be the first time in history that such an attempt has been made to prove racial discrimination in the selection of Southern juries.

One witness, a white man, who now resides in Chattanooga, but who formerly was a resident of Jackson County, is expected to testify that in all the time he lived there no Negroe's name ever appeared upon a jury roll.

The State's answer, as it will be delivered by Thomas E. Knight Jr. Attorney General, is that the Alabama laws do not disqualify Negroes as jurors, but that they have failed to satisfy the jury commissioners appointed by the Governor that they are persons of sound judgment.

Attorneys defending the nine Negroes in the Scottsboro case plan to call twenty witnesses to support their contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from Alabama grand juries and petit juries in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, it became known today.

Long Argument Expected.

The defense has moved to quash the indictments against the Negroes charged with attacking two white girls, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago. The motion is based upon the allegation that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which indicted the nine Negroes.

Argument and the submission of proof in support of the motion is expected to consume the first three or four days of the trial, now scheduled to open March 27 before Circuit Judge James A. Horton of Athens.

Meanwhile the defense attorneys were puzzling over how their witnesses shall be transported from Jackson County to Decatur, the seat of Morgan County, where the trial is to be held. Contrary to popular belief in Alabama the International Labor Defense funds are reported to be limited—notwithstanding the frequently credited reports that the Russian Soviets are supplying the cash for the defense of the accused Negroes, who became Communists after their arrest.

The one day-time train from Scottsboro to Decatur, some fifty odd miles to the west, reaches the latter city at noon and court sessions there usually begin at 8:30 A. M. The other train arrives in the evening and could be used for transporting witnesses only if they were to be kept over night at the expense of the defense, for it is not the State's responsibility.

Another problem before the defense is that the witnesses live in the mountains around Scottsboro and are some distance from the railroad. Consequently they are planning to hire trucks to move their witnesses back and forth between Scottsboro and Decatur.

Mr. Knight was absent from the capital city over the week-end. He said over the telephone that he had been to Decatur to arrange details of the approaching trial and had consulted virtually all the State's witnesses with the exception of Ruby Bates, who disappeared mysteriously on Feb. 28.

Prosecutor in Decatur.

In the meantime Decatur, resentful at suggestions of prejudice against Negroes in general and the Scottsboro Negroes in particular, prepared to make the best of the situation which was foisted upon it. Many of the citizens of Decatur wish that the trial of the Negroes had been sent elsewhere if they could not be tried fairly in Scottsboro, where two years ago they were sentenced to death in the electric chair, only to have the United States Supreme Court order new trials for them.

Attorney General Knight and the defense attorneys have agreed that the Negroes, now confined in the death house of Kilby prison here shall be transferred to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, pending their new trial, but as yet the necessary orders have not been signed. Mr. Chamlee mailed copies of the order which he and Mr. Knight agreed upon to Judge A. E. Hawkins of Jackson County, and Horton of Morgan County, and it was expected that these orders would be returned early this week. If and when the orders are signed the prisoners will be moved promptly, according to officials of Kilby prison.

SEVEN YOUTHS TO FACE NEW TRIALS AT DECATUR

Reporter

3-25-33

Birmingham
Ala.

Court attaches and attorneys in the "Scottsboro Case" have been busy this week making final preparations for opening of the retrial for seven of the youths who were granted new trials when the United States Supreme Court reversed the death sentences given the youths who were charged with attack on two young white women late in March, 1931.

The new trial begins Monday, March 27th, but the scene will be shifted from the place of first trial—Scottsboro, in Jackson County, Alabama—and will be heard before Judge James Horton at Decatur in Morgan County, 75 miles west of Scottsboro, to whose court and jurisdiction Judge A. E. Hawkins granted a change of venue several weeks ago.

Wanted Trials Moved to Birmingham

Attorneys for the boys had sought to have Birmingham in Jefferson County designated as the place for retrial, with the feeling that in the Jeffreson County Courts they could get a fairer trial for their clients than may be possible in a small town so close to the scene of the alleged crime. It is thought that the defense has not given up the idea and may make a motion before the Decatur Court to get further change of venue to Birmingham.

Boys Taken From Kilby

In preparing for the new trials officials transferred eight boys from the death cell at Kilby Prison to Birmingham Tuesday night and placed them in the Jefferson County jail for safekeeping pending their new trial Monday at Decatur, the ninth boy of the group, Roy Wright, has been in the Jefferson County jail since a mistrial was entered in his case at the first hearing.

Those brought to Birmingham Tuesday night are Charlie Weems, Haywood Patterson, Clarence Norris, Eugene Williams, Ozie Powell, Willie Robinson, Andy Wright and Olin Montgomery. All except Eugene Williams will face trial next week.

Alabama Jury System Attacked

Defense attorneys, it is said, will present motion to quash the indictments on which defendants are held if no Negroes appear on the jury list from which the trial jury must be drawn.

State Witness Disappears

In the meantime authorities have been trying to locate the whereabouts of one of the state's chief witnesses against the boys, Ruby Bates, who was one of the two alleged victims of the attack, and who is said to have been missing from her home in Huntsville for several weeks now. Whether the state will proceed with the trial if Miss Bates is not found is not known. The girl is said to have signed a letter more than a year ago in which she repudiated her statement that the boys had attacked her. This alleged letter is in the hands of attorneys for the defendants and will doubtless play a big part in plans of the defense.

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., will handle the state's case against the defendants, while some of the country's best known criminal lawyers have been employed by the International Labor Defense to represent the boys. These include General George W. Chamblee, chief of the Scottsboro

IMPORTANT SCOTTSBORO MEETING

Reporter

3-25-33

Birmingham
Ala.

The Scottsboro case has interested men and women throughout the world of every shade of opinion and of every race and color.

Leading scientists, teachers, and other public-spirited citizens as well as churches, clubs and trade unions, all over the United States and in Europe as well have voiced their sentiments and have called for justice and fair play for these nine Negro boys.

Literally on the eve of trial of the Scottsboro case, Birmingham citizens have arranged a public meeting to discuss the various issues that arise out of the case.

It is announced that the speakers will be Dr. Henry M. Edmonds pastor, Independent Presbyterian Church and State Chairman of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation; David Hutton, a senior at Birmingham-Southern College; Dr. Ernest W. Taggart, president of the local branch of the N. A. A. C. P.; and Dr Kenneth E. Barnhart, Professor of Sociology at Birmingham-Southern College.

The following persons have been asked to make brief talks: Oscar W. Adams, editor of The Birmingham Reporter; Mrs. H. C. Bryant, president, Young Women's Christian Association and Dr. Benjamin B. Goldstein, Montgomery rabbi.

Mr. Gaines T. Bradford, editor of The Birmingham World, will preside.

This meeting is sponsored by the Citizens Scottsboro Aid Committee of Birmingham. It does not represent any particular organization or group of persons. It invites and urges all individuals, churches and clubs to join and assist it in its endeavors to aid the nine Scottsboro boys with moral and financial help.

The meeting will be held Sunday, March 26th, at 3 P. M. at the First Congregational Church, 7th Ave. and 15th Street, North.

BARS NEW CHANGE IN SCOTTSBORO CASE

Attorney General Refuses to Aid Shift From Decatur—Trial Set for March 27.

NEGROES WILL BE MOVED

Leibowitz Wins Transfer to Birmingham, Where Private Interviews Are Not Prohibited.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 15.—Seven of the nine Negroes accused of attacking two white girls on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago will go on trial for their lives a second time at Decatur, Ala., the seat of Morgan County.

Judge Horton, before whom the Negroes will be tried, agreed today to give the case precedence over all others on his calendar. This was the most important result of a conference here between Thomas E. Knight Jr., the young Attorney General who will prosecute the Negroes, and Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel.

Prior to the conference with the Attorney General, Mr. Leibowitz, George W. Chamlee and Joseph Brodsky, the defense attorneys, failed in an effort to obtain the right to interview without surveillance by prison officials the eight prisoners confined in death cells at Kilby prison.

Leaving the prison, Mr. Leibowitz went straight to Mr. Knight and announced his intention of making immediate application for a writ of habeas corpus calling for the immediate production of all the prisoners except Roy Wright, a 15-year-old prisoner in jail at Birmingham.

Mr. Knight asked for a few minutes' delay while he discussed matters with members of the Supreme Court, which was then in session. Returning to his office, he informed Mr. Leibowitz that he would not oppose an application by the defense for transfer of the eight Kilby prisoners to Birmingham, where prison rules do not forbid private interviews with inmates.

Youth's Charges Are Cited.

Papers were then drawn up to be signed by the Sheriff of Jackson County, where the crime was committed; Judge A. E. Hawkins, before whom the first trial was held, and Judge Horton, who will preside over the new trial. The latter was ordered by the United States Supreme Court when it set aside the death sentences originally imposed on the ground that the Negroes did not have adequate representation by counsel.

Mr. Leibowitz sought to win Mr. Knight's consent to a reopening of the argument on the already granted motion for a change of venue, in order that he might submit proof that Birmingham was a more suitable place for the new trial than Decatur, because of the necessity of calling the militia for protection of the prisoners at the latter place.

The Attorney General refused to assist in that matter in any way, taking the position that it had been settled finally by Judge Hawkins when he named Decatur.

Mr. Leibowitz then called the Attorney General's attention to the Wright boy's statement that he was stabbed by a member of the State militia while the troops were protecting him and his fellow defendants from a lynching mob at Scottsboro.

Mr. Leibowitz said he was anxious to avoid the necessity of depending on the militia for the protection of his clients during their trial and urged the Attorney General to summon the troops who were on duty at Scottsboro for a line-up to permit Wright to identify the man who assaulted him.

Mr. Wright said he did not regard the unsupported word of a Negro prisoner as sufficiently important to warrant such an order, but he told Mr. Leibowitz that he would prosecute the offender if the Negro made a formal complaint against a specific individual and the New York lawyer could locate the alleged offender.

Defense to Assail Jury System.

Although Judge Horton agreed to set the trial down for March 27, the selection of a jury to try the accused Negroes will not begin until the 30th. Before the Negroes are tried, Mr. Leibowitz plans to place the jury system of Alabama on trial by calling witnesses to support a motion now pending to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury duty.

It is this phase of the case, touching on one of the fundamentals of the Negro question of the South, which has come to be the paramount issue involved, overshadowing in interest here the fate of the accused men themselves.

Both sides are searching the law books and records for precedents and decisions to bolster up their respective positions.

With the trial date set and a way found to overcome the barriers to private consultation with the eight death-house prisoners, Mr. Leibowitz started at once to Atlanta to catch an airplane tomorrow morning for New York, where he is to appear as defense counsel in a murder trial scheduled to start on Monday. He expects to return to Alabama a week from Friday.

Mr. Brodsky will accompany him and in their absence Mr. Chamlee will be in charge of preparation of the defense case.

Mr. Chamlee is expected to go to Scottsboro tomorrow to try to obtain Judge Hawkins's consent to the order for transferring the prisoners and arrange for the issuance of subpoenas for several witnesses whose presence at the trial is desired by the defense attorneys.

SCOTTSBORO BOYS MOVED FROM KILBY DEATH CELLS

Daily Worker 3-23-33

Now in Birmingham Jail Where Lawyers Will See Them Alone
Lynch Fever Spurs Defense Drive Against Trial in Decatur

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 22.—The two year demand of the International Labor Defense, that the defense attorneys be permitted to interview the eight innocent Scottsboro Negro boys without the presence of guards to terrorize the prisoners, was won yesterday, when it was announced they had been moved from the death cells of Kilby Prison in Montgomery, to the County jail here.

Kilby Prison rules prevent prisoners in death cells from being interviewed by counsel without the presence of guards. The fact is, however, that the confinement of the Scottsboro boys in the death cells was illegal, in view of the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court ordering a new trial.

Lynch Spirit Evident.

The boys were taken after dark in a prison van, escorted by carloads of armed guards, to Birmingham. This is an indication of the lynch-sentiment which has been whipped up by the bosses and officials of the state against the innocent boys. The I.L.D. pointed out. The I.L.D. is continuing the demand that the trials be moved to Birmingham. Scottsboro has 2,300 population; Decatur, 50 miles west, has 15,500; while Birmingham, 85 miles south, has 260,000.

During the week, the boys will be interviewed by the defense attorneys for the first time, as final preparations are made for the legal end of the defense.

Liberals Ask Trial Change.

A plea that the Scottsboro trial be held in Birmingham, instead of Decatur was made yesterday in a joint telegram sent through the American Civil Liberties Union to Gov. Miller and Attorney-General Knight of Alabama, by Benjamin Brewster Episcopal Bishop of Maine; Dr. John Dewey; Bishop Francis J. McConnell former president of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. James H Dillard, president, Jean Slater Fund Charlottesville, Va.; Dr. Elbert Russell, Dean, Duke University, Durham, N. C.; Dr. Mary E. Woolley, president, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.; Arthur Garfield Hays, attorney.

We Must Not Slacken Fight Against Alabama Lynchers

"THE Nigger boys will get the same kind of treatment here that they got at Scottsboro," says a county official at Decatur, scene of the new Scottsboro trial. "They got a fair trial the last time. If any Niggers come around the courtroom and start acting up, something might happen. If this thing had happened 25 years ago there would not have been any trial." Daily Worker

As the date for the new trial nears all the forces of lynch-law are drawn into the task of preparing a new lynching: prosecuting attorneys, attorney-generals, judges and sheriffs and police, businessmen and newspaper writers—all are being assigned their part in the job of murdering these Negro lads. With the most tender care, with the most loving precision, the lynchers of Alabama are building the gallows for the nine Scottsboro boys, long since proved innocent. 3-20-33

The state has refused a change of venue to Birmingham. This legal move, alone, reveals its sinister intention. For there is a growing mass movement of the workers in Birmingham. Negro and white workers have in recent months struggled side by side for bread and work. This common struggle is dealing hammer blows to old race-hatreds. The state knows this, and it knows that where the power of the workers is stronger, the possibility of freeing such victims as the Scottsboro boys is far greater.

New York, N.Y.

But in the small town of Decatur, 50 miles from Scottsboro and only 30 miles from Huntsville, home of the two white girls, there has been, as yet, no struggle of industrial workers, Negro and white, against their exploiters. Like Scottsboro, Decatur is a tiny town of small businessmen and farmers, still filled with the poison of race-hatred.

The right of a private interview with their attorneys, a legal right granted automatically in most cases, has been denied the Scottsboro boys for two years, under every lying and hypocritical excuse.

The forces of the state have already made it clear that they will fight to the last ditch to prevent the inclusion of Negroes on the jury. The accusation of Roy Wright, that the militia at Scottsboro intimidated him by physical torture, into giving false testimony, is dismissed by Attorney-General Knight, deputy of the lynchers, with the statement that "the unsupported word of a Negro prisoner is not sufficiently important to warrant investigation."

The possibility of a lynching outside the courtroom grows daily. Unless the defense and the masses behind the defense can call a halt, the boys will be housed in an old jail, admittedly unsafe, from which jail-breaks are so frequent as to be no longer news. This is a deliberate, public and cynical invitation to a lynching!

The local press continues to whip up lynch sentiment against the boys. This press has not changed, but has grown fiercer in its demand for blood, since the Jackson County Sentinel announced that "a Negro juror in Jackson County would be a curiosity—and some curiosities are embalmed, you know."

Thus, by every means at their command—denial of ordinary legal rights, the whipping up of lynch spirit—the Alabama rulers prepare the path over which they hope to lead nine innocent young boys to a horrible death.

What then can save the Scottsboro boys?

Time and again these boys have been snatched from the electric chair by the roar of protest from the masses in every corner of the globe. The events of the past few weeks show, more clearly than ever, that these masses alone can again save the boys.

Demand of Governor Miller, of the Decatur judges, of Attorney-General Knight, that the boys be removed for trial to Birmingham, where Negro and white workers by the thousands are fighting for bread and work and for the rights of Negroes.

Negro workers! White workers! Lift up your voices! Protest! Shout into the ears of the Alabama lynchers: "MURDERERS! The Scottsboro boys shall not die!" Only a mighty outpouring of mass protest can smash this carefully-planned lynching, can swing open the prison doors and set the Scottsboro boys free.

It is upon the basis of a let-down in the mass protest in the past few weeks that the Alabama lynchers have been able to win their legal points. No more victories to the lynchers! Workers and farmers: NEGLECT IS MURDER!

Daily Worker 3-27-33

Negro

ATLANTA, Ga.—"Do not let the blood of nine lads be on your hands. If the fight should be lost for lack of funds, the State of Alabama will not be one-half so guilty [illegible]."

That is the statement of the columnist writing, "Items in Review," which appears in a score of Negro newspapers throughout the South, in devoting his entire space for one issue to an appeal for funds for the International Labor Defense to carry on its fight to save the lives of the boys.

"Dear Readers," the column begins. "Previous to this time you have never seen any touch of the personal in this column. Its editor has just been an individual, any individual; its contents have been to no one in particular, to everyone in general. But this is being written under the stress of an emergency, and it is to be decidedly personal, a personal letter to YOU from ME.

"There is nothing new now about the Scottsboro case. The veriest school child knows all of the sordid details; knows how a hungry, homeless, job seeking bunch of innocent boys, the youngest of them thirteen or fourteen years of age and all of them less than twenty, were taken off a freight train upon which they were hoboing and clapped into jail on a charge of raping two prostitutes whom they had never seen. . . .

"It is not my purpose to remind you of these things; you know them as well as I do. What I am doing is presenting to you something that you may not know: That the fate of these innocent children now rests entirely with you. The state of Alabama has recently done its worst when it sentenced them to death; there is nothing worse now that it can do. It might repeat the sentence, or it may sentence them to life imprisonment, which, if I am any judge of Southern penal methods means death practically anyway; BUT HOW FAR THE STATE OF ALABAMA MAY GO IS UP TO YOU.

"Nine boys—and they might have been your boys—are appealing to all that is human to save them from a horrible death. Don't let them appeal in vain.

"One thing more and I shall have finished. If this case should be lost, look out! There are thousands of unjailed miscreants and potential murderers like those in Alabama who will be all to eager to serve you or your son like they are trying to serve those boys if they are shown by the results of this case that they can get away with it. If you and I, and the twelve million other Negroes in this country allow those boys to be legally lynched for stealing a ride on a freight train, we might all just as well bid goodbye to any sense of safety and security we have ever had.

"That is all my good friends. The address is International Labor Defense, Room 430, 80 East 11th St., New York City, and the time to send it is this minute. Don't let the ghosts of nine murdered boys haunt you the rest of your life because you were too mean, too self-contented, or too thoughtless to send a dollar or a dime to save them. Goodbye."

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 21.—Eight of the nine Scottsboro Negroes were taken from the death house cells which they have occupied for nearly two years, loaded into a prison van after dark tonight and transferred to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham to await a second trial for their lives next week at Decatur.

The transfer was carried out in accordance with an order signed by Circuit Judges A. E. Hawkins and James A. Horton of Jackson and Morgan Counties, respectively, in accordance with a request from defense attorneys concurred in by the Attorney General, Thomas E. Knight Jr.

The purpose of the transfer was to permit the defense attorneys to hold unsupervised interviews with their clients, an impossibility at Kilby prison.

The transfer places all of the prisoners under the same roof, for Roy Wright, the 15-year-old juvenile who alone was not convicted at his first trial in Scottsboro, has been there for as long as his codefendants have been in Kilby prison.

The nine prisoners, who are accused of attacking two white girls, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, on a freight train from Chattanooga to Huntsville on the afternoon of March 25, 1931, will remain in the Birmingham jail until just before the new trial, ordered by the United States Supreme Court, opens before Judge Horton in Decatur next week.

The order for the transfer of the prisoners was served upon Warden Walls at Kilby prison late this afternoon. Scarcely a soul in Montgomery knew that it had been received or that the prisoners, who had to be saved from a lynching mob at Scottsboro by the militia, were about to be taken outside prison walls for the first time in two years.

A black prison van rolled up to the prison, which is situated some distance outside of this city. It was dark and the van could scarcely be seen from the highway running past the prison, but if it had been it would have occasioned no undue interest because the van often is there unloading prisoners and hardly a person in Montgomery outside of officials knew that the Scottsboro Negroes were being moved.

Under cover of armed prison guards riding in automobiles before and behind the van, the Negroes started on their 104-mile drive across the country to Birmingham shortly before 7 o'clock. It was estimated that the trip would take about three hours and a half and it was hoped that the prisoners would be delivered to the Jefferson County jail before 11 o'clock.

Second Trial Of Scottsboro Case Started

Indictment Is Attacked on Ground No Negro Ever Served on Alabama Jury

By The Associated Press

DECATUR, Ala., March 27.—A tedious legal battle to set aside the indictment against seven Negroes accused of attacking two white girls was launched in the Morgan County Circuit Court today as the defense sought to establish its contention that the defendants had been deprived of their rights through exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury that indicted the youths.

The action, forerunner of the second trial of the Negroes, who once were sentenced to death at Scottsboro, Ala., and who won a rehearing on appeal to the United States Supreme Court, began after several hours' delay in transferring the defendants from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham.

National Guardsmen on Duty

National Guardsmen surrounded the Negroes as they were brought into the courtroom, but there was no disorder.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief of defense counsel, and Thomas E. Knight jr., Attorney General of Alabama, directing the prosecution, clashed frequently as the former sought to prove through witnesses that Negroes had been "habitually excluded" from juries in Jackson County.

[illegible] the defendants drowsed [illegible] wall, only occasionally [illegible] interest in the proceedings, their attorneys read into the records an amended petition to quash the indictments.

Leibowitz declared "there has never been a Negro on an Alabama jury." Attorney General Knight, in a brief statement, denied the allegations and said he was "at issue" with the defense. "We will show the court no such administration of the laws that Negroes are systematically excluded from the juries."

Editor Never Heard of One

J. S. Benson, editor of "The Progressive Age" at Scottsboro, the first witness under direct examination by Leibowitz, said that to his knowledge no Negro had ever served on a jury in Jackson County. Leibowitz asked if Benson knew of a Negro ever having served on an Alabama jury. "I don't know that one ever has," he replied.

Knight took up the questioning and read the jury qualifications calling for good character, sound judgment, requisite age, property holding and intelligence.

"I know some good Negroes, but as Negroes go, I think that sound judgment would get them," Benson said. "Most all Negroes will steal," he replied to a question by Leibowitz.

Several of the defendants joined in the laughter.

"Asked what he meant by Negroes lacking "sound judgment," Benson replied that they were "not trained," adding "and I might say the same applies to women."

John Sanford, a Negro plasterer of Scottsboro, was on the stand when court recessed for the day. He faces cross-examination.

Montgomery Ad

Under instructions from Adjt. Gen. Hartley A. Moon by direction of Gov. Miller, First Lieut. Louis C. Pa[illegible]llo, commanding Troop C 127th Engineers, Alabama National Guard, stationed at Hartselle, was ready last night to furnish as many Guardsmen as Morgan County officials might require to aid in preserving order during the retrials at Decatur beginning this week, of the seven negroes convicted at Scottsboro two years ago of criminally assaulting two young white girls.

The Governor's order transmitted through Col. Moon, was in response to a letter from Circuit Judge [illegible] E. Horton of the Morgan Circuit Court, which stated that the sheriff of the county could not employ more than four additional deputies while court was in session, and said some National Guardsmen might be needed to supplement the sheriff's forces in keeping order during the impending trials at Decatur.

Expressing doubt that the force of deputies available under the law, would be adequate, Judge Horton requested that all preliminary arrangements be made so that the Guard organization at Hartselle could be called on for any further forces required. The services of not more than 30 Guardsmen would be sufficient in his opinion, he said.

It was made clear by the circuit judge in his letter, that the request was not on account of any threat of danger, or in anticipation of any trouble of any kind, but was merely looking to the having ready at hand of enough men in addition to the sheriff and his deputies, to preserve order during the trials, at all times.

The order of the Governor based on the request, was that the commanding officer of the Hartselle Troop, have 30 of his men in readiness for any call for their services that might come from Judge Horton, the Solicitor, or the sheriff.

Trial Scheduled To Open In Decatur Monday

DECATUR, ALA., March 25.—(AP)—Seven negroes in whose behalf persons throughout the world have raised their voices Monday face a Morgan County jury in the second battle for their lives against charges of attack.

The negroes are seven of nine indicted March 31, 1931 by a Jackson County Grand Jury on charges of attacking two young white girls in a gondola car of a Southern Railway freight train as it rumbled through the Sand Mountains.

The trials were brought here under a change of venue granted by Judge A. E. Hawkins in Jackson Circuit Court three weeks ago, after the United States Supreme Court had set aside the death sentences imposed.

National Guardsmen have been requested for the trial to preserve order and prevent crowding the courtroom. Presence of Guardsmen at Scottsboro in April, 1931, when the negroes first were tried was one of the grounds of appeal before the Alabama Supreme Court and the United States Supreme Court.

Subpoenaes have been issued for approximately 35 witnesses, among them Ruby Bates, one of the two alleged victims, who still is missing from her home at Huntsville. The girl left her home on Feb. 27, and her mother said she had no word from her since.

Officers investigating the girl's disappearance said they had found no clues but have continued quietly to seek her.

There was little probability that selection of a jury would get started Monday before the noon recess, as a motion to quash the indictment still is pending before the court.

This motion, contending the negroes were deprived of their constitutional rights because no negroes were [illegible] on the Grand Jury that returned the indictments was filed at Scottsboro on March 6, along with the motion for a change of venue by Irvin Schwab, one of the five attorneys employed in the case by the International Labor Defense.

3-26-33

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., directing the prosecution, filed an answer, and Judge Hawkins granted the change of venue, removing the motion to quash from his jurisdiction.

Absence of negroes from jury panel in the trials, also was offered as a ground by the defense for a new trial, but this phase of the appeal was not mentioned in the Alabama Supreme Court decision affirming the sentences or the United States Supreme Court in ordering new trials.

The negroes, Andy Wright, 19, Haywood Patterson, 19, both of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Willie Roberson, 17, of Columbus, Ga.; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga.; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 18, both of Atlanta, Ga., now are held at Birmingham and will be brought here tomorrow or early Monday.

The case had its inception just two years ago today when the freight train aboard which the alleged attacks occurred was stopped at Paint Rock, and the negroes were taken into custody.

Officers searching the train found in the gondola car the two white girls who alleged they had been attacked after six white youths had been thrown from the train at Stevenson.

The arrest and the story of the two girls who said they were "hoboing" their way home from Chattanooga after an unsuccessful search for work, created much excitement in Jackson County.

Threats Recalled

During the trials, the International Labor Defense entered the case with telegraphic protests and radical organizations wired Judge Hawkins demanding an immediate change of venue.

In the succeeding months since the negroes were first tried, persons of prominence have added their names to thousands who have asked that the negroes be released.

Gov. Miller has kept a file of the protests and they range from printed postal cards, all bearing the same "demand for immediate freedom of these young workers," to lengthy petitions and cablegrams, one of which was signed by the scientist, Albert Einstein.

Gov. Miller and Chief Justice John C. Anderson of the Alabama Supreme Court revealed that they had received threats in the weeks immediately preceding the arguments on the appeal in January, 1932.

In their first trials, the negroes were defended by attorneys appointed by the court, but the International Labor Defense employed George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, who interceded and subsequently four other attorneys from New York joined the staff of counsel.

The defense will be directed by Chamlee and the others of counsel employed by the International Labor Defense.

The National Association For the Advancement of Colored People sought to retain Clarence Darrow, noted Chicago criminal attorney, and Arthur Garfield Hayes, of New York, to plead the case before the Alabama Supreme Court. The International Labor Defense, however, demurred and Darrow and Hayes declined to go into the case under wild terms.

Darrow and Hayes after two days in Birmingham, announced they would not enter the case.

FIRST OF FRAMED SCOTTSBORO BOYS ON TRIAL TODAY

No Negroes in Venire, Defense to Demand Its Dismissal

SEEK SEPARATE TRIALS

Southern Press Forced to Alter Tone

(By Our Correspondent.)

DECATUR, Ala., Mar. 29.—Following a day's recess won by the defense for the purpose of investigation in preparation for the motion to dismiss the panel of 100 prospective jurors, the trial of the first of the nine Scottsboro boys begins tomorrow.

The defense demand that the venire be dismissed will be based on the ground that not a single Negro is included in the 100 prospective jurymen called.

For Separate Trials.

At the same time lawyers for the I.L.D. indicated that they would make a finish-fight for separate trials for each of the boys.

The prosecution has selected Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old Negro youth from Chattanooga as the first to be tried in connection with the "rape" frame-up against him and the other eight innocent boys, as a result of which they had been sentenced to die in the electric chair.

According to the present plans of Attorney-General Knight who is prosecuting the case, the six of the Scottsboro defendants would be tried together in one trial following the conclusion of the trial of Patterson.

Because the defense can prove that they are juveniles, the case of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams have temporarily been put aside until Judge Horton rules on their status.

Newspaper Tone Alters.

The two-year protest movement initiated by the International Labor Defense, coupled with the general struggle for Negro rights, has brought about somewhat of a changed attitude among certain sections of the white population. This is reflected by a slightly altered tone of even some of the white southern newspapers.

The protest storm has undoubtedly put the southern bourbons on the defensive, forcing a greater show of "impartiality," and is indicative of the strength of the defense.

Although the atmosphere in Decatur is on the surface peaceful, the danger of extra-legal action has not diminished by one whit. The next few days will definitely show the trend of events.

THE TRIAL AT DECATUR

4-1-33

We have never given up the hope that sanity would finally prevail in the trial and disposition of the Scottsboro youths condemned to death on a statutory crime.

The change of venue which moved the second trial away from the scene of its former incited surroundings is one indication of the desire to prevent the stain of this blot from deepening.

With able defense counsel and an atmosphere that assures, at least a chance to have the facts put to record, there would seem to be nothing of means wanting to establish the truth.

The case has been on trial in the newspapers, street corners, cross roads, drawing rooms and every other conceivable place for many months so much that one is amazed at the world interest and activities which have taken form here and there to express the sympathetic urge of humanity for plain justice.

Reporter

More than the lives of nine boys, the principles of just administration of the law are at stake and on trial and this weighs quite as heavily on the rest of the world as does the sorrow of it on the homes that these boys represent.

Birmingham, Ala

An effort to get into the records, first, the open truth that everyone admits—a truth that would be worth nothing to the case or the cause of justice outside—has consumed the first days of the trial.

The difference between the trial now in progress and the former trial will be enough to convince the interested onlooker that a Negro coming to trial on an indictment of this nature and under such circumstances as of the former trial has not the chance of a sheep-killing dog to establish his innocence or to get the benefit of any doubt or mitigating circumstances that might accrue to any one else so placed.

Perhaps, the courts may not always be blamed for the failure to give alleged criminals an opportunity to establish their innocence; thus far, the courts of Alabama are not on trial, but there are traditions interwoven into the fabric of Southern social economy that are eternally on trial and cases of this kind are ordained to test, with the world sitting as a jury, whether or not these traditions can or should live as a part and parcel of the social order of a democracy. The machinery of American justice is intricate. In the South it is made more intricate by the modifications of a double standard social system.

The matter of simplifying it decreases in chance in proportion as such cases go unchallenged by a world of able justice loving individuals. Whatever the findings in this trial may be, it has the support of a thousand precedents in kind on which to rest—a thousand precedents that have gone unchallenged because of the supine fear of ostracism.

The world will be interested in knowing the truth of this case for the sake of having authoritative information on which to amend its own conception of justice.

It will watch the trend of it and await the verdict with a keen anticipation of the outcome to determine what measure of sanity can be made to prevail after time for reflection.

It now appears that the trial is proceeding orderly and may eventuate in a verdict as fair as could be expected.

Legal Skirmishes Ended, Testimony Will Start In Retrial Of Negro Youth

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

DECATUR, ALA., April 1.—(AP)—Attorneys for both sides today said they were ready for the retrial of Heywood Patterson, 19, of Chattanooga, one of nine negroes charged with attacking two white women on a freight train near Scottsboro more than two years ago.

All preliminary motions were disposed of during the week, and a one-day recess until Monday was given by Judge James E. Horton to permit attorneys time to prepare for taking of testimony in the trial in which for a second time Patterson's life will be at stake.

Patterson was arraigned Thursday on one of the two indictments against him charging an attack on Mrs. Victoria Price, of Huntsville, aboard a Southern Railway freight train on March 25, 1931, in Jackson County.

Trials of six of the other eight negroes whose death sentences were set aside by the United States Supreme Court have not been set, and will not be until the Paterson case is disposed of.

Attorneys for both sides have held their counsel on the strategy they will employ, but Samuel S. Liebowitz, of New York, chief counsel for the negroes, indicated yesterday he might attack the veracity and character of the principal State witness.

Liebowitz asked prospective jurors if they would discriminate against a negro, if evidence was produced to show that a white witness was not reliable, or was of bad character.

The miniature train which Liebowitz planned to use in his defense of the negroes was unpacked and prepared for moving into court Monday. The train, made up of 30 brightly painted box cars, gondolas, loaded flats, and an engine, measures more than 32 feet in length.

Liebowitz's aides, Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, and George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, who were employed by the International Labor Defense shortly after the negroes were convicted in Jackson County Circuit Court two years ago, today were engaged in assembling testimony.

Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., directing the State's case, and his aides, T. E. Lawson, assistant attorney general, Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, and Solicitor Wade Wright, Eighth Judicial Circuit kept their counsel today.

Knight has not [illegible] will be the first witness [illegible] nor how many he will [illegible] the stand in support of the State's charge that Patterson attacked Mrs. Price.

4-2-33

One witness in the first trials, Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims of the attack, still was missing today, despite a widespread search that has continued since her disappearance from her Huntsville home, Feb. 27.

Atty. Gen. Knight said sheriffs of several counties were investigating reports that she had been [illegible] but thus far no trace of the girl had been found. Her mother, Mrs. Mary Bates, clings to her first statement that she believed her daughter was kidnaped.

Montgy Adv

During the last week, 29 witnesses were heard as Liebowitz introduced testimony in an attempt to have the indictment and the venire quashed on grounds that negroes were "systematically and arbitrarily excluded from juries in Alabama solely because of their race."

Although every seat in the court room was crowded throughout the week, there was no disorder or confusion. National guardsmen on duty at the doors permitted only the number that could find seats or standing room in the rear to enter the courtroom unless they held press passes.

Patterson was alone in the courtroom the last three days. The other eight negroes, Roy Wright, 16, Andy Wright, 19, Eugene Williams, 16, and Clarence Norris, 19, all of Chattanooga; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 19, of Chattanooga; Willie Roberson, 19, of Columbus, Ga., and Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga., remained in jail.

All except Roy Wright and Williams, both juveniles, probably will be tried immediately after the Patterson case is disposed of, unless the defense seeks severances. Liebowitz said he might ask separate trials, since the State declined to try all seven at once.

The first trial, in Jackson County two years ago this month, resulted in death sentences for all except Roy Wright, who was granted a mistrial when a jury could not agree on his punishment. The Alabama Supreme Court reversed Williams's death sentence because of his age, and the U. S. Supreme Court reversed the other seven.

During the first trials the International Labor Defense wired Judge A. E. Hawkins and Gov. B. M. Miller, demanding the immediate halting of "this legal lynching," and since then thousands of protests from individuals and organizations have flooded the executive offices in Montgomery.

WANTS NEGRO WITNESSES

New York

Seeks Permission to Call Them to Stand in Effort to Prove Them Qualified to Be Jurors.

N.Y.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 19.—The witnesses for whom subpoenas will be requested this week by G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga lawyer retained by the international defense to assist Samuel Liebowitz, New York criminal lawyer in the defense of the accused Negroes are, with one exception, colored residents of Jackson County where the crime occurred.

Mr. Liebowitz will attempt to show by examination of these witnesses, if Judge Horton permits, that they are qualified to serve as jurors within the meaning of the Alabama statute except for the color of their skins. So far as has been learned here it will be the first time in history that such an attempt has been made to prove racial discrimination in the selection of southern juries.

One witness, a white man, who now resides in Chattanooga, but who formerly was a resident of Jackson County, is expected to testify that in all the time he lived there no Negroe's name ever appeared upon a jury roll.

The State's answer, as it will be delivered by Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General, is that the Alabama laws do not disqualify Negroes as jurors, but that they have failed to satisfy the jury commissioners appointed by the Governor that they are persons of sound judgment.

Attorneys defending the nine Negroes in the Scottsboro case plan to call twenty witnesses to support their contention that Negroes are systematically excluded from Alabama grand juries and petit juries in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, it became known today.

Long Argument Expected.

The defense has moved to quash the indictments against the Negroes charged with attacking two white girls, Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price, on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago. The motion is based upon the allegation that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which indicted the nine Negroes.

Argument and the submission of proof in support of the motion is expected to consume the first three or four days of the trial, now scheduled to open March 27 before Circuit Judge James A. Horton of Athens.

Meanwhile the defense attorneys were puzzling over how their witnesses shall be transported from Jackson County to Decatur, the seat of Morgan County, where the trial is to be held. Contrary to popular belief in Alabama the International Labor Defense funds are reported to be limited—notwithstanding the frequently credited reports that the Russian Soviets are supplying the cash for the defense of the accused Negroes, who became Communists after their arrest.

The one day-time train from Scottsboro to Decatur, some fifty-odd miles to the west, reaches the latter city at noon and court sessions there usually begin at 8:30 A. M. The other train arrives in the evening and could be used for transporting witnesses only if they were to be kept over night at the expense of the defense, for it is not the State's responsibility.

Another problem before the defense is that the witnesses live in the mountains around Scottsboro and are some distance from the railroad. Consequently they are planning to hire trucks to move their witnesses back and forth between Scottsboro and Decatur.

Mr. Knight was absent from the capital city over the week-end. He said over the telephone that he had been to Decatur to arrange details of the approaching trial and had consulted virtually all the State's witnesses with the exception of Ruby Bates, who disappeared mysteriously on Feb. 28.

Prosecutor in Decatur.

In the meantime Decatur, resentful at suggestions of prejudice against Negroes in general, and the Scottsboro Negroes in particular, prepared to make the best of the situation which was foisted upon it. Many of the citizens of Decatur wish that the trial of the Negroes had been sent elsewhere if they could not be tried fairly in Scottsboro, where two years ago they were sentenced to death in the electric chair, only to have the United States Supreme Court order new trials for them.

Attorney General Knight and the defense attorneys have agreed that the Negroes, now confined in the death house of Kilby prison here shall be transferred to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, pending their new trial, but as yet the necessary orders have not been signed. Mr. Chamlee mailed copies of the order which he and Mr. Knight agreed upon to Judge A. E. Hawkins of Jackson County, and Horton of Morgan County, and it was expected that these orders would be returned early this week. If and when the orders are signed the prisoners will be moved promptly.

New York

Rumor in Capital Is That Some Negroes Will Be Called for the Trial Jury Next Week.

N.Y.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTGOMERY Ala., March 20—G. W. Chamlee, one of the attorneys retained by the International Labor Defense to defend at their second trial the nine Negroes once sentenced to death for an attack upon two white girls, announced today that he had requested twenty-six subpoenas for witnesses through whom the defense hopes to establish that racial discrimination keeps Negroes off juries in Jackson and Morgan Counties.

Included among the subpoenas which Mr. Chamlee asked Sheriff Davis of Morgan County to issue for next Monday morning is one for Peter Jarman, Secretary of State, calling for the production of records of the Federal census of 1930, which shows the proportion of Negro and white citizens in the two counties. The other subpoenas were for jury commissioners and Negroes who, the defense will attempt to show, are qualified to serve as jurors except for the color of their skins.

Not one of these witnesses is wanted in connection with the charge on which the accused Negroes are to be tried for their lives. The trial itself probably will not start until Wednesday of next week, because both sides expect that the argument and submission of proof of systematic exclusion of Negroes from juries in Alabama, in support of a motion to quash the indictments, will consume the first two days.

First Actual Test of Issue.

While the Supreme Court of the United States has held that Negroes cannot be excluded from jury service because of their race, the issue never has been the basis for a reversal of the lower courts, chiefly, according to the defense lawyers, because no actual proof of exclusion has ever been offered before, the litigants relying in the past on contentions and affidavits. This time it is regarded as certain that direct evidence on the question will be offered.

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, upon whose young shoulders has fallen the task of prosecuting the nine defendants and at the same time defending Alabama's jury system, intends to enter a denial of the allegations of exclusion, leaving it to the defense attorneys, headed by Samuel S. Liebowitz of New York, to assume the burden of proof.

It has been rumored here for days that the State might avoid the issue by arranging to have the names of a few Negroes placed upon the venire which will be called up for the trial, while at the same time preventing their serving as jurors by the exercise of peremptory challenges. Persons close to Mr. Knight, however, said he intended to meet the issue squarely and attempt to prove the defense charges unfounded.

The placing of Negro names upon the jury roll in Morgan County where the trial will be held, it was said, would have no bearing on the validity of the indictments which were returned two years ago in Jackson County. The motion now before the court is to quash the indictments, but it will be followed, if it is lost, by a motion to dismiss the venire from which the petit jury will be selected, unless it contains Negroes as well as whites.

Negroes Still in Death House.

Eight of the nine defendants are still prisoners in the death house of Kilby prison, but it was expected that they would be transferred to the Jefferson County jail at Birmingham for safekeeping until their trial next week. Prison rules of Kilby prohibit private interviews with inmates of the death house, and it is for that reason that the defense attorneys want to effect the transfer.

Mr. Chamlee said that Sheriff McBryde of Jackson County had signed the order requesting that if the prisoners must be moved they be held at Birmingham because of the "present insecurity" of the jail in his county. Judge A. E. Hawkins, who granted a motion for a change of venue in the case, also has signed the order and it has been forwarded to Judge James Horton, who will preside over the new trial at Decatur.

As soon as the order is returned to him, Mr. Chamlee said, it would be forwarded to Montgomery for service upon Warden Walls at Kilby prison. As soon as possible and consistent with the secrecy which officials hold necessary for the safety of the prisoners, they will be moved to Birmingham, it was said.

Sheriff Will Ask for Protection of Militia When Decatur Court Proceedings Start.

N.Y.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HUNTSVILLE, Ala., March 24.—ictoria Price, who alleges that she nd Ruby Bates were assaulted by dozen Negroes on a freight train ear Scottsboro two years ago, told er story again here today and expressed the hope that the men she ccuses will die in the electric hair.

Seven of the nine Negroes who ere seized by an armed posse near aint Rock and are accused of the rime are to go on trial before udge James E. Horton at Decatur ext week, and Mrs. Price is the tate's chief witness. Ruby Bates as mysteriously disappeared. Attorney General Thomas E. Knight r., who will prosecute the second rial of the Negroes, spent the day ere directing efforts to locate her.

Meanwhile at Decatur, thirty miles away, the statement was made that Sheriff Bud Davis, whose responsibility it will be to protect the defendants from mob violence and guard against their escape from the dilapidated Morgan County jail during the trial, had decided after a conference with Judge Horton to ask Governor Miller to order thirty National Guardsmen to the city for special duty next week.

The understanding is that the Sheriff is swayed more by a realization of the danger of escape from the jail, which was condemned two years ago, than by fear of an attempted lynching. The order for the militia probably will not be issued until next week, since the defendants are not likely to be taken to Decatur from the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham until Tuesday or Wednesday, although argument on a motion to quash the indictments against them is set for Monday morning.

Deaf to Changing Venue.

The International Labor Defense, an organization with Communist affiliations which has interested itself in the case of the accused Negroes, has been campaigning actively for another change of venue to Birmingham, but thus far Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, has not moved in that direction before any court. The International Labor Defense, however, made public in Birmingham a telegram to Mr. Knight, urging him to consent to a transfer of the trial "in the interest of fairness and justice."

The telegram was signed by Kenneth E. Barnhart, Professor of Sociology at Birmingham-Southern College; David Hutto, a student; L. J. Baptiste, pastor of the First Congregational Church, and Ernest W. Taggart. Mr. Knight's only comment was:

"I shall not ask for a further change of venue from Morgan County to Jefferson or any other county.

"The citizens of Morgan County did not ask that the trial be held there, and I am sure the defendants will receive from them a fair and impartial trial."

So fearful is the State of losing its remaining star witness before the trial opens that a deputy sheriff has been assigned to watch night and day at the barely furnished little shack where Mrs. Price lives with her mother, a widow for seventeen years. Mrs. Price is her mother's sole support. She earns $6.50 every other week, when she works as a hand in a local cotton mill. She has been twice married.

Sh told her story of what took place on the afternoon of March 25, 1931, when she and Ruby Bates boarded a freight train in the yards at Chattanooga to return from a fruitless job-hunting expedition to the latter city without mincing words or sparing details while her mother rocked to and fro before a dull fire in the coal grate.

Tells Story of Attacks.

She and Ruby Bates, Mrs. Price stated, decided to seek their fortunes in Chattanooga when the mill where she had been employed after leaving school at the age of 14 was closed. With their clothing covered by men's overalls they made their wal to Chattanooga on freight trains, spent the night at the home of one Callie Broches, whose address Mrs. Price could not remember, and were told that there was no more chance of finding work in Chattanooga than in their home town of Huntsville.

Without so much as going to a mill in Chattanooga, Mrs. Price admitted, they decided to give up their search and return home "because Ruby wanted to go right back." About 1 A. M., clad once more in overalls, the two girls boarded an oil tank car in the yard at Chattanooga and rolled out with the train when it started for Memphis.

"We didn't see no white boys or colored boys either then," she said. "But when we got to Stevenson we were getting cold and we decided to look for a box car when the train stopped there. he box cars were closed up but we did see a gondola car and got into that."

"A few minutes later some white boys—I think there were seven of them—climbed in and said:

" 'Hello, girls, do you mind if we ride with you?'

"Ruby and I said we didn't care if they behaved themselves. We were sitting at the rear end of the car and the boys went to the front and lay down. hey were singing "Pass Around the Bottle," when we heard some yelling and a big Negro jumped into the gondola car from the roof of a box car, shooting a pistol.

"There was a big fight and the Negroes pushed all the white boys off the train about two miles and a half past Stevenson—all of them except one, I mean. Two of them held me and one held a knife over my throat. I don't remember much until at Paint Rock the train stopped."

Insists on Identification.

Mrs. Price denied that she or the missing Bates girl had been guilty of any improprieties with the white men on the train and asserted she never had seen any of them before. She had told nothing but the truth at the first trial, where she identified one after another of the defendants, and she said she would do so again next week at Decatur.

"Nothing ain't going to stop me from telling my story," she declared with emphasis. "They made me suffer and I want to see them punished. They deserve to be electrocuted."

A few blocks away is the cabin where the Bates girl's mother lives in apparent poverty on "thickening gravy and bread," as she explained. The last she saw of her daughter, she said, was on Feb. 28, when a voice called to her from an automobile at the gate and Ruby ran out of the house.

"I was lying down with a sick headache and I don't know who it was who called," said Mrs. Bates. "None of the boys she had been going with since last Fall is missing."

Mrs. Bates is convinced that her daughter was "kidnapped," but by whom she professed to have no idea. She was greatly worried by her daughter's continued absence, especially since the girl, she said, had been under a physician's care since her journey in the freight train, but it was a week after Ruby had vanished before her mother informed Sheriff Giles of the disappearance.

Then she sent him a letter which she had received from her daughter, postmarked in Montgomery. In the letter Ruby advised her mother not to worry, but said she was afraid she might die. According to Mrs. Bates, the girl took with her only the clothes on her back. Her delay in notifying the authorities of her daughter's disappearance, Mrs. Bates said, was caused by fear that publicity might bring harm to the girl.

TRIAL OF SEVEN BEGINS MONDAY

Negroes Accused of Scottsboro Crime Will Face Court at Decatur; Troops Asked

Telegraph 3-27-33 Macon Ga

DECATUR, Ala., March 25 (AP)—Seven Negroes in whose behalf people throughout the world have raised their voices, Monday face a Morgan county jury in their second defense against charges of attack.

The Negroes are seven of nine indicted March 31, 1931, by a Jackson county grand jury on charges of attacking two young white girls in a gondola car of a Southern railway freight train as it rumbled through the sand mountains.

The trials were brought here under a charge of venue, granted by Judge A. E. Hawkins in Jackson circuit court three weeks ago, after the United States Supreme court had set aside the death sentences imposed on April 9.

National Guardsmen have been requested for the trial to preserve order, and prevent crowding the court room. Presence of guardsmen at Scottsboro in April, 1931, when the Negroes first were tried, was one of the grounds of appeal before the Alabama Supreme court, and the United States Supreme court.

One of Girls Is Missing

Subpoenaes have been issued for approximately 35 witnesses, among them one of the two alleged victims, who still is missing from her home at Huntsville. The girl left her home on Feb. 27, and her mother said she had no word from her since.

Officers investigating the girl's disappearance said they had found no clues, but have continued quietly to seek her.

There was little probability that selection of a jury would get started Monday before the noon recess, as a motion to quash the indictment still is pending before the court.

This motion, contending the Negroes were deprived of their constitutional rights, because no Negroes were included in the grand jury that returned the indictments, was filed at Scottsboro on March 6, along with the motion for a change of venue by Irvin Schwab, one of five attorneys employed in the case by the International Labor Defense.

Crime Committed in 1931

The Negroes, Andy Wright, 19; Haywood Patterson, 19, both of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Willie Roberson, 17, of Columbus, Ga.; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga.; Charlie Weems, 22, Clarence Norris, 19, and Ozie Powell, 18, all of Atlanta, Ga., are held at Birmingham and will be brought here either Sunday or early Monday.

The case which had its inception just two years ago Saturday, when the freight train aboard which the alleged attacks occurred, was stopped at Paint Rock, Ala., and the Negroes were taken into custody.

Officers searching the train found in the gondola car the two white girls who alleged they had been attacked after six white youths had been thrown from the train at Stevenson, Ala.

Alabama, submitting to the court of order of transfer of the nine boys from the Birmingham jail to this court.

The Scottsboro boys handcuffed together, left the Birmingham jail at 11:14 in the prison van, and guarded by four deputies armed with double barreled shotguns. They arrived at 1:50 at the Morgan County Court House.

Between the adjournment of the court this morning and its reopening this afternoon, the balance of curious spectators had changed from a majority of whites to an overwhelming majority of Negroes. The white spectators had retired to a small area near the courthouse, while the courthouse lawn and the empty lot across from the courthouse, and jail was filled to overflowing crowds with Negro men and women, many of whom watched silently the armed manifestations of the county officials. Though no open comments were made when word circulated through the crowds that the prison van had arrived, the Negroes and whites rushed to see them come out. Soldiers with fixed bayonets scattered the crowds. The prison guards, with fingers on the triggers of their rifles and shotguns, stepped a few feet away and the door was opened. The nine boys, dressed in blue denim overalls and handcuffed to each other, came out of the van looking wonderingly at the crowds and soldiers about them. Twelve soldiers with guns on their shoulders, immediately surrounded them and escorted the group into the court room, where the handcuffs were removed when the boys were placed back of the defense table.

Judge in Scottsboro Trial Moves to Halt Evidence on Exclusion of Negroes from Service on Juries

Daily Worker 4-1-33

(By Our Special Correspondent)

DECATUR, Ala., March 31.—At the end of the fourth day of concentrated attack by lawyers for the International Labor Defense on Alabama's "selective jury system" which bars Negroes from service, Judge Horton, presiding in the trial of the Scottsboro boys, late today announced that he has "heard about enough evidence along this line."

The defense motion to dismiss the indictments against the innocent Negro boys on the ground that no Negroes sat on the grand jury, having been denied by Judge Horton, Attorney Leibowitz for the ILD, had proceeded to demand that the entire venire of 150 from which the jury is to be picked to try Haywood Patterson be dismissed—for the same good cause.

Many Negro Witnesses

To support the claim that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service, the defense has called a score of Negro witnesses to prove that they had never known of any one of their race serving as a juror in Morgan County.

Yesterday—for the first time in the history of the State of Alabama—the huge red book in which the names of prospective jurymen are kept, was brought into court on the demand of the defense which said it was ready to call 150 more witnesses to prove its charge of Negro exclusion on juries.

"Are You a Communist?"

Failing to discredit the testimony of the Negro witnesses, Attorney General Knight, son of Alabama's chief justice who wrote the opinion sustaining the original Scottsboro frame-up, barked at the Rev. W. J. Wilson, a Negro minister: "Are you a member of the Communist Party?" Wilson replied in the negative, and on redirect examination it was brought out that the witness was a Republican.

After the defense had put Sheriff Davis on the witness stand, and he admitted that he was unable to find a single Negro among the 1,500 on the Morgan County jury roll, Judge Horton placed the burden of proof on the prosecution to show that "the state had performed its duty according to the law." Earlier in the session the defense had called to the stand Captain Burleson of the national guard stationed here, who too admitted that he was unable to find the name of a single Negro from his part of the county on the roll—

Admit "Prima Facie" Case

So effective was the defense of the Alabama jury method—part and parcel of the whole system of the national oppression of the Negroes of the south—that the judge was compelled to admit, in response to a direct question by Attorney Leibowitz, that the defense had "made a prima facie" case and that it was up to the prosecution to show that Negroes were not discriminated against.

Called to the stand by the prosecution, J. Tidwell, Commissioner of Jurors, wriggled uncomfortably under the fire of defense questioning. Later, asked "Who would you consider a leading Negro citizen of Morgan County, Tidwell replied, "Don't know any."

Leibowitz's question, "Is there a single Negro in Morgan County having the qualifications for jury service?" the commissioner answered: "No."

In seeking to prove that the entire venire is illegal—and a direct violation of the rights of the defendants under the fourteenth amendment to the U. S. constitution—defense attorneys threatened to call as witnesses every person on the jury roll—which numbers altogether about 2,000—who is not conceded by the state or commission to be white.

Barriers for Negro Voters

Late this afternoon Judge Horton had told Leibowitz that the defense would not be permitted to record the race of every man on the Morgan County jury rosters, and had declared that only three more witnesses would be allowed to testify in the defense motion to quash the venire on the grounds that Negroes had been excluded.

To become a voter in Morgan County, it was pointed out, a Negro must be able to remember by heart and recite the whole Constitution of the United States and interpret it to the satisfaction of their lynch masters, a feat which few whites or Negroes can accomplish. Similar limitations are imposed upon white workers, it was pointed out, unless the boss-controlled political machine is convinced that they are "all right." Other disqualificatory rulings and "customs" exclude most Negroes and many white workers from jury service.

Threats have been made against the lives and safety of any Negroes who dare testify for the defense in support of this petition, it was revealed, but the militancy of the Negroes of Northern Alabama has been aroused around the issue of the Scottsboro defense, and they are prepared to testify.

Other threats have been made in letters to Leibowitz and other International Labor Defense attorneys warning them to "stay home where they belong" and not to continue with their attack upon the basic Jim Crow and Negro exclusion customs established by the white bosses and landlords.

These were defied by the defense attorneys who announced they would not be deterred for one moment in their battle for Negro rights, and to save the Scottsboro boys.

The attack upon the jury list is expected to last the remainder of this week, postponing the picking of the jury itself until Monday. This process is expected to take at least a week, once it is begun.

Complaint of Negroes' Counsel Brings Warning From Judge to Three Boys and Employer.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 28.—Circuit Judge James E. Horton denied a motion today to quash the indictments against nine Negroes, accused of attacking two white girls nears Scottsboro two years ago, and immediately the defense turned its guns upon the administration of the jury law in this county where the defendants are to be tried.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defendants, whose sentences of death were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, announced after the court's ruling that he would continue his fight against the alleged "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from Alabama juries.

The motion to quash the indictments was based on the contention that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which returned the twenty true bills against the defendants. Mr. Leibowitz called thirteen witnesses, nine of them Negroes, in support of his assertion of systematic exclusion.

The defense contends that the Alabama statute setting forth the qualifications of jurors is dishonestly administered to exclude Negroes from service on juries.

Potential Negro Jurors Testify.

Mr. Leibowitz called his witnesses to prove from the mouths of excluded potential jurors that they were qualified in every respect save color to serve on juries and that they never had been called upon in their county.

Thus far his evidence has been confined to Jackson County, where the indictments against the Negroes were returned. His next move, he stated, will be to show that Negroes are also excluded from the jury rolls of Morgan County. It is from the latter that the venire from which a jury will be chosen to decide the guilt or innocence of the defendants must be chosen.

The ruling of the court on the motion to quash the indictments came at the opening of the afternoon session as Attorney General Knight was about to call the State's first witness to refute the charges of racial exclusion by the defense.

In the morning Mr. Leibowitz had requested the court to issue subpoenaes duces tecum for the jury rolls and jury boxes of Jackson County at the time when the Negroes were indicted on charges made by Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the two white girls who charged they were attacked by the Negroes on a freight train coming from Chattanooga.

Orders Jury Records Produced.

After a prolonged argument in which Mr. Knight declared that the defense was "aiming around Robin Hood's barn," Judge Horton granted the request for the issuance of the subpoenas but reserved decision on the admissibility of the evidence contained in the jury roll.

Mr. Liebowitz had threatened to call every person whose name appeared on the jury roll of Jackson County, "even if it breaks the State," before Judge Horton granted the request to issue the subpoenas.

Before that Mr. Liebowitz said he would withdraw his motion if Attorney General Knight would concede that only the names of white men were included on the roll.

Mr. Knight replied:

"The State will concede nothing, prove your case."

Mr. Leibowitz reserved the right to present further evidence that only white men were acceptable as jurors in Jackson County after the production of the jury roll.

A recess for luncheon was taken, and it was expected that the afternoon session would be marked by an attempt on the part of the State to support the contention that the color line plays no part in the selection of jury men.

But at the opening of the afternoon session Judge Horton brought the little trial of Alabama's jury system to a close without having heard the witnesses called by the State. The decision seemed to surprise both State and defense counsel.

"Mr. Attorney General," Judge Horton said, "the court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question. The motion is overruled."

Mr. Leibowitz, who is counting upon the question of exclusion of Negroes from jury duty as a loophole for an appeal if the Negroes are convicted a second time, smiled pleasantly and offered no argument against the exclusion of further testimony on an issue which, until then, had been one of fact with no problem of law involved.

Announces Separate Trials.

As soon as the motion to quash the indictments was out of the way, Judge Horton indicated his readiness to proceed with the trial.

Attorney General Knight, whose father, a justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, wrote the opinion upholding the original conviction which was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, declared his intention of trying "each defendant as he was tried before." This amounted to a request for a severance of the indictments, and it was not opposed by Mr. Leibowitz at the time.

The Attorney General, however, requested that the court take proof of the ages of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams to determine whether they should be tried as juveniles or adults subject to the penalty of the law.

Then the case of Heywood Patterson was called.

The big Negro, dressed in his blue denim prison uniform, arose from the row of seats in which he and his fellow-defendants had been sprawling all day. He stood looking blankly, first at the lawyers and then at the judge. He said nothing, but his eyes rolled back and forth. The eight other defendants, lolling in their chairs, showed their first interest in the proceedings.

Plea Entered With Proviso.

Mr. Leibowitz informed the court that he refused to enter a plea lest he prejudice a contemplated motion to quash the venire which Sheriff Bud Davis and the judge were drawing from names placed in a black tin box vigorously shaken before the court room crowd and the defendants. It was his intention, Mr. Leibowitz said, to file a motion to quash the venire on the same ground on which he had moved to quash the indictments.

Informed by the court and Attorney General Knight that no technical objection would be raised to a motion to quash the venire if his client entered a plea at that time, Mr. Leibowitz said:

"Then we plead not guilty to the charge."

No defendant other than Patterson was arraigned under agreement by counsel for both sides after he had entered his plea through his attorney.

The court declared a recess until 8:30 A. M. Thursday, when the introduction of the State's evidence will begin.

The one-day holiday was declared to permit the defense to gather evidence and obtain affidavits in support of the contention of Mr. Leibowitz that "the rolls from which the jury box was filled, unjustifiably and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment excluded Negroes solely because of their race."

Law Phrases Fluster Negroes.

All the witnesses called by Mr. Leibowitz were Negroes. They were John Sanford, C. S. Finley, Mark Taylor, Trap Mosely, Louis Cole, Ples Larkin, John Stapler, Will Watkins and L. C. Stapler. All declared they were qualified to serve as jurors.

Mr. Knight, in cross-examination, flustered them by asking their definitions of "moral turpitude" and "esteemed in the community in which they live," phrases from the jury law.

"I don't understand that kind of talking," said Watkins when Mr. Knight asked him what he understood by the word "esteemed."

In addressing his questions to the Negroes Attorney General Knight called them by their Christian names. Once Mr. Leibowitz interrupted and said:

"Call him Mr. Sanford, please."

"I'm not accustomed to that," retorted Mr. Knight.

Generally, Mr. Knight's attitude to the witnesses was friendly, as, for example, in the following colloquy with Stapler:

"How are you getting on?"

"All right, sir."

"Nobody imposes on you?"

"No, sir."

"Have you been mistreated in Jackson County?"

"No, sir."

Leibowitz Objects to Booklet.

The morning session as enlivened by a renewal of the threat of the defense to seek a second change of venue on the ground of prejudice. Mr. Leibowitz came into court at the opening of the session and said:

"I want to call your honor's attention, if I may, to the sale at the door of this court house of certain booklets entitled "The Inside, Unpublished Story of the Infamous Scottsboro Trial."

Mr. Leibowitz then described to the court the contents of the booklet which set forth a version of the evidence in the case and read the last two sentences denouncing the Communist party and stating that when the booklet was read the defendants will all be dead.

Declaring that if it were not for the International Labor Defense "these nine boys would now be dead," Mr. Leibowitz said that unless such propagandizing stopped he would be forced to ask for a change of venue.

The defense attorney offered a copy of the booklet in evidence and Attorney General Knight arose, holding a sheaf of handbills circulated by Communist sympathizers, and said that in his opinion the use of propoganda was evenly divided.

Judge Horton accepted the pamphlet offered by Mr. Leibowitz, but rejected the handbills which Mr. Knight proffered.

Judge Stops Sale of Pamphlets.

Judge Horton ordered Deputy Sheriffs to bring in all the salesmen of the pamphlets that they could round up. Within five minutes the deputies were back with three very frightened young men, who stood quaking before the bench as the judge warned them to cease selling the pamphlets. Finally they were allowed to go, after Mr. Leibowitz said he did not wish to punish an yone "trying to earn a dollar in these times."

The three youths brought into court described themselves as Leon Smith, 15; Allstone Hargrove, 14, and Sam White, 19. They said they had been employed by Kyle Frazier.

Judge Horton issued a bench warrant for Frazier for contempt of court, but when Frazier appeared and apologized, saying he had no intention of disseminating propaganda prejudicial to the defendants, the court dismissed him with a warning.

NEGROES TESTIFY IN ISSUE

Point Raised Over Jury System in South Brings Request for Briefs to Aid Virginia Trial.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 30.—Samuel Leibowitz, chief counsel for the Negroes whose conviction two years ago at Scottsboro for an attack on two white girls was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, won the right today to inspect the secret roll from which jury men are chosen in Morgan County.

Circuit Judge James E. Horton, who is presiding over the Negroes' second trial for their lives, ordered the jury roll produced over the objection of Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., while Arthur J. Tidwell, one of the county's three jury commissioners, was on the stand.

Mr. Leibowitz, who has lost one fight to quash the indictments against the Negroes on the ground that members of their race were excluded from the grand jury and is now waging another similar battle to quash the venire for the jury for Haywood Patterson's trial, immediately set about the task of proving that all o fthe 2,000-odd names inscribed upon the rolls are those of white men.

Mr. Tidwell was called by the defense after J. H. Green, clerk of the Circuit Court, and eleven Negroes, most of them boasting college educations, testified that for as long as they could remember there had been no Negroes on the juries of Morgan County.

List of Negro Witnesses Checked.

Three physicians, two preachers, a dentist, a bill poster, a motion-picture exhibitor, an undertaker, a high school principal and an operator of a billiard parlor were among the witnesses whom Mr. Leibowitz sought to prove were qualified to perform the duty of citizens on juries, except for the fact that they were Negroes.

From what might be described as an impromptu blue book of the Negro citizenry of Morgan County, prepared last night by the defense attorneys, the witnesses read into the record the names of about 180 colored acquaintances, whose qualifications, they averred, were as good as theirs.

When the procession of witnesses stopped at the direction of Judge Horton, who ruled that further testimony along this line would be merely cumulative, Mr. Leibowitz announced for the record that he had requested subpoenas for about 400 other Negroes whose qualifications for a place upon the jury roll he was prepared to prove.

The court allowed the names of all these uncalled witnesses to be entered upon the record with as much probative force as though they had testified.

Ever since the defense, supported by the International Labor Defense, an adjunct of the Communist party, raised the question of the right of Negroes under the Fourteenth Amendment to sit on juries in State courts officials have maintained that it was a challenge to the selective jury system of the entire South.

Today they found justification for that belief in a letter from John Galleher, Commonwealth's Attorney for Loudon County, Va., who wrote asking briefs on the matter in the Scottsboro case. He wanted the brief to aid him in preparing to meet the issue in the case of a Negro now awaiting extradition from Boston, Mass., to answer a charge of murdering two white women in their beds in Virginia.

The letter, received by John K. Thompson, Solicitor of Jackson County, was turned over to Mr. Knight, who indicated that he would comply with the request.

Communist "Observers" at Trial.

Meanwhile the peaceable atmosphere that has marked this proceeding against the Negroes, who are accused of criminally assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on a freight train, continues to exist not only in the court room but in the town as well. A noticeable increase in the number of Communist sympathizers and "observers," coupled with reports that agitators were trying to arrange "mass demonstrations" among the Negroes, however, led to concern in some quarters regarding its preservation.

Mr. Leibowitz, who is not a sympathizer with the Communists, however, has made it clear he will remain in the case only so long as demonstrators are held in check, and that, more than anything else, is counted upon here to prevent unfortunate developments. The Communist sympathizers who were in court durnig the day conducted themselves circumspectly and quietly, and there was no parading or displaying of placards.

The climax of the day's session came with the production of the jury roll, a huge loose-leaf tome bound in red leather. It was borne into the court by the towering Sheriff, But Davis, who stooped a little under its weight and bulk. Tuesday, when Mr. Leibowitz sought to obtain a similar volume from Jackson County, where the first trials were held, Judge Horton granted his request, but then denied the defens motion bfore the rolls were producd in court.

At the outset of his examination, Mr. Tidwell, who was appointed to the Jury Board by Governor Miller, testified that the list, from which Judge Horton had culled a venire of 100 names for the trial of Haywood Patterson, was made up last January and February and that it had not been tampered with or changed.

"I ask you to produce that list," said Mr. Leibowitz.

Jury Roll Offered in Evidence.

Mr. Tidwell sat stock still, darting puzzled looks first at Attorney General Knight and then at Judge Horton. Judge Horton said that the jury roll was in the custody of the Sheriff, and he directed that official to bring it into the court room. As soon as Mr. Tidwell had identified it, Mr. Leibowitz offered the document, which under the Alabama law is protected from public scrutiny, in evidence.

Mr. Knight objected on the ground that the jury roll was immaterial evidence, even thought a study of it should disclose that there were no names of Negroes written on its pages. He argued that, since the Commissioners held discretional powers, "which no one can go behind," the absence of Negroes from the list could not show an arbitrary misuse of power. Judge Horton, however, held the roll to be "proper evidence."

"You and your fellow-commissioners are required to place on that roll the names of all citizens who possess the ualifications prescribed by law—all citizens—isn't that true?"

Mr. Tidwell conceded that such was his understanding of the law.

"Now isn't it a fact," demanded the New York defense attorney, "that all the names written in that book are names of white citizens?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Tidwell.

"Do you mean that for an honest answer?" shouted Mr. Leibowitz.

Tidwell Resents Question.

Mr. Tidwell swung around in his chair and seemed about to rise. Several onlookers in the first row of spectators learned forward.

"Do you mean to say that I would swear falsely?" demanded the Jury Commissioner, color rising in his cheeks.

"I don't mean to say anything. I'm asking you a question," snapped the defense attorney with a rising voice.

The heated colloquy abated when Mr. Knight objected to the "badgering of this witness" and what he called an "attempt to grill him" on the operations of his mind. Judge Horton's calm voice quieted the brewing storm, and Mr. Leibowitz asked:

"Can you point to the name of any colored citizens on that page?"

The defense lawyer's finger was pointing to the first sheet in the book, and Mr. Tidwell bent forward to study it better.

"I don't know whether they are white, black or yellow," he insisted.

The witness then explained that many of the names were placed upon the rolls without any personal examination by him. There was no member of the commission, he declared, who could say from an inspection of the names which represented white citizens and which, if any, denoted Negroes.

Mr. Leibowitz interrupted his examination to ask that the Attorney General stipulate on the record that the rolls contained the names of only white men. This, Mr. Knight refused to do, asserting that he regarded the whole line of inquiry as "immaterial, anyway."

Mr. Leibowitz explained that he made the request only in the interest of saving time in order that the trial of Patterson, which is being held up pending the outcome of the fight on the jury system, might proceed. Then he added:

"If yo uare going to put me to my proof, all right. It is my purpose and intention to prove that no Negro's name appears upon that jury roll, and I'll do it if it takes till doomsday. Go ahead."

Scrutiny of Roll Begun.

A little later Mr. Tidwell conceded that some persons whose names appeared on the roll were known to him, and under the direction of Mr. Leibowitz, he began a page-to-page scrutiny of the book, telling the color of those whose names were familiar to him. While this was going on, the judge left the bench, the lawyers gathered about the jury commissioner and the stenographer joined the huddle.

When court recessed until 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, Mr. Tidwell had failed to point to any Negroes on the roll, but there were many names which he alleged were unfamiliar to him. This evening the volume was being checked by defense attorneys in an effort to discover whether any of the Negroes, whom the defense holds to be qualified for jury duty, are included in the roll.

Tomorrow it is planned to call the other two jury commissioners to continue the process of elimination. When that is done, Mr. Liebowitz said, it is his intention to cause subpoenas to be issued for all those on the roll whose color remains in doubt, in order that there can be no doubt that no Negroes are included; then this court and those above it may decide whether their absence results from a recognized system of exclusion or mere coincidence.

Unofficial estimates placed the number of names upon the roll as between 2,000 and 2,500 and it was a question of some concern to residents of this State, already in such financial straits that it is threatened with a shutdown of its schools, how far Judge Horton would allow the defense to go. It was hoped that some compromise could be effected to shorten the proceedings, but Mr. Liebowitz was determined to complete his record and Mr. Knight was unwilling to surrender.

Negroes Called As "Qualified."

The Negroes whose qualification for jury duty Mr. Liebowitz sought to prove in court were Dr. Frank S. Sykes, Dr. N. E. Cashin and Dr. N. M. Sykes, physicians; Hulett J. Banks, bill poster; the Rev. L. R. Womack, J. J. Sykes, motion picture exhibitor; W .G. Wilson, a lay preacher; J. D. Pickett, high school principal; Robert Bridgeforth, billiard hall proprietor; George H. Reynolds, undertaker, and Dr. Willis James Wood, dentist.

The testimony which these men gave differed only in minor details of personal experience. All had a wide acquaintance among the Negro population of the county and all were able and willing to name scores of other Negroes, who in their opinion were "esteemed in their community for their intelligence, good character and sound judgment." None of the men they named, the witnesses all said, could be disqualified because of their age, unsound mind or convictions for offenses involving moral turpitude.

Each of the witnesses declared he had never seen a Negro on a Morgan County jury. Objections from the State, upheld by Judge Horton, prevented each of the witnesses from answering the following hypothetical question profoundedby Mr. Leibowitz:

"If it should be proved conclusively that the names of none of the Negrose who have named appear on the jury roll of this county, would you not be forced in all honesty to believe that they were excluded solely because they were members of the African race."

In cross-examination, Mr. Knight drew admissions from each that he had no first-hand knowledge regarding the inclusion or exclusion of his name for jury duty. Each admitted also that, if his name were excluded, he could not name the specific reason for which it was barred by the jury commissioners.

Status As Voter Insufficient.

Mr. Leibowitz in re-direct examination of his witnesses, two of them veterans of the World War, one a former student of Phillips-Exeter Academy and Howard University and one a leader of the local Negro Civic League, established that none had ever been called upon to submit to examination on his qualifications. Several of the witnesses were voters who, Mr. Leibowitz maintained, had won the right to suffrage only by demonstrating their ability to interpret the Federal Constitution, but Judge Horton would not let them display their knowledge on this subject, holding that the qualifications of voters and jurors were different.

Dr. N. M. Sykes, who attended the University of Illinois, was asked by the prosecutor:

"Did you ever serve on a jury while you were in Illinois?"

"I was called, but didn't serve," was the answer."

Before ordering Mr. Leibowitz to submit proof of his charge that Negroes are systematically and arbitrarily barred from jury service, Judge Horton denied a motion by the defense to try all the defendants jointly, as they were indicted.

The day's proceedings concerned only Patterson, whose case is the only one thus far set down for trial. He was the only one of the nine defendants, two of whom will be tried in Juvenile Court, who was brought to the court room from the nearby jail. He sat through the proceedings, taking no part in them and showing little interest.

SCOTTSBORO BODY PLEDGES SUPPORT OF GARDEN MEET

4-1-33

Workers' Groups Rally Members for Mighty Protest Wednesday

NEW YORK.—Members of the Scottsboro Unity Defense Committee meeting in Harlem Thursday night pledged their support to the mass meeting against German fascist terror, to be held at Madison Square Garden, Wednesday evening, April 5, at 7 p. m. The support of this organization, which includes among its membership such well known Negro writers, ministers and intellectuals as Countee Cullen, Langston Hughes, S. Clayton Powell and Augusta Savage, came as a recognition of the close connection between Nazi deeds of horror and those like the attempted Scottsboro legal lynching perpetrated against the Negro in this country.

Widespread Negro support of the Garden meeting is following the exposure of such statements as that contained in the Hitlerite organ,, National-Sozialistische Monatshefte.

This paper not only characterized the Negro as "the latent brute who can be tamed neither by slavery nor civilization" but came boldly to the defense of the American ruling class with the statement: "Of course, most of the Negroes who are lynched do not merit any regret."

An even larger number of militant organizations are announcing their support of this mighty protest demonstration. The Friends of the Soviet Union, recognizing that "Fascism in Germany . . . brings to a close focus the war threat against the USSR," calls on all its members and friends to rally and march in a body to the Garden on Wednesday.

The New York District of the International Labor Defense, in an appeal for support for the meeting, declares that "the bloody Hitler fascist terror not only menaces workers, national minorities and intellectuals in Germany, but immediately concerns every American worker," and points out the connection between the Nazi outrages and the capitalist terror in the United States.

"Icor," represening tens of thousands of the Jewish people, has rallied to the support of "this decisive fight against fascist atrocities."

A statement reaching the Daily Worker from the Group Theatre, one of New York's foremost organizations, characterizes the German fascist regime as "a threat, not only to racial and political groups, but to culture itself."

Defendants Drowse as Leibowitz Seeks to Have Indictment Set Aside

3-28-33

DECATUR, Ala., March 27. (AP)—A tedious court battle to set aside the indictment against the Scottsboro Negroes was launched Monday as the defense sought to establish its contention the defendants had been deprived of their rights through exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury that indicted them.

Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief of defense counsel, and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., directing the prosecution, clashed frequently as the former sought to prove through witnesses that Negroes were "habitually excluded from juries in Jackson county."

Macon Ga.

The seven Negro defendants are charged with attacking two white girls on a freight train March 25, 1931. They were sentenced to death at their first trial, but the United States supreme court set aside the death sentences and ordered new trials. The action Monday was the forerunner of the second trial.

While the defendants drowsed against the wall behind their counsel table, occasionally showing interest in the proceedings, the attorneys who seek their freedom read into the records an amended petition to quash the indictments.

Trial Slow to Start

Delay in bringing the Negroes from the Jefferson county jail in Birmingham to Decatur, held up proceedings until the afternoon session and attorneys sparred cautiously through their statements setting up the premise for testimony.

Leibowitz, contending that the exclusion of Negroes from the grand jury had denied the defandants of their constitutional rights, declared "there has never been a Negro to serve on an Alabama jury."

Attorney General Knight in a brief statement told the court he denied the allegations.

J. S. Benson, editor of The Progressive Age at Scottsboro, the first witness under direct examination by Leibowitz, said to his knowledge no Negro had ever served on a jury in Jackson county.

The editor was on the stand for approximately 45 minutes with the examination punctuated by objections and exceptions from both sides.

Leibowitz asked Benson if he knew of a Negro ever serving on an Alabama jury.

"I don't know that one ever has," he replied, and Knight took up the questioning again, that led to a prolonged examination by Leibowitz, concerning various Negroes in the county.

Knight read the qualification calling for good character, sound judgment, and qualifications as to age, property and intelligence, and Benson replied, "I know some good Negroes, as Negroes go, but sound judgment would get them."

"Most all Negroes will steal," Benson replied to a question by Leibowitz and a ripple of laughter swept the court, several of the defendants joining in the laugh.

Asked what he meant by Negroes lacking "sound judgment" Benson caused another laugh, saying they were "not trained and I might say the same applies to women."

DECATUR, ALA., March 29—(AP)—Search for Ruby Bates, missing state witness in the "Scottsboro case," tonight extended to every corner of North Alabama as preparations went forward for the first of the new trials tomorrow.

The girl's father today gave Atty. Gen Thomas E. Knight, Jr., addresses at which he believed she could be found and an immediate check was started in an effort to have her available in time for the opening of the Heywood Patterson trial tomorrow.

Patterson is the first of seven negroes to face retrial on charges of attacking Victoria Price and the Bates girl, both of Huntsville, Ala., aboard a freight train in Jackson County, on March 25, 1931. He was arraigned yesterday and entered a plea of not guilty.

The other six facing retrial are: Ozie Powell, 19 and Charles Weems, 22, of Atlanta; Andy Wright, 19, and Clarence Norris, 22, of Chattanooga; and Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga., and Willie Roberson, 19 of Columbus, Ga. They will be tried after the Patterson case is finished.

Although Ruby Bates is missing, the State, if she cannot be found, will offer her testimony from the previous trial in which the seven facing retrial, and Eugene Williams, whom the Alabama Supreme Court held was probably a juvenile, were convicted and sentenced to death. The case of Williams and Roy Wright, ninth negro named in the indictments, has been deferred until the court determines their ages.

Other Victim To Testify.

While the search for the Bates girl went ahead, Victoria Price, the other alleged victim of the attack, was at her home in Huntsville, and will be brought here tomorrow by Sheriff Ben Giles, of Madison County.

Patterson was arraigned yesterday on the indictment charging him with an attack on the Price girl, the same charge on which he was convicted and snetenced to death in the trials in Jackson County two years ago. While the State checked every angle of the case today, counsel retained by the International Labor Defense prepared for a new assault on Alabama's selective jury system.

Samuel C. Leibowitz, of New York chief of defense counsel, said he had 200 Morgan County negroes, among them doctors, lawyers and a college professor to sustain his motion to quash the venire, because no negroes were in the jury box from which the 150 names were drawn.

Leibowitz, in discussing his movements today. said it was not an effort to start a crusade against Southern jury systems, but "we are taking every step possible to protect the interests of these nine negro boys."

The motion to quash, overruled yesterday, and the drive to quash the venire both hinge on the predicate that the alleged "sysematic exclusion" of negroes from the jury violated the constitutional rights of the defendants and the fourtenth amendment.

Train Scene Reconstructed

Leibowitz today unpacked a minature train which he will use in the trials. The train, Leibowitz said, was as near as possible a counterpart of the Southern Railway car on which the State charges the attacks occurred.

The train, measuring more than 32 feet when fully assembled, contains a gondola car, similar to that in which the attacks were purported to have taken place.

Atty. Gen. Knight late this afternoon said he was doing everything possible to find the Bates girl, but was not optimistic over the prospects of locating her by 8:30 a.m. tomorrow.

Efforts were made today to sell to newspapermen information as to her whereabouts, but, when pinned down, the man offering the information was uncertain that he had positive proof.

National guardsmen brought here have found their duties consisted principally of escorting the defendants from the jail to the court room, as the crowds have been orderly and readily obeyed instructions to maintain order.

ACCORDING TO WHOSE OX IS GORED

The Negro's demand for a fair and just attitude on the part of other races must be accompanied by nothing less than right and justice within his own ranks. The contention of the Negro leadership for fair play will have little effect unless there is a sincere attitude on the part of those contending to be fair in their every dealing. Such a thought suggests itself as the conduct of many Negro attendants at court hearings is observed. Even this week as the United States Supreme Court remanded the cases of nine Negro youths to the court of Scottsboro, Alabama, because of the hilarious and disorderly conduct of attendants at a previous hearing, Negroes who packed a court room in another southern state were guffawing, applauding and otherwise exhibiting uncouth conduct that caused the presiding jurist to threaten to clear the courtroom.

Such conduct makes it clear to the careful observer that the Negro exhibits an attitude of "it just depends upon whose ox is gored." Certainly there needs to be a house-cleaning within the ranks of the race and until that is done very thoroughly and effectively, the demands that others clean house will prove of no avail.

HELP THE SCOTTSBORO DEFENSE

THE Scottsboro Defense is being hampered by lack of funds. Unless there is an adequate defense the boys will surely be convicted again, and this time they will surely be railroaded to the electric chair.

The trial has been shifted to Decatur, but that town is but a replica of Scottsboro, and the temper of the white people is little different from that of their brethren in the neighboring community. Already there are troops in Decatur to guard against what are called, euphemistically, "eventualities."

4-1-33

The unreconstructed white people of Alabama feel that it is not the nine Scottsboro boys, but the State of Alabama and Southern "peculiar institutions" which are on trial. They wish to continue those "peculiar institutions." They are incensed at world criticism. They are on the defensive. If they suffer a defeat, the morale of all color-prejudiced, exploiting Southern whites will be shaken and the hands of justice and right will be strengthened.

Help in the form of money is needed to strengthen those hands and protect the Negro from legalized mob murder. The white lawyers defending the Scottsboro boys are contributing their services. Negroes should at least help the International Labor Defense to defray the necessary expenses incident to the trial.

Seek Bates Girl For Scottsboro 2d Trial Today

By CARTER BROOKE JONES,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

DECATUR, Ala., Mar. 26 (INS).—A State-wide search for Ruby Bates, youthful witness in the Scottsboro attack case, was pressed tonight as preparations were made for the second trial tomorrow of seven Negroes charged with attacking two young white women.

The other principal witness, Victoria Price, was under the protection of a deputy sheriff at her Huntsville home.

Miss Bates vanished from her home in Huntsville more than two weeks ago.

Two years ago today, Miss Bates and Miss Price, cotton mill girls were "bumming" their way back home from Chattanooga on a freight train, when, they allege, a dozen Negro youths appeared and assaulted the girls. Nine of the Negroes were arrested.

The seven who will face a second jury next week were convicted at Scottsboro and sentenced to death, but granted a new trial by the United States Supreme Court.

MASS MEETING URGES JUSTICE FOR NEGROES

Birmingham Resolution Calls for Venue Change in Trial—50 White Persons Attend.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 26.—A mass meeting calling for fairness at the second trial of seven Negroes in the Scottsboro case was held here today, and a resolution adopted urging change of venue from Decatur to Birmingham.

Speakers stressed that it was justice which was wanted for the Negroes, and not necessarily acquittal. Among the speakers were Dr. Henry M. Edmonds, Pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church and chairman of the Alabama Inter-Racial Commission; Dr. Kenneth E. Barnhart, Professor of Sociology at the Birmingham-Southern College; Ernest W. Taggart, president of the Birmingham branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Rabbi Goldstein of Temple Beth-Or, Montgomery, and David Hutto, a student at Birmingham-Southern.

The First Congregational Church, a Negro house of worship, was crowded for the meeting, and hundreds stood outside. About fifty whites attended.

Rabbi Goldstein in his speech declared that the meeting had been called because of a belief that the courts guaranteed constitutional liberties regardless of race, color or creed. He appealed for funds to help carry on the defense in the Scottsboro case.

Mr. Hutto, who is president of the Epworth League of his college, declared that the day of racial supremacy was passing away.

Dr. Edmonds, remarking that the inter-racial commission was cooperating with the International Labor Defense to aid the accused Negroes, said:

"We can all be sure that if the International Labor Defense had not taken up the defense, others would have done so."

He felt that Decatur was a satisfactory place for the trial, and said that similar views had been expressed to him by Bishop McDowell, Episcopal leader, and Ward Nelson, State secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Dr. Barnhart, reviewing the history of the case, quoted at length from the decision of the United States Supreme Court, and expressed the opinion that the second trial would result differently from the first. He said no apologies were needed for his interest in the case, which had become a matter of international interest.

Dr. Taggart declared that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was behind the efforts to get justice for the defendants, although as an organization it had refused to cooperate with the International Labor Defense in the case.

Allen Taub of New York, one of counsel for the defense, spoke in behalf of a Birmingham trial for the Negroes.

Girl Who Accused Negroes Cannot Be Found—Change of Venue to Birmingham Urged.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 23.—The question of whether to ask National Guard protection for the trial of the Negroes accused of attacking two white girls when it opens here Monday remained undecided today.

The advisability of calling upon Governor Miller to supply the troops was being considered by Sheriff Bud Davis of Morgan County and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who arrived here this evening to make final preparations for the trial.

The Sheriff, however, was out of town and a final decision will not be reached until tomorrow. Representatives of the militia units at Hartselle and Athens, neighboring towns, called at the Sheriff's office in the morning in quest of information, but were unable to obtain it.

They explained that if their troops were to be called out they would like to know it far enough in advance to be able to make the necessary arrangements to be on hand with full complements of men on the day the trial opens.

The absence of Sheriff Davis from the county was in connection with the approaching trial of the Negroes, who once were condemned to death for their alleged attack upon Ruby Bates and Mrs. Victoria Price. The sentences were not carried out because the International Labor Defense carried an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, which ordered new trials.

Among the subpoenaes which the Sheriff and his deputies were serving was one for the Bates girl, who disappeared from her home in Huntsville, thirty miles from here, on Feb. 28. Sheriff Ben Giles of Madison County, which includes Huntsville within its borders, said that all efforts to find the girl had failed.

The coming trial was the chief topic of conversation in Decatur tonight. The facilities of the local hotel, it was said, will be taxed to the utmost after Sunday night. The Western Union and Postal Telegraph Companies have rented space in buildings near the courthouse and extra operators are being sent here to handle the press reports of the proceedings.

Although it is regarded as unlikely that Judge A. E. Hawkins of Scottsboro, Jackson County, where the original convictions were obtained, would reconsider his decision to transfer the trials to Decatur in granting a defense motion for another change of venue, agitation for removal of the proceedings to Birmingham was gaining momentum.

A mass meeting was to be held in Birmingham tonight to urge the court to reconsider. Attorney General Knight said he had received a communication from the American Civil Liberties Union asking him to use his influence to take the trial to Birminghan and several residents of this Tennessee River city let it be known that they would have small objection.

No action can be taken, however, unless Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, who now is in New York, decides to ask for reconsideration of the motion to change the venue, and it was regarded as unlikely that he would do so for fear of losing the plea and then having to try the case in a community aroused by the allegations of prejudice that would be necessary to support the request.

Jury Selected In Scottsboro Case

12 Morgan County Citizens Chosen To Try Negro; Quash Motion Is Denied

Montgomery, Ala.

DECATUR, ALA., [illegible] (AP)—Twelve Morgan County [illegible] early tonight were empaneled as the jury to try Heywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga negro, on charges of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price more than two years ago.

The jury was completed at 6:45 p.m., and 10 minutes later was in charge of bailiffs to remain over the weekend, as taking testimony in the trial, the first of the new trials in the "Scottsboro case," will not begin until Monday.

Half of the jurymen are from Decatur and only three of them are farmers.

The jury is as follows:

John J. Bryant, of Falkville, farmer.

William L. Grimes, Decatur, bookkeeper.

Robert L. Landers, Decatur, unemployed.

James F. Stewart, Jr., of Hartselle, merchant.

J. Foreman Wallace, of Danville, farmer.

Irwin Craig, of Decatur, barber.

Cecil Crawford, of Jopha, farmer.

John Davis, of Decatur, bookkeeper.

Eugene E. Graves, of Decatur, banker.

Robert L. Kitchens, of Decatur, salesman.

In qualifying the veniremen, 25 were excused for fixed opinions, five for scruples against capital punishment, and four who would not convict on circumstantial evidence.

The venire, through excuses and challenges in qualifying, was reduced to 50, just half of the original number of the venire. The State was given 13 strikes and the defense 25.

Judge James E. Horton, presiding, gave the jurymen the usual charge about remaining together and instructed them to discuss the case as little as possible over the weekend.

Once the qualifying got well underway, the procedure moved swiftly.

Qualifying the jury started immediately after Judge Horton had denied a motion to quash the venire because no negroes appeared on it, or on the jury roll, from which the venire was drawn.

The denial of the motion came suddenly in the afternoon session after Atty. Gen. Knight had told the court the rest of the State's evidence on it, was [illegible]e and moved denial.

"[illegible] on the State to show that the jury commission complied with the statute in making up the jury roll," the court said after Leibowitz had asked: "Do I understand the court to hold that we have made out a prima facie case?"

The advantage was short lived as soon afterward Judge Horton denied the motion [illegible] Thomas E. Knight, Jr., attorney general, said the rest of the State's rebuttal witnesses would offer [illegible] that negroes were not "sy[illegible]y and arbitrarily" excluded from jury duty because of their race.

Montgomery Ala.

The decision ended three and a half days effort of the defense to lay predicates for an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Judge Horton immediately swore the prospective jurymen and attorneys began a careful questioning of each man. The State has one challenge to each two strikes made by the defense and Knight occasionally challenged a venireman who expressed an opinion or opposed capital punishment.

In a previous trial seven of the nine negroes were sentenced to death for the alleged assault which the girls said occurred on a North Alabama freight train.

Two others received commutations of death sentences because of their youth. All were granted new trials by the United States Supreme Court.

Each prospective juror was asked if the color of the defendants would make any difference in his judgment of the evidence and a series of other questions that indicated the taking of testimony would not get under way until Monday.

Advice was received here by telephone last night from Decatur that the trial judge, in addition to holding that negroes are not systematically excluded from jury lists in Morgan County, also overruled motion by defense counsel to quash the venire drawn for the trial of two of the seven defendants. The decision of Judge Horton in favor of the State, represented by Atty. Gen. Knight followed a hotly contested legal battle over the two points raised, which had waged for several days between the Attorney General and counsel for the negroes.

JUDGE ADMITS THE POINT

New York, N.Y.

Ruling Record Is Established, He Cautions Crowd Against Any Demonstrations.

LEIBOWITZ IS GUARDED

Soldiers Patrol Defense Counsel's Quarters After Threats Reach the Officers' Ears.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 31.—From a venire composed exclusively of white men, a jury was chosen in Morgan County Courthouse this afternoon for the retrial of Haywood Patterson, one of the nine Negro defendants in the Scottsboro case, after the defense lost its long, hard fight against exclusion of Negroes from the jury rolls.

Judge James E. Horton ruled this forenoon that Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, had established a prima facie case against the Alabama jury system as violating the Fourteenth Amendment, and called upon Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. to proceed with evidence in its defense.

Mr. Knight called only one witness, Arthur J. Tidwell, a jury commissioner, who was placed upon the stand yesterday by the defense and rested after the official had declared that he and his colleagues had placed upon the jury rolls "all" qualified males in the county. In cross-examination Mr. Tidwell admitted that he did not know of a single Negro who could make the grade.

Court Room Crowd Tense.

Judge Hortion then rendered his decision on an issue which had assumed greater proportions in the minds of many citizens of the South than the guilt or innocence of the nine men accused of attacking Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago. The words, "motion denied," fell from his lips upon the ears of a tense court room crowd.

"I except," said Mr. Leibowitz, who frequently during the presentation of his evidence of systematic and arbitrary exclusion of Negroes by the country's jury commissioners, has hinted at the possibility of a review by the United States Supreme Court, which once before set aside death sentences originally imposed at Scottsboro and ordered new trials for the condemned Negroes.

The court room crowd, many of whom know at first or second hand hair-raising tales of conditions here during the reconstruction period following the war between the States, received the court's decision without a sound or murmur, but with relieved expressions.

Before proceeding to the selection of the jury Judge Horton delivered an eloquent and solemn warning against allowing discourtesy or violence or racial prejudice to mar Alabama's record for fair administration of impartial justice.

Protests Counsel's Methods.

The selection of the jury had hardly begun, however, before Fred Morgan, the postmaster of Eva, a little near-by town where he has a reputation for prowess at "all-day singing," a local festival of a semi-religious nature, stalked from his seat among the veniremen to a place before the bench to protest against the manner in which Mr. Leibowitz was examining a prospective juror.

"Us jurors in Morgan County," he said, extending his arm with an oratorical gesture, "are not accustomed to taking the charge from the defendant's attorney, and we don't like it."

He was about to continue, when Judge Horton's surprised expression as he looked over the top of his glasses with obvious disapproval of the interruption, stopped him. Unruffled but stern, the judge said:

"The court will take charge of this. These are legal matters and the questions are perfectly proper. The court always permits questioning of prospective jurors by the attorneys for both sides, and counsel in this case were invited to ask proper questions. There is nothing improper about any of this. Please take your seat again."

Conflict Over Procedure.

As the New York attorney for the defense continued his examinations, objections from Attorney General Knight became more and more frequent, and Mr. Leibowitz found himself in frequent conflict with the Alabama court procedure in selecting jurors—a practice that is considerably different from that usually followed in his home State.

Mr. Leibowitz's fight against the existing jury system has aroused such antagonism among certain elements here that Captain Joseph Burleson, commanding the thirty National Guardsmen on duty for trial, decided tonight to assign five uniformed armed guards to protect the New York attorney.

As Mr. Leibowitz was leaving court, Captain Burleson, who had heard whispered threats against him walked over and asked him where he was staying and how he intended to go home. When Mr. Leibowitz, who declined the Captain's offer of a lift in his car, reached his apartment at Cornelian Court, where he is staying with his wife, he found five national guardsmen patroling in front of the building with fixed bayonets.

Out of a venire of eighty-four farmers, artistans and tradesmen who responded to the court's call for 100 talesmen, twenty-five were excused for having fixed opinions on the case, four for harboring scruples against capital punishment and five for prejudice against circumstantial evidence. All but twelve of the fifty who remained were disposed of by peremptory challenges in a sort of tic-tac-to game between counsel for the State and the defendant.

The defense used most of its peremptory challenges to get rid of overalled farmers from communities where prejudice against Negroes is said to be unusually strong, while the State, with half as many "strikes," used theirs especially against young men suspected of favoring liberal ideas and residents of more urban centres of the county.

Members of the Jury.

The following comprised the jury, which tonight is locked up at a local hotel awaiting the actual opening o the trial Monday morning:

Eugene Bailey Jr., draftsman, of Decatur.
John L. Bryant, farmer, of Falkville.
Eddie Edwards, hosiery mill worker, of Decatur.
William L. Grimes, bookkeeper, of Decatur.
Robert L. Lander, unemployed, of Decatur.
James F. Stewart Jr., Merchant, of Hartselle.
G. Forman Wallace, farmer, of Danville.
Irwin Craig, barber, of Decatur.
Cecil B. Crawford, farmer, of Joppa.
John Davis, bookkeeper, of Decatur.
Eugene E. Graves, bank cashier, Decatur.
Robert L. Kitchens, automobile salesman, of Decatur.

The process by which the jurymen were chosen was interesting. The entire venire was summoned inside the railed enclosure where defendant and counsel sat. There before the bench these white citizens of Morgan County stood with upraised hands and swore to administer justice to one of another race and color without fear or favor. Then they shuffled back to their seats in the crowded courtroom to appear in groups of four and answer questions of the court on their qualifications as jurors.

Local Attorney Aids Defense.

Judge Horton asked them all to tell under oath whether they were householders or freeholders, whether they had been convicted of a crime within the twelve months, whether they had formed ineradicable opinions and the rest of the ritual of qualification. Then he turned them over to the opposing counsel for further probing of their minds.

The State in each case waived the proffered right, merely challenging for cause when a venireman expressed a prejudice against circumstantial evidence, or aversion to capital punishment. Mose of the veniremen were known to Wade Wright, the circuit solicitor who is assisting Mr. Knight. The defense had the services of Clifton Almon, a local attorney retained today, to assist in selecting the jury.

But Mr. Leibowitz, a stranger accustomed to practice in the New York courts, conducted an exhaustive examination as long as the court would let him. He wanted to know whether the talesmen understood the meaning of "reasonable doubt," of the "presumption of innocence," and whether a woman's word controverted by a man, would assume special importance in their eyes. It was while he was proceeding along this line that the postmaster from Eva, who later was challenged peremptorily, injected himself into the proceedings.

A Clash Between Counsel.

Once when Mr. Leibowitz asked a prospective juror if he would heed Judge Horton's explanation of the law, Attorney General Knight objected and the court ruled that the question was improper. Mr. Leibowitz smiled apologetically, and asked the court to bear with him, asserting that if he transgressed the rules of practice it was the result of unfamiliarity with local customs.

"I'm just trying to learn," he said.

"We'll teach you," snapped Mr. Knight.

"All right, Professor Knight," said Mr. Leibowitz.

Finally when the examination of the talesmen left only fifty qualified to serve as jurors, the court declared a recess to permit counsel on both sides to confer on whom to try to keep and whom to "strike" from the list of available jurors.

The system in use here permits the defense two challenges for every one used by the State, thus making the number contingent upon the number of veniremen remaining in the box after all the challenges for cause.

Twenty-five Challenges for Defense.

As there were fifty in this case the State had thirteen and the defense twenty-five peremptory challenges, the State taking the odd one. As the two sides lined up—with Sheriff Bud Davis helping the State in weding out unsatisfactory talesmen—Judge Horton came down from the bench and moved about the courtroom like a professor in a class room, seeing to it that each venireman was seated according to his number on the list, a copy of which lay on each counsel table.

"The State strikes No. 7," said Mr. Wright, who relieved Mr. Knight of this part of the work.

"Two for the defendant now," said Judge Horton back on the bench.

"The defense strikes 3 and 26," said Mr. Leibowitz.

As a number was called the man it represented got up and walked to one side of the room until only twelve remained in the seats Judge Horton had set aside. While the striking process was going on Patterson sat somnolently in a chair tilted against the wall. He took no part in the selection of the jury which will decide whether he shall go free, die in the electric chair or spend a long term in prison.

By the time the intricate procedure was completed it was nearly 7 P. M. and Judge Horton, who had opened court at 8:30 in the morning, declared a recess until Monday morning, when the witnesses in the case were directed to be on hand ready to testify.

Jury Warned Against Discussion.

Before sending the jury to the hotel with Deputy Sheriffs to shepherd them the judge warned the jurors not to discuss the issues in the case with outsiders or among themselves until they are sent to the jury room to deliberate on Patterson's fate.

Court-room observers said that an address such as Judge Horton delivered from the bench this afternoon before proceeding with the selection of a jury was most unusual here. Seemingly it was prompted not only by the fires that have been kindled by the crime itself and the intervention of the Communist party on behalf of the accused Negroes, but by the antagonism expressed locally on street corners and in homes, as a result of the attack on the tSate's jury system by Mr. Leibowitz.

Speaking slowly and distinctly with apparent feeling, Judge Horton said:

"I have been judge of your court for a number of years and I feel I can say, with a degree of gratification, to the jurors of this county and others on my circuit that so far as I have been able to see, all the jurors who ever sat before me have tried each case as far as they were able, according to the law and the evidence, and to render a true verdict in every case.

Calls for Calmness.

"I never knew a juror in any case to come to me and tell me of influences brought to bear with the purpose of impeding the course of justice. I have every confidence than this venire will do the same. In my experience I have had occasion to preside at trials involving some who were rich and prominent and some who were not so rich or prominent; there were important cases and some that were not so important, but in all I have felt that true justice was meted out.

"I have seen jurors with wet eyes and I have heard foremen read verdicts with a voice that quavered, showing the agony experienced in reaching a verdict. Never have I known of a juror who flinched at performing his duty, wherever it might lie.

"So far as the law is concerned, it knows neither native nor alien, Jew or gentile, black or white. This case is no different from any other. We have only our duty to do without fear or favor.

"So far, order in the court room has been good. Our citizenry has been calm and quiet, but I feel I must tell all our citizens to abide calmly the decisions of the court. In no other way can we enjoy the fruits of liberty. You must follow out the law as it is laid down to you and obey the law as it is.

"We have had great justices on the Supreme Court of Alabama, men of whose names we are proud. No one of them has ever written an opinion counseling any course save to obey the law.

"It would be a blot on the men and women of this country, a blot on all of you, if you were to let any act of yours mar the course of justice in this or any other case. I trust you will not show by discourtesy or violence anything but a proper regard for law and order. Your fellow-citizens would bow their heads in shame if any act of yours were to interrupt the course of justice.

"If any among you are tempted, remember that they would consider it a disgrace and a shame upon the fair name of this and the other counties of our State to have anything happen here to reflect upon the administration of justice in our courts. I expect from you proper restraint and a fair decision according to the law and the evidence. We must be true to ourselves, and if we be true to ourselves we can't be false to any man."

Presses Exclusion Point.

The opening of court this morning found Mr. Leibowitz still trying to prove from examination of the jury roll that a system of exclusion kept Negroes from serving on juries, although they were entitled under the law of the State and the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution to do so.

While a driving rain pelted the windows of the courtroom and a howling wind or near hurricane force uprooted trees and telephone poles outside, he called to the stand Sheriff Davis and Captain Joseph Burleson, the Militia officer commanding the detail of National Guardsmen on duty at the court and jail, in an effort to establish the color of those whose names were on the roll. Searching the record from A to Z and from cover to cover the two witnesses confessed that they had been unable to find the name of a single Negro [illegible]

Still pressing his fight to establish definitely the color of every man on the jury roll, Mr. Leibowitz asked for subpoenas for every postmaster in Morgan County, and Judge Horton granted the request.

Ruby Bates Widely Sought by State — Leibowitz Charges His Witnesses Have Been Threatened.

New York

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 26.—The fight to save the lives of seven Negroes once condemned to death for alleged assult upon two white girls will open tomorrow in the Morgan County Court with an attack upon the jury system of Alabama.

He charged that some of the twenty-six witnesses he had subpoenaed in an effort to prove that some Negroes qualified by Alabama law to serve as jurors had been barred because of their black skins, have been subjected to threats and intimidation since they were served.

He said he would ask the protection of the court for these witnesses and declared that, if necessary, he would call on Governor Miller to ask for Federal troops to supplant the National Guardsmen who have already been ordered here.

The accused Negroes, in prison for two years as a result of charges made against them by Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, their accusers, will be brought here sometime before Tuesday morning.

Whether their arrival will be the occasion for an outbreak of violence is an open question, but the answer depends to some extent upon the behavior of Negroes and sympathizers of the Communist party, which has come to the aid of the defendants.

Governor Pledges Fair Trial.

Judging from the comments of representative citizens of Alabama the case of the Negroes has ceased to be an isolated matter of jurisprudence and has become entangled [illegible]

Nevertheless, a fair trial has been promised by Governor Miller and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who is making desperate efforts to find one of his star witnesses, the Bates girl, missing since Feb. 28.

The original verdict of guilty, returned against eight of the nine prisoners at Scottsboro nearly two years ago, has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Alabama, with the prevailing opinion of the court written by Justice Thomas E. Knight, father of the Attorney General who will prosecute the second trial.

This decision was overruled by the United States Supreme Court, which, reversing the original verdicts, set aside the death sentences and ordered new trials.

To many of the leading citizens of the State the Supreme Court decision was accepted as a rebuff to Alabama's highest court. To them the only satisfactory outcome of a new trial would be a second conviction and new sentences of death.

Also interwoven with the case is the South's traditional attitude toward the Negro—an attitude of benevolent paternalism which refuses, however, to recognize the equal rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment and invoked by the defense in its motion to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury.

Most important of all is the implicit challenge to the State's jury system contained in the defense motion. It is that which brought Attorney General Knight into a case which otherwise would have been prosecuted by the regular circuit solicitor and it is that which the people of Decatur really are agitated about to a much greater extent than the fate of the Negroes.

The Factor of Communism.

Another factor enters into the case which is about to go to trial. That is the fact that it was the International Labor Defense, an adjunct of the Communist party, which first came to the defense of the Negroes after they had been convicted and sentenced to death in the electric chair of Kilby prison.

The South is irrevocably committed to a policy of rugged individualism. Alabama is devoted to the protection of States' rights and is resentful of outside interference in the administration of its laws. Its officers are determined to administer them withotu "outside interference."

Its officials, from Governor Miller down, regard as "outside interference" the deluge of telegrams sent to them by Communist sympathizers and which threaten their lives if the accused Negroes are not acquitted.

These threatening telegrams and letters have been almost as important a factor in crystallizing sentiment against the Negroes as has been the nature of the crime charged against them.

Both Sides Ready for Trial.

The organization work being carried on by the Communist party among the share-croppers of the Black Belt—organization work that has already resulted in bloodshed—has had its effect, too.

Teh Scottsboro case, iwth its attendant threat of winning Negroes to the Communist cause, has come to hold a threat to the peace and security of the South, and the demand of the defense for equal rights under the law for peoples of all races and color has accented that threat.

It is in that sort of atmosphere that the trials of the accused Negroes are to open here this week. In spite of all the extraneous matters that have intruded upon a simple matter of guilt or innocence, Attorney General Knight is certain that the people of Decatur and Morgan County will be able to give the accused men a fair trial.

Mr. Knight, besides being Attorney General of the State, is chairman of the Board of Pardons and he is determined that regardless of the verdict of the jury, no Negro will be executed until both he and the Governor are convinced of his guilt.

The prisoners are now in Birmingham jail awaiting their transfer here. The first order of business before the court is the disposition of the defense motion to quash the indictments. If that is denied, the defendants will be arraigned for pleading, a jury will be drawn and the trial will start immediately. Both sides claim to be ready.

PATTERSON TRIAL BEGINS THURSDAY

Scottsboro Defense to Carry on Attack on Alabama Jury System Despite Setback

Telegraph

3-29-33

Macon, Ga.

DECATUR, Ala., March 28 (AP).—A new atack on Alabama's jury system was in the offing tonight as defense counsel gathered evidence on which to base proof that no Negroes were included in the jury box from which the venire for the trial of Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga Negro was drawn Tuesday.

The trial of Patterson was set for Thursday after Judge [illegible] E. Horton surprised the attorneys by dismissing the first motion to quash the indictments against the Scottsboro Negroes, charged with attacking two white girls.

The motion to quash was based on an allegation that the defendants were deprived of their constitutional rights because the grand jury which indicted them contained no Negroes.

Hardly had this motion been disposed of before Samuel C. Liebowitz, chief of defense counsel, raised the question again, refusing to enter a plea for Patterson, whom Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., has elected to try him first.

"We refuse to enter a plea," Liebowitz said, "and move to quash the venire because the rolls from which the box was filled, unjustifiably and in violation of the Fourteenth amendment, contained no Negroes, solely because of their race."

Other Trials Deferred

Judge Horton immediately overruled the motion to quash the venire but told the defense counsel it would not prejudice the motion when offered again.

Liebowitz and his associates, Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, and George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, immediately began assembling their evidence that Negroes were excluded from the jury box solely because of their race.

Arraignment of the other six Negroes, Andy Wright, 19, and Clarence Norris, 22, both of Chattanooga; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga.; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powel, 19, both of Atlanta, and Willie Roberson, 19, of Columbus, Ga., was deferred until after the Patterson trial is disposed of.

Two Granted Severances

Severances were granted for Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, both of whom the defense has contended are juveniles, with the court to determine their ages later.

Under Alabama law, juveniles can not be brought under the jurisdiction of the circuit court until after they have been before a juvenile court.

Denial of the motion to quash the indictment, came just as court reconvened after the noon recess and with indications that testimony would continue for a day or two more.

As Attorney General Knight arose to call the state's first witness, Judge Horton said, "Mr. Attorney General, the court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question. The motion is overruled."

It was several moments before the import of the announcement spread over the court room which had settled down for an afternoon of testimony relating to the method of selecting juries under Alabama statutes.

Liebowitz entered an exception and the way was paved for arraignment of Patterson, who, dressed in blue denims, stood quietly beside his attorneys as Solicitor Joe Bailey, who prosecuted the defendants in their first trial a year ago, read the indictment charging him with attack.

Liebowitz entered a plea of not guilty, and attorneys went into a conference with Judge Horton regarding the method of procedure for the trials.

Attorney General Knight planned to try Patterson alone, and then call the other six defendants in a single trial. Liebowitz, after court had recessed, however, indicated that he might seek severances, which would call for seven separate trials.

Answer this plea by Haywood Patterson from the shadow of the death chair—BE AT UNION SQUARE TODAY AT 5 P. M.!

ST. LOUIS, April 13.—The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People of this city today announced that it would participate in the Scottsboro demonstration to be held here on Saturday noon before the City Hall. A delegation to be elected at the demonstration will present a resolution to the mayor and board of aldermen demanding that they go on record for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys.

NEW YORK.—The scores of preliminary protest meetings following the lynch verdict against Haywood Patterson, one of the Scottsboro boys indicate that the demonstration scheduled for Union Square today at 5 p.m. will undoubtedly be one of the most impressive ever held in this city.

Feeling against the frame-up verdict which dooms the 19-year-old Negro boy to the electric chair in the face of indisputable evidence of his innocence was heightened last night when reports arrived from Decatur, Ala., that Attorney-General Knight would bitterly oppose any attempt to postpone the trial of Charlie Weems, second of the Scottsboro defendants, whose trial has been set for the coming Monday.

Mrs. Patterson, Brodsky Speakers.

The Union Square demonstration was originally scheduled to be held Wednesday, but was postponed until today on account of the rain and snow storm which swept over the city during the entire day. In spite of the weather, groups of Negro and white workers huddled around the north side of the square and listened to brief speeches.

Speakers at the demonstration today will include Mrs. Janie Patterson, mother of the boy who is to be sentenced to the electric chair by Judge Horton on Monday; Joseph R. Brodsky, chief counsel of the International Labor Defense, who has just returned from Decatur; William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense; Dr. Joshua R. Kunitz, secretary of the National Committee for the Defense of Political Prisoners, who attended the Decatur trial; Clarence Hathaway, organizer of District 2, Communist Party, and Roger Baldwin, secretary of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The I. L. D. yesterday announced that it is pushing its fight to postpone the trial of Charlie Weems, which has ben set for Monday, and also for the other defendants in order to enable it to gather up its witnesses—many of whom have been terrorized—in various parts of the state. The I. L. D. demands that the trials be delayed until the appeal on the Patterson verdict has been heard by the Alabama Supreme Court.

I.L.D. Needs Funds

Moreover, the expenses incident to the Patterson trial have completely exhausted the resources of the I.L.D., and is practically without funds to gather and feed witnesses, pay technical expenses, etc., for the forthcoming trials.

Workers are urged to wire protests demanding postponement of the trials until after the appeals are heard, also a change of venue to Birmingham, Ala., when the trials come up. Wire to Gov. B. M. Miller, Montgomery, Ala. and Judge Horton, Decatur, Ala.

LIEBOWITZ WRITES TO I.L.D.

"May I take advantage of this occasion to express my sincerest admiration for the splendid struggle you are making on behalf of these downtrodden and victimized boys," Samuel S. Liebowitz, chief trial attorney in the Scottsboro trials, writes in a letter from the courthouse at Decatur, Ala., to William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, in a letter made public today.

The occasion for the letter was forwarding to the International Labor Defense of a check for $25 sent to him from New York as a contribution toward the fight being waged to free the nine innocent Scottsboro Negro boys.

"This contribution came unsolicited and is but one of many proofs that have come to me that a fight for justice enlists the heartfelt sympathies and support of unprejudiced men and women all over the land.

"May I not take advantage of this occasion to express my sincerest admiration for the splendid struggle you are making on behalf of these downtrodden and victimized boys.

"I have given of my best in this trial without any monetary renumeration whatsoever"—but I have received a far greater and dearer reward—namely, the thanks and appreciation of many men and women previously unknown to me, who have assured me that my course was just.

"The realization that in our land there are still countless numbers ready to support a struggle for justice and right is sufficient recompense for my effort.

"Very truly yours,
SAMUEL S. LIEBOWITZ."

NEGRO FOUND GUILTY IN SCOTTSBORO CASE; JURY OUT 18 HOURS

PROMPT APPEAL PLANNED

Prisoners Are Moved to Birmingham as Their Counsel Seek Postponement of Other Trials.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9.—Haywood Patterson, the 19-year-old Negro whose conviction at Scottsboro two years ago for an attack on two white girl hoboes was set aside by the United States Supreme Court was convicted again today by a Morgan County jury which condemned him to death.

Eight other Negroes, two of them juveniles, are awaiting retrials, the first of which is scheduled to open before Judge James E. Horton here a week from tomorrow.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, said today that he would seek a postponement of the other trials pending the outcome of a second appeal in Patterson's case.

The jury, chosen from a venire composed of white men after the defense lost its motion to quash it on the ground that Negroes were arbitrarily excluded from jury service, took only three ballots in the eighteen hours in which it deliberated on the evidence.

On the first ballot, taken a few minutes after the balance the evidence of Victoria Price against Ruby Bates, who had repudiated her former testimony, the jurors voted unanimously for a verdict of guilty. The second ballot was on the question of punishment, which was left to the discretion of the jury under the laws of Alabama. Eleven jurors voted to send Patterson to the electric chair, with one member holding out for life imprisonment. When the third ballot was taken the jurors voted unanimously for the death penalty.

Court Only Half Filled.

The verdict was returned at 10:58 this morning, when most of the churches of Decatur were holding services in observance of Palm Sunday. Less than half the seats in the court room where the defense had been battling for a week to save the Negro's life were taken when the jury reported. The only Negro present was the janitor of the court house, who stood silently turning his cap around in his hands as he waited.

At 10 o'clock word was sent from the jury room to Judge Horton in Athens, fifteen miles away, that the "twelve good men and true," who were sent to bed in disagreement at 11:35 last night, had reconciled their differences. A little later Patterson was marched into court from the jail under a heavy guard.

Captain Joseph Burleson, commanding a detail of thirty members of the National Guard assigned here for the trial, led the procession into the court room. Two militiamen followed with rifles ready. The guns of the two guards behind the Negro dug into his back. The militiamen sat down on either side of him behind the defense counsel table.

Wait Forty Minutes for Judge.

Three guardsmen took up posts outside the railed enclosure and three more were stationed at the one door leading from the court room. Downstairs other guardsmen cleared the corridors and lawns of loiterers, both white and black.

Patterson lolled in a chair, puffing a cigarette. His expressionless face was immobile in the forty minutes while he awaited Judge Horton's arrival, but sounds of laughter coming from the jury room seemed encouraging to the Negro.

G. W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, the only Southerner aligned with counsel for the defense, whispered a word of cheer to him. Mr. Leibowitz paced up and down the court room nervously. He was hallow-eyed for want of sleep.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General of Alabama, called into the prosecution when the State's jury system was challenged by the defense, sat at his table, the muscles of his face twitching nervously.

When Judge Horton arrived and took his place on the bench, Sheriff [illegible] Davis and [illegible] clerk of the Circ[illegible] [illegible] seats on [illegible] The tired-faced young [illegible] John H[illegible] opened note[illegible] a fresh page to take down the last words in a [illegible] that has become a cause célèbre.

Tense Scene in Courtroom.

"Let the jury come in," said Judge Horton.

The tension in the court room tautened. The door to the jury room was thrown open by a bailiff. Through it there filed the twelve men for whose decision America was waiting. They were a tired-looking group, but the faces of only a few bore the imprint of the momentous decision they had made. Some were smiling.

The jurors gathered before the bench, just as they had when they raised their hands as veniremen and swore that they would "a true verdict render" if they were chosen for the momentous task before them some ten days ago. Mr. Liebowitz peered into their eyes one by one as though seeking to [illegible] while they stood [illegible] courtroom.

Patterson continued setting down. Nobody told him to stand up. Hardly a soul looked at him. All eyes were focused upon Eugene D. Bailey Jr., the draftsman who was elected foreman of the jury. In his hand was a slip of paper. He folded and unfolded it nervously. The man beside him nudged him when Judge Norton asked:

"Have you agreed upon a verdict?"

Foreman Appeared Dazed.

Apparently startled by the court's question, Bailey replied:

"We have, your Honor."

"Well, let me have it then," said Judge Horton.

Bailey took two steps forward and handed the paper to the judge who, in charging the jury yesterday, urged them to banish bigotry and prejudice from their minds that they might render a verdict based solely on the evidence before them. Judge Horton took the paper and read the fateful words written upon it in large letters in pencil:

"We find the defendant guity as charged and fix the punishment at death in the electric chair."

Towering above the jurors, the six-foot jurist stood on the raised dais behind the bench and thanked the jurors for their "patience," and told tnem he believed they had rendered a verdict which they thought just and fair.

Patterson's face did not so much as twitch as he heard the words that spelled his doom unless the higher courts intervene in his behalf again. From the court room crowd there was not a murmur. There were not many among them who were surprised, despite the elaborate, painstaking defense prepared by the International Labor Defense and presented by Mr. Leibowitz, who has defended eighty-five clients in capital cases without losing one to the electric chair.

At first Judge Horton said he would go through the formality of pronouncing sentence tomorrow morning. When Mr. Leibowitz and Mr. Chamlee declared they could not be present to represent their client at that time, Attorney General Knight consented to a week's delay.

Leibowitz Greets Judge.

After the last formal words had been spoken, Mr. Leibowitz walked up to the bench and grasped Judge Horton's hand. The judge shook it warmly. Mr. Leibowitz, who had undertaken the defense of the penniless Negro without a fee, was trembling. He said:

"I am taking back to New York with me a picture of one of the finest jurists I have ever met. But I am sorry I cannot say as much for a jury which has decided this case against the weight of evidence."

"Now you are speaking under the pressure of feeling," said Judge Horton.

"No, I am not, your Honor," said Mr. Leibowitz. "I believe wholeheartedly that if the verdict in this case had been left to your Honor this Negro would have been acquitted."

"That is not my province; I cannot express an opinion on that," replied the judge, relinquishing the New York lawyer's hand.

"I know that, your Honor, but I could not help saying what I did," said Mr. Leibowitz.

Leibowitz Denounces Jury.

Afterward Mr. Leibowitz issued a statement in which he said:

"This is a black page in the history of American civilization. An occasion where once more twelve citizens of Alabama, swayed by bigotry and prejudice and hearkening to the yelps of a bombastic Ku Klux who hurled mud at the Jew and the people of the great State of New York to sympathetic ears in the courtroom crowded with lantern-jawed morons and lynchers, brought in a verdict that is a mockery of justice.

"The hatred for New York and other metropolitan centres of commerce and modern enlightenment was even more vicious than the hatred manifested by this outrageous verdict against the Negro.

"You must know this God-forsaken place, some of the creatures that live here, the mobs that burn crosses at night, masked like cowards so that decent people cannot see the sordidness and venom in their hideous countenances in order to understand that the verdict here was just a piece of judicial lynching.

Pays Tribute to Judge.

"This does not apply in any respect to the wonderful jurist who presided over this trial, but he was like a straw caught in the whirlpool of bigotry and intolerance that surged through the courtroom, and his calm and judicious warnings to the twelve in the jury box could not have fallen upon understanding or willing ears.

"As far as the defense is concerned, we shall fight with every drop of blood in our veins all the harder now because we feel that this outrageous challenge to humanity itself must be met in no uncertain terms if civilization and the humanity that the immortal Lincoln lived and died for is not to degenerate into Hitlerism on the one hand, and anarchy on the other.

"Will we appeal this case? Most assuredly; up to the highest court of our land that once before hurled this mess back into the laps of the bigots, and we'll continue to fight until hell freezes over, not only to save nine innocent men, but to uphold the good name of our country to the rest of the world on the plane where every decent citizen feels it rightfully belongs."

After the verdict was returned, Mr. Knight and his assistant, Thomas F. Lawson, left by motor for the State capital at Montgomery. Mr. Leibowitz caught the 2:30 train for New York and Mr. Chamlee drove to his home in Chattanooga. Joseph Brodsky, the International Labor Defense lawyer, left last night while the jury was out, to prepare for the trial of Charlie Weems, scheduled to open a week from tomorrow.

Patterson was removed to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, where the other eight defendants were taken last night.

Case Started Two Years Ago.

The case, which has stirred up feeling not only in the South but in other parts of this country and in Europe as well, originated two years ago on a freight train running between Chattanooga and Memphis, Tenn. On that train were the two women, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates; a dozen Negroes and seven white hoboes. Between Chattanooga and Stevenson, Ala., the white men and Negroes became involved in a fight, which ended when the whites were forced off the train about two and a half miles past Stevenson.

The white hoboes flashed word of their battle with the Negroes to Paint Rock, where an armed posse of between sixty and seventy-five countrymen stopped the train, arrested nine of the Negroes and took the two women into custody as material witnesses. At Paint Rock the girls charged that they had been criminally assaulted by the Negroes.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, at Scottsboro, convened a special session of the grand jury, and while the town seethed with excitement and open threats of lynching, the Negroes were indicted jointly and severally. Within two weeks they were tried, and all but one, Roy Wright, then 13 years old, were convicted. The jury which sat in judgment on the juvenile Wright disagreed. The trials of the Negroes consumed three days, less than was taken for Patterson's trial here.

Labor Defense Enters Case.

The International Labor Defense, a Communist adjunct, interested itself in the case and prepared an appeal against the conviction of death sentences of the Negroes, although, as far as has been ascertained, none of the prisoners had any connection at that time with the Communist party, or any other radical organization.

The Supreme Court of Alabama affirmed the original verdicts and upheld the sentences recommended by Jackson County juries with one exception. Eugene Williams, one of the Negroes sentenced to death, was held to be a juvenile and a new trial was ordered for him. Attorney General Knight's father wrote the prevailing opinion.

The cases of the other seven Negroes were appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which on Nov. 7 reversed the criminal verdicts, set aside the death sentences imposed at Scottsboro and ordered new trials on the ground that the first were unfair, because the accused Negroes were not adequately represented by counsel.

The cases were set for trial at Scottsboro on March 6, but Judge Hawkins granted a defense motion for a change of venue on the ground that an impartial consideration of the evidence was impossible at Scottsboro. The defense wanted to try the case in Birmingham, but it bowed to the will of the court.

Will Ask for Trial in Birmingham.

Now it is planned to file a new motion for a change of venue before the next trial opens, because of the speech of Wade Wright, County Solicitor, who in arguing the State's case to the jury, urged them to demonstrate that "Jew money from New York can't buy and sell Alabama justice."

Patterson was the first of the nine defendants to be tried a second time for his life. Before his trial actually opened, the defense attorneys waged two unsuccessful battles against the State's selective jury system.

Witnesses were called to prove the contention that qualified Negroes were barred from jury service in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, through maladministration of a statute the constitutionality of which has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court.

These onslaughts, unsuccessful though they were, helped to crystallize sentiment against the defense, already handicapped by the fact that its clients were Negroes accused of a heinous crime against white women. It was known that the Communists were organizing Negroes and using the Scottsboro case for that purpose.

The word went abroad that the case was being used as a wedge toward effecting social equality for the Negro in the South, and no amount of argument from Mr. Leibowitz, who disclaimed the rôle of reformer and crusader, could counteract that belief.

Girl Repudiated First Testimony.

At the trial, Ruby Bates, who two years ago testified that she had been attacked on the freight train as well as Victoria Price, repudiated her former testimony and charged the Price woman with "framing" the Negroes.

Lester Carter, one of the white hoboes thrown off the train, rounded up by deputy sheriffs and held in the Scottsboro jail until the first trials of the Negroes were concluded, corroborated her.

The white hoboes never were called to testify by the State.

The jury, however, chose to believe the Price woman who stuck to the main part of her story, although uncontradicted evidence was presented to show that she did not tell the truth about her activities in Chattanooga.

Members of the jury admitted that they did not consider the testimony of the Bates girl, who was produced by the defense dramatically after a month's absence from her home in Huntsville. They refused to discuss that phase of the case.

Much was made by the State of the fact that Carter and the Bates girl appeared in court in comparatively stylish raiment purchased in New York City.

Scottsboro Defense Launches Attack On State Jury System

Horton Dismisses Motion To Quash Indictments Against Negroes

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Writer.

DECATUR, ALA., March 28—(AP)—A new attack on Alabama's jury system was in the offing tonight as defense counsel gathered evidence on which to base proof that no negroes were included in the jury [illegible] from which the venire for the trial of Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga negro, was drawn.

The trial of Patterson was set for Thursday, after Judge James E. Horton surprised the attorneys by dismissing the first motion to quash the indictments against the nine negroes, charged with attacking two white girls.

The motion to quash was based on an allegation that the defendants were deprived of their constitutional rights because the Grand Jury which indicted them contained no negroes.

Hardly had this motion been disposed of before Samuel C. Liebowitz, chief of defense counsel, raised the question again, refusing to enter a plea for Patterson, whom Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., has elected to try first.

"We refuse to enter a plea," Liebowitz said, and moved to quash the venire because the rolls from which the box was killed "unjustifiably, and in violation of the fourteenth amendment, contained no negroes solely because of their race."

Motion Overruled

Judge Horton immediately overruled the motion to quash the venire, but told the defense counsel it would not prejudice the motion when offered again.

Liebowitz and his associates, Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, and George W. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, immediately began assembling their evidence that negroes were excluded from the jury box solely because of their race.

Arraignment of the other six negroes, Andy Wright, 19, and Clarence Norris, 22, both of Chattanooga; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga.; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 19, both of Atlanta, and Willie Roberson, 19, of Columbus, Ga., was deferred until after the Patterson trial.

Severances were granted for Roy Wright and Eugene Williams, both of whom the defense has contended are juveniles, with the court to determine their ages later.

Denial of the motion to quash the indictment came just as court reconvened after the noon recess and with indications that testimony would continue for a day or two more.

Jury Rolls Subpoenaed

Judge Horton, just before the noon recess, had granted the defense request for a subpoena for the jury rolls of Jackson County for the year 1931.

As Atty. Gen. Knight arose to call the State's first witness, Judge Horton said: "Mr. Attorney General, the court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question. The motion is overruled."

Liebowitz entered an exception and the way was paved for arraignment of Patterson, who, dressed in blue denims, stood quietly beside his attorneys as Solicitor Joe Bailey, who prosecuted the defendants in their first trial a year ago, read the indictment charging him with an attack on Mrs. Victoria Price.

Liebowitz entered a plea of not guilty and attorneys went into a conference with Judge Horton regarding the method of procedure for the trials.

Atty. Gen. Knight planned to try Patterson alone and then call the other six defendants in a single trial. Liebowitz, after court had recessed however, indicated that he might seek severances, which would call for seven separate trials.

Story Of Case Sold

The quiet procedure of questioning with regarding methods of selecting jurymen in Jackson County was interrupted during the morning as Liebowitz called attention of Judge Horton three boys selling booklets entitled "The Inside Story of the Infamous Scottsboro Trials."

The three boys, Leon Smith, 15; Allston Hargrove, 14, and Sam White, 19, all of Decatur, were brought before Judge Horton and told him they did not know they were doing wrong. The judge dismissed them with the admonition that no more of the booklets should be sold and confiscated those they had.

A bench warrant was issued for Kyle Frazier, of Decatur, by Judge Horton. The youths named Frazier as the man who hired them to sell the booklets. Frazier appeared voluntarily during the luncheon recess and apologized to Judge Horton, who dismissed him.

Ruby Bates, one of the alleged victims of the attack, still was missing tonight, and State officials said they had no inkling as to where she might be found, although they still were searching for her.

The girl disappeared from her home in Huntsville on the night of Feb. 27.

Attorney For Seven Says Clients Were Deprived Of Rights By Race Ban

DECATUR, ALA., March 27.—(AP)—A tedious battle to set aside the indictments charging seven negroes in the Scottsboro case with attacking two white girls was launched by the defense today in Morgan Circuit Court.

The action, forerunner of the scheduled second trial ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court for the negroes, was based on the contention that the defendants had been deprived of their rights through exclusion of negroes from the Grand Jury that indicted them.

Samuel S. Liebowitz, of New York, chief of defense counsel, and Atty. Gen. Thomas E. Knight, Jr., directing the prosecution, clashed frequently as the former sought to prove through witnesses that negroes were "habitually excluded" from juries in Jackson County.

While the defendants drowsed against the wall behind their counsel table, occasionally showing interest in the proceedings, the attorneys who seek their freedom read into the records an amended petition to quash the indictments.

Delay in bringing the negroes from the Jefferson County Jail in Birmingham to Decatur, delayed proceedings until the afternoon session and attorneys sparred cautiously through their statements setting up the premise for testimony.

Liebowitz is setting forth his case contending that the exclusion of negroes from the Grand Jury had denied the defendants of their constitutional rights declared "there has never been a negro serve on an Alabama jury."

Atty. Gen. Knight, in a brief statement, told the court he denied the allegations and was at issue with the defense "and we will show the court no such administration of the laws to show that negroes are systematically excluded from the juries."

J. S. Benson, editor of The Progressive-Age at Scottsboro, the first witness under direct examination by Liebowitz, said to his knowledge no negro had ever served on a jury in Jackson County.

Editor On Stand 45 Minutes

The editor who was on the stand under direct and cross-examination for approximately 45 minutes, with the examination punctured by objections and exceptions from both sides.

Liebowitz asked Benson if he knew of a negro ever serving on an Alabama jury.

"I don't know that one ever has," he replied, and Knight again took up the questioning that led to a prolonged examination by Liebowitz concerning various negroes in the country.

Knight read the qualification calling for good character, sound judgment, and qualifications as to age, property, and intelligence and Benson replied, "I know some good negroes, as negroes go, but I think that sound judgment would get them."

"Most all negroes will steal," Benson replied to a question by Liebowitz and a ripple of laughter swept the court, several of the defendants joining in the laugh.

Asked what he meant by negroes lacking "sound judgment," Benson caused another laugh by saying they were "not trained, and I might say the same applies to women."

Benson and Jeff Moody, president of the Jackson County Jury Board, were asked at length concerning the qualifications of various negroes, while the spectators for the first time during the day showed signs of becoming restless.

Liebowitz sought to establish, through Hunt Stuart, former president of the Jackson County Jury Board, which made up the list from which the Grand Jury indicting the defendants was drawn, that negroes were excluded from the lists because of their race.

Stuart replied that he had no way of knowing the race of every man on the lists and he could not say that there were no negroes' names in the jury box.

The witness described how the lists were made up on recommendations of leaders in various precincts, but that the commissioners had no way of determining race or creed. "A man's race, religion, fraternal or political affiliations were never discussed," he said, but admitted he could not recall a negro's serving on a jury in the county.

The defense established through an affidavit from Mrs. Marie Owen, director of the State Department of Archives and History, that the 1930 census showed 36,881 persons in Jackson County, of whom 2,689 were negroes, and later got into the record that, of this number, 666 met the age qualifications for jury duty.

Kelly Morgan, clerk of the 1931 Jury Board, said he could not recall whether there were names of negroes on the list from which the Grand Jury was drawn. He, like Stuart, said race and creed of prospective jurymen were not discussed in making up the lists. Morgan could not say whether the name of a negro appeared on the list, but Liebowitz indicated he probably would call for the jury list.

John Sanford, a negro plasterer, of Scottsboro, recited various qualifications he held as a probable juror, but said he had never been called for duty, nor had any other member of his race. Under Liebowitz's questioning, he named a number of negroes whom he believed qualified to serve as jurors, but said none to his knowledge had ever been called for service.

Sanford, who was on the stand when court recessed for the day, faces cross examination on the opening of court tomorrow at 8:30 a.m.

The courtroom was well emptied before the recess for the day was taken but outside many lingered to see the blue denim-clad negroes marched to the jail under escort of National Guardsmen.

The rumor persisted that Ruby Bates, one of the two principal witnesses, was in Decatur, but Sheriff A. W. Davis said he had no knowledge of her whereabouts and his deputies were unable to find her. The other victim of the alleged attack, Mrs. Victoria Price, was in the courthouse, ready when called again to give her story of events on the freight train rumbling through Sand Mountain of Jackson County on March 25, 1931.

The seven negro defendants are Haywood Patterson, 19; Charlie Weems, 20; Clarence Norris, 19; Ozie Powell, 18; Willie Roberson, 18; Andy Wright, 19; and Olem Montgomery, 17.

Woman Names Heywood Patterson as Assailant Despite Long Cross Examination

4-4-33

DECATUR, Ala., April 3 (AP)—Under a merciless cross examination, a young Alabama woman Monday clung to her story that six Negroes attacked her aboard a freight train two years ago, and that Heywood Patterson, one of nine indicted in the "Scottsboro attack case", was one of the six.

Macon, Ga.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York chief of counsel, supplied by the International Labor Defense to defend the Negroes, cross-examined the woman thoroughly as he led her through a maze of details covering a three-day period, culminating in the attack.

Calm through the recitation of sordid details of the attack on direct examination, she frequently showed flashes of temper as she heatedly registered negative answers to Leibowitz's questions.

While the long questioning went forward, Patterson, flanked by National Guardsmen, sat stolidly behind the defense counsel table.

Conductor Gives Testimony

Examination of the woman was interrupted to permit R. S. Turner, of Sheffield, conductor of the freight train on which the attacks were purported to have taken place, to testify. As Turner called off the location of various types of cars, Leibowitz assembled a miniature train on a table before the jury.

Frequent clashes between Leibowitz and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight interrupted the cross examination in which the woman's veracity and general reputation were subjects of questions.

Twice Judge James E. Horton warned the attorneys that objections must be directed to the court and not to each other personally.

On direct examination, the woman said she and her companion had gone to Chattanooga aboard a freight train to seek work but failing, had begun the return journey the following day on a freight train.

White Boys Thrown Off

4-4-33

They started on a tank car, but at Stevenson, Ala., moved to a gondola car, half filled with chert. As the train pulled away from the water tank at Stevenson, she said, seven white youths piled into the opposite end of the car from her and her companion.

Macon, Ga.

"Five or 10 minutes" out of Stevenson, she said, 12 Negroes came running over the top of box cars and jumped into the gondola.

"Heywood Patterson was one of them, and he carried a pistol which he fired over the top once or twice," she testified. In the fight that followed, she said six of the seven white boys were knocked from the car.

Knife Held at Throat

Orrville Gilley, she said, was the seventh youth and he remained, because he was afraid he would be killed if he jumped, and said, "I'll stay here and be killed with these girls."

In a clear voice but with eyes downcast, she told of the happenings after the youths were forced from the train.

"They stripped my overalls from me and one held a knife at my throat," she said under direct examination by Solicitor H. G. Bailey who prosecuted in the first trials two years ago. She then told of the attack.

Woman Describes Collapse

When the train halted at Paint Rock, where nine of the 12 Negroes were taken into custody, the woman said she climbed from the gondola, but collapsed unconscious as she reached the ground.

"I didn't know nothing more until I woke up in a grocery store at Paint Rock," she said.

Leibowitz opened his cross examination seeking to have her identify cars of the miniature train as similar to those making up the freight on which she averred she was attacked.

"Them are toys and don't look like the train we rode," she said.

The first show of temper came from the witness as Leibowitz persisted in his questions as to whether she bit, scratched or picked any of the Negroes, and raised her voice to reply, "I don't know. I won't say, I just fought."

A cross examination of minute details as to her struggles during the alleged attacks was begun by Leibowitz and once the witness, with eyes flashing and lips drawn tight shouted, "I answered you four times."

Frequently throughout the three-hour cross examination, the witness protested she was not educated and that Leibowitz was talking too fast. "I ain't got no education," she said.

Heywood Patterson Will Go on Trial For His Life Today in Decatur, Ala.

DECATUR, Ala., April 3 (AP)—Once within the shadow of the electric chair, Heywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanooga Negro, Sunday night faced trial with his life at stake as one of nine Negroes indicted in the "Scottsboro attack case."

With his eight companions, Patterson was in the Morgan county jail. Less than five months ago, the Negro with six of his companions was confined in Kilby prison at Montgomery under sentence of death which the United States Supreme court set aside. The high court also ordered a new trial.

Macon, Ga.

Unlike the previous trial, when he was defended by attorneys appointed by the court, the Negro Monday will be flanked by four attorneys, three employed by the International Labor Defense, which for nearly two years has been active in the case and a fourth who volunteered to defend them without cost.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York chief of counsel, who is directing the defense volunteered to defend the Negroes on invitation of the I. L. D., but without remuneration. The other attorneys associated with him are Joseph R. Brodsky, New York, George W. Chamlee of Chattanooga and T. C. Almon, of Decatur.

On the opposite side of the courtroom Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, Jr., represents the state, with T. E. Lawson, assistant attorney general, Solicitor H. G. Bailey, of the Ninth district who prosecuted the Negroes in Jackson county two years ago, and Solicitor Wade Wright of the Eighth district, assisting him.

As in the trials in Jackson county two years ago in which the Negroes were convicted and sentenced to death for an alleged attack on two white girls aboard a Southern railway freight train, Patterson will be the first to face trial.

Attorney General Knight, who asked a severance for Patterson, indicated the other six would be tried jointly. They are Andy Wright, 19, and Clarence Norris, 19, both of Chattanooga; Charlie Weems, 22, and Ozie Powell, 19, both of Atlanta; Olen Montgomery, 19, of Monroe, Ga., and Willie Roberson, 19, of Columbus, Ga.

The court has the question of the age of the other two Negroes, Roy Wright, 16, and Eugene Williams, 16, both of Chattanooga, to determine, before any disposition may be made of their cases.

Wright was given a mistrial two years ago, and Williams' death sentence was reversed because of the question of his age.

Under Alabama law, a juvenile must first be brought before a juvenile court which at its discretion can place him in the jurisdiction of a circuit court for trial. Both gave their ages as 14 when arrested at Paint Rock, Ala., two years ago, and charged with attacking the two girls.

The first trials of the Negroes were held in Scottsboro, from which trials have taken their name "Scottsboro case."

FIGHT FOR NEGROES OPENS IN ALABAMA

DECATUR CROWD ORDERLY

Defendants Brought From Birmingham for Preliminaries to New Trial

WITNESSES PUT ON STAND

Four White Men Testify They Do Not Recall a Negro Juror but Deny Systematic Exclusion.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, March 27.—An orderly court room crowd saw nine Negroes, accused of a crime which the South regards as more heinous than murder, brought into court here today to stand trial for their lives and listened apathetically as their lawyers tried to prove that Negroes are excluded from jury duty as effectively as though the law drew a color line.

Four white witnesses, fidgeting uncomfortably in their chairs facing Judge James E. Horton, who presided, admitted that for as long as they could remember they had not seen or heard of a Negro sitting upon a jury in Jackson County, where the defendants were indicted and convicted two years ago by juries composed entirely of white men.

One after another, however, they denied that the absence of members of the colored race was the result of a systematic scheme of exclusion, but one, J. S. Benson, editor of The Progressive Age, a Scottsboro weekly, said that it would be well-nigh impossible to convince him that any but a white man possessed that "sound judgment" and "training in law and justice" which he regarded as essential for a "fair and impartial verdict."

"They'll all steal," he said once when Mr. Leibowitz sought to find why he rejected the idea of a Negro serving upon a jury in his county.

Unable to Name a Negro Juror.

Jeff Moody, chairman of the Jackson County Jury Commission, conceded that he could not name a single Negro whose name appeared on the jury roll of his county, which, according to census figures presented by Mr. Leibowitz, contains 666 Negroes of voting age out of an adult male population of 8,801.

It was late in the afternoon just before the court, at 5:30 P. M. Central Time, declared a recess until tomorrow morning at 8:30 that Mr. Leibowitz called the first of some twenty Negro citizens of Jackson County, who, he contends, are qualified in every respect save the color of their skins to serve as triers of the facts in civil and criminal cases.

The witness was John Sanford, a 50-year-old father of a colored family of Scottsboro. He took his place in the witness chair diffidently with downcast eyes and answered questions regarding himself and colored men of his acquaintance in a voice that was barely audible. His cross-examination by Thomas E. Knight Jr., the Attorney General fighting to defend his State's jury system, was deferred until tomorrow after Sanford had testified that he regarded himself and certain others of his race as fitted to act as jurors.

Law on Juror Qualifications.

The text of the Alabama statute describing the qualifications of jurymen is as follows:

"The jury board shall place on the jury roll and in the jury box the names of all male citizens of its county who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men and are esteemed in its community for their integrity, good character and sound judgment; but no person must be selected who is under 21 or over 65 years of age or who is an habitual drunkard, or who, being afflicted with a permanent disease or physical weakness, is unfit to discharge the duties of a juror; or cannot read English or who has ever been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude. If a person cannot read English and has all the other qualifications prescribed herein and is a freeholder or householder, his name may be placed on the jury roll and in the jury box."

The proceedings were late in getting under way. Court convened at 9 A. M. and adjourned after an hour's session that was as silent as a Quaker meeting when it was discovered that the defendants were not present and had not even left the jail in Birmingham, where they were being held for safekeeping.

Thirty National Guardsmen patrolled the lawns around the court house and its rickety adjoining jail which has been condemned as unfit for white prisoners. A fair crowd of about 500 lined the sidewalk near the jail, sprawled on the green lawns under budding trees. The crowd consisted of about an equal number of blacks and white, and the blue denim overalls and cowhide boots of the countrymen was the most common costume. The younger men amused themselves by doing gymnastic stunts in a cow-pasture across from the court house.

Nothing Threatening Develops.

There was nothing threatening in the demeanor of the crowd and when it was learned that the prisoners would not arrive until about 2 o'clock it dispersed to gather again in somewhat greater force after lunch. When the nine prisoners arrived just in time for the opening of the afternoon session there was not a sign of a hostile demonstration. The patrol wagon in which they were transported from Birmingham to Decatur was followed and preceded by two carloads of deputy sheriffs armed with automatic shotguns.

The crowd which filled the 325 seats in the second-floor courtroom was silent as the nine Negroes, handcuffed together, were marched into the courtroom to be unshackled and seated behind the table at which sat Mr. Leibowitz, G. W. Chamlee, Chattanooga attorney, associated with their defense, and Joseph Brodsky, chief counsel to the International Labor defense, a Communist adjunct which led the fight resulting in the reversal by the United States Supreme Court of their original sentences of death.

All but one wore the blue denim overalls and jumpers which are the prison uniforms of Negro convicts. Roy Wright, the 15-year-old prisoner, who alone of the nine was not found guilty at the first trial in Scottsboro, wore civilian clothes.

Negroes Joke Among Selves.

The Negroes were chatting and joking among themselves as Judge Horton called the court to order. One section of seats was reserved for Negroes and every seat was taken. The white spectators in the other three sections slaked their thirst with soda water and most of the minority wearing coats shed them as the proceedings opened.

Judge Horton, a Lincolnesque figure, settled back in his chair behind his high bench as Mr. Leibowitz delivered a diplomatic little speech thanking the officials of the State for their "unfailing courtesy" and expressing faith in the fairness of the "God-fearing people of Decatur and Morgan County."

Hands were cupped behind weather-beaten ears as Mr. Leibowitz opened his fight to quash the indictment against the accused Negroes by citing nineteen allegations of discrimination on racial lines. Asking the court to permit him to produce proof of his statements, the New York criminal lawyer said:

"For twenty-five years past the officials of Jackson County have systematically refused and neglected to place the names of Negroes on the jury rolls although some 600 of them residing in that county are qualified to serve and are barred solely because they are members of the African race."

He annexed the affidavits of F. A. Mathews, the Rev. W. C. Crutcher and Robert James, all alleging systematic exclusion and listing qualified Negro citizens to his motion to quash.

Attorney General Denies Charges.

Attorney General Knight answered with a denial that the Alabama statute prescribing the qualifications of jurors made any specific discrimination against Negroes as such and declared he would defend its administration. As he finished his brief denial Mr. Leibowitz was on his feet. In a hushed courtroom he said:

"The State can't hide behind that law because it is not honestly administered. These Negroes as well as 40,000,000 others in the United States can only look to your Honor to uphold the Constitution of the United States and give it force, even as that great President of ours, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has sworn to do."

Mr. Knight continued:

"The statutes do not work an effective discrimination against Negroes and the courts have so held.

"The State will show further that there has been no such administration of the law as would justify the conclusion that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury service because of color."

Mr. Leibowitz asked whether Mr. Knight denied that no Negroes had served as jurors in Jackson County in more than two decades.

"Prove it," challenged the Attorney General.

This Mr. Leibowitz sought to do. The rotund sheriff, Bud Davis, called off the names of about thirty witnesses who had been subpoenaed by the opposing lawyers.

Mr. Benson was the first witness called by the defense. As editor of The Progressive Age, Mr. Benson said he had been in almost daily attendance at the court in Scottsboro during the greater part of the thirty years he has lived there. His examination began in this fashion:

"Have you ever known the name of a Negro to be placed upon the jury roll of Jackson County or have you ever heard of one being called upon to serve as a juror?" asked Mr. Leibowitz.

"Never heard of one—never noticed one," replied Mr. Benson, smiling apologetically toward the table at which sat Mr. Knight, his chief assistant, Thomas E. Lawson, and the solicitors respectively of Jackson and Morgan Counties, J. G. Bailey and Wade Wright.

"I know some good Negroes as far as Negroes go," said Mr. Benson. "But I think that sound judgment part of the statute—I think they can't get around that. But we have some good Negroes—as many as anywhere else."

Says Negroes Lack Judgment.

"Would you make a general statement," demanded Mr. Leibowitz, "that no Negro is qualified to sit on a jury, that they have not the sound judgment required by law?"

"I don't believe there are any Negroes in our county that I'd care to risk in any case which involved justice and law. Some have the education and they might have character, but they would not have all the qualifications."

Moody, the next witness, declared that he could not recall any Negro jurors, but he denied that he inquired into the color of a citizen in preparing the jury rolls.

John Hunt Stuart, a member of the commission which prepared the roll from which the grand jury which indicted the nine Negroes was chosen, was the next witness.

He could not recall whether the list contained the names of any Negroes, he said, but he confessed that he never had seen a Negro in the jury box at Scottsboro at any time.

"Did you exclude any Negro because of his color?" demanded Mr. Knight in cross-examination.

"Not that I know of," said the witness.

"It was a matter of selection rather than exclusion?" suggested the Attorney General.

"Yes, sir, selection," replied Stuart.

"Isn't it a fact that there are more white men disqualified to serve on juries in Jackson County than the total Negro population?" pursued Mr. Knight.

Mr. Leibowitz objected, but Judge Horton let the witness answer that such was the case.

Kelly Morgan, clerk of the Jackson County Jury Commission, testified that he knew of no instance of a Negro serving on a Jackson County jury, and then Mr. Leibowitz called the first of his long string of Negro witnesses.

Negro Is Questioned.

Sanford, the Negro, testified that he was a plasterer and his examination proceeded as follows:

"Were you in 1930-31 afflicted with any permanent disease?"

"No."

"Can you read?"

"Yes."

"Are you a citizen?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you ever convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude?"

"No, sir; I've never been convicted."

"In your daily way of life do you have dealings with your fellowmen?"

"Yes, sir"—with a smile.

"Do you discuss matters of public interest, problems of State for example?"

"Sometimes I do."

"Do you read the newspapers?"

"I read all kinds of newspapers."

"Do you understand them?"

"Yes, sir, as far as they go."

"Was your name ever on the jury roll?"

"No, sir."

"Were you ever examined on your qualifications to serve?"

"No, sir, I can't say I ever was."

Sanford said that he knew no reason why he was not qualified to serve except for his race, and Mr. Leibowitz read off a list of colored men, asking in each case whether the witness regarded them as fit to serve. Sanford did not endorse the qualifications of all, saying of one that "he has good character and he's honest, but I don't think he can read."

Another whose name was read, Sanford said, was not qualified because he "is no longer of sound mind."

R. B. Eleazer, educational director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, attending the trial as an observer, remarked at its close that the day's session merely had demonstrated what "intelligent persons know already." His organization, he said, had made a cursory investigation of the Scottsboro case and felt that there were "some big questions of fact never satisfactorily answered."

The commission would have come to the aid of the Negroes, he said, if the Communists had not insisted upon having a monopoly on defending them.

"I don't believe there are any Negroes in our county that I'd care to risk in any case which involved justice and law. Some have the education and they might have character, but they would not have all the qualifications."

Moody, the next witness, declared that he could not recall any Negro jurors, but he denied that he inquired into the color of a citizen in preparing the jury rolls.

John Hunt Stuart, a member of the commission which prepared the roll from which the grand jury which indicted the nine Negroes was chosen, was the next witness. He could not recall whether the list contained the names of any Negroes, he said, but he confessed that he never had seen a Negro in the jury box at Scottsboro at any time.

"Did you exclude any Negro because of his color?" demanded Mr. Knight in cross-examination.

"Not that I know of," said the witness.

"It was a matter of selection rather than exclusion?" suggested the Attorney General.

"Yes, sir, selection," replied Stuart.

"Isn't it a fact that there are more white men disqualified to serve on juries in Jackson County than the total Negro population?" pursued Mr. Knight.

Mr. Leibowitz objected, but Judge Horton let the witness answer that such was the case.

Kelly Morgan, clerk of the Jackson County Jury Commission, testified that he knew of no instance of a Negro serving on a Jackson County jury, and then Mr. Leibowitz called the first of his long string of Negro witnesses.

Negro Is Questioned.

Sanford, the Negro, testified that he was a plasterer and his examination proceeded as follows:

"Were you in 1930-31 afflicted with any permanent disease?"

"No."

"Can you read?"

"Yes."

"Are you a citizen?"

"Yes, sir."

"Were you ever convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude?"

"No, sir; I've never been convicted."

"In your daily way of life do you have dealings with your fellowmen?"

"Yes, sir"—with a smile.

"Do you discuss matters of public interest, problems of State for example?"

"Sometimes I do."

"Do you read the newspapers?"

"I read all kinds of newspapers."

"Do you understand them?"

"Yes, sir, as far as they go."

"Was your name ever on the jury roll?"

"No, sir."

"Were you ever examined on your qualifications to serve?"

"No, sir, I can't say I ever was."

Sanford said that he knew no reason why he was not qualified to serve except for his race, and Mr. Leibowitz read off a list of colored men, asking in each case whether the witness regarded them as fit to serve. Sanford did not endorse the qualifications of all, saying of one that "he has good character and he's honest, but I don't think he can read."

Another whose name was read, Sanford said, was not qualified because he "is no longer of sound mind."

R. B. Eleazer, educational director of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, attending the trial as an observer, remarked at its close that the day's session merely had demonstrated what "intelligent persons know already." His organization, he said, had made a cursory investigation of the Scottsboro case and felt that there were "some big questions of fact never satisfactorily answered."

The commission would have come to the aid of the Negroes, he said, if the Communists had not insisted upon having a monopoly on defending them.

What Is the Socialist Party Doing to Aid the Nine Scottsboro Boys?

Daily Worker

4-3-33

Don't You Think That Now Is the Time for All Real Friends of the Boys to Come to Their Aid? Loren Miller Asks of Frank Crosswaith

New York

N.Y.

The following letter, discussing the Scottsboro case and other fundamental issues, was sent to Frank Crosswaith, Negro, and a leader of the Socialist Party, by Loren Miller, young Negro journalist of Los Angeles, who was one of the group which went to the Soviet Union to take part in the production of the film, "The Black and the White."

The letter follows in part:

"It was this very Scottsboro case that set me thinking definitely on the role that a revolutionary, socialist party ought to play in this time of crisis. When the case first came to public notice I was reporting for the local newspaper—you remember the Eagle. I was, and am now, writing that same column for which you were once kind enough to write for me.

"I wanted to aid as best as I could in this Scottsboro fight. To begin with, I was with the N.A.A.C.P., at least to the extent of thinking that the organization could best fight this Scottsboro case. Being in the newspaper business, however, I couldn't help but know and appreciate the fact that it was the International Labor Defense that was responsible for the case being brought to public attention in an effective manner. I thought that the two organizations could and would reconcile their first differences and get together in a common defense for the boys. I wasn't very clear then, you see.

Knows Value of Mass Defense

"Naturally, I came into contact both with the local I.L.D. and the national office as the fight for the boys went on. One of the first things that drew me closer to the I.L.D was its campaign for mass pressure. You know, I was once a lawyer and I know that behind the scenes this public opinion exerts the determining role in the law.

"Nor can I see how the case can be disentangled from the socio-economic system that makes it possible. It is plain, as you once pointed out to me, that lynchings exist because of the relation of the Negro as an exploited class to the rich whites of the nation. It seems to me that if you take the case as an isolated piece of "injustice" you are just shutting your eyes to the plain implications of the whole business and are denying what you and I, as Negroes, know to be the plain facts: that the case in its broader aspects has happened a dozen times over to other Negroes.

"Therefore, I have come to understand, Negroes ought to use the case not only to fight the particular issue but to educate those other Negroes who cannot ordinarily see that our ills flow from capitalism. For it seems to me, if Negroes are ever to be educated as to the workings of capitalism with its mock trials, its lynchings, its poverty, its misery, its unemployment, they must be educated with particular instances in which you can show them the inter-relation of the particular "injustice" to the whole social order.

"When the I.L.D. undertook the task of arousing the whole world to this case and at the same time used it as the basis for an educational campaign they enlisted my support. That the campaign has led me on to see even more clearly than I ever saw before the whole rotten social structure and how it works is itself a case in point for the argument that I have just advanced.

Disgusting Tactics

"Now to the particular point. I have read a number of Socialist releases, particularly one by Parker, in which the I.L.D. has been viciously attacked for its part in the case. These releases insist that the Communists are using the boys as stalking horses and have no interest in saving them. Such tactics, frankly, disgust me. The whole purport of them seems to me to offer aid and comfort to our common enemy: the ruling class of the South. Let me ask you specifically some questions:

"What is the Socialist Party doing to aid the boys?

"Don't you agree with me that the only way to help the boys now is to join in on their side and that the only way to join them is to aid the I.L.D., their representative?

"Don't you think that those who still shout that the I.L.D. is trying to hang the boys are themselves aiding the bosses who will be quick to seize on this induced-feeling-of-futility (fanned to flame by supposed friends) and thus burn the boys while they smirk that that is what the Communists wanted?

"Don't you think that this is the time for all real friends of the boys to come to their aid?

The Real Test

"Why doesn't the Socialist Party do something beside stand aside with its holier than thou attitude and its gesture of support to the N.A.A.C.P., an organization long since out of the case?

"Finally, don't you think that the real test of a party for Negroes is its willingness and ability to fight for their common every day demands?

"There are a few other questions. One of them concerns Heywood Broun, one of my youthful enthusiasms. Nobody seems to deny that he once wrote that if he were a candidate for office he would not sanction any efforts to enforce the 14th and 15th amendments to the constitution. Yet he continues to regard himself and to be regarded as a leading Socialist. Is this the attitude of the party? If not, why doesn't the party take some action against this sort of thing?

"Then there are those repeated utterances from Southern Socialists who must be taken to voice the opinion of the party, to the effect that the Southern party must be some shade of lily white—what else do you and the other leaders make of the statement of the Texas lieutenant governor candidate who said that the South wouldn't tolerate voting for a Negro for 50 years. Or those other statements made in the New Leader as late as 1931 that the Southern movement must be conducted "Southern style", meaning that Negroes must be discriminated against, if the movement is to thrive.

Jim Crowism of Norman Thomas

"Norman Thomas spoke in a jim crow hall in Virginia. That much is admitted. I know or have heard that he attacked jim crow when he spoke there, but left-handed attacks while bowing to the institution attacked in words means nothing.

"Then again, when Oklahoma barred the party from its ballot, I read Thomas' appeal to the governor asking if he knew that a great portion of the state's voters were to be disfranchised. Didn't Norman Thomas know, or did he ignore, the fact that the state of Oklahoma disfranchises thousands of Negro citizens every year? Why doesn't the party fight this disfranchisement on a straight out basis rather than by such silly appeals to a state executive, Gov. Murray, whom it knows or ought to know is one of the most vicious enemies the Negro had.

"In closing let me say that these questions are not mine alone, they occur and recur whenever the younger Negro intellectuals, now shifting to the left almost en masse, talk about the Communists and the Socialists. I think that we are entitled to an answer. I am not asking you these things as a Communist Party member because I am not a member of the party. I am asking as one class conscious Negro to another. I hope that you will find time to answer me as frankly as I have queried you."

Sincerely yours,

—LOREN MILLER

Color Ban Plea Fails to Halt Trial Of 'Scottsboro' 7

By TOM CASSIDY.

Staff Correspondent of THE NEWS

Decatur, Ala., March 28.—An attempt by a Northern attorney in the Scottsboro assault case to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment—entitling colored people to representation on juries, among other things—was defeated today in this ancient citadel of the traditions of the old South.

Ignoring the impassioned pleas of Samuel S. Leibowitz, noted New York criminal lawyer, Circuit Judge James E. Horton late this afternoon refused to quash the indictments against the seven colored youths accused of attacking two white girl hoboes.

Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, had attempted to have the indictments set aside on the ground that colored persons were excluded from the Grand Jury which found the true bills.

Trial Starts Thursday.

The trial of the septet, whose death sentences were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, will start Thursday morning.

Leibowitz looked on from a counsel table in the vermillion-colored brick courthouse this afternoon as Judge Horton drew the names of hundreds of veniremen to try the case the second time.

"On Thursday morning," the New Yorker announced undaunted, "I will make a motion to quash the new jury venire because colored persons are excluded simply by reason of the pigmentation of their skins.

"The jurors almost undoubtedly will be one hundred per cent. white, and by reason of that fact, I will probably, in case of a conviction, be given an opportunity to take this case to the United States Supreme Court for the second time.

"We have got the Eighteenth Amendment pretty well taken care of now, and I'm out to see that the Fourteenth is either observed or taken from the statute books."

Seven Tell of Ban.

Seven more colored witnesses all citizens of Jackson County where the original trial was held testified today that they had been denied a place on the jury rolls although they had every legal qualification. Similar testimony had been given yesterday.

Earlier in the day Leibowitz had requested—and obtained—the citation of three local boys for contempt of court for selling pamphlets about the case. The booklets contained vitriolic propaganda against the colored race.

While the hearings droned on in the drowsy courthouse with its Southern jurisprudence and Jim Crow rules, members of the Alabama National Guard chatted and joked on the lawn outside. They will remain on guard until the case is disposed of.

Brand Girl's Stories False.

When the trial starts Thursday, special medical witnesses will deny as impossible the stories of Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the hoboettes who claim they were attacked in a railroad gondola car on the evening of March 25, 1931.

First to face the court will be Haywood Patterson, 19-year-old Chattanoogan, and then Attorney General Knight plans to call the other six defendants for a single trial. Leibowitz, however, indicated he may seek severances which would call for seven separate trials.

Victoria Price (upper left) and Ruby Bates (upper right) charge they boarded freight train by tank car on left, then moved up to open gondola car on right where they were attacked by twelve colored men March 25, 1931. The defense will allege it would have been impossible for the defendants to have been in car as charged.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

The second conviction of Haywood Patterson, one of the seven defendants in the Scottsboro, Ala., rape case, surprises many people. Death is not the penalty for rape in this part of the country. Where there is a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt in any criminal case, the law all over the country is that he is to be discharged.

Samuel S. Leibowitz

There was a reasonable doubt in this case. One of the two white women supposed to have been attacked in that railroad gondola by the seven colored men swore at the second trial that she had perjured herself at the first, because of intimidation, and that neither she nor the white woman with her had been attacked. A white man who was with the women backed up this testimony. There was a further reasonable doubt from the start, since these women were known not to have been of previously chaste character, and a woman who rides the freights with hoboes risks the charge of being something of a hobo herself.

For all that, and in spite of the eminent fairness of the presiding judge, the jury convicted the first of these defendants, and he faces the electric chair. How explain it?

We're afraid the trouble lies chiefly in the tactics used by the defense. Mr. Samuel Leibowitz has been most successful in criminal defenses in his home territory, New York. But when he went South to try this case, he began to inflame the anti-black and anti-North prejudices of the Southerners. He did this by impeaching their jury system and scolding them for their prejudices.

One result was the prosecuting attorney's remark about "showing them that Alabama justice cannot be bought with Jew money from New York." Another result was that the jury forgot about the alleged rapists being on trial and concluded that Alabama's courts and sectional feelings and local customs were on trial, with New York as the complaining witness. That should explain why the jury brought in a verdict in Alabama's favor, and incidentally against the real defendant in the case.

Various radicals early interested themselves in this case, and have been making martyr medicine out of it.

Radicalism is well known to make many Southerners see red. If the radicals are chiefly interested in making more martyr medicine out of this case, the thing for them to do is to go on using the same tactics in the rest of the trials. But if they sincerely want to see six apparently innocent men acquitted, their sensible course by all odds would seem to be to soft-pedal the radical and racial comments and retain some Alabama lawyer to conduct the defense. A local man could talk to the Alabama jurors as one of the home folks, not as a New Yorker come to tell them how to treat the colored people. And if the other six defendants could be acquitted, the Governor of Alabama would presumably commute or pardon Haywood Patterson.

We think, too, that the proposed march to Washington by New York colored people would be ill-advised. It might give the marchers satisfaction, but, like the radical martyr medicine, it would be hard on the defendants in the case.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT.

THE conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the Negro defendants in the second trials of the Scottsboro cases, will be appealed from. ~~It shou~~

Among other things prejudicial to a fair trial, the defense attorney was able to show that the jury law apparently was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel for this case. On more than one occasion during the trial the State attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent orderly and judicious consideration of evidence by the jury.

In repudiating her testimony at the earlier trial Ruby Bates last Thursday swore that the other girl in the case, Victoria Price, had framed the Negro youths. Lester Carter, a white friend of the two girls, confirmed the testimony of Ruby Bates.

To execute boys on the discredited evidence of a woman of Victoria Price's character, and following a trial in which racial discrimination seemed to operate in the jury panel, would be unthinkable.

Just as the Chief Justice of Alabama dissented from the Scottsboro conviction, and just as the United States Supreme Court threw out that conviction as a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution preventing States from depriving "any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law," so the Decatur verdict yesterday appears certain to be set aside by a higher court.

Leibowitz Threatened in Court; Calls for a Mistrial as Knight Applauds Witness

New York, N.Y.

(By Special Correspondent.)

DECATUR, Ala., April 4.—With surprising suddenness the prosecution rested its case today in the trial of Haywoo Patterson, one of the nine Scotsboro boys.

Patterson, one of the nine Scottsboro boys.

his "evidence," opinion among newspapermen was genera that he had made out an exceedingly feeble case against the 19-year-old Negro boy charged by thrice-married Victoria Price that he had attacked her on a freight train between Stevenson and Paint Rock.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, International Labor Defense attorney, at once moved for the dismissal of the indictment against Pattrson on the ground that the state had failed to make a prima facie case against the Negro boy. The motion was, of course, at once denied by Judge Horton.

Prosecutor Applauds In Court

A short time before the prosecution rested its case, Leibowitz rose to demand that Judge Horton declare a mistrial. The attorney's demand was based on the action of Knight in jumping up and clapping his hands with evident delight after a state witness replied to a question put to him by Leibowitz.

Arthur Woodall of Stevenson, Ala. merchant and deputy sheriff, had replied to a question concerning the removal of the Scottsboro boys from the train on which the alleged attack took place. Knight clapped his hands as Woodall stepped from the witness stand.

Leibowitz angrily asked for the mistrial declaration, but Knight apologized to the court and asked the jury to "disregard" his actions.

Woodall, incidentally, had admitted that all he found upon searching the boys at the time of their arrest was two knives and fifty cents, thus contradicting Victoria Price's story yesterday, of "many knives and guns."

In demanding a mistrial, the defense attorney said that such action is "unprecedented in a courtroom, especially by the chief prosecutor of the State." Continuing, Leibowitz said sarcastically: "Knight told me he is interestd in getting a 'fair trial' for the boys, but his action doesn't show it!"

A tense scene took place in the courtroom yesterday at the height of the cross-examination of Virginia Price by the defense lawyer, when a man arose, and muttered: "LET'S GET LEIBOWITZ."

He was searched for arms and escorted outside by several national guardsmen before the incident was generally noticed. Today a fight between two spectators over the issues of the case brought more guards in the courtroom.

Mrs. Patterson In Court

When the morning session opened, Mrs. Claude Patterson, mother of the Negro boy on trial, was seated beside her son near the defense table. The crowd began to gather around the courthouse as early as six o'clock in the morning, and the courtroom was jammed throughout the day. Negroes from Decatur and the vicinity continued to come to the court in large numbers.

W. H. Hill, depot agent of Paint Rock, was the first state witness today. He claimed that he saw the Negro boys and the white girls coming off the same car, and declared that he heard the girls complain they were raped.

Under cross-examination by Leibowitz it was brought out that Hill never before testified in previous trials, indicating clearly that he was carefully coached by the prosecution. Moreover, Hill's testimony exposed sharp contradictions with the testimony yesterday by Victoria Price and the other witnesses of the previous trials at Scottsboro. Recalled to the stand later, Hill said in answer to questioning by the defense, that "two boys came off the train at Paint Rock."

Liars Contradict Each Other

Rom Rousseu, the second witness called today by the state, declared that he saw the Negro boys running along the top of freight cars at Paint Rock and getting off at different cars, thus flatly contradicting Hill's testimony and supporting the defense claim that the boys were on different cars and did not know what was happening. Significant also is the fact that Rousseau described the girls as wearing coats, while Hill declared they wore only overalls.

Despite Victoria Price's testimony that she fell off the freight car at Paint Rock, becoming unconscious, Hill said on the witness stand that he saw her standing by the cars.

Lee Adams, a farmer of Stevenson, Ala., followed Rousseau on the stand. He confined himself to stating that he saw the Negro boys and two white boys thrown off the freight cars near Stevenson. As testimony of the state witness proceeded it became evident that the prosecution was busying itself entirely with refurbishing the already discredited testimony of Victoria Price.

Still Another Version

The next prosecution witness, Dobbins, of Stevenson also, testified that he saw one of the Negro boys "keep a girl from jumping off a moving train, a short distance the other side of Stevenson."

Using Dobbins' testimony at the previous frame-up trial, defense attorney Leibowitz showed glaring contradictions with his present story.

At the previous trial, the attorney showed, Dobbins said he saw two girls—now one. At that time he testified that he was standing about 100 yards from the railroad track upon which the freight train was passing—this time it was 30 yards. At the previous trial, too, he saw a white boy on the train—now he saw none. Moreover, photos presented by the defense show that it is impossible to see what Dobbins claims to have seen from the place where he stood.

1. Immediate, unconditional release of these nine innocent Negro boys.
2. Disbanding of boss lynch gangs around Decatur.
3. Protection of Scottsboro boys tion of defense corps of white and Negro workers against boss lynch terror. and defense witnesses—for forma-
4. For Negroes on the jury—for white workers on the jury.
5. No reliance on lynch courts—for mass action!
6. A united struggle of white and Negro workers against capitalist-landlord terror and starvation.
7. Mass meetings and street demonstrations—Protest of Governor of Alabama.

Arrested For Collecting Defense Funds

Immediately following the morning adjournment William A. Christal, a Negro worker, authorized to collect funds for the Scottsboro defense by the Birmingham (Ala.) I.L.D., who was arrested Saturday night by Decatur police, was called before Judge Horton. Yielding the opportunity of making a sanctimonious speech reprimanding Christal, the judge ordered that the papers taken from him at the time of his arrest be returned to him.

Just before court adjourned yesterday, Dr. R. R. Bridges, a prosecution witness admitted without hesitation under cross-examination, that all he could say from the examination of Victoria Price and Ruby Bates an hour or so after they were taken off the train was that they "had intercourse sometime during the last two or three days—with how many I cannot tell."

Dr. Bridges, who was the last witness for the day, testified further that he found no lacerations—only a few bruises and scratches which might have been a few days old and which might have been gotten by bumps from climbing box cars, etc. A detailed medical discussion carried on between Bridges and Leibowitz showed that the doctor's testimony could easily bear out the defense contention that the two girls had previous relations with white men just before the arrest of the Scottsboro boys.

REFUSES TO QUASH SCOTTSBORO CASE

Court Rejects Defense Motion, Based on Exclusion of Negroes From Juries.

JURY RECORDS BROUGHT IN

After Issuing Subpoena, Judge Rules Without Admitting Them as Evidence.

PAMPHLET SALE STOPPED

Complaint of Negroes' Counsel Brings Warning From Judge to Three Boys and Employer.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 28.—Circuit Judge James E. Horton denied a motion today to quash the indictments against nine Negroes, accused of attacking two white girls nears Scottsboro two years ago, and immediately the defense turned its guns upon the administration of the jury law in this county where the defendants are to be tried.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defendants, whose sentences of death were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, announced after the court's ruling that he would continue his fight against the alleged "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from Alabama juries.

The motion to quash the indictments was based on the contention that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which returned the twenty true bills against the defendants. Mr. Leibowitz called thirteen witnesses, nine of them Negroes, in support of his assertion of systematic exclusion.

The defense contends that the Alabama statute setting forth the qualifications of jurors is dishonestly administered to exclude Negroes from service on juries.

Potential Negro Jurors Testify.

Mr. Leibowitz called his witnesses to prove from the mouths of excluded potential jurors that they were qualified in every respect save color to serve on juries and that they never had been called upon in their county.

Thus far his evidence has been confined to Jackson County, where the indictments against the Negroes were returned. His next move, he stated, will be to show that Negroes are also excluded from the jury rolls of Morgan County. It is from the latter that the venire from which a jury will be chosen to decide the guilt or innocence of the defendants must be chosen.

The ruling of the court on the motion to quash the indictments came at the opening of the afternoon session as Attorney General Knight was about to call the State's first witness to refute the charges of racial exclusion by the defense.

In the morning Mr. Leibowitz had requested the court to issue subpoenaes duces tecum for the jury rolls and jury boxes of Jackson County at the time when the Negroes were indicted on charges made by Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the two white girls' who charged they were attacked by the Negroes on a freight train coming from Chattanooga.

Orders Jury Records Produced.

After a prolonged argument in which Mr. Knight declared that the defense was "aiming around Robin Hood's barn," Judge Horton granted the request for the issuance of the subpoenas but reserved decision on the admissibility of the evidence contained in the jury roll.

Mr. Liebowitz had threatened to call every person whose name appeared on the jury roll of Jackson County, "even if it breaks the State," before Judge Horton granted the request to issue the subpoenas.

Before that Mr. Liebowitz said he would withdraw his motion if Attorney General Knight would concede that only the names of white men were included on the roll.

Mr. Knight replied:

"The State will concede nothing, prove your case."

Mr. Leibowitz reserved the right to present further evidence that only white men were acceptable as jurors in Jackson County after the production of the jury roll.

A recess for luncheon was taken, and it was expected that the afternoon session would be marked by an attempt on the part of the State to support the contention that the color line plays no part in the selection of jury men.

But at the opening of the afternoon session Judge Horton brought the little trial of Alabama's jury system to a close without having heard the witnesses called by the State. The decision seemed to surprise both State and defense counsel.

"Mr. Attorney General," Judge Horton said, "the court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question. The motion is overruled."

Mr. Leibowitz, who is counting upon the question of exclusion of Negroes from jury duty as a loophole for an appeal if the Negroes are convicted a second time, smiled pleasantly and offered no argument against the exclusion of further testimony on an issue which, until then, had been one of fact with no problem of law involved.

Announces Separate Trials.

As soon as the motion to quash the indictments was out of the way, Judge Horton indicated his readiness to proceed with the trial.

Attorney General Knight, whose father, a justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, wrote the opinion upholding the original conviction which was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, declared his intention of trying "each defendant as he was tried before." This amounted to a request for a severance of the indictments, and it was not opposed by Mr. Leibowitz at the time.

The Attorney General, however, requested that the court take proof of the ages of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams to determine whether they should be tried as juveniles or adults subject to the penalty of the law.

Then the case of Heywood Patterson was called.

The big Negro, dressed in his blue denim prison uniform, arose from the row of seats in which he and his fellow-defendants had been sprawling all day. He stood looking blankly, first at the lawyers and then at the judge. He said nothing, but his eyes rolled back and forth. The eight other defendants, lolling in their chairs, showed their first interest in the proceedings.

Plea Entered With Proviso.

Mr. Leibowitz informed the court that he refused to enter a plea lest he prejudice a contemplated motion to quash the venire which Sheriff Bud Davis and the judge were drawing from names placed in a black tin box vigorously shaken before the court room crowd and the defendants. It was his intention, Mr. Leibowitz said, to file a motion to quash the venire on the same ground on which he had moved to quash the indictments.

PRESIDING OVER TRIAL OF ALABAMA NEGROES.

Judge James E. Horton.

Informed by the court and Attorney General Knight that no technical objection would be raised to a motion to quash the venire if his client entered a plea at that time, Mr. Leibowitz said:

"Then we plead not guilty to the charge."

No defendant other than Patterson was arraigned under agreement by counsel for both sides after he had entered his plea through his attorney.

The court declared a recess until 8:30 A. M. Thursday, when the introduction of the State's evidence will begin.

The one-day holiday was declared to permit the defense to gather evidence and obtain affidavits in support of the contention of Mr. Leibowitz that "the rolls from which the jury box was filled, unjustifiably and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment excluded Negroes solely because of their race."

Law Phrases Fluster Negroes.

All the witnesses called by Mr. Leibowitz were Negroes. They were John Sanford, C. S. Finley, Mark Taylor, Trap Mosely, Louie Cole, Ples Larkin, John Stapler, Wil. Watkins and L. C. Stapler. All declared they were qualified to serve as jurors.

Mr. Knight, in cross-examination, flustered them by asking their definitions of "moral turpitude" and "esteemed in the community in which they live," phrases from the jury law.

"I don't understand that kind of talking," said Watkins when Mr. Knight asked him what he understood by the word "esteemed."

In addressing his questions to the Negroes Attorney General Knight called them by their Christian names. Once Mr. Leibowitz interrupted and said:

"Call him Mr. Sanford, please."

"I'm not accustomed to that," retorted Mr. Knight.

Generally, Mr. Knight's attitude to the witnesses was friendly, as, for example, in the following colloquy with Stapler:

"How are you getting on?"

"All right, sir."

"Nobody imposes on you?"

"No, sir."

"Have you been mistreated in Jackson County?"

"No, sir."

.Leibowitz Objects to Booklet.

The morning session was enlivened by a renewal of the threat of the defense to seek a second change of venue on the ground of prejudice. Mr. Leibowitz came into court at the opening of the session and said:

"I want to call your honor's attention, if I may, to the sale at the door of this court house of certain booklets entitled "The Inside, Unpublished Story of the Infamous Scottsboro Trial."

Mr. Leibowitz then described to the court the contents of the booklet which set forth a version of the evidence in the case and read the last two sentences denouncing the Communist party and stating that when the booklet was read the defendants will all be dead.

Declaring that if it were not for the International Labor Defense "these nine boys would now be dead," Mr. Leibowitz said that unless such propagandizing stopped he would be forced to ask for a change of venue.

The defense attorney offered a copy of the booklet in evidence and Attorney General Knight arose, holding a sheaf of handbills circulated by Communist sympathizers, and said that in his opinion the use of propoganda was evenly divided.

Judge Horton accepted the pamphlet offered by Mr. Leibowitz, but rejected the handbills which Mr. Knight proffered.

Judge Stops Sale of Pamphlets.

Judge Horton ordered deputy sheriffs to bring in all the salesmen of the pamphlets that they could round up. Within five minutes the deputies were back with three very frightened young men, who stood quaking before the bench as the judge warned them to cease selling the pamphlets. Finally they were allowed to go, after Mr. Leibowitz said he did not wish to punish any one "trying to earn a dollar in these times."

The three youths brought into court described themselves as Leon Smith, 15; Allstone Hargrove, 14, and Sam White, 19. They said they had been employed by Kyle Frazier.

Judge Horton issued a bench warrant for Frazier for contempt of court, but when Frazier appeared and apologized, saying he had no intention of disseminating propaganda prejudicial to the defendants, the court dismissed him with a warning.

Judge Warns Scottsboro Jury of Bigotry; Verdict Awaited as Counsel Report Threat

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 8.—Warned by Judge James E. Horton to banish bigotry and prejudice from their minds, the members of a Morgan County jury tonight held in their hands the power of life and death over Haywood Patterson, a Negro accused of a crime which has stirred fires long throught dead.

New York

As the jury began its deliberations on the State's charge against Patterson, retried [illegible] nine Negroes who were alleged to have attacked Victoria Price and Ruby Bates on a freight train near Scottsboro two years ago, preparations were being made in the court room for the next of the new trials ordered by the United States Supreme Court.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, New York lawyer who is chief of counsel; G. W. Chamlee, his associate from Chattanooga, and Joseph Brodsky, and attorney for the International Labor Defense, joined in asking Judge Horton to postpone the next trial until a week from Monday in order that they may prepare a motion fo ra change of venue to Birmingham.

The fiery appeal to sectionalism and race hatred made by Circuit Solicitor Wade Wright in his summation yesterday, Mr. Brodsky and Mr. Leibowitz asserted, had incited the mob spirit so greatly that their lives would be endangered if they were forced to conduct the cases here further.

"Since that speech was made in this court room attacking me, my race and the city from which I come," said Mr. Brodsky, addressing Judge Horton in open court, "three men have threatened my life."

Mr. Leibowitz sought to delay the next trial until the regular June term to "allow public feeling aroused by the learned solicitor to cool off."

He said he had been informed "by a source I cannot doubt," that fiery crosses were burned in Scottsboro and Huntsville last night, and that "only the presence of the militia stopped a lynching mobe of 200 persons from invading Decatur last night."

Times

Mr. Wright arose and in a voice considerably subdued informed the court that he had meant no harm and that he was only delivering his customary closing argument to a jury. He could not believe he had done any harm, he said, "because I've been prosecuting cases here a long time and the people hereabouts know how I speak."

4-9-33

Judge Horton set April 17 for the opening of the trial of Charles Weems, who will be the next Negro tried. After Weems, a tall shuffling man, [illegible]ned and pleaded not guilty.

New York

Venire Chosen for Weems Trial.

A venire of 100 names was chosen from the same jury roll which the defense attacked unsuccessfully before Patterson's trial.

The court ruled that the decision denying a motion to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were excluded unfairly would stand, but the defense probably will be allowed to move to quash the venire and submit proof of systematic exclusion.

Separate trials for each of the six other defendants besides Patterson and Weems, including one juvenile, were demanded by the defense and were granted by Judge Horton. Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr., who refused a suggestion that all be tried together, sought to pair Weems and Clarence Norris by demanding a severance for both.

"The enormous expense of separate trials for each of these defendants," said Mr. Brodsky, "is being imposed upon the people of Morgan County upon the responsibility of the Attorney General of this State. It is not our doing. We offered to save time and money by trying all these defendants at once."

In arguing for a postponement of the next trial, Mr. Brodsky said that the defense was faced with much difficulty to continue right away, explaining that it would take some time to prepare the case and adding:

"Yes, and it takes time to collect the funds with which to wage this fight."

Jury Gets Case at 12:45 P. M.

Although the case went to the jurors at 12:45 P. M., it was 1:20 before they had finished lunch and begun their deliberations in the little antechamber which has been used during the trial as the defense witness room.

As they undertook the weighty task, the courtroom, crowded with eager spectators at each session of the trial, was empty, except for lawyers and newspaper men. Outside on the tree-shaded lawns a few Negroes and white men sprawled in the sun.

The only attempt at exerting outside pressure as the trial drew to a close was by Communist organizations and sympathizers, who deluged Judge Horton with telegrams and letters, demanding the acquittal of the Negroes and charging that they were "framed."

All through the morning, as Mr. Leibowitz and Attorney General Knight concluded their long arguments, messenger boys hustled in and out of the courtroom bearing telegrams for the judge and the Attorney General, many of them inspired by publication of Circuit Solicitor Wright's exhortation to the jurors to show that "Jew money from New York can't buy and sell justice in Alabama."

Judge Horton made reference to the telegrams in his charge to the jury, when he urged the twelve citizens of Morgan County to cast from their minds all prejudice, local pride and public opinion and decline the question of whether the man on trial for his life attacked Victoria Price.

Prosecutor Urges "Merits of Case."

In summing up the State's case, Attorney General Knight disclaimed sympathy with Mr. Wright's open appeal to racial prejudice and asked for a verdict of guilty with a death sentence on the evidence that has been laid before the jury in the six days since the trial opened.

"I do not want a verdict based on racial prejudice or a religious creed," he shouted. "I want a verdict on the merits of this case. On that evidence, gentlemen, there can be but one verdict and that verdict is death—death in the electric chair for raping Victoria Price."

At another point in his argument Mr. Knight referred to the almost forgotten Patterson as "that thing," told the jury:

"If you acquit this Negro, put a garland of roses around his neck, give him a supper and send him to New York City. There let Dr. Harry Fosdick dress him up in a high hat and morning coat, gray striped trousers and spats."

Ruby Bates testified, when she made an unexpected visit to the courtroom as a witness for the defense, that he new Spring hat and coat had been purchased for her by Dr. Fosdick, before whom Mr. Leibowitz declared she had "knelt down and confessed" that the whole case in which she figured two years ago as a complaining witness was "framed" by Victoria Price.

"She sold out for a gray coat and a gray hat," Mr. Knight declared of Ruby Bates, asserting that he did not believe the New York clergyman paid for the clothes the girl was wearing when she appeared in court after a mysterious absence of a month from her home in Huntsville.

Judge Comments on the Women.

In giving the case to the jury, Judge Horton told the twelve men not to be swayed by the natural sympathy for a woman who alleged she has been attacked and advised them that they might take into consideration the fact that both the Bates girl and the Price woman were "women of easy virtue," in considering their credibility.

Commenting first on Ruby Bates, who two years ago at Scottsboro swore that she had been attacked, but who testified in this trial that the whole story was a lie, Judge Horton said:

"She admitted on the witness stand in this trial that she had perjured herself in the other case. In considering the evidence, you may consider not only her lack of virtue as admitted by her here, but also that she contradicted her previous testimony as perjured.

"Regarding Victoria Price, there has been evidence here that she also was a woman of easy virtue. There has been evidence tending to show that she gave false testimony here about her movements and activities in Chattanooga. That evidence has not, except by her, been denied.

"If in your minds the conviction of this defendant depends on the testimony of Victoria Price and you are convinced she has not sworn truly about any material point, you could not convict this defendant."

As Judge Horton delivered his charge in a quiet, solemn voice, his face was grave and tired-looking. His task of presiding over the trial and the preceding week-long legal battle against the jury system of Alabama, has not been an easy one. Some of his rulings have not been popular with the home folk.

The change of venue from Scottsboro in Jackson County to this Northern Alabama city, he said, was not at his request nor the wish of Decatur. An unpleasant duty, he said, had been thrust upon the community and he urged the jurors to "face it like men."

"Take the evidence," he said, "sift it out and find the truths and untruths and render your verdict. It will not be easy to keep your minds solely on the evidence. Much prejudice has crept into it. It has come not only from far away, but from here at home as well.

"I have done what I thought to be right as the judge of this court, no matter what the personal cost to me might be."

Judge Horton's Charge to Jury.

In charging the jury Judge Horton said in part:

"There have been some statements in regard to whether or not this is any race matter or whether or not some other person thinks this way or that, or whether or not public opinion is one way or the other.

"Gentlemen, that hasn't anything to do with it—what outside opinion or public opinion is, or whether or not the ideas of somebody else may be one way or the other. No, gentlemen, we are not to consider that at any time.

"I know the juries of this county. I have been with them—have been before them. They are sensible, reasonable, intelligent men. They do not go off on side issues, nor do they let petty prejudices enter into the trial of the case.

"You are not trying whether or not the defendant is white or black—you are not trying that question; you are trying whether or not this defendant forcibly ravished a woman.

"You are not trying lawyers, you are not trying State lines; but you are here at home as jurors, a jury of your citizens under oath sitting in the jury box taking the evidence and considering it, leaving out any outside influences.

"Things may vex you. I might say that the court may have been vexed about a great many things. It may have been evident to you that a great many telegrams came in here to me since I have been here. But, gentlemen, they do not affect me whatever or the great principle which the court desires to see done, and the great thing the jury desires to see done, and that is to see justice done in this case.

Appeals to Best in South.

"Of course, gentlemen, we all love our land; that is a natural sentiment of all people. Not that we are narrow in it. Why, the man who lives in the mountains of Switzerland or on the coast of the Adriatic loves his land—the savage loves his land. It is a natural feeling and it is a fine thing for a man to do love his native country."

"I might say that a great many of us, and I together with you, a great many of our forebears came here with the earliest settlers, and I happen to be descended from one who was the first that came down to this country. On both sides as far back as I know, my people have always been a Southern people, and I have no desire to live anywhere else. I am getting old, and it is my home, my native land, and I want to see righteousness done and justice done, and we are going to uphold that name.

"A great many of our parents no doubt were in the War between the States, that is the name that has been given to that war now. My father and my 61-year-old grandfather, every relative over fifteen, were in the Southern Army. I am not saying that to be boasting or anything that way, but to show that I as well as you have no desire in any way to do anything that would not reflect credit on the South, and whatever I say, and whatever I do, remember, it is for justice and right and that they may prevail.

"We are a white race and a Negro race here together—we are here to live together—our interests are together. The world at this time and in many lands is showing intolerance and showing hate. It seems sometimes that love has almost deserted the human bosom. It seems that hate has taken its place. It is only for a time, gentlemen, because the great things in life, no matter what they are, it is the God's great principles, matters of eternal right, that alone live. Wrong dies and truth forever lasts, and we should have faith in that."

Leibowitz's Summation Completed.

The court session opened a little after 8:30 A. M., with Mr. Leibowitz continuing in a husky voice the long summation he began yesterday afternoon.

Several times as he pointed to what he said were discrepancies in the State's case he stopped for a drink of water and at times he seemed to be near exhaustion. But he kept on until mid-morning, despite frequent attempts of the court to speed him up.

The first trials at Scottsboro, he said, were "judicial lynchings, an insult to God Himself and a mockery of justice."

He denied that he or G. W. Chamlee, the Chattanooga lawyer associated with him in the case, were Communists or sympathizers of the International Labor Defense, a Communist affiliate, which appealed the first conviction.

He asked the jurors if they could reconcile the detention or Orville Gilley, one of the several white hoboes with whom the Negroes had a fight aboard the freight train, to witness the alleged crime with common sense; he demanded to know why Gilley was not called as a witness at Scottsboro. If Ruby Bates had been subjected to the sort of treatment described by the State, he said, she "would be here howling for this Negro's blood, not pleading for his skn."

The New York lawyer closed his argument by reciting the Lord's prayer and a plea to the jurors to acquit or condemn his client to death, saying he wanted no compromise verdict.

Knight Has Rebuttal.

Mr. Knight went over the evidence, trying to mend the holes in the State's case which Mr. Leibowitz had sought to emphasize. Mr. Leibowitz had criticized him, he said, for not bringing a Negro into court to corroborate a white man whose testimony had been shaken in cross-examination.

"It was not necessary, to my way of thinking," said Mr. Knight, whose father wrote the prevailing opinion of the majority of the Alabama Supreme Court upholding the original convictions. A reference to his father in Mr. Knight's summation caused Mr. Leibowitz to ask the court to note upon the record that "the Attorney General now is criticizing the United States Supreme Court and by inference the Chief Justice of this State, who disagreed with the majority."

Resuming his address, Mr. Knight, after denying any critical intent, declared:

"I'm no murderer. I don't have to have people come down here and tell me the right thing to do. I'd nolle prosse the indictments if I thought these Negroes were innocent. This is no framed prosecution. It is a framed defense."

The courtroom crowd began to thin out after the lawyers had finished. Nearly every one left after

RACES

At Decatur

All persons born or naturalized in the United States . . . are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.—Article XIV, U. S. Constitution.

Two years and two weeks ago two white girls, one Ruby Bates and a Mrs. Victoria Price, accused nine young Negroes of raping them as they hoboed ~~their~~ way in a freight gondola through Jackson County, Ala. Eight of the Negroes were condemned to death at Scottsboro, county seat, ten days later. The ninth, aged 13, was turned over to a juvenile court, as was subsequently one of the condemned, aged 14. Last November the U. S. Supreme Court overruled (7–to–2) the Alabama Supreme Court which had denied the defendants' plea for retrial. A new trial, with venue changed not to urban Birmingham as the defense requested, but "for reasons of economy" to Decatur in neighboring, rural Morgan County, began last week.

First defendant called was Haywood Patterson. Black, bewildered, a horseshoe in his pocket, he sprawled torpidly on a bench behind his counsel. But he was not tried. On trial were the 14th Amendment to the Constitution and Alabama's "selective jury system."

Counsel. Leader of the defense counsel at the Decatur trial is shrewd, bald-browed Samuel S. Leibowitz of Manhattan. His fee is being paid by the International Labor Defense, Communist organization; but no Red is Counsel Leibowitz. One of his chief concerns last week was to forestall any provocative demonstration by his employers, who filtered into town in increasing numbers.

Accused. It was Lawyer Chamlee who supplied Defendant Patterson with the horseshoe, at his request. The othe defendants—Clarence Norris, Charli Weems, Olin Montgomery, And Wright, Willie Robertson, Ozie Powell—thought rabbits' feet would "make thei sleep easier." The two minors, R Wright (Andy's brother) and Eugene Wi liams, held in prison for two years as material witnesses, got rabbits' feet, too.

Last week two cars full of deputies with shotguns escorted the prisoners to Decatur. Sheriff Bud Davis locked them up in a rickety jail which had been condemned for white prisoners two years ago. Thirty young militiamen mounted guard.

Witnesses. When the trial began, Witness Ruby Bates had been missing for three weeks. It was reported that she had sent the police a letter retracting her previous accusation. Next report was that she had sent the police another letter saying she was drunk when she wrote the first. Each side suspected the other of kidnapping Witness Bates.

Very much in evidence was her companion, twice-married Mrs. Victoria Price, with whom (and seven white boys) she bummed her way to Chattanooga and back. Mrs. Price says she supports herself & mother on the $13 a month she makes at a Huntsville cotton mill. In court she appeared the last word in cracker chic. She still sticks to her story that the Negroes threw six of her seven white male companions off the train, stripped her, raped her at knife's point.

Lily White Justice. Counsel Leibowitz first moved that the indictments against his clients be quashed on the grounds that, by banning Negroes fron the Jackson County jury roll, the State o Alabama had denied the defendants their constitutional rights at the original trial. Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, whose father wrote the Alabama Supreme Court decision sustaining the prior verdict, put the burden of proof on the defense. What Counsel Leibowitz had to prove, every Southerner knows to be true: Negroes simply are not allowed on juries in Alabama. After two days of bickering, Judge James E. Horton, a Lincolnesque figure in the Circuit Court for 25 years, suddenly ruled: "The Court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question." Attorney Knight looked surprised. Counsel Leibowitz, believing himself armed with cause for another plea to the Supreme Court, looked pleased.

The defense next moved that the present indictment be quashed because of similar "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from the Morgan County venire. When jury board commissioners failed to say whether or not their jury rolls contained Negro names, Counsel Leibowitz threatened to have all 2,000 talesmen subpoenaed "if it takes till doomsday," to see what color they were.

The State claimed that if there were was because none had sufficient edu "i grity, good character and sound m " to qualify. Thereupon, Cou Leibowitz began bringing in dozens o reputable Negroes who were not on the roll. One was a doctor from the University of Illinois, another a graduate of Phillips Exeter Academy and Howard University.

Next day the defense won and lost a point. Judge Horton ruled that prima facie evidence had been established that the Morgan County jury roll was all-white. Counsel Leibowitz then moved that Negro talesmen be considered for the present jury, a proposal which brought to horrified Southerners visions of carpetbagging days. The courtroom was tense when Judge Horton softly said: "Motion denied."

International

RUBY BATES & VICTORIA PRICE (1931)

Raped in a gondola?

With his mind's eye again on the Supreme Court, defense counsel replied: "I take exception."

Jurors were then picked, sworn in. The prosecution concentrated on rural talesmen. The defense wanted young white-collar men who might have come in contact with urban liberalism. Attorney Knight got three farmers; others chosen were a draftsman, a mill worker, two bookkeepers, a merchant, a barber, a bank cashier, a motor salesman. One man was unemployed. It appeared that the defense, with two challenges to the State's one, had gotten a shade the better of the selection.

Defend the Heroic Negro Scottsboro Witnesses

Daily Worker
4-22-33
New York, N.Y.

News comes from the South that lynch gangs are terrorizing the Negro witnesses who testified at the Decatur trial of the Scottsboro boys. The house of Lewis, one of the Negro witnesses whose testimony exposed too clearly the perjury of Victoria Price, was completely burned down by Ku Kluxers. Two other Negro witnesses have been forced under threats of brutal punishment, to sign repudiations of their testimony at the trial. Other Negro witnesses have received veiled threats and warnings against testifying at the coming trials of the other boys.

The appearance of the Negro witnesses at the lynch court of Decatur, Alabama, was an act of heroic defiance, challenging the centuries-old system of jim-crowism and national oppression. The testimony of the Negro witnesses brought before the eyes of the whole world the cynical violation of every democratic right which is supposed to be the great privilege of American democracy. These elementary democratic rights are guaranteed supposedly by the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments. The appearance of the Negro witnesses in an Alabama lynch court exemplified the determination of the Negro people to destroy the hideous jim-crow system.

That is why the Southern lynchers are letting loose their terrorism against these Negro heroes. The southern ruling class is fully aware of what issues are at stake in the Scottsboro trials. They realise what the challenge of the Negro witnesses means to their slave-driving domination.

And the Southern ruling class is using its traditional weapon against the Negro people—lynch terror.

But the heroism of the Negro witnesses at the Decatur court is part of the heroism of the Negro masses, who are rising in resolute struggle against the national oppression of the centuries.

Send telegrams to Governor Miller of Alabama demanding that the state protect these witnesses. The working class must take these Negro witnesses under their protection!

Montgomery, Ala.

Negro Sentenced

Leibowitz Speech Blamed For Unexpected Action; Knight, Brodsky Clash

By T. M. DAVENPORT

DECATUR, ALA., April 17.—(AP)—The Scottsboro cases were postponed indefinitely today because the court held a purported criticism of Alabama juries by Samuel Leibowitz of defense counsel had prejudiced the cases against his own clients.

Judge James E. Horton directed postponement of the remaining cases against six negroes charged with assaulting two white girl hoboes and rebuked Leibowitz.

A statement that appeared in The New York Herald Tribune and credited to the New York attorney, who volunteered to defend the negroes and lost his first case down here, was responsible for the unexpected action.

Concerning the jury that convicted Haywood Patterson—first of the negroes to face retrial here—the New York paper quoted Leibowitz like this:

Leibowitz Quoted

"If you ever saw those creatures, those bigots whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice, bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it."

Judge Horton, who was praised for his conduct of the Patterson trial, said he did not know "whether the leading counsel for the defense made the statement imputed to him. It could make little difference whether he actually said it or not. The effect would be the same. The published statement was uncalled for."

The judge who had charged the jury in the Patterson case to forget color and creed and state lines said today that the accused negro must be a victim of this statement."

"His leading attorney (Leibowitz) would be a millstone about his neck," said Judge Horton.

The court then ordered a continuance of the case against Charlie Weems—second of the Scottsboro boys to face a retrial—"until such time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had."

Atty. Gen. Knight, who defeated Leibowitz in the Patterson trial jumped to his feet after the Judge read the statement and shouted:

Knight Defends Jurors

"I cannot stand by and hear that jury maligned. No, we aren't bigots in the South. We tried these cases fair . . ."

The Judge nodded and said:

"We understand that."

The dramatic climax to the long-drawn-out Scottsboro cases came after Judge Horton had sentenced Patterson to die in the electric chair June 16 for criminal assault on Mrs. Victoria Price, a Huntsville cotton mill worker and a hobo.

The case of Charlie Weems was to have been called today, but the Judge read Leibowitz's purported statement and then an answer that Knight gave several days ago in an interview.

"It (Leibowitz's statement) can only be taken as a wail of a loser," said Knight in his published retort to the New Yorker, "particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury, he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies."

Leibowitz was not present when the decision was made. He had not returned here from New York.

"Fair Verdict Impossible"

The statements attributed to Leibowitz "must make impossible any just and impartial verdict," the Judge said today after reading both attorneys' published statements.

The Judge held that the "defendants chief counsel was at fault" in the newspaper battle between him and Knight on the merits or demerits of Alabama juries.

"It is the duty of this court to see that the defendant has a [illegible]," said Judge Horton.

Advertiser
4-18-33

Joseph [illegible] Brodsky, another defense attorney and also a New Yorker, agreed with the court's action but said he did not believe "Leibowitz made that statement."

Montgomery, Ala.

"Leibowitz's view is that in Decatur and the South the white workers are imbued with the idea of white supremacy and that only in union of the white and negro workers warring against the ruling class can they gain their ends."

Judge Horton's decision left the Scottsboro case up in the air. All except Patterson, who was sentenced to death today must have a new trial.

Knight Answers Brodsky

Brodsky's explanation of Leibowitz's view on the South's workers and "ruling class" brought a sharp retort from Knight.

He pounded a table with his fist and entered an objection to "such orations in a courtroom in Alabama."

The Judge, visibly aroused, halted Brodsky's speech.

Knight, after the courtroom had been cleared, said "of course if the Court thinks the defendant cannot have a fair trial, I must bow to his wishes. Leibowitz created this situation by the slurs attributed to him. When slurs are cast upon the people of this State, so long as I have a voice I shall resent the same officially and unofficially.

"Social equality cannot be advocated in my presence."

Weems, with Patterson, will be returned to Birmingham under guard pending date of the new trials. Under Alabama law no further change of venue is in order since the statute provides only one change to be made.

Judge Horton said an act of the Legislature would be necessary to transfer the cases from Morgan County and left uncertain the date of the new trial. The next criminal court term is in July.

S. Leibowitz Again Brands Alabama Citizens 'Bigots'

NEW YORK, April 17.—(AP)—While Judge James E. Horton in Decatur, Ala., today deplored a criticism of the jurymen in the Heywood Patterson trial attributed to Samuel E. Leibowitz, the defense attorney issued a statement here branding as "bigots" the "baying pack ....who raised the Hitler cry of 'Jew money from New York.'"

"Their very faces do betoken it," he said of his bigotry charge. The statement follows in full:

"The millstone around the neck of the Scottsboro boys is that Alabama attitude which made the 12 Decatur jurors guffaw as they pushed Heywood Patterson toward the electric chair last Palm Sunday morn. It is a piece with the action of the prosecutor, Knight, in gleefully clapping his hands during the trial and in calling a defendant, made in the image and likeness of God, 'that thing.'

"Impaling me on a cross of fancied insults to the citizens of Alabama will avail the partisans of weird Morgan County justice nothing. Nor will it divert me or my associates for one moment from the issue which the sovereign State of Alabama must face in this case—equal justice for the colored race.

"I respect Judge Horton and the fair-minded people of the State who are willing to extend to their colored fellow citizens the protection of the law which we take as a thing for granted in New York. As for the rest, the baying pack the wolves of bigotry who raised the Hitler cry of 'Jew money from New York' because we dared demand a square deal for a poor unfortunate whose skin was black, I stand pat.

"They are bigots. Their very faces do betoken it. We have fought the good fight. We have kept the faith and nothing can stop us from carrying on. The nine innocent Scottsboro boys will not die so long as decent men and women survive and their exists in Washington the Supreme Court of our land."

SCOTTSBORO MARCHERS TO TAKE TO WASHINGTON BILL TO SECURE NEGRO RIGHTS

Daily Worker

New York, N.Y.

Provides Heavy Penalties for Jim Crowing Discrimination, Peonage, and Lynching

Final Plans for March to National Capital to Be Made at Emergency Conference Sunday

NEW YORK.—Putting teeth into the enforcement of the 13th, 14th and 15th Ammendments to the United States Constitution, supposed to guarantee democratic rights to the Negro people, is the purpose of a "Bill of Civil Rights," which will be presented to Congress by a delegation from the Free the Scottsboro Boys March to Washington called by the National Scottsboro Action Committee.

Final plans for mobilization for the march will be laid out at the second Scottsboro Emergency Conference, to which between four and five hundred representatives of organizations are expected, at Imperial Lodge Hall, 160 West 129th St., New York, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Drafting of the bill was hailed by William L. Patterson, national secretary of the International Labor Defense, working class organization in the forefront of the struggle to save the lives of the Scottsboro boys, and for the democratic rights of Negroes, as the first concrete move to enact legislation to free the Negro people from economic enslavement since the passage of the 14th Amendment.

White Workers Also

"The tremendous mass movement developed around the struggle for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys has spurred the fight for the democratic rights of Negroes, an issue brought sharply forward in this fight," Patterson said. "The movement back of this bill is one of the most important struggles ever developed, not only for the Negro people, but also for the white workers, who are kept in bondage by the 'divide and rule' policy of the white ruling class."

First Federal Law

Heavy penalties are provided for violation of the provisions of the law which includes prohibition of Jim-Crowing, all discrimination, peonage and lynching. There are now no federal laws covering any of these rights and the existing state laws are full of holes, where they are not actually part of the lynch and Jim-Crow apparatus.

One of the prohibitive clauses forbids the exclusion of Negroes from Grand and petit juries, no matter who is being tried, whether white or black, because of their color.

Franchise and Jim Crow

The first clause forbids every means, direct or indirect, for depriving Negroes of the franchise. At present, it was pointed out, ten million Negroes are deprived of the right to vote, by law and by terroristic methods, in the United States.

Jim Crow schools are forbidden and all Jim-Crowing in restaurants, hotels transportation vehicles, theatres, and every other public place.

Residential Restrictions

The question of discrimination in housing and residential restrictions for Negroes are dealt with in a separate clause, in employment by private firms, corporations, or political subdivisions, and in wages and working conditions.

Professions, the civil service, labor unions, hospitals and the army and the navy are also taken care of in clauses which prohibit every form of Jim-Crow and discrimination.

Peonage and Right to Bear Arms

An anti-peonage clause is made to apply to both Negro and white workers, abolishing forced labor, which is imposed upon Negroes more extensively than upon any other group.

A special clause states: "No person shall be deprived of the right to bear arms in self defense or to keep such arms in his home because of race or color."

The use of every agency of government for the enforcement of the bill is provided for, and imprisonment and heavy fines for any official who violates any provision of the bill or fails to act against a violator.

Suit for damage by any person injured in any way by violation of the bill is also called for.

(Space does not permit publication of the full text of the bill in today's "Daily." Watch for it Monday. See more.)

Decatur, Ala., April 6.—The defense sprang a surpris here today when Ruby Bates, missing Scottsboro case witness, walked into court and swore she told a false, framed-up story at the first trial of the seven colored youths once sentenced to the electric chair for attacks on her and Victoria Price.

Officials threatened her with a long jail term if she told the truth at the first trial, Ruby related.

Vows None Attacked Her.

She added she had not been attacked by Heywood Patterson, now on trial, or any of the others. And to the best of her knowledge Victoria Price had not been attacked, either, Ruby declared.

After the girl testified the defense rested it case.

Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, electrified the courtroom by his dramatic announcement:

"I call Ruby Bates!"

Everybody gasped when the girl, missing since Feb. 27, walked nervously into the old Morgan County courtroom.

Clad in a new, tight-fitting gray cloth coat and hat to match, the slender girl took the stand and produced sensation after sensation in the crowded room.

She revealed that she recently visited New York. The Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, distinguished pastor of the fashionable Riverside Church, gave her the money to buy a new hat, she said.

Judge Draws Closer.

Judge James E. Horton left the bench so that he could hear the girl's answers when Leibowitz began questioning her.

Questions by Leibowitz and her answers follow:

Q. Do you know Victoria Price, the girl who was on the so-called Scottsboro train on the night of March 25, 1931, and who has testified in this trial that she and you were assaulted by these colored boys? A. Yes.

At this point the Price girl, her eyes blazing, was brought in for identification.

"Keep your temper, you hear?" Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. cautioned her in a whisper.

Both girls glared and the witness said:

"That's the Victoria Price I mean."

Q.—Were you a good girl before you met her? A.—Yes.

Doesn't Know Defendant.

Leibowitz then asked Ruby if she had not had a love affair with a Lester Carter, a witness who testified to his friendship with the girl while they were living in a swamp colony near Chattanoog with Victoria Price. Ruby admitted she had. She added tha Victoria Price's boy friend in th swamp colony was a Jack Tille

"It was the day before w hopped the train which the posse met later," Ruby related.

The witness then went on in a attempt to refute most of the Price woman's testimony about events leading up to the supposed attack.

Q. Do you know this defendant, Haywood Patterson? A. I don't know whether he was on the train or not, there were so many of them. I don't remember him.

Q. Did Patterson or any of these other defendants attack you? A. No, sir.

Q. Did they attack Victoria Price? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Why did you testify that they did at their trial in Scottsboro? A. Because they took us to the jail and Victoria told me I better tell the story she was telling or we might get long sentences in jail.

Under cross-examination by Attorney General Knight, Ruby, much softer voiced and feminine than her friend, testified that she came here today from New York.

She denied she had ever seen Joseph Brodsky, International Labor Defense counsel in the case, before this morning, and attempts by the prosecution to ask her questions regarding Communists were ruled out on the heated objections of Leibowitz. She went to New York at the suggestion of a girl friend, she said.

Lynch Threats Renewed.

Ruby's sensational story once more caused threats of lynching to be heard here. Capt. Joe Burleson, in command of the National Guardsmen on duty at the trial, asserted he still had no fears on this score.

"It would take hundreds of men to storm the jail with success against our men with their equipment," he asserted. "I don't look for any trouble, but we are on the alert."

A mass meeting here last night of 200 young men agitated for a demonstration against Leibowitz. Tonight a mob of 150 left Huntsville, home town of Ruby Bates, thirty miles away, to march on Leibowitz' hotel. Members of the mob, which left at 9 P. M. shouted: "We'll lynch him and them Northern reporters unless they clear out."

Mrs. Belle Leibowitz returned to New York yesterday after having attended the opening of the Scottsboro trial, and expressed amazement at the queries of reporters who informed her her husband, Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief defense counsel, had been threatened.

She denied vehemently the rumor she had been sent back from Decatur, Ala., the scene of the present trial, to insure her safety in the event of a racial outbreak.

Welcome Defender in the Scottsboro Case

A peaceful meeting of Negroes at Union Square yesterday, called to protest the verdict in the Scottsboro case, developed into a running fight along Broadway [illegible] with policemen thrown to the ground and trampled and Negroes becoming acquainted with scores of nightsticks before it was over.

There was one arrest. George Northcroft, a Negro house painter, was arrested at Forty-sixth Street and Broadway, where the brawl reached its zenith, by Patrolman William Griffin of the West Forty-seventh Street station. According to Griffin, Northcroft kicked him in the mouth.

At Union Square shortly after noon the meeting started with perhaps a thousand Negroes in attendance to listen to speakers protesting against the verdict in the trial at Decatur, Ala. When it was over many journeyed to the Pennsylvania Station to meet the 4:23 train from the South bearing Samuel S. Leibowitz, who defended Haywood Patterson, the first of the Negroes to be tried at Decatur.

There they were joined by others, until when the train pulled in there were close to 3,000 milling about the concourse.

When Mr. Leibowitz came up the stairs there was a rush and enthusiastic cheering. A team of four husky Negroes picked up the attorney and carried him on their shoulders through the cheering throng to his taxicab in the south drive.

Extra police called for the occasion persuaded the crowd to break up and leave the station, warning them not to parade without permission. Five hundred did not heed the warning and formed outside the station. They marched, singing and cheering, to Broadway and then turned north.

Traffic policemen along the route attempted to break up the procession, but they were either pushed or tossed aside. The West Forty-seventh Street station sent out a squad to reinforce the traffic men. They made contact with the marchers, who had set Harlem as their objective, at Forty-sixth Street, and there a battle royal started. Griffin said later than when he ordered the parade stopped he was shoved aside and knocked down.

Other policemen joined but the Negroes would not give in and proceeded north with [illegible] joining as fast as they could. A hurry call for more police brought radio cars, an emergency truck squad and the reserves that [illegible] in the West Forty-seventh Street station. [illegible] police joined battle again with the Negroes between Fifty-second and Fifty-third Street on Broadway. After several minutes of [illegible] the parade split up and the marchers slipped away on side streets not before, however, they pulled a mounted policeman from his horse.

As the police drew breath they were informed that they were needed at Columbus Circle for a fresh demonstration. There they found close to 1,000 Negroes, including some of the paraders. There was another mêlee. The Negroes apparently had learned a new strategy and after breaking up quickly as possible reformed furthed uptown.

After a short fight at Sixty-eighth Street and Broadway, the final meeting took place at Eighty-sixth and Broadway.

Arraigned in Night Court, Northcroft pleaded not guilty to a charge of third-degree assault. Magistrate Leonard A. McGee adjourned the case until this morning in West Side Court to enable both Northcroft and the police to present witnesses.

The Scottsboro Case

Two years ago nine ~~negroes~~ in a little Tennessee town were condemned to death for an attack on two white girls on a freight train passing through Jackson Co., Alabama.

The so-called Scottsboro case became famous or infamous according to the point of view. There was sharp cleavage in opinions among southerners and northerners alike. Unbiased critics found much in the evidence to show reasonable doubt of the allegations made concerning the crime which Southerners consider greater than murder.

Many contended the case was railroaded through and in the North, at least, the opinion was general that conduct of the case was in no way comparable with the methods employed in this part of the country.

The apparent injustice led to the injection of many outside agencies into the case, chief of which was the International Labor Defense, an adjunct of the Communist party.

The original verdict of guilty was upheld by the Supreme Court of Alabama. This decision was overruled by the United States Supreme Court, which, reversing the original verdict, set aside the death sentences and ordered new trials.

That trial is now in progress in Decatur, Tenn.

To many of the leading citizens of the state the Supreme Court decision was accepted as a rebuff to Alabama's highest court. To them the only satisfactory outcome of a new trial would be a second conviction and new sentences of death.

Also interwoven with the case is the South's traditional attitude toward the Negro—an attitude of benevolent paternalism which refuses, however, to recognize the equal rights guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment and invoked by the defense in its motion to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury.

Most important of all is the implicit challenge to the State's jury system contained in the defense motion. It is that which brought attorney general into a case which otherwise would have been prosecuted by the regular circuit solicitor and it is that which the people of Decatur really are agitated about to a much greater extent than the fate of the Negroes.

Alabama is devoted to states rights and is resentful of outsider interference in the administration of its laws. Its officials, from Governor Miller down, regard as "outside interference" the deluge of telegrams sent to them by Communist sympathizers and which threaten their lives if the accused Negroes are not acquitted.

These threatening telegrams and letters have been almost as important a factor in crystallizing sentiment against the Negroes as has been the nature of the crime charged against them.

All the families of the accused negroes have become ardent advocates of Communism since the International Labor Defense came to their rescue and are helping to organize their neighbors in support of the cause.

Representing the Negroes is Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York who has a record of winning eighty-four out of eighty-five capital cases in which he has represented defendants.

He discounts any Communistic connections and made public letters which passed between him and the Negro secretary of the International Defense League before he accepted the case. The League thoughtfully impressed upon the lawyer the fact that they would not ask as a condition of his acceptance of the case that he should "give up any of your social, economic or political views."

As if mindful of this kindly consideration to permit him to retain his own ideas, Mr. Leibowitz gallantly returned the compliment by assuring them he would not accept any filthy lucre for his services.

> "North and south, east and west, we Americans have a common tradition of justice. And if it is justice that these black men be adjudged innocent—if it is justice, I repeat—I cannot believe that the people of Alabama will be false to their great heritage of honor and to those brave and chivalrous generations of the past in whose blood the history of their State is written."

It is interesting to note that although negroes never serve on juries in the South, it is the contention of the defense that the law intends they should.

Mr. Leibowitz has already had spirited set-tos with the judge and the district attorney on this question and there has been much hedging and squirming to make the facts tally with the section of the Alabama code defining the qualifications of jurors, in the course of which no mention is made of the color of a juror's skin.

It is obvious the Communists are making the most of the untoward situation which has placed the South at such a great disadvantage. The resentment over outside interference and the grim possibilities which might follow the success of the interlopers is enough to arouse much concern.

If the disagreeable experience is the means of causing some drastic and much needed changes in the conduct of criminal trials in some parts of the South, it may be worth all it costs.

REFUSES TO QUASH SCOTTSBORO CASE

Court Rejects Defense Motion Based on Exclusion of Negroes From Juries.

JURY RECORDS BROUGHT IN

After Issuing Subpoena, Judge Rules Without Admitting Them as Evidence.

PAMPHLET SALE STOPPED

Complaint of Negroes' Counsel Brings Warning From Judge to Three Boys and Employer.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 28.—Circuit Judge James E. Horton denied a motion today to quash the indictments against nine Negroes, accused of attacking two while girls nears Scottsboro two years ago, and immediately the defense turned its guns upon the administration of the jury law in this county where the defendants are to be tried.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the defendants, whose sentences of death were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, announced after the court's ruling that he would continue his fight against the alleged "systematic exclusion" of Negroes from Alabama juries.

The motion to quash the indictments was based on the contention that Negroes were excluded from the grand jury which returned the twenty true bills against the defendants. Mr. Leibowitz called thirteen witnesses, nine of them Negroes, in support of his assertion of systematic exclusion.

The defense contends that the Alabama statute setting forth the qualifications of jurors is dishonestly administered to exclude Negroes from service on juries.

Potential Negro Jurors Testify.

Mr. Leibowitz called his witnesses to prove from the mouths of excluded potential jurors that they were qualified in every respect save color to serve on juries and that they never had been called upon in their county.

Thus far his evidence has been confined to Jackson County, where the indictments against the Negroes were returned. His next move, he stated, will be to show that Negroes are also excluded from the jury rolls of Morgan County. It is from the latter that the venire from which a jury will be chosen to decide the guilt or innocence of the defendants must be chosen.

The ruling of the court on the motion to quash the indictments came at the opening of the afternoon session as Attorney General Knight was about to call the State's first witness to refute the charges of racial exclusion by the defense.

In the morning Mr. Leibowitz had requested the court to issue subpoenaes duces tecum for the jury rolls and jury boxes of Jackson County at the time when the Negroes were indicted on charges made by Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the two white girls who charged they were attacked by the Negroes on a freight train coming from Chattanooga.

Orders Jury Records Produced.

After a prolonged argument in which Mr. Knight declared that the defense was "aiming around Robin Hood's barn," Judge Horton granted the request for the issuance of the subpoenas but reserved decision on the admissibility of the evidence contained in the jury roll.

Mr. Liebowitz had threatened to call every person whose name appeared on the jury roll of Jackson County, "even if it breaks the State," before Judge Horton granted the request to issue the subpoenas.

Before that Mr. Liebowitz said he would withdraw his motion if Attorney General Knight would concede that only the names of white men were included on the roll.

Mr. Knight replied:

"The State will concede nothing, prove your case."

Mr. Leibowitz reserved the right to present further evidence that only white men were acceptable as jurors in Jackson County after the production of the jury roll.

A recess for luncheon was taken, and it was expected that the afternoon session would be marked by an attempt on the part of the State to support the contention that the color line plays no part in the selection of jury men.

But at the opening of the afternoon session Judge Horton brought the little trial of Alabama's jury system to a close without having heard the witnesses called by the State. The decision seemed to surprise both State and defense counsel.

"Mr. Attorney General," Judge Horton said, "the court has decided not to hear further testimony on this question. The motion is overruled."

Mr. Leibowitz, who is counting upon the question of exclusion of Negroes from jury duty as a loophole for an appeal if the Negroes are convicted a second time, smiled pleasantly and offered no argument against the exclusion of further testimony on an issue which, until then, had been one of fact with no problem of law involved.

Announces Separate Trials.

As soon as the motion to quash the indictments was out of the way, Judge Horton indicated his readiness to proceed with the trial.

Attorney General Knight, whose father, a justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama, wrote the opinion upholding the original conviction which was reversed by the United States Supreme Court, declared his intention of trying "each defendant as he was tried before." This amounted to a request for a severance of the indictments, and it was not opposed by Mr. Leibowitz at the time.

The Attorney General, however, requested that the court take proof of the ages of Roy Wright and Eugene Williams to determine whether they should be tried as juveniles or adults subject to the penalty of the law.

Then the case of Heywood Patterson was called.

The big Negro, dressed in his blue denim prison uniform, arose from the row of seats in which he and his fellow-defendants had been sprawling all day. He stood looking blankly, first at the lawyers and then at the judge. He said nothing but his eyes rolled back and forth. The eight other defendants, lolling in their chairs, showed their first interest in the proceedings.

Plea Entered With Proviso.

Mr. Leibowitz informed the court that he refused to enter a plea lest he prejudice a contemplated motion to quash the venire which Sheriff Bud Davis and the judge were drawing from names placed in a black tin box vigorously shaken before the court room crowd and the defendants. It was his intention, Mr. Leibowitz said, to file a motion to quash the venire on the same ground on which he had moved to quash the indictments.

Informed by the court and Attorney General Knight that no technical objection would be raised to a motion to quash the venire if his client entered a plea at that time, Mr. Leibowitz said:

"Then we plead not guilty to the charge."

No defendant other than Patterson was arraigned under agreement by counsel for both sides after he had entered his plea through his attorney.

The court declared a recess until 8:30 A. M. Thursday, when the introduction of the State's evidence will begin.

The one-day holiday was declared to permit the defense to gather evidence and obtain affidavits in support of the contention of Mr. Leibowitz that "the rolls from which the jury box was filled, unjustifiably and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment excluded Negroes solely because of their race."

Law Phrases Fluster Negroes.

All the witnesses called by Mr. Leibowitz were Negroes. They were John Sanford, C. S. Finley, Mark Taylor, Trap Mosely, Louis Cole, Ples Larkin, John Stapler, Will Watkins and L. C. Stapler. All declared they were qualified to serve as jurors.

Mr. Knight, in cross-examination, flustered them by asking their definitions of "moral turpitude" and "esteemed in the community in which they live," phrases from the jury law.

"I don't understand that kind of talking," said Watkins when Mr. Knight asked him what he understood by the word "esteemed."

In addressing his questions to the Negroes Attorney General Knight called them by their Christian names. Once Mr. Leibowitz interrupted and said:

"Call him Mr. Sanford, please."

"I'm not accustomed to that," retorted Mr. Knight.

Generally, Mr. Knight's attitude to the witnesses was friendly, as for example, in the following colloquy with Stapler:

"How are you getting on?"

"All right, sir."

"Nobody imposes on you?"

"No, sir."

"Have you been mistreated in Jackson County?"

"No, sir."

Leibowitz Objects to Booklet.

The morning session was enlivened by a renewal of the threat of the defense to seek a second change of venue on the ground of prejudice. Mr. Leibowitz came into court at the opening of the session and said:

"I want to call your honor's attention, if I may, to the sale at the door of this court house of certain booklets entitled "The Inside, Unpublished Story of the Infamous Scottsboro Trial."

Mr. Leibowitz then described to the court the contents of the booklet which set forth a version of the evidence in the case and read the last two sentences denouncing the Communist party and stating that when the booklet was read the defendants will all be dead.

Declaring that if it were not for the International Labor Defense "these nine boys would now be dead," Mr. Leibowitz said that unless such propagandizing stopped he would be forced to ask for a change of venue.

The defense attorney offered a copy of the booklet in evidence and Attorney General Knight arose holding a sheaf of handbills circulated by Communist sympathizers, and said that in his opinion the use of propoganda was evenly divided.

Judge Horton accepted the pamphlet offered by Mr. Leibowitz, but rejected the handbills which Mr. Knight proffered.

Judge Stops Sale of Pamphlets.

Judge Horton ordered deputy sheriffs to bring in all the salesmen of the pamphlets that they could round up. Within five minutes the deputies were back with three very frightened young men, who stood quaking before the bench as the judge warned them to cease selling the pamphlets. Finally they were allowed to go, after Mr. Leibowitz said he did not wish to punish any one "trying to earn a dollar in these times."

The three youths brought into court described themselves as Leon Smith, 15; Allstone Hargrove, 14, and Sam White, 19. They said they had been employed by Kyle Frazier.

Judge Horton issued a bench warrant for Frazier for contempt of court, but when Frazier appeared and apologized, saying he had no intention of disseminating propaganda prejudicial to the defendants, the court dismissed him with a warning.

Crosses Blazing As Jurors Weigh Scottsboro Case

By TOM CASSIDY.
(Staff Correspondent of The News)

DECATUR, ALA., April 8.—Fiery crosses are being burned on adjacent Alabama hills in token of the vigilance of the mob, Samuel S. Leibowitz charged in open court tonight.

In an adjoining room, twelve white jurors had debated the fate of Haywood Patterson, first of the seven colored Scottsboro youths to be retried for their lives on charges of having attacked two white girls.

Samuel Leibowitz

While national guardsmen patrolled the courthouse grounds, the jurors, who received the case at 1:55 P. M., were locked up for the night at 12:45 A. M. (New York time). They will reconvene Sunday morning.

Meanwhile, Leibowitz, chief counsel for Patterson, had appeared before Judge James E. Horton, the Lincolnesque magistrate who presided during the colored lad's trial, to argue for a change of venue in behalf of Charley Weems, the next of the Scottsboro septet to be brought to bar.

Brodsky Accompanies Leibowitz.

Leibowitz was accompanied by Joseph Brodsky, attorney for the International Labor Defense Council, which has espoused the seven's cause.

"We submit," Leibowitz said, "that Decatur is no place to try the defendant, Weems. Both Mr. Brodsky's life and my own have been threatened, and even now fiery crosses are burning on the surrounding hills. We have not brought these facts to the attention of the Court heretofore—and asked a change of venue—because of the hazard that the jury might be prejudiced. The guardsmen, as you know, were not brought here at our solicitation.

"But now that the case is in the jury's hands, it is proper to express the opinion that justice will be better served by granting the next defendant a hearing elsewhere."

Motion Denied by Court.

Judge Horton denied the motion and ordered the trial of Weems to begin a week from Monday.

The fate of Patterson was given into the jury's hands at 1:55 o'clock this afternoon, after the Judge had charged the jurors not to be swayed by racial or political prejudice, and had feelingly declared:

Leibowitz had just concluded his four-hour summation.

"It has been stated by some that this is a race matter," the lean, Spartan jurist declared. "There is talk of whether public opinion here or there feels this or that way on this case. That is no concern of ours.

Court Often Vexed.

"The Court has been vexed a great many ways, by the receipt of a great many telegrams and so forth, but this Court desires only to see justice done in this case. We all love our land.

"I love the Southland. I want to see her good name upheld, and we're going to see righteousness and justice done in this case. Do nothing to reflect on her fair name. It seems sometimes that love which should adorn the human bosom has left it, and that hate has taken its place.

"The State must first prove beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant is guilty. Remember whatever you do, that no outside matter is any concern of ours."

Victoria Price
State's star witness.

Both the Judge and Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. were deluged during the session with telegrams from radicals throughout the country demanding that they safeguard the prisoners from lynching in the event of an acquittal.

Denies Red Touch.

Leibowitz, hoarse from his oratorical labors of yesterday, apologized to the jury for his physical condition and told them that he talked on because he was fighting a "damnable frame-up by a prostitute." He called the Scottsboro trial of the youths which has been reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court a "judicial lynching."

Referring to the prosecution charge of "sinister influences in New York," he said: "Gentlemen, I've given you the evidence the best I know how. The boy is innocent. I think I've proved that. I'm not an I. L. D. I'm not a Communist. I don't belong to that tribe at all.

"I ask you to let it be spread abroad that Alabama is fair."

Attorney General Knight denounced the defendant, and called him "this thing" in his closing.

He asked that the verdict be not based on "racial prejudice or religious creed," a slap at his prosecution aid, Wade Wright, a member of the All Day Singers sect, who yesterday referred to "New York Jew money."

Knight defended his star witness, Victoria Price, and denounced Ruby Bates, the other of the two who accused the defendants at the first trial. He ridiculed the story of Miss Bates for the defense that the new clothes she wore in court yesterday were purchased for her by the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick of New York, to whom she had said she wanted to recant her story of the attack.

After declaring the case to consist of "a framed defense, rather than a framed prosecution," Knight said: "I ask you to put this man in the electric chair for the attack on Victoria Price.

Scottsboro Judge Is a Cautious Man.

JUDGE JAMES E. HORTON, of the Morgan Circuit Court in Alabama, who presided over the trial of Heywood Patterson, first of the "Scottsboro boys" to face a jury on the second hearing of the famous case, was praised particularly this week for his exquisite courtesy.

Lawyers and other supporters of the accused in afterthought back in New York somewhat modified their praise of the judge's impartiality. They counted up numerous rulings in which he had violated their idea of the defendant's rights. But they credited the Judge with an irresistible courtesy and with a sincere wish to prevent physical violence to defendants and their attorneys.

Judge Horton denied the defense motion to quash the indictment because there was no Negro on the grand jury panel, and ~~again because~~ there was no Negro on the petit jury panel. He overruled defense objections to a physician's violating professional confidences on the stand. He denied motions to declare the case a mistrial because of prosecution references to "Jew money" and "Carterinsky." He ruled against the defense on other points time after time.

But in contrast to him, the jury and townspeople were not just mentally unfavorable; they were violently hostile. He sat upon his bench the nearest to a friend the defense had in Morgan County, a tall Abraham Lincoln figure, unswervingly courteous, and he delivered with grave sincerity his final plea for the jury to bring in a fair verdict.

Thus the world learned of him from Samuel S. Leibowitz, brilliant defense counsel, as "one of the finest jurists I have ever met."

Attorney Leibowitz Writes Judge Horton On Scottsboro Case

Age

New York

Attorney Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief trial attorney for the International Labor Defense in the Scottsboro Cases, has mad public a letter he has sent to Judge James E, Horton of Decatur, Ala., taking exiception to his attempt to place responsibility for the prejudice in the trials upon the defense counsel in the case.

In his letter, dated April 18th, Mr. Leibowitz stated that he is delighted with the postponement of the case because "it may give us the oportunity to obtain a ruling fro mthe highest court in our land upon this major issue which means to much to millions of Americans."

The letter follows:

MR. LEIBOWITZ'S LETTER

"My dear Judge Horton:

"I read with interest the account of the proceedings before you in the Decatur courtroom yesterday morning. You are quoted in one of the leading Metropolitan newspapers as follows:

> "The statement itself (referring to remarks attributed to me concerning the jury that convicted Patterson) must of necessity make impossible any just and impartial verdict to be arrived at at this time."

Your comments from the bench were undoubtedly intended for public consumption and this is my reply.

1. The prejudice you refer to was there long before the trials were transferred to Decatur. This prejudice was born of the hatred for the Negro and was first manifested when these poor unfortunates were hurried through the machinery of justice at Scottsboro to the tune of "There'll be a hot time in the old town tonight." You will recall that these defendants were represented by a local Scottsboro lawyer.

2. The prejudice you speak of was intensified by the reversal of the convictions at the hands of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court.

3. The prejudice was intensified by the motion made to quash the indictment and the venire because of the systematic exclusion of qualified Negroes from service upon juries, solely because of their color. For the first time actual proof of such exclusion was offered. Your statement that the defense "had made out a prima facie case" will go down in history as a momentous declaration. Of course, one must realize that we were touching the people of your State on a very sore, tender spot. But it must be admitted that this was the only real life-line remaining for these defendants in the event of conviction and that without raising this question in the manner that we did, entrance to the United States Supreme Court might have been barred.

4. This prejudice was intensified when young men stood at the entrance of the Decatur courtroom and hawked pamphlets ending in a ringing plea

> "that Alabama and the world will finally see justice claim its own and will see the Negroes receive their just deserts—death in the electric chair."

You confiscated these pamphlets. But the chief prosecutor made no attempt to punish the perpetrators of this outrageous act. Perhaps he deems such conduct as of no significance in the State of Alabama.

5. The prejudice you speak of was intensified by the Attorney General when he applauded vociferously with his hands, leaped in the air like a frenzied rooter at a football game, and shouted with glee at a point which he thought a witness had made that was favorable to the prosecution. During the entire trial, as you well know, your attention was called to his smirking and sneering behavior, to his bullyragging of witnesses, and to a general deportment which prejudiced the unfortunate defendant before the Bar. You can vouch for the fact that this case was tried by counsel for the defense in a manner befitting the dignity of our profession, and at no time were you called upon to censure us for any act on our part.

6. The prejudice, already existing, was highly intensified when the Solicitor for Morgan County, Wade Wright, referred to "Jew money from New York," to Lester Carter as "Cartorinsky," and to Mr. Brodsky of defense counsel as the "creature with the long nose and pack on his back." Still, no apology was forthcoming, no retraction was made either by him or his learned superior. Certainly, sir, counsel for the defendant was not responsible for such a disgusting spectacle.

7. Prejudice was highly intensified when the Attorney General, pointing at the defendant during his argument to the jury, referred to his as "that thing."

8. Again evidence of bigotry and hatred toward the Negro and anyone who attempts to get a measure of justice for him, was most graphically demonstrated by Attorney General, when in his address to the jury, he offered as a reason for not calling important Negro witnesses, the fact that

> "We in the South do not call a 'nigger' to corroborate a white witness no matter who the white witness may be."

No verdict of any jury, has receivd more universal condemnation at the hands of the enlightened press of the world than the verdict of this jury. Anything said by me by way of criticism of the verdict did not create one-thousandth of the prejudice against this Negro that already existed at the beginning of the trial and that was intensified immeasureably by the conduct of the prosecution and others during the trial

The postponement of these cases is undoubtedly a blessing to both sides.

The prosecution must now realize that we mean business; that we will not pussyfoot on the Constitutional question and that we will fight honorably and diligently for the freedom of nine innocent men. Perhaps with the spotlight of public opinion now focused upon the Scottsboro case they now see that the world will not tolerate the execution of these defendants upon the flimsy evidence of a harlot.

The sentiment expressed by many of the unthinking in your State that a Negro is a chattel and that he can be referred to as "my nigger" just as the master refers to "my dog" is symbolical of that attitude which excludes worthy citizens from service upon juries solely because their skins are black.

As for the defense, we are delighted with the postponement because it may give us the opportunity to obtain a ruling from the highest court in our land upon this major issue which means so much to millions of Americans.

I have had the good fortune to visit you and your gracious and charming lady at your home in Athens. I have found you to be a man of honor, courtesy and kindliness. Believing that you are sincerely desirous of according these defendants a fair chance for their lives, may I enlist your aid in transferring these cases to Mobile? There the Ku Klux Klan is practically extinct. There it will not be necessary for militiamen to protect the entrance to the town with machine guns against invasion by a band of hooded bigots bent upon murdering the defendants and their counsel.

I assure you, sir, that everything I have said here is with the utmost sincerity and respect and were I present in the Decatur courtroom when you made your pronouncement, I would have stood up on my feet and called these matters to your attention in no uncertain terms."

LEIBOWITZ HAS CLOSE CALL FROM ALA. BOMB

Baltimore

Infernal Machine from Dixie Sent Scottsboro Defense Lawyer.

SAYS HE WILL NOT BE INTIMIDATED

Will Stay in Fight to the Very Finish.

NEW YORK—Samuel S. Leibowitz, Scottsboro boys' defense counsel, had a narrow escape here Friday when he received through the mails a bomb postmarked from Alabama.

Quick thinking and vigilance on the part of an office assistant prevented what might have been the asssassination of the famous criminal lawyer.

Life in Danger

That Mr. Leibowitz's life is in constant danger as a result of his defense of the Scottsboro boys, has been known for some time. The audience of 1200 people at Holy Trinity Baptist Church, which he told of the bomb, Monday night, gasped at this resort to terror.

According to Mr. Leibowitz, his assistant dashed the package down into a pail of water as soon as he saw the postmark. When it was opened it was found to contain gunpowder and a timing apparatus.

Many Threats

Leibowitz has received many threats through letters, but he told the Holy Trinity audience that he will not in any way be influenced by threats of violence. He will keep on going down there until the case is finished, he declared.

The Rev. Thomas S. Harten, pastor of the church, declared that the Afro Protective League will assist in the fight to carry on the defense.

"This is a case of the world against Alabama or any other state that tries to trample in the dust human rights and human justice," said Leibowitz. "Despite the verdict at Decatur, the ice has been broken and deep inroads have been made against unfair treatment of the Negro in the South." He called attention to the action taken in Boston in the Crawford case.

He predicted that the eight Scottsboro boys would never be tried because the case of Haywood Patterson would be reversed.

Referring to Judge Horton's statement that the cases had to be postponed indefinitely because of his criticism of the jury, he stated that "Judge Horton had to find some way out to postpone the case because of the growing resentment outside of Alabama."

Other speakers at the meeting included Justice Jacob Strahl of the municipal court, and James Ford, former candidate for vice-president on the Communist ticket.

"The Scottsboro Boys Shall Not Die" Rings Thru Harlem Streets From Thousands in Protest March

Daily Worker 4-24-33

By ROBERT CHASE

NEW YORK.—The streets of Harlem rang out for block with cries of "The Scottsboro boys shall not die," "On to Washington," and "Black and White, Unite and Fight," coming from the throats of 1,500 Negro and white workers in line and thousands following on the pavement, as the mass Scottsboro protest parade made its way through the heart of Harlem Saturday.

New York

Soaring overhead was the plane of Colonel Julian, Negro aviator. On his plane, in huge letters, was "Free the Scottsboro Boys," and "On to Washington."

The parade was thick with placards and banners as it started from 134th Street and Lenox Avenue, going north to 140th Street and then on its route through Harlem. "Mass protest will free the Scottsboro boys," "Demand Negro and White Jury," "Fight Against Scottsboro Conditions in Harlem" were some of the slogans carried. Especially prominent were the banners carrying the spirit of Harlem today, "On to Washington"!

Heading the parade were two Negro youths bearing a huge banner, "The Scottsboro Boys Are Innocent! Stop Further Trials! Demand Their Freedom!"

Directly behind them, and perhaps the most stirring sight of the day, were three Negro couples, each pushing a baby carriage. Their cries for the nine innocent victims of the white ruling class took on a symbolic meaning as they wheeled their infants.

Further back in the parade was a group of 300 Negro children, adding their youthful voices to the chorus. They are the Scottsboro cases of Harlem. Their clothes are ragged and they are thin.

A great cheer went up at 114th Street and Lenox Avenue as a large group of Spanish workers fell in line. Three cheers for the Harlem Liberator were sent up when a group of 500 organized by the Liberator joined the march when it passed their offices at 2749 Seventh Avenue.

Your reporter has been to many demonstrations in Harlem, but none were like this. There was a new element today.

In other parades most of those on the sidewalk were spectators, still doubtful; but today there was no doubt. Today, as one Negro said, "We are all on the march." Today there is a bond between those on the sidewalk and those on the street. Today they are not mere spectators, are participants, forming an iron ring of solidarity behind the policy of the International Labor Defense and the Communist Party. This parade is made out of Harlem and is part of Harlem. Eighty per cent of those in line are Negro residents of Harlem.

Buy Daily Worker

Never before was so much revolutionary literature sold on the streets of Harlem. The Daily Worker, the Harlem Liberator, numerous pamphlets, were bought avidly, like in a hunger. Many gave nickels for a new penny pamphlet on the Scottsboro case. "Keep the change for the boys," they said.

Three Negro women came out of a store as the parade passed. They watched, excited, moved. One said, "I'm going home and leave my bundles and join in."

"I am, too," another joined in. "Let's hurry; I want to march for our boys, too."

Mingling with the chant of the marchers as they passed was a great hum, like a giant wheel in motion. The streets were alive with motion and comment.

"That's good, that's good," a Negro said, feelingly, to another. "It makes me feel big, something in here," he said, putting his hand to his chest; "feels like a new thing has been born."

"Yes, brother, a new thing is born. It's a new people, and we're a-marching for our rights."

"It will put the fear of God in the hearts of those white lynchers," ran the comment of many.

Two Negroes were talking. One held the idea that the Negro people should fight alone, and the white workers fight their own battle.

The other looked at the white and Negro workers passing, and answered, slowly, solemnly, as if after great study, "No brother, we can't go alone. We must go together with our white brother. We must fight together; that is our salvation and their salvation."

At another point your reporter overhead this conversation:

A Negro still under the influence of the slander spread by the leaders of the N. A. A. C. P. and others of their stripe, said "We should go to Washington alone and keep out the reds; they are only doing this for propaganda."

The other answered sharply, "If it wasn't for the Reds and the International Labor Defense, the boys would be dead now. The N. A. A. C. P. hired a Ku Klux to defend the boys. The Communists got the whole world to fight for the boys," and then he repeated a lesson which has been driven home to the Negro masses these last few weeks. "It was mass pressure and militant fighting that stopped the lynchers, and will set the boys free now."

Speaks for Communist Party

Today, as in St. Luke's Hall Thursday night, the Negro people once more demonstrated their understanding of the role of the Communist Party in the struggle for the liberation of the Negro masses when they gave a great ovation to the representative of the Communist Party, a Negro worker, Charles Alexander, who was one of the speakers when the parade ended in an outdoor demonstration at 135th Street and Fifth Avenue.

Garvey Movement Speaker.

William Fitzgerald, Section organizer of the Harlem International Labor Defense, spoke. Another speaker was Mrs. Williams, a direct representative of the Universal Negro Improvement Association (Garvey movement) from Jamaica.

Although she said her organization was solidly in the fight for the Scottsboro boys, she still carried the narrow policy of the Garvey movement, and said that "The Negroes must fight their battle alone against a white world."

The response of over a thousand Negro workers who listen to a correction of Mrs. William's statement by Charles Alexander showed that the Negro people have their eyes wide open and know just what part of the "white world" they must fight.

Alexander said, "The white workers are our allies; our fight is against the white parasites, the white ruling class and against all oppressors of the Negro and white people." The reply to this was a great cheer.

THE DECATUR TRIAL.

Supreme Court Rulings in Similar Cases Are Cited.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial on "The Decatur Verdict" discussed very fairly the various aspects of the trial. However, it contained the following sentence: "But the final verdict was 'guilty,' and it is now difficult to see how an appeal could lie to the Supreme Court again, or to any higher power except the Governor."

The Supreme Court of the United States has held in several cases that the systematic exclusion of Negroes from jury duty deprives a Negro tried, convicted and sentenced to death by such jury of his life without due process of law. This right was first enunciated by the Supreme Court in ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, a case in which a Virginia judge was convicted of violating a Federal statute which provided that "no citizen, possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law, shall be disqualified from service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This statute is still in force and is now Section 44 of Title 8 of the U. S. Code Annotated.

In Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, one Strauder, a Negro, was convicted of murder in West Virginia and duly sentenced to death. He appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that by the laws of West Virginia no Negroes were eligible for jury service. The Supreme Court of the United States reversed Strauder's conviction and declared that the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibited racial discrimination in the selection of jurors.

This case was followed by Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, where the defendant Negro, sentenced to death for murder, alleged that all Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand juries of Texas. Here again the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously reversed his conviction and held that if the defendant Negro showed proof of such systematic exclusion no conviction against him could be had by such unfairly constituted jury. The Supreme Court said (at p. 447): "Whenever by any action of a State, whether through its Legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States."

No squarer holdings or clearer precedents could be desired to show that grounds for reversal by the appellate courts exist in "the second Scottsboro case." Counsel for the defense clearly proved, from the reports issued in THE NEW YORK TIMES, that Negroes were systematically excluded from jury duty in Alabama, and this evidence will be before the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal. In fact, it is difficult to see how that court can avoid reversing the Alabama courts in this case.

TWO SOUTHERN (white) EDITORIALS ON SCOTTSBORO

(From the Sylacaugua, Ala., News, April 7)

One possessed of that old Southern chivalry cannot read the trial now in progress in Decatur of the Negroes charged with assaulting two white women near Scottsboro and publish an opinion and keep within the law. The brutal manner in which the attorney employed by the International Labor Defense cross questions the witnesses makes one feel like reaching for his gun while his blood boils to the nth degree.

(From the Raleigh, N.C., Times, April 7)

On Thursday, the prosecution of the group of Negroes indicted for criminally assaulting two white women who were riding side-door Pullmans practically blew up with the admission of one Ruby Bates that her previous testimony was a "hoax." The other woman in the case had testified in this trial as she did in the first one, in a narrative in all points to convince a jury as well as inflame public opinion.

No comment is necessary as to the character of Miss Ruby and her companion, both of whom had been shown to be just as moral as Mehitabel, the Alley Cat. But their character aside the story they told pictured an atrocity which in the South is visited with death, even though the victim be a prostitute....

It is difficult to understand how two women—even such as Ruby Bates and Mrs. Price—could have gone the length of attempting to perjure away the lives of a number of innocent men. But the phenomenon is a common experience in the pathology of women—sometimes good as well as bad.

Ruby was snatched away to New York by a social worker, "got religion," and confessed to the ever dramatic Rev. Raymond Fosdick, D.D. Lacking the agitation about the case, including Communist outcry, the Negroes would have been killed by Alabama for nothing worse than a free-for-all fight with white men not so far removed from their own social status.

The sorry business illustrates the fundamental power of the Supreme Court to do justice, if only litigants have the counsel and the means to catch its ear.

It also serves to give a solemn warning to the South, all too apt to execute judicially, as well as by lynch law, when some psychopathic woman has a day dream and sticks to it on the witness stand.

GIRL RECANTS STORY OF NEGROES' ATTACK

Times

Ruby Bates Makes Dramatic Reappearance at Alabama Trial to Deny Assult.

4-7-33

SENT BACK BY FOSDICK

New York N.Y.

Girl Came to New York for Work and He Advised Her to 'Tell the Truth.'

SHE ACCUSES MRS. PRICE

Declares the Latter Concocted Her Testimony to Avoid Arrest on a Moral Charge.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 6.—Making a dramatic reappearance in the Scottsboro case today, Ruby Bates, previously missing State's witness, repudiated all her testimony given at the first trial two years ago and swore that Victoria Price had "framed" the Negro youths condemned to die at that trial for an alleged criminal attack on the two women while they were "hoboing" on a freight train.

Just before her entrance, Lester Carter, her former friend, produced by the defense as the first surprise witness, had given evidence before Judge James E. Horton and the jury trying Haywood Patterson, one of the Negrdes, which was borne out by the story of Ruby Bates on the stand. Greed for witness fees was one of the motives attribute dto Mrs. Price by Carter.

The Bates girl had been missing from her Huntsville home since Feb. 28. She declared she had come back to Alabama on the advice of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Church of New York City.

On his advice she said she had traveled from New York to Birmingham by motor bus "all by myself," and reported to Dr. Charles Clingman, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Advent, at 6:30 this morning. There she was met by Joseph Brodsky, counsel for the International Labor Defense, whom Dr. Clingman notified of her arrival.

When Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief counsel for the accused Negroes, called her name in the crowded court room, the consternation of the lawyers for the State, seated with Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, was apparent.

Through that door, guarded by militiamen with business-like bayonets, Ruby Bates walked slowly, a trim, girlish figure with dark complexion and downcast eyes. She was clad in a modish cloak of grayish blue over a dark blue chiffon dress. A straw hat to match the cloak was tilted smartly on one side of her head, showing her black bobbed hair.

Behind her, in some confusion at the attention she was attracting, there walked a stout, middle-aged bespectacled woman, who obviously had the missing witness under her matronly wing.

The whole scene was all that a motion picture director could have wanted. At that moment, Patterson, the lone defendant, could have jumped out a window and nobody would have missed him.

Identifying herself as Miss May Jones, the elderly woman testified that she had been called upon by the Rev. Dr. Clingman to deliver the missing witness at the courthouse "because he could not come himself."

Attorney General Knight asked for a subpoena for Dr. Clingman, who is expected to be present today when the State will seek more light on the reappearance of the Bates girl.

Miss Jones made her retreat from the tense courtroom and Ruby Bates took the witness stand to declare that her former friend and fellow-accuser of the Negroes had concocted the whole story of the attack.

The Price woman was brought into court from an ante-room to be identified, and for several minutes the two women, one in stylish clothes and the other in a calico skirt and black woolen sweater, glared at each other.

Mrs. Price was panting with anger and excitement. Attorney General Knight edged his way in between the two women and cautioned the State's main witness to "keep your temper." The Price woman was hurried out of court and the Bates girl continued her sensational evidence.

From the testimony of the girl and her friend, Carter, the defense spread upon the record an entirely new version of what happened on and just before March 25, 1931, when the Negroes were taken from a freight train by an armed posse after a fight with seven white hoboes.

They had met, Carter and the Bates girl testified, some time before the alleged attack when Victoria Price took the Bates girl to visit the former's friend, Jack Tiller, working with Carter in a chain gang on a road near Huntsville. It was decided that all four would go hoboing together when Tiller and Carter were released from the chain gang.

Says Mrs. Price Inspired Tale.

When the men regained their freedom, all four spent the night of March 23, 1931, at Huntsville, both the girl and Carter testified. They decided to go to Chattanooga in the morning.

Both testified that Victoria Price's statement that she and Miss Bates spent the night of March 24 at the home of "Callie Brochie" in Chattanooga was false. They declared they slept instead in the hobo jungle near the railroad yard described by previous witnesses.

There they met Orville Gilley, a young hobo known as "Carolina Slim," who accompanied Carter and the two women on their journey to Huntsville which ended in the arrests at Point Rock, Ala.

Ruby Bates discribed the tussle between the Negro and white hoboes in the next car of the freight train to the one on which they were riding and then, in answers to Mr. Leibowitz, denied that any of the Negroes had attacked them.

When Attorney General Knight confronted the Bates girl with the testimony she had given at the first trial, she answered:

"I told it just like Victoria did because she said we might have to stay in jail if we did not frame up a story after crossing a State line with men."

When the witness had described going to New York, finding work here, visiting Dr. Fosdick because "she had seen his name in a paper" and her return to Alabama, under Mr. Knight's questions, the court stenographer protested that he could not take another word and court adjourned.

Dr. Fosdick Urged Girl to Appear

The Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Church, confirmed reports from Decatur, Ala., yesterday that Ruby Bates had called upon him here, but regarded her admissions as confidential.

"I can make no statement further than to confirm the fact that Ruby Bates came to me for a private, confessional conference concerning her testimony at the trial," said Dr. Fosdick.

"That was on Friday, March 24. To the best of my knowledge and belief, she came alone and of her own free will."

Dr. Fosdick said that she came to his home, not to the Riverside Church.

"She was disturbed in her conscience about her testimony in the previous trial," Dr. Fosdick explained in answer to another question as to her motive in seeking him. "Of course, when she came and told me her state of mind about her previous testimony, I, as a clergyman, advised her to tell the truth. She promised me that she would go back to the second trial and do so."

Dr. Fosdick knew nothing of her stay in New York beyond the one visit which she made to him.

NEGRO FOUND GUILTY IN SCOTTSBORO CASE; JURY OUT 22 HOURS

Verdict Carries Sentence of Death After One Juror Had Held Out for Life Term.

DEFENSE SCORES FINDING

PROMPT APPEAL PLANNED

Prisoners Are Moved to Birmingham as Their Counsel Seek Postponement of Other Trials.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9.—Haywood Patterson, the 19-year-old Negro whose conviction at Scottsboro two years ago for an attack on two white girl hoboes was set aside by the United States Supreme Court, was convicted again today by a Morgan County jury which condemned him to death.

Eight other Negroes, two of them juveniles, are awaiting retrials, the first of which is scheduled to open before Judge James E. Horton here a week from tomorrow.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, said today that he would seek a postponement of the other trials pending the outcome of a second appeal in Patterson's case.

The jury, chosen from a venire composed of white men after the defense lost its motion to quash it on the ground that Negroes were arbitrarily excluded from jury service, took only three ballots in the twenty-two hours it was out after receiving the case at 12:45 P. M. yesterday.

On the first ballot, taken a few minutes after the jury retired to balance the evidence of Victoria Price against Ruby Bates, who had repudiated her former testimony, the jurors voted unanimously for a verdict of guilty. The second ballot was on the question of punishment, which was left to the discretion of the jury under the laws of Alabama. Eleven jurors voted to send Patterson to the electric chair, with one member holding out for life imprisonment. When the third ballot was taken the jurors voted unanimously for the death penalty.

Court Only Half Filled.

The verdict was returned at 10:58 this morning, when most of the churches of Decatur were holding services in observance of Palm Sunday. Less than half the seats in the court room where the defense had been battling for a week to save the Negro's life were taken when the jury reported. The only Negro present was the janitor of the court house, who stood silently turning his cap around in his hands as he waited.

At 10 o'clock word was sent from the jury room to Judge Horton in Athens, fifteen miles away, that the "twelve good men and true," who were sent to bed in disagreement at 11:35 last night, had reconciled their differences. A little later Patterson was marched into court from the jail under a heavy guard.

Captain Joseph Burleson, commanding a detail of thirty members of the National Guard assigned here for the trial, led the procession into the court room. Two militiamen followed with rifles ready. The guns of the two guards behind the Negro dug into his back

The militiamen sat down on either side of him behind the defense counsel table.

Wait Forty Minutes for Judge.

Three guardsmen took up posts outside the railed enclosure and three more were stationed at the one door leading from the court room. Downstairs other guardsmen cleared the corridors and lawns of loiterers, both white and black.

Patterson lolled in a chair, puffing a cigarette. His expressionless face was immobile in the forty minutes while he awaited Judge Horton's arrival, but sounds of laughter coming from the jury room seemed encouraging to the Negro.

G. W. Chamlee of Chattanooga, the only Southerner aligned with counsel for the defense, whispered a word of cheer to him. Mr. Leibowitz paced up and down the court room nervously. He was hollow-eyed for want of sleep.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General of Alabama, called into the prosecution when the State's jury system was challenged by the defense, sat at his table, the muscles of his face twitching nervously.

When Judge Horton arrived and took his place on the bench, Sheriff Bud Davis and J. H. Green, the clerk of the Circuit Court, occupied the seats on either side of him. The tired-faced young stenographer, John Holland, opened his note-book at a fresh page to take down the last words in a trial that has become a cause célèbre.

Tense Scene in Court Room.

"Let the jury come in," said Judge Horton.

The tension in the court room tautened. The door to the jury room was thrown open by a bailiff. Through it there filed the twelve men for whose decision America was waiting. They were a tired-looking group, but the faces of only a few bore the imprint of the momentous decision they had made. Some were smiling.

The jurors gathered before the bench, just as they had when they raised their hands as veniremen and swore that they would "a true verdict render" if they were chosen for the momentous task before them some ten days ago. Mr. Leibowitz peered into their eyes one by one as though seeking to read their minds while they stood there silent and still in the hushed court room.

Patterson continued sitting down. Nobody told him to stand up. Hardly a soul looked at him. All eyes were focused upon Eugene D. Bailey Jr., the draftsman who was elected foreman of the jury. In his hand was a slip of paper. He folded and unfolded it nervously. The man beside him nudged him when Judge Norton asked:

"Have you agreed upon a verdict?"

Foreman Appeared Dazed.

Apparently startled by the court's question, Bailey replied:

"We have, your Honor."

"Well, let me have it then," said Judge Horton.

Bailey took two steps forward and handed the paper to the judge who, in charging the jury yesterday, urged them to banish bigotry and prejudice from their minds that they might render a verdict based solely on the evidence before them. Judge Horton took the paper and read the fateful words written upon it in large letters in pencil:

Towering above the jurors, the six-foot jurist stood on the raised dais behind the bench and thanked the jurors for their "patience," and told tnem he believed they had rendered a verdict which they thought just and fair.

Patterson's face did not so much as twitch as he heard the words that spelled his doom unless the higher courts intervene in his behalf again. From the court room crowd there was not a murmur. There were not many among them who were surprised, despite the elaborate, painstaking defense prepared by the International Labor Defense and presented by Mr. Leibowitz, who has defended eighty-five clients in capital cases without losing one to the electric chair.

At first Judge Horton said he would go through the formality of pronouncing sentence tomorrow morning. When Mr. Leibowitz and Mr. Chamlee declared they could not be present to represent their client at that time, Attorney General Knight consented to a week's delay.

Leibowitz Greets Judge.

After the last formal words had been spoken, Mr. Leibowitz walked up to the bench and grasped Judge Horton's hand. The judge shook it warmly. Mr. Leibowitz, who had undertaken the defense of the penniless Negro without a fee, was trembling. He said:

"I am taking back to New York with me a picture of one of the finest jurists I have ever met. But I am sorry I cannot say as much for a jury which has decided this case against the weight of evidence."

"Now you are speaking under the pressure of feeling," said Judge Horton.

"No, I am not, your Honor," said Mr. Leibowitz. "I believe wholeheartedly that if the verdict in this case had been left to your Honor this Negro would have been acquitted."

"That is not my province; I cannot express an opinion on that," replied the judge, relinquishing the New York lawyer's hand.

"I know that, your Honor, but I could not help saying what I did," said Mr. Leibowitz.

Leibowitz Denounces Jury.

Afterward Mr. Leibowitz issued a statement in which he said:

"This is a black page in the history of American civilization. An occasion where once more twelve citizens of Alabama, swayed by bigotry and prejudice and hearkening to the yelps of a bombastic Ku Klux who hurled mud at the Jew and the people of the great State of New York to sympathetic ears in the court room crowded with lantern-jawed morons and lynchers, brought in a verdict that is a mockery of justice.

"The hatred for New York and other metropolitan centres of commerce and modern enlightenment was even more vicious than the hatred manifested by this outrageous verdict against the Negro.

"You must know this God-forsaken place, some of the creatures that live here, the mobs that burn crosses at night, masked like cowards so that decent people cannot see the sordidness and venom in their hideous countenances in order to understand that the verdict here was just a piece of judicial lynching.

Pays Tribute to Judge.

"This does not apply in any respect to the wonderful jurist who presided over this trial, but he was like a straw caught in the whirlpool of bigotry and intolerance that surged through the court room, and his calm and judicious warnings to the twelve in the jury box could not have fallen upon understanding or willing ears.

"As far as the defense is concerned, we shall fight with every drop of blood in our veins all the harder now because we feel that this outrageous challenge to humanity itself must be met in no uncertain terms if civilization and the humanity that the immortal Lincoln lived and died for is not to degenerate into Hitlerism on the one hand, and anarchy on the other.

"Will we appeal this case? Most assuredly; up to the highest court of our land that once before hurled this mess back into the laps of the bigots, and we'll continue to fight until hell freezes over, not only to save nine innocent men, but to uphold the good name of our country to the rest of the world on the plane where every decent citizen feels it rightfully belongs."

After the verdict was returned, Mr. Knight and his assistant, Thomas F. Lawson, left by motor for the State capital at Montgomery. Mr. Leibowitz caught the 2:30 train for New York and Mr. Chamlee drove to his home in Chattanooga. Joseph Brodsky, the International Labor Defense lawyer, left last night while the jury was out, to prepare for the trial of Charlie Weems, scheduled to open a week from tomorrow.

Patterson was removed to the Jefferson County jail in Birmingham, where the other eight defendants were taken last night.

Case Started Two Years Ago.

The case, which has stirred up feeling not only in the South but in other parts of this country and in Europe as well/originated two years ago on a freight train running between Chattanooga and Memphis, Tenn. On that train were the two women, Victoria Price and Ruby Bates; a dozen Negroes and seven white hoboes. Between Chattanooga and Stevenson, Ala., the white men and Negroes became involved in a fight, which ended when the whites were forced off the train about two and a half miles past Stevenson.

The white hoboes flashed word of their battle with the Negroes to Paint Rock, where an armed posse of between sixty and seventy-five countrymen stopped the train, arrested nine of the Negroes and took the two women into custody as material witnesses. At Paint Rock the girls charged that they had been criminally assaulted by the Negroes.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, at Scottsboro, convened a special session of the grand jury, and while the town seethed with excitement and open threats of lynching, the Negroes were indicted jointly and severally. Within two weeks they were tried and all but one, Roy Wright, then 13 years old, were convicted. The jury which sat in judgment on the juvenile Wright disagreed. The trials of the Negroes consumed three days, less than was taken for Patterson's trial here.

Labor Defense Enters Case.

The International Labor Defense, a Communist adjunct, interested itself in the case and prepared an appeal against the conviction of death sentences of the Negroes, although, as far as has been ascertained, none of the prisoners had any connection at that time with the Communist party, or any other radical organization.

The Supreme Court of Alabama affirmed the original verdicts and upheld the sentences recommended by Jackson County juries with one exception. Eugene Williams, one of the Negroes sentenced to death was held to be a juvenile and a new trial was ordered for him. Attorney General Knight's father wrote the prevailing opinion.

The cases of the other seven Negroes were appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which on Nov. 7. reversed the criminal verdicts, set aside the death sentences imposed at Scottsboro and ordered new trials on the ground that the first were unfair, because the accused Negroes were not adequately represented by counsel.

The cases were set for trial at Scottsboro on March 6, but Judge Hawkins granted a defense motion for a change of venue on the ground that an impartial consideration of the evidence was impossible at Scottsboro. The defense wanted to try the case in Birmingham, but it bowed to the will of the court.

Will Ask for Trial in Birmingham.

Now it is planned to file a new motion for a change of venue before the next trial opens, because of the speech of Wade Wright, County Solicitor, who in arguing the State's case to the jury, urged them to demonstrate that "Jew money from New York can't buy and sell Alabama justice."

Patterson was the first of the nine defendants to be tried a second time for his life. Before his trial actually opened, the defense attorneys waged two unsuccessful battles against the State's selective jury system.

Witnesses were called to prove the contention that qualified Negroes were barred from jury service in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, through maladministration of a statute the constitutionality of which has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court.

These onslaughts, unsuccessful though they were, helped to crystallize sentiment against the defense, already handicapped by the fact that its clients were Negroes accused of a heinous crime against white women. It was known that the Communists were organizing Negroes and using the Scottsboro case for that purpose.

The word went abroad that the case was being used as a wedge toward effecting social equality for the Negro in the South, and no amount of argument from Mr. Leibowitz, who disclaimed the rôle of reformer and crusader, could counteract that belief.

Girl Repudiated First Testimony.

At the trial, Ruby Bates, who two years ago testified that she had been attacked on the freight train as well as Victoria Price, repudiated her former testimony and charged the Price woman with "framing" the Negroes.

Lester Carter, one of the white hoboes thrown off the train, rounded up by deputy sheriffs and held in the Scottsboro jail until the first trials of the Negroes were concluded, corroborated her.

The white hoboes never were called to testify by the State.

The jury, however, chose to believe the Price woman, who stuck to the main part of her story, although uncontradicted evidence was presented to show that she did not tell the truth about her activities in Chattanooga.

Members of the jury admitted that they did not consider the testimony of the Bates girl, who was produced by the defense dramatically after a month's absence from her home in Huntsville. They refused to discuss that phase of the case.

Much was made by the State of the fact that Carter and the Bates girl appeared in court in comparatively stylish raiment purchased in New York City.

Judge Says Leibowitz Criticism of Jury Makes Fair Trial Now Impossible.

New York, N.Y.

SENTENCES NEGRO TO DIE

Erroneous Idea Exists About Southern Justice, Asserts Jurist, Recalling Cases.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 17.—Judge James E. Horton sentenced one of the nine Scottsboro Negroes to death today in accordance with the finding of a jury which found him guilty of attacking a white girl two years ago and postponed the trial of his eight co-defendants indefinitely.

In doing so Judge Horton declared that statements issued by opposing counsel since Palm Sunday, when the jury which heard the evidence against Haywood Patterson, the first of the Negroes to be retried in accordance with a United States Supreme Court order, convicted him a second time, made an impartial trial impossible in Morgan County now.

Some time between now and July [illegible], when the next regular term of court opens, defense counsel, who already have obtained a change of venue from Jackson County where the alleged crime was committed, will move once more for a transfer of the case to Mobile or Birmingham, two urban communities where they say that they believe a trial free from extraneous issues of religion and race may be had.

Since a week ago last Sunday, when the jury considering Patterson's case reported, driblets of information regarding the activities of Samuel S. Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, have been trickling into Decatur. Persons here have read that he has addressed meetings of Negroes in Harlem churches and that colored women have embraced him in New York.

This has prejudiced the populace against him and this morning when Joseph Brodsky, International Labor Defense lawyer, declared that Mr. Leibowitz believed in social and economic equality between black and white there was a tense situation in the courtroom, relieved only by Judge Horton's hasty adjournment of the proceedings.

Death Sentence Mandatory.

The session opened with Judge Horton on the bench ready to pronounce sentence upon Patterson, who was found guilty a second time and condemned to death by the jury after the United States Supreme Court held that his first trial was unfair. The verdict of the jury left Judge Horton no choice since under the Alabama law the jury has the power to fix punishment as well as decide the guilt or innocence of the accused.

Patterson, escorted into the courtroom by National Guardsmen leaned upon the bench, his eyes focussed upon a corner of the courtroom remote from Judge Horton. When the court asked him if he had anything to say before sentence was pronounced, he said:

"I ain't had a fair trial. Ain't seen no girls on that train. I ain't had a fair trial."

Judge Horton, unperturbed by the Negro's statement, outwardly at least informed him that the jury which convicted him had decided otherwise and said that it was the judgment of the court that he should die in the electric chair at Kilby Prison, on June 16.

Mr. Brodsky then filed notice of appeal and offered a "skeleton motion" for a new trial. Judge Horton said that he would not hear motions, "piecemeal" and called the trial of Charlie Weems, for which 100 venire had been summoned. Before anything could happen, however, Judge Horton read a statement from the bench.

Judge Horton's Statement.

"Gentlemen, there has been set for trial this morning the case of the State vs. Charlie Weems," Judge Horton said. "This is the second of what are known as the 'Scottsboro' cases. Something over a week ago the case of the State vs. Haywood Patterson was tried by a jury of this county. The nature of these cases, being a case where a Negro is accused of the rape of a whit woman, is such as would naturally excite resentment, and it is always difficult, even under the most favorable circumstances, to obtain a fair and impartial verdict.

"The law has always recognized in cases of rape, whether committed by one on a person of their own race or by an attack on another race, that the accusation itself is apt to excite an undue sympathy for the accuser, and it enjoins upon the court to see to it that this undue influence is removed so far as the court may be able to do.

"There is a great deal of misinformation in the minds of the public generally in regard to rape cases in the South. I have been on the bench for over twelve years; more than ten of these years, among my duties has been the trial of criminal cases. The district which I now serve is composed of four counties lying on both sides of the Tennessee River, and the counties contain a mixed population. Formerly Madison County was also in this district, and it is one of the larger and more populous counties of the State, and it also contained a great number of Negroes.

Recalls Previous Cases.

"During this period I have had only three cases where a Negro was accused of an attack upon a white woman. Two of the indictments were for rape, and one was for an assault with intent to rape. This assault with intent to rape occurred within Limestone County, the county of my residence. This was a case where a young northern girl unsophisticated; and who was making a long trip for the first time went aboard an N. and N. train at Cincinnati to come south. There was a Negro porter on that train. As the train entered Limestone County the porter followed her into the dressing room, and tried to take liberties with her. Her screams caused him to desist and brought help. He was tried and convicted.

The other cases were tried in this the County of Morgan. In one of these cases a woman accused a negro of committing rape upon her and the trial was had before a jury. During the taking of the evidence upon the guilt of the accused were introduced and after the case went to the jury, a former solicitor, Daven Almon, a man with a big heart, who now sleeps in your city cemetery, came to me and told me that some things he had heard convinced him of the innocence of the accused, and he was much disturbed lest the jury convict. The jury stood eight for acquittal and four for conviction. Afterward upon the motion of the same solicitor, the case was dismissed.

Holds Ideas of South Erroneous.

"There was another case in this court. I will not go into details, but the evidence was of such a nature that the innocence of the accused appeared certain and the unwholesome case was thrown out of court. I live in the county of Limestone, across the river from this city, and that county has between 30,000 and 35,000 population, about one-third of whom are Negroes. That county has contained a mixed population 115 years.

"During that entire period, except for the one instance I have cited to you that occurred on the L. & N. train, the parties to which were residents of far distant States, there has not been a single instance, so far as my information goes, and so far as I have been able to find out from diligent inquiry, of either a rape or an attempted rape by a Negro upon a white woman.

"I think this simple recitation of the facts are sufficient to disprove the egregiously erroneous ideas which exist in regard to the relations of the races in the South, and that conviction follows accusation.

"On account of certain influences, many of which to this court appear sinister, and are actuated by a desire to stir up and foment strife between the races in the South it has been difficult to try what are known as the Scottsboro cases upon the real facts. I am not now passing judgment upon the verdict in the case already tried. I know the court had great difficulty in preventing extraneous influences having some effect on the jury. With these influences still existing, with the public mind still disturbed, with thousands of true and deeply patriotic citizens desiring that justice be done and that the South appear in its true light, there has come to my attention a statement published, which to my mind makes it impossible at the present time to fulfill the high purpose of a court of justice.

Defense Counsel's Statement Cited.

"I do not know whether the leading counsel for the defendant made the statement imputed to him. I am not stating that he did, but so far as it might influence this trial it could make little difference whether he actually made it or not. The effect will be the same. The published statement was uncalled for. It was addressed to a panel of highly intelligent jurors, and men who wished to do what was right in the case.

"But the statement itself must of necessity make impossible any just and impartial verdict to be arrived at this time. The accused Negro must be the victim of this statement. His leading attorney would be a millstone about his neck.

"It therefore becomes the unquestioned duty of this court at the present time to enter of its own motion a continuance of this case until such a time when in its judgment a fair and impartial trial may be had. Therefore the case of the State of Alabama vs Charlie Weems is continued, and the court so orders."

Knight Protests "Slur."

As soon as Judge Horton had finished Attorney General Knight was on his feet. He said that he could not sit idly by and hear an Alabama jury maligned.

"No," said he, "the people of Jackson and Morgan Counties of Alabama are not bigots. Jackson County and the people of Morgan County—of the South have been and will be fair. I have no apologies to make for any statement I have made."

The statement to which Judge Horton referred and over which all Morgan County is steaming is the one Mr. Leibowitz made immediately after the verdict of guilty was returned. He said nothing else could be expected of twelve men swayed by considerations of race prejudice after Wade Wright, Circuit Solicitor, had pleaded to them to show that "Jew money from New York cannot buy justice in Alabama."

After Mr. Leibowitz's statement was published in newspapers of Alabama, Attorney General Knight said:

"A statement in The New York Herald Tribune quoting Samuel Leibowitz as reflecting upon the people of Morgan County and members of the Heywood Paterson jury has been called to my attention.

"Leibowitz is quoted as stating, when asked how the jury could find the verdict it did, that 'If you ever say those creatures, those bigots, whose mouths are slits in their faces, whose eyes pop out at you like frogs, whose chins drip tobacco juice bewhiskered and filthy, you would not ask how they could do it.'

"If this statement was made by Leibowitz it can be taken only as a wail of a contemptible loser. Particularly in view of the fact that in his address to the jury he lauded the people of Morgan County and the members of the jury to the skies.

"I was very glad, indeed, that Leibowit's insincere flattery of the court, myself and the jury could not swerve the jury from a just verdict in this case when they believed, as I do, that Heywood Patterson was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt."

Reporting the trial of the Scotts-

hiladelphia Tribune, the Kansas

N, were the only colored report-rs at the press tables. On the two days a representative of Florida paper attended.

Had Many Thrills

"We had our first thrill," Jones said, "when Bristol authorities took the Chevrolet coupe in which we were driving, to the police station. We had parked it in front of the hotel in which we were stopping. It cost $2.50 to get it back.

"We worked out a traveling schedule which would put us in Decatur just after dark, but not too late after dusk, Sunday. We knew that we were breaking a precedent in Alabama by attempting to report the trial where a white woman was to testify in a rape case. We also knew that in Decatur, just fifty miles from Scottsboro and Huntsville, there would be much feeling.

"The Associated Negro Press sent a white reporter to cover the assignment because it did not feel certain that a colored man could enter the court-house in a trial like this down in Alabama.

"In addition to a letter from Judge James E. Horton, we got another break when early Monday morning before seven o'clock we went to the court-house and found there former mayor and now Probate Judge Malone. He came from South Carolina and one of us being from that state, we started a con-

[illegible] which added in considerable help for the Co-Op correspondents.

"We found a stopping place in the home of an old Decatur family, in which, to our surprise, proved to be in a white neighborhood just a few doors from where Victoria Price was living.

"By 9 o'clock Monday morning the court-house area was crowded. Tobacco-spitting farmers from Huntsville, most of them wearing overalls, were there in large numbers. Colored farmers also clad in overalls were there. About the lawn there were women sitting at vantage points expecting to get a glimpse of the Scottsboro boys when they came in from Birmingham.

Get First Scare

"Co-Op correspondents got their first scare when, while looking for the janitor, they found that they had inadvertently wandered into the white ladies' comfort room in the basement. When P. Bernard Young looked up and saw the sign reading 'White Women,' he made one jump which took him out of the basement. After he thus hurpreceded him by the fractional part of a second. It was bad enough to be in Decatur, but to be two reporters wandering about in the white ladies' comfort room was the limit of daring.

"When we arrived at the office of the sheriff to check up our credentials, a woman, who afterwards proved to be Victoria Price, was sitting there. Mr. Young went up to her to ask where he could find the sheriff. Well, the look she popped out to him was sufficient answer to his question. After that he picked men for all questions of information.

More Humorous Stuff

"Another somewhat humorous incident, and not quite so humorous either, was an incident which happened on the very first night we were there. After we had written and mailed out first releases around eleven-thirty, we decided to take a walk down Vine Street, the colored 'white way' of Decatur. A dance was in progress and we sauntered in. Being strangers we stood up looking on until the promoter came over and introduced us to some people, among them a group of young ladies.

"That our every movement was being watched was demonstrated by the fact that on the following evening, the Birmingham News carried a story in which it said 'Two colored reporters from the North attended a dance in the colored section Monay night and high-hatted the local blacks.'

"That our presence had also been noted by some of the revelers interested in the ladies to whom we were introduced, came to our knowledge the following day, when someone told us as we left a restaurant that they hoped none of the white people would harm us. A voice coming from one of the men present [illegible] out 'It's not going to be the [illegible] going to [illegible] going to do it.' That remark cut short any other social ambitions the Co-Op reporters might have had for the rest of the time they were in Decatur.

Boys Sifted Through

"Speaking seriously, however, this trial was the most momentous thing that has happened since the Civil War. Alabama has received the shock of its existence. Those whites sitting there at this trial bore the expression of wonder—they could not understand how such a thing could happen down there where the word of a white woman was being challenged in a rape case; where colored reporters were sitting and listening. They looked on with suppressed passion.

"There were times when you felt that you could just reach out in the air and feel the hatred. They listened with open mouths when Judge Horton told them earnestly that the militia would shoot this time to kill if a lynching was attempted. It all seemed so strange to them down there in Alabama. How could it happen?

In Ku Klux Nest

"Although none of the daily papers published the stories of what actually took place in reference to mob action, there were three times when Co-Op reporters knew definitely that mobs formed.

"Lookouts in Huntsville and Scottsboro, disguised, reported mobs forming for assaults on both the defense attorneys and the Scottsboro boys.

"One night, while keeping an appointment with a white reporter with whom we were co-operating we went to the Cornelian Apartments, a white place where reporters were living. He was to meet us out in front of the place and when we got there he motioned to a group in front of the door and told us to walk around the block until they left.

"When we returned the crowd was still there and we decided to walk a longer distance down one of the streets. Suddenly we found ourselves in the midst of groups of cars filled with white men and standing in the dark. We got out as quickly as possible.

"A half hour later the reporter called to tell us that it had been planned for that group to attack the apartment while 200 men at that very moment in another building nearby were to take the boys from the jail when the militia left to quiet the disturbance at the aparment.

"It was following this that Judge Horton made his grim speech warning the mob that the militia had been ordered to kill those making a mob attempt.

Grim Decision

"It was not love for either the Scottsboro boys nor the defense attorneys that Alabama authorities desired to quell mob action. They had a taste of the U.S. Supreme Court, and they wanted to make [illegible] that the guilty verdict would [illegible]

Ruby Bates Appears

"While the appearance of Ruby Bates provided the dramatic moment of thrill, it was the testimony of Lester Carter which has given the Alabama people the most concern. Carter testified that he was with Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on that ride, that he was arrested with them in Paint Rock, taken with them to Scottsboro and kept in jail with them.

"He made the damaging statement that they would not let him testify at Scottsboro, and that if he had testified, he would have told the story he was telling now. This story was that Victoria Price had framed the Scottsboro boys and coerced Ruby Bates to state with her that these boys raped them. Her reason was, as she told him, to keep her and Ruby from having to serve a term in jail for hoboing and possibly on a Mann Act charge.

"We had been told of the possible appearance of Ruby Bates, and a few minutes before she came into the court room, a white man passed our table and whispered that the stage was about to be set.

"We knew that a big moment was imminent. There was an uncanny silence in the court-room. One of the doors opened and Samuel Leibowitz, followed by a chicly clad young woman, entered.

"In a dramatic voice Mr. Leibowitz said, 'Your Honor, the defense offers Ruby Bates.'

"Over at the table of the prosecution there was a commotion. Out in the audience of whites, including women, there was an intensification of the stares of amazement. It was the first time that a white girl had ever come into court to retract a rape story.

"Why did that 19-year-old white girl come? Why did she come there and bare a life of shame, face an angry white mob and defy a white attorney-general?

"The prosecution taunted her mercilessly on the stand, declaring she had been bought with 'Jew money from New York.' Repeatedly they hurled at her the question, 'where did you get that dress—that hat—those hose—those shoes?

"The defense answered this question by making Ruby tell of a worried conscience, a repentance and a determination to make things right by telling the truth.

"But to the Alabamians, it all seemed so unnatural. There was a pretty white girl defending a colored boy whom the prosecution claimed raped her.

Jury Fight

"The jury fight was the big struggle in the trial, both from the standpoint of the prosecution and the defense. Alabama would not give an inch in this matter which might change the status of racial relations.

"A white Alabamian declared that already the colored people are learning to talk back in that state. Witnesses came on the stand and boldly testified for the defense. They would rather have the Supreme Court send the trial back a dozen times than to have the privilege of [illegible] colored people under their [illegible] heels, disturbed.

"That is why it will probably never be possible for these boys to get a fair trial in that state."

Miss McDowell Here

Miss Mary McDowell, white, of the Students' Settlement House in Chicago, Illinois, was one of the visitors at the meeting.

"I am glad to have been here, especially this morning, to hear word right from Scottsboro," Miss McDowell said.

"I have written letters on the subject, and have done as many things as I could do. It takes patience and you all have that patience. You show it all the time. I think those who agree with you have to have patience, too, but we find it hard to have it."

Performers

George Casmay of Pittsburgh Pa., formerly of the "Africana" company, played and sang several original compositions. He was accompanied by E. White of this city.

Two small boys, Thomas Rideout and Carl Davis, proteges of Isaac Thompson, manager of the Harlem Theatre, were enthusiastically received in two song numbers which the former sang and the latter played.

Other visitors at the meeting were Mrs. Vivian Alleyne, Mrs. Estelle Dye, Mrs. Annie Hitchens, Mrs. Minnie Gaines, Mrs. H. E. Walden, Mrs. Vashti Murphy, Miss Letitia Brown, Miss Jean Murrell, of Cleveland, Ohio; David Beasley and Dewey Trigg, also of Cleveland.

The Scottsboro Case is not finished—it has just started. The Supreme Court will have to pass on all Nine Cases. That is just as certain as night follows day. The first case has been lost in Alabama. It will be won in Washington before the Supreme Court, where it was taken in the first instance.

What is needed? Certainly, not talk. Certainly, not a Grand March to Washington. The thing needed is MONEY to send first class lawyers to the Courts of Alabama and then to Washington. Everything is set for a long, drawn-out legal battle. Stop talking. Get some money together.

The Pittsburgh Courier is not going to try the cases. The Courts try cases — not newspapers. The Courier will receive and account for every dollar any of its readers may send for the Scottsboro case. Stop talking about it, and send money. Make Money Orders to The N. A. A. C. P. and send them to The Courier. Or, make Money Orders to The I. L. D. Scottsboro Defense, and send them to The Courier. Or, if you prefer, make the Money Orders to The Courier Defense Fund, and send them to The Courier. In each and every case, no matter how your Money Order is made, if the money is sent to The Courier, we will see that every dollar gets to the right place, with full credit given the sender.

The Daily Worker and the Scottsboro Case

Daily Worker

The attempt of the Southern ruling class to lynch the nine innocent Scottsboro boys on the crudest frame-up brings into bold relief how vital is the Daily Worker for the toiling masses and oppressed people of this country. For it is safe to say that if the Daily Worker had not been in existence on that April day two years ago when the Scottsboro boys were taken off a freight car in Alabama, the legal lynching of these boys would have gone ahead as scheduled. Two or three weeks after their arrest, the boys would have been placed one after another into the electric chair at Kilby Prison where their lives would have been burnt out.

New York

It was the Daily Worker alone which immediately threw the hot spotlight of exposure upon this legal lynching. It was the Daily Worker which immediately raised the cry, "The Scottsboro Boys are innocent! We must wrest them from the hands of the ruling class lynchers! The Scottsboro boys must go free!"

The capitalist press of the country, where it was not altogether silent about this "trivial incident," gave the case two or three lines on some back page, merely mentioning the co[illegible] execution of the "Negro rapists."

The Daily Worker alone hammered home the International Labor Defense policy of legal defense backed by mass protest, which stands between the boys and execution.

The Daily worker is the only daily newspaper in the English language in the U. S. which defends the interests of the toiling masses.

It must grow into a mighty voice!

By WALLING KEITH

Associate Editor The Advertiser

"Ruby, tell me the truth about this case. If either of you girls has not told the whole truth about this Scottsboro case tell me now. I promise that no harm will come to either of you."

Thomas Knight, Jr., the youthful Attorney General of Alabama, faced two cotton mill girls as they sat in a room of a Birmingham hotel.

Advertiser

The man's dark eyes searched the faces of Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, as he added: "I don't want to send those Negroes to the chair on perjured testimony . . . I don't want to have those seven Negroes flying over my bed at night when I go to sleep!"

Montgomery

And Ruby Bates and Victoria Price reiterated their stories of how they had been attacked by seven Negro hoboes on a freight car near Stevenson, Ala., more than two years ago.

Ala.

The above conversation took place two months before the trial of one Heywood Patterson, who this week was convicted and sentenced to death in the electric chair, the extreme penalty for rape in Alabama.

When Atty.-Gen. Knight told the two North Alabama mill girls: "I don't want those seven Negroes flying over my bed at night," he meant just that, and he might have spoken for every white and black citizen of this State.

The white people of Alabama know that in many respects their black neighbors are underprivileged. And no honest white man will deny it.

And because white men in Alabama recognize this as do the black men, they feel the weight of responsibility bearing down more heavily on their consciences when they seek to deal justly with the dark-skinned people who live and work and play here.

The God-fearing people of this State do not want "those seven Negroes flying over their beds at night." And the people of the State of Alabama could not sleep peacefully if they even so much as condoned the taking of the life of the humblest black man unjustly.

Despite all that has been said of racial hatred and prejudice and resentment at outside interference, the law-abiding folks who live in Alabama have been concerned only with one thing in these infamous rape trials. They have wanted—and still want—the "Scottsboro" Negroes punished if they are guilty and turned scot-free if they are innocent. And justice is being done in Alabama as the world looks on.

* * * *

Now to disregard the guilt or innocense of the men, which is for a jury of 12 men to decide, let us turn to the world outside of Alabama.

Unhappily most people outside of Alabama believe the Negroes are innocent, and that Alabama has not and is not giving them a fair trial.

The press of the nation has passed judgment on the courts and people of this State.

Oddly enough, the great New York Times, whose staff correspondent, Raymond Daniell, has shown bias in some of his reports, is the most generous of the Eastern newspapers toward the good name of the State.

Though Mr. Daniell has waxed a bit editorial in his news stories, prompted by a "New York viewpoint" not in sympathy with the attitude of natives here, his newspaper in an editorial page article sees no reason why the case of Heywood Patterson should be taken to a higher court. The Times, however, does think that some prejudice entered the trial—basing its conclusions no doubt on the unfortunate utterance of Solicitor Wade about "Jew money from New York," which was promptly striken from the record by Judge Horton.

The Times thinks that the next step toward freeing the Negro—"if any"—should lie with the Governor.

The New York World-Telegram is not so generous with Alabama justice. Says the great liberal journal:

"The conviction of Haywood Patterson, first of the Negro defendants in the second trials of the Scottsboro cases, will be appealed from. It should be.

"Among other things prejudicial to a fair trial, the defense attorney was able to show that the jury law apparently was administered to exclude Negroes from the panel for this case. On more than one occasion during the trial the State attorneys conducted themselves in such a way as to prevent orderly and judicious consideration of evidence by the jury.

"In repudiating her testimony at the earlier trial Ruby Bates last Thursday swore that the other girl in the case, Victoria Price, had framed the Negro youths. Lester Carter, a white friend of the two girls, confirmed the testimony of Ruby Bates."

The New York Herald-Tribune has show sympathy for the Negroes from the beginnin of the case, and has doubted all along tha Alabamians would weigh the testimony without racial prejudice.

Heywood Broun, the liberal thinker of The New York World-Telegram, who expresses his own opinion and not the opinions of his paper, indicts the South in general by declaring that "the South imposes rather more lynchings, legal and otherwise" to which he adds "Chicago and New York take it out in tuberculosis."

Mr. Broun, however, thinks the Negro is mistreated in the whole of the 48 United States, and sees no reason why the East should charge Alabama with bigotry. "That would merely be a matter of the moat calling the beam black," he says.

Nevertheless, Mr. Broun in his own Yearn-For-Human-Rights manner thinks that the trial was unjust and it is to be pitied. True, Mr. Broun has an idea that all humble beings are always right while the "ruling classes" are forever wrong, but he is an honest, courageous commentator, and his writings carry weight in the East.

Mr. Broun, as most other writers who frown at the Decatur decision, bases quite a bit of his argument on the use of the phrase "New York Jew money" by Solicitor Wade, which was based on the fact that Ruby Bates said the woman who gave her money to return to Alabama from New York with her turn-coat story, was Jewish.

* * * *

Turning back South, we find that The Baltimore Evening Sun, one of the most admired journals on either side of the Potomac, is much distressed over Solicitor Wade's comment.

The Evening Sun uses it as an argument that "simple jurors" can be falsely led by lawyears who make unfounded or prejudicial charges, even though the presiding judge orders the charge striken from the record and from the minds of the jurors.

It might be said here that before the verdict was returned the honey-voiced defense attorney praised the jurors in the trial of Heywood Patterson most highly. He called them "honorable and intelligent men." And from highly reliable sources we learn that the 12 men who sat on the case composed one of the most intelligent juries that ever tried a criminal case in Alabama.

But as we come closer home, we find that the press of the neighboring States is much more frank—and about as doubtful of Alabama justice—as the Eastern journals.

The Charlotte Observer, mistaking a rape law for Southern chivalry to be extended only to the virtuous flowers of ladyhood, jumps at conclusions.

Says the gallant defender of the virtous and the deplorer of "fallen women":

"There is no denying the fact that sectionalism prevailed with the jury in the now odorous Scottsboro case, in which the verdict of guilty was once more rendered against a negro charged with attack on a white woman. In the first trial the public had reason to believe that there had been a case of brutal assault on two white women by a group of negroes hoboing a freight train, but an entirely new situation was developed at the second trial, when one of the alleged victims of the outrage admitted to perjury in her former testimony and denied that she had been attacked. It further developed that the two women defendants were by no means representative of Southern womanhood, the characters which they bore inviting forcible approach by their negro companions on the train. The jury was drawn from a population incensed by first reports of the alleged occurrences, and was influenced by the sentiment still surviving, and demanded the life of the negro in face of the new light that had been thrown on the case. Here we have one case in which the appeal process is eminently justified and the anticipation holds that the decision forthcoming from this appeal will right the situation."

The question of chastity did not enter the case. The Alabama law against rape was drawn to protect any and all women from attack. The Observer may be surprised to learn that less than two years ago a white man was convicted on that charge for an attack on a Negro woman in the "Cradle of the Confederacy."

Now comes The Asheville Citizen, another Carolina newspaper with a more sensible and less bitter condemnation of the conviction of the Negro.

"Ever-mindful that it is hard to judge a case from distance," The Citizen is distressed by the outcome of the trial.

Declares The Citizen:

"That simple justice could be done in an atmosphere such as has prevailed at Decatur is hard to believe. The propaganda which has been waged for the accused negroes has been of a kind calculated to inflame feeling in Alabama against those who have been responsible for it. On the other hand, some of the speeches which were made before the jury by the prosecuting officers were shocking appeals to prejudice. For example, Solicitor Wright's appeal: "Are you going to let Jew money from New York buy justice in Alabama'?"

There again is that unhappy remark of Solicitor Wade, seized to make a plea against the verdict.

* * * *

Coming a bit closer to Alabama, we stop in Charleston, S. C., the home of the sane and independent-minded News and Courier, of Dr. Ball.

This is what The News and Courier has to say:

"Guilt or innocence of the 'Scottsboro boy' is not for The News and Courier to pass upon. It was not on the jury. If there has been no fair trial outside pressure on Alabama is chiefly responsible for it. Good intentions of strangers were a leading factor in the infamous tragedy of Leo Frank's death, in the Sacco and Vanzetti case, in many an American case. Barbarous or not Alabama is a sovereign state. So is Massachusetts. If the United States is to take over the criminal courts in Alabama it would as well send to the state the marines lately recalled from Nicaragua now as later. Interference in Alabama court trials by outside organizations is as dangerous as it would be in those of France or Russia and as excusable. The menace in the agitation is to the masses of innocent Southern negroes. Its principal effect is to encourage and incite ruffianism and defeat the enemies of lynching."

Dr. Ball's paper is decidedly Southern in its attitude toward the so-called "race problems." It has been preaching for quite a while that the South should not attempt to dictate to the North whether it may drink intoxicating beverages if the North so wishes. In turn, The News and Courier has asked that the South be let alone, arguing that each State could handle its own problems in the most fair and efficient manner.

But The News and Courier should not be surprised to learn that the sensible people of Alabama have not allowed the resentment of outside interference to shadow the question of the guilt or innocence of the Negro prisoners.

Returning to North Carolina, we find the conservative Greensboro Daily News, much agitated over the conviction of Heywood Patterson.

The Daily News says:

"With conviction of Heywood Patterson, first of the nine negroes to face retrial in connection with the celebrated "Scottsboro case," only one major question remains unanswered in the public mind.

"The approach to that necessarily lies through a maze of racial and sectional bitterness. Even among sound thinking Alabamians, if expressions of the press are to be accepted as criteria, the idea has been widely prevalent that the State's courts, its system and methods of justice, rather than the actual defendants, were on trial. Against that general background, which is easily understood although in no wise condoned, prosecution counsel utilized every opportunity to play upon the defense of womanhood, to stress differences of race, to emphasize that outside forces, northerners, Jews, radicals, were attempting to discredit and thwart Alabama justice, to erect a wall of feeling and prejudice, to which the court itself was apparently immune but by which the average juror's mind, representative of popular sentiment, was emotionally circumvented. The presence of troops, months after the alleged crime occurred, accentuated the mass feeling and tended to create an atmosphere in which calm and deliberative justice had little chance to function. Even defense counsel added fuel to the fire when it sought, although within its constitutional rights, to secure negro representation on the jury. . .

"Thus one arrives at that question which remains unanswered: What constitutes a reasonable doubt in the eyes of an Alabama jury?"

* * * *

And of the thousands of words of protest over the conviction of the Negro that one question, it seems, is by far the most important.

Just what does constitute a reasonable doubt in the eyes of an Alabama jury?

Those 12 jurors who have decided that Heywood Patterson shall die in the little white-washed room in Kilby Prison represented the highest of intelligence in Morgan County, and in Alabama.

Those jurors like Attorney General Knight and the people of Alabama, do not want the ghosts of seven Negroes flying over their beds at night.

It takes no superstitious men to fear ghastly nightmares of burdened conscience.

Alabama is afraid of ghosts. Its people are afraid of burdened conscience in this God-fearing State.

But in the case of Heywood Patterson, despite the hasty conclusions based on half-facts and sometimes on gross misinformation formed by those outside the State, Alabama has no ghost to fear.

Patterson was tried for the rape of two girls and on that charge alone.

The people of the State will see, too, that the six other Negroes are tried only on the charge of rape, and not because they received aid from persons outside the State, or because their skins are black, or because the State wishes to make the first convictions "stick."

Even editorial defenders of a Commonwealth, God knows, want no ghosts "flying over their beds at night."

And Alabamians can sleep in peace.

New Republic

New York N.Y.

THE outcome of the trial of Heywood Patterson, first of the Scottsboro defendants to be retried, terrible as it is, should have surprised no one who knows the strength of racial prejudice or had followed the previous history of the case. Mrs. Mary Heaton Vorse shows in her article published elsewhere in this issue that justice had nothing to do with the thought processes of the jury. Local sentiment was bent on "getting the nigger," and nothing was allowed to stand in the way of that determination. Some people have sought to argue that if Communists had not aided the defense, and two of the counsel had not been from New York, and had not been members of the Jewish race, the trial might have had a different outcome; but we see no reason to believe that this would have been true. In fact, the savagery of the prosecution's attack upon "Jew money from New York" was probably the best thing that could have happened for the defendants, since it is hard to see how the United States Supreme Court can fail to take cognizance of this gross appeal to bigoted race prejudice. Another important basis for appeal is the proved and admitted fact that Negroes are not permitted to serve on juries in the state of Alabama. The Supreme Court has before interested itself in violations of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. It is not unlikely that the Court will now rule on the question omitted from its previous Scottsboro case decision—the prejudiced atmosphere in which the trial was conducted. From a legal standpoint, this trial was in several ways even more outrageous than the other one, in spite of the fact that the presiding judge was impartial. To be sure, all that the Supreme Court can do is to order still another trial; but even the state of Alabama, after a double rebuke from Washington, might at last see the desirability of giving the defendants at least the semblance of a fair trial.

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

The second conviction of Haywood Patterson, one of the seven defendants in the Scottsboro, Ala., rape case, surprises many people. Death is not the penalty for rape in this part of the country. Where there is a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt in any criminal case, the law all over the country is that he is to be discharged.

Samuel S. Leibowitz

There was a reasonable doubt in this case. One of the two white women supposed to have been attacked in that railroad gondola by the seven colored men swore at the second trial that she had perjured herself at the first, because of intimidation, and that neither she nor the white woman with her had been attacked. A white man who was with the women backed up this testimony. There was a further reasonable doubt from the start, since these women were known not to have been of previously chaste character, and a woman who rides the freights with hoboes risks the charge of being something of a hobo herself.

For all that, and in spite of the eminent fairness of the presiding judge, the jury convicted the first of these defendants, and he faces the electric chair. How explain it?

We're afraid the trouble lies chiefly in the tactics used by the defense. Mr. Samuel Leibowitz has been most successful in criminal defenses in his home territory, New York. But when he went South to try this case, he began to inflame the anti-black and anti-North prejudices of the Southerners. He did this by impeaching their jury system and scolding them for their prejudices.

One result was the prosecuting attorney's remark about "showing them that Alabama justice cannot be bought with Jew money from New York." Another result was that the jury forgot about the alleged rapists being on trial and concluded that Alabama's courts and sectional feelings and local customs were on trial, with New York as the complaining witness. That should explain why the jury brought in a verdict in Alabama's favor, and incidentally against the real defendant in the case.

Radicalism is well known to make many Southerners see red. If the radicals are chiefly interested in making more martyr medicine out of this case, the thing for them to do is to go on using the same tactics in the rest of the trials. But if they sincerely want to see six apparently innocent men acquitted, their sensible course by all odds would seem to be to soft-pedal the radical and racial comments and retain some Alabama lawyer to conduct the defense. A local man could talk to the Alabama jurors as one of the home folks, not as a New Yorker come to tell them how to treat the colored people. And if the other six defendants could be acquitted, the Governor of Alabama would presumably commute or pardon Haywood Patterson.

We think, too, that the proposed march to Washington by New York colored people would be ill-advised. It might give the marchers satisfaction, but, like the radical martyr medicine, it would be hard on the defendants in the case.

PUSH SCOTTSBORO DEMANDS TODAY

Hearing on Before Judge Hawkins

CHATTANOOGA, March 1[illegible].—The International Labor Defense will press their demands before Judge A. E. Hawkins tomorrow for a new change of venue for the approaching Scottsboro trials from Decatur to Birmingham, Ala.

In a statement two days ago the I. L. D. charged a conspiracy between Judge Hawkins and State Attorney General Knight to fix the new trials in northern Alabama, the better to insure legal or extra-legal lynching for the boys.

The defense attorneys will follow up their action tomorrow with a demand for the right of private audience with the nine innocent Scottsboro boys and an appeal for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the eight boys in Kilby prison are incarcerated in the death house.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, famous New York attorney, arrived here yesterday to plead the motions being pressed by the defense. With Leibowitz are associated Gen. Chamlee, of Chattanooga, Joe Brodsky and Irving Schwab of New York City.

SCOTTS[illegible]RIALS DELAY[illegible]TION

Defense Asks Quashing on the Ground No Negroes Were on Jury Finding Indictments.

WILL ARGUE ISSUE TODAY

Prosecution Fights It, but Agrees to Venue Change—Girl Witness Missing Three Days.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SCOTTSBORO, Ala., March 6.—An unexpected defense motion to quash indictments against the nine Negroes in the "Scottsboro case," accused of attacking two white girls, delayed until tomorrow a decision on a motion for change of venue for seven of the Negroes whose cases were called here today in the Jackson County Circuit Court.

Meantime, one of the girls, Ruby Bates, a principal witness for the State, was reported missing from her home near Huntsville since Friday. Her mother said that she left the house "to go to town" and had not been seen since then.

In making the motion to quash, Irvin Schwab of New York, one of several lawyers employed for the Negroes by the International Labor Defense, argued that the "exclusion of Negroes qualified to serve on the grand jury was unfair to the defendants." He declined to withdraw the motion so that the change of venue might be decided.

Thomas E. Knight Jr., State Attorney General, who is directing the prosecution, stated that he had no objections to a change of venue, and asked for and obtained a recess until tomorow to give him time to prepare arguments against the motion to quash.

Asserting that members of the Jury Commission would be called as defense witnesses tomorrow, Mr. Schwab said that he had affidavits from Negroes to the effect that they were qualfied to serve on grand or petit juries but had never been called for service.

The motion for change of venue was based on allegations that, due to prejudice, the Negroes could not receive fair trial in Jackson County.

Judge A. E. Hawkins, who sentenced eight of the nine Negroes to death upon the verdicts which were set aside by the United States Supreme Court, is presiding. It is within his discretion to designate the trial court if and when a change of venue is granted.

But since the defense has asked that the trials be held in Birmingham, seat of Jefferson County, and the prosecution has announced that it will not oppose such a move, it is believed generally that the trials will be held there before Judge John F. McCoy.

The Negroes were not taken to Scottsboro today, but remained in Kilby prison, where they have been since death sentence was passed on them April 9, 1931, less than three weeks after they were taken from a freight train near Paint Rock, Ala., and charged with assaulting Ruby Bates and Victoria Price of Huntsville.

Nine Negroes were arrested, but two of them, Eugene Williams and Roy Wright, are so young that they must be tried in juvenile court. The others are Olin Montgomery, Ozie Powell, Charlie Weems, Heywood Patterson, Andy Wright, Willie Roberson and Clarence Norris.

A letter, purported to have been written by the Bates girl, which repudiates her court testimony and asserts that the Negroes did not attack her and her companion, is expected to be offered by the defense in the trials.

The letter was taken from a Chattanooga (Tenn.) pugilist by the Huntsville police and the Bates girl has said that if she ever signed such a letter she was "too drunk" to know what she was doing.

NEGRO LAD TELLS SCOTTSBORO STORY

Roy Wright, in First Interview Allowed, Protests Innocence and That of 3 With Him.

ONLY SAW GIRLS LATER

Forced by Beatings During Trial to Testify Falsely Against Eight Fellow-Defendants, He Says.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 9.—Roy Wright, 15-year-old Negro, who with eight others of his race is awaiting trial for his life for an alleged attack on two white girls, denied his guilt today and made grave charges against militiamen and deputy sheriffs in the first interview any of the prisoners has given since their arrest nearly two years ago.

The interview took place in the Bertillon room of Birmingham's $5,000,000 modernistic jail. Only Wright's counsel, Irving Schwab, sent here by the International Labor Defense to try to save the accused Negroes from the electric chair, and a reporter were present with the youth.

Wright's fellow-defendants, three of whom at least he said were as innocent of wrongdoing as himself, are in death cells at Kilby Prison in Montgomery, although the United States Supreme Court on Nov. 7 set aside their conviction and ordered new trials for all. They are not permitted to talk to any one beyond earshot of their guards.

Of the nine accused men, Wright was the only one who was not found guilty of participating in the alleged attack on Ruby Bates and Victoria Price on a freight train bound from Chattanooga to Memphis on the afternoon of March 25, 1931. Because of his apparent youth, he was tried in Juvenile Court, and the jury which heard the evidence against him was unable to agree on a verdict.

Wright Tells His Story.

A slender figure, four inches taller now than he was when he entered jail, the young Negro charged that deputy sheriffs whipped him in the court house at Scottsboro, where the first trials were held, until he agreed to testify falsely for the State against his fellow-defendants.

Upon his right cheek between his ear and his nose, there is a scar like a vaccination mark. It is a reminder, Wright says, of the day when he and his companions were taken from the freight train at Paint Rock by an armed posse and carried to the Jackson County jail, where the militia was called to save them all from lynching.

One of his protectors, Wright said, jabbed a bayonet through his cheek just before he was locked in a cell.

The hours and days that followed between his arrest and the trials, which were held in less than a fortnight, were full of terror and horror to him, according to Wright, whose memory of the events seems somewhat confused.

He knows that he had a trial, he says, because he has been told that the Supreme Court ruled that he must be tried again. He remembers that two lawyers asked him questions, but he is not quite sure which was the State Solicitor and which was Milo Moody, the lawyer assigned by Judge A. E. Hawkins to defend all the prisoners. He remembers that Stephen Roddy, a lawyer who appeared as a friend of the court, urged him to plead guilty "and get a life sentence instead of the chair."

Recalls First Day of Trials.

Most vivid in his mind, however, is the memory of what happened on the first day of the trials, which were all finished in three days, just before he was called to the witness stand in the case of Haywood Patterson, one of his friends from Chattanooga. Not all the Negroes were tried together, but all were brought from the jail to the court house at each session of the court.

This is the way Wright described what happened:

"I was sitting in a chair in front of the judge and one of those girls was testifying. One of the deputy sheriffs leaned over to me and asked me if I was going to turn State's evidence, and I said no, because I didn't know anything about this case.

"Then the trial stopped awhile and the deputy sheriff beckoned to me to come out into another room—the room back of the place where the judge was sitting—and I went. They whipped me and it seemed like they was going to kill me. All the time they kept saying, 'Now will you tell?' and finally it seemed like I couldn't stand no more and I said yes.

"Then I went back into the courtroom and they put me up on the chair in front of the judge and began asking a lot of questions, and I said I had seen Charlie Weems and Clarence Norris in the gondola car with the white girls."

Wright insisted today that this testimony which he gave was entirely false and declared he made the statement only because he knew that if he didn't he would be subjected to another beating.

Account of Ride on Freight.

As he related the events of the day when the attack on the girls is alleged to have taken place he and three other Negro youths from Chattanooga, Tenn., hopped a freight in the yards there, intending to go to Memphis in search of work. The others, who Wright says were with him "on an oil tank car between two box cars," were his brother, Andy Wright, Patterson and Eugene Williams.

"I didn't see no white girls and no white boys either," said the young Negro, hitching up the blue overalls which are the uniform of colored inmates of the prison.

Wright remembered that the freight slowed down almost to a stop at Stevenson, a way station between Chattanooga and Scottsboro, but he declared he neither saw nor heard anything of a fight between Negroes and the seven white hoboes, who were thrown off the train there before the alleged attack took place. It was there, too, that the girls were supposed to have crawled from a box car into a gondola car, in which they testified they were attacked.

"The firstest I knowed anything was wrong, or knowed who else was on that train," said Wright, "was when that crowd of white men stopped the train at Paint Rock and took us off. They took us up the railroad bank to a white rock and stood us against it with their guns aimed at our heads.

"One of the white men said to me, 'Come on now, nigger, tell us who pushed those white boys off the train, 'cause we don't want to punish anybody but the guilty ones. If you tell us which ones did it, we'll let you others go.' And I told them I didn't know anything about it and hadn't seen nothing.

Ordered to "Get Going."

"Then one of them said to me, 'you know, nigger, we don't let no darkies hang around here, and if we catch you anywhere near here after dark we'll shoot you. Now get going.'

"Andy (that's my brother), Haywood, Eugene and me—we started away. Nobody said nothing until we had walked some little way and then they called us back and loaded us on a truck, tied our hands and feet with rope and carried us to the jail in Scottsboro."

According to Wright, he first set eyes on the two white girls when he saw them among the crowd along the railroad tracks. Nothing was said there about the alleged attack, he asserted.

The crowd around the jail at Scottsboro was small when the Negroes arrived there about 2:30

P. M. By 4 o'clock, however, the militia had been called out to keep the mob from rushing the jail.

Twice during the late afternoon and evening, Wright said, the girls were brought into the section of the jail where the Negroes were held. Twice, according to Wright, they said they could not identify any one.

They were brought in a third time, he said, and the Price woman, who has been married three times, said she could identify them all. The Bates girl, who disappeared nine days ago from her home in Huntsville, still refused to identify any one, according to the young prisoner.

The seven white men who were routed from the train after the fight with Negroes, some of whom also are said to have jumped off the train before it got to Paint Rock, were rounded up before the first trial and held in jail until the sentences were imposed. They were never called upon to identify.

Wright, who will be 16 years old next Oct. 27, went to school only "about three or four years," and can "read and write a little bit." His eyes "went bad," he said, and he had to leave school to take a job sweeping out a store. He has a tortoise-shell-rimmed pince nez, which won't stay on his flat nose, but of which he is very proud. It was given him by a fellow-prisoner.

The young Negro, whose mother, Mamie Williams, lives in a two-room shanty in the Negro section of Chattanooga, declared he never had been in trouble with the police except on one occasion, when he spent the night in a cell for "keeping late hours."

He and the three Chattanooga Negroes arrested with him in the present case, he said, had been to a motion-picture show and were returning home, about 11:30 P. M., when a policeman picked them up for disregarding the curfew.

Beaten After Conviction, He Says.

The beatings to which he said he and his companions were subjected after their arrest two years ago continued, he alleged, even after they were convicted. At Gadsden jail, where they were transferred after death sentences had been passed upon them, he said, Patterson seized a gun from a deputy sheriff and warned him not to come one step nearer.

"Havwood," said Wright, "ain't afraid of nothing or anybody. He just took the gun away from that deputy sheriff and said, 'We've been sentenced to death already for nothing and we ain't going to take any more beatings. Go ahead, now, and shoot if you want to, but I'll shoot too.'

"It wouldn't have been no good, though," said Wright, "because the gun Haywood got was only a .32 and they had all those machine guns and things. I don't believe it would have gone off, even."

Young Wright is anxiously awaiting his new trial. He was not especially pleased, however, when he was told it probably would be held at Decatur, in Morgan County.

"I don't like that much better than Scottsboro;" he said. "It's right next to where those girls live."

Preparations for the new trial are proceeding. G. W. Chamlee, the Tennessee lawyer who argued successfully for a change of venue from Scottsboro, was preparing several new motions at his office in Chattanooga.

Thomas Knight Jr., the Attorney General, who will take personal charge of the prosecution, was waiting for his assistant, Thomas Lawson, to finish collating the voluminous record of the case before taking any steps toward bringing the Negroes to trial for the second time.

Urges Negro Press To Aid Scottsboro Boys

Richmond Va

New York, Mch. 4.—In an open letter to all Negro editors, calling upon them to help their utmost to obtain freedom for the nine innocent Scottsboro boys, William M. Kelly, editor-in-chief of the Amsterdam News, the leading Negro newspaper in New York, and one of the foremost in the country, stresses the importance of the Negro press getting behind the International Labor Defense, which is leading the militant struggle for their unconditional release.

The full text of which letter Mr. Kelley entitled: "From One Editor To Another," reads as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"The lives of the nine Scottsboro boys are still in jeopardy. The fact that they are alive today is due mainly to the indefatigable efforts of the International Labor Defense, to see that justice is done in their case. But there is a price on justice here in America, and adequate legal defense, no matter how innocent an accused person may be, costs money.

"The New York Amsterdam News has followed the activities of the International Labor Defense, not only in the Scottsboro Case, but in the Orphan Jones Case in Maryland, the Angelo Herndon Case in Georgia and cases involving Alabama sharecroppers and others, and has reached the conclusion the time has come for the Negro Press as a whole to get behind this organization and help it raise funds, which are urgently needed. The Amsterdam News is proud that it has already cooperated with this and other organizations affiliated with the International Labor Defense in their fund raising activities, to free the Scottsboro boys and we intend to continue to do so until they are freed. The Ruby Bates letter removed all doubt as to their innocence, so why shouldn't these nine victims of oppression in the South be freed.

"The International Labor Defense is a non-partisan organization—any one may join it, no matter what his (or her) political affiliation may be—but it is not necessary to be a member to cooperate with it in this important work. What is necessary is a belief in the fundamental rights of the Negro and all other minority groups to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The Scottsboro Case is a symbol of the violation of these rights.

"Therefore I plead with you to take advantage of this opportunity to help in this worthy cause before it is too late."

Negro and white workers; intellectuals and professionals, must heed the call! Raise your voices in protests and send letters and telegrams to Governor B. M. Miller, Montgomery, Alabama, demanding the release and safeguard of the Scottsboro boys! Defense Wins a Point: Boys in Other Jail

3-17-33

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 16.—The new trials of the Scottsboro boys, ordered by the U. S. Supreme Court under pressure of the world wide mass protests against the original lynch verdicts, have been set for March 27. The Alabama ruling class through its State Attorney Thomas E. Knight, Jr., is opposing the motion of the International Labor Defense attorneys for a new change of venue from Decatur to Birmingham.

New York, N.Y.

Defense Wins One Point

The I.L.D. attorneys won one point in the preliminary legal skirmish yesterday by forcing the removal of all of the boys to the Birmingham County Jail, where it is expected they will be able to have private interviews with their attorneys as provided for by Alabama law.

All the reactionary forces of the landlord-capitalist system of Alabama are mobilizing to carry through the lynching of the boys, either by legal or extra-legal means, in frank admission that more than ever the lives of these nine victims of capitalist justice can be saved only in the world-wide fight around the Scottsboro boys.

For Negroes on Jury

Samuel Leibowitz, chief trial attorney for the I.L.D., announced yesterday that he would place the jury system of Alabama on trial by calling witnesses to support a motion now pending to quash the indictments on the ground that Negroes are systematically excluded from jury duty.

SPEAKING OF LYNCHING

John Temple Graves, II, writes in The Birmingham Age-Herald: "It seems to us that New York newspapers ought to try to be as open-minded about the Scottsboro case now as Alabama newspapers are being. In other words, that their special correspondents should not come down, as some of them are, with their minds made up in advance and fill their lengthy dispatches with every bit of unsubstantiated evidence they can find which will suggest intimidation and injustice in Alabama and innocence in the accused Negroes. Since these correspondents are so ardently and properly opposed to lynching, why should they 'lynch' Alabama?"

Just why an Eastern newspaper should send a prejudiced propagandist down here is beyond us. The only reason why New York papers should send staff correspondents to Alabama, at great expense should be for learning the truth—the real truth from men upon whom they know they can rely for accurate and unbiased reports.

The International Labor Defense League would be glad enough to "lynch" the State by distorting facts for them!

The Nation

New York, N.Y.

THE SCOTTSBORO BOYS have been granted a change of venue for their new trial. But Decatur, Alabama, is from all reports just a larger Scottsboro. It is only fifty miles away and lies in the same belt of race prejudice and provincialism. Within recent weeks the defense has obtained a photostatic copy of a letter presumably written by Ruby Bates, a principal witness for the prosecution, in which she repudiated her trial testimony and denied that she was attacked by any of the boys accused. But Ruby Bates disappeared from her home on February 27 and may not be found in time to tell her story at the second trial. Another attempt is being made to obtain a change of venue to Birmingham, where, the defense feels, a more civilized public opinion would increase the chances of a fair trial. The defense at the same time is trying to have the indictment quashed on the ground that Negroes were systematically excluded from the grand jury. The chance of success in either of these attempts seems slight—and the mere raising of these issues will tend to increase further the racial antagonism in Decatur. The Scottsboro boys are now more than ever in mortal danger. It is likely that only the pressure of public opinion upon the State of Alabama can save their lives. We hope that that pressure will be increasingly applied, by letter, by telegram, and by widespread publicity.

NEW HITCH DELAYS SCOTTSBORO MOVE

Defense Finds Signatures of Distant Officials Necessary for Prisoners' Transfer.

HEAVY GUARD FOR TRIP

Negroes Will Be Protected on Way to Birmingham but No Great Force Will Be at Trial.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., March 16.—Although Thomas E. Knight Jr., Attorney General of Alabama has consented to the transfer of eight Negroes in the Scottsboro case from the death house of Kilby Prison to the Jefferson County Jail at Birmingham, the actual moving of the prisoners probably will not take place before next week.

Before it can be accomplished, the consent order into which the Attorney General entered with G. W. Chamlee, one of the defense attorneys, must be signed not only by Sheriff McBryde of Jackson County, where the Negroes are said to have attacked two white girls, but also by two Circuit Court judges.

They are Judge A. E. Hawkins, before whom the Negroes were convicted and sentenced to death two years ago, and Judge James A. Horton, who is to preside at the new trial at Decatur, the seat of Morgan County.

Defense lawyers asked the transfer of the prisoners from Kilby Prison to Birmingham so that they can consult privately with their clients without relaxing death-house rules.

In the petition which Sheriff McBryde will be asked to sign it is requested that, if the prisoners must be moved, they be sent to the Birmingham jail "for safekeeping on account of the present insecurity of the jail of Jackson County," where under normal circumstances they would be confined.

Order Speaks of Insecurity.

The order which has been prepared for the signatures of Judges Hawkins and Horton reads as follows:

"To the Sheriff of Jackson County; to the warden of Kilby prison and to the Sheriff of Morgan County, Ala.:

"Application having been made to us by the Sheriff of Jackson County, Ala., for the transfer of the prisoners, Haywood Patterson, Olin Montgomery, Clarence Norrie, Charlie Weems, Andy Wright, Eugene Williams, Willie Robertson and Ozie Powell, to another jail on account of the insecurity of the jail in Jackson County, and proof having been made of such fact to us, we hereby order and direct that you or each of you forthwith transfer said prisoners to the jail of Jefferson County, Ala., and the Sheriff of Jefferson County, Ala., is hereby directed to take said prisoners into his custody and safekeep them until further orders."

The form of the order was prepared jointly by Attorney General Knight and Samuel Leibowitz, chief of defense counsel, and the stipulation was signed by Mr. Knight and G. W. Chamlee, attorney of record for the prisoners.

The text of the agreement between them follows:

"Counsel for the prisoners named in this order and the Attorney General join in the request for the transfer of these prisoners to the Jefferson County jail and agree to this order on the part of the court, it being understood that these prisoners are to remain in the custody of the Sheriff of Jefferson County, Ala., until the cases are called for trial in the Circuit Court of Morgan County."

Officials at Distant Points.

The daley in obtaining the judges' signatures to the order was occasioned by the inability of Mr. Chamlee to ascertain definitely where they were sitting. It will be impossible to obtain the signatures of the Jackson County Sheriff and the two judges before Sunday or Monday because all are at widely separated places.

Mr. Knight's consent to the transfer of the prisoners to Birmingham does not mean of course that they will be tried there, much as the defense wishes they might.

Some time before March 27, when the trial is scheduled to start, they will be moved to the Morgan County jail and kept there until they are acquitted or sent back to Kilby prison.

Preparations for the transfer are being made with great care. Extremely anxious that no mob violence blemish Alabama's reputation for orderly administration of her laws, Mr. Knight and prison officials were planning to make the transfer under the cover of secrecy and a heavy guard if and when the proposed order is signed and served upon them.

No Large Force for Trial.

Although the prisoners probably will be moved in a prison van or motor bus over 100 miles of almost uninhabited territory between Kilby prison at Montgomery and the jail in Birmingham, no untoward incidents are expected. Birmingham is about 150 miles away from Scottsboro and is separated from that community by rough roads and mountains.

Decatur is only about fifty miles from Scottsboro and less than thirty miles from Huntsville, where the Negroes' accusers live, but it is not the present intention of Governor Miller of Alabama nor his Attorney General to mobilize any large body of militiamen for the trial.

Mr. Knight said he thought the situation could be handled by about ten picked men, thus avoiding a military display which, the defense attorneys feel, might be prejudicial to their clients.

DECATUR PROMISES NEGROES FAIR PLAY

But Sentiments of Citizens Resemble Those Expressed by Scottsboro Residents.

SHERIFF WILL ASK TROOPS

Seven Defendants Will Be Kept in Unsanitary Jail, Held Unfit for Whites.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., March 17.—This little town on the south bank of the Tennessee River in Northern Alabama was preparing today for the trial of the most exciting criminal case that has been heard here since 1903, when three Negroes were executed for attacking a white girl. One week from next Monday in the Morgan County court house seven Negroes, once convicted of a similar crime and sentenced to death, will go on trial for their lives for the second time in two years.

Residents of Decatur, which is fifty miles to the south of Pulaski, the birthplace of the original Ku Klux Klan of reconstruction days, assert that the defendants will get a fair trial, but they warn that they will stand no nonsense, either from the defense or its sympathizers, white or black.

The townsfolk don't care to listen to legal arguments about race equality or the right of Negroes to serve on juries, the man in the street will tell the visiting stranger.

Sentiment Like Scottsboro's.

The success of the defense in obtaining a change of venue from Jackson County seems a little like a pyrrhic victory in view of some of the comments made here today by officials and average citizens.

Decatur, with its once-busy railroad shops and its silk mills and tire fabric factory, drew many young men from the farms in more prosperous years and most of the infiltration was from Jackson and Madison Counties, where Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, the accusers of the Negroes, live.

Sheriff A. W. Davis, who will have charge of the prisoners when they arrive here for their arraignment and trial, had gone to Nashville today with a prisoner, but his chief deputy, W. T. Willoughby, stated that his superior would take no chances either on an escape of the prisoners or a lynching. The Sheriff, he said, intended to ask for between fifty and seventy-five picked militiamen from cities remote from Scottsboro or Huntsville.

The jail which will house the defendants is a crumbling brick structure some fifty feet from the court house. It was condemned as insanitary and insecure two years ago and since then has been regarded as unfit for white prisoners. Only Negroes are locked up there, white prisoners being taken to the jail at Huntsville, thirty-odd miles away.

To Occupy Bull Pen.

Negroes who are locked in the Morgan County jail have found it so easy to escape that The Decatur Daily no longer regards a jail-break as news. Within the last fortnight three prisoners, a white man and two Negroes, escaped from the court room while awaiting their trials. The Negroes were recaptured, but the white man was not caught.

Deputy Sheriff Willoughby thought the eight Negroes would be locked up in "the bull pen," a large cell fourteen feet square on the ground floor of the jail, instead of being confined in separate cells, "because none of those locks are any good."

Another deputy described conditions in the jail by saying "you could get out of there with a spoon."

It is with the thought of the ease with which prisoners can escape as much as with any fear of mob violence, Deputy Willoughby said, that the Sheriff intended to ask for troops.

Another deputy stated the Sheriff had told him he planned to limit admittance to the trial to lawyers, newspaper men and persons known to him to be "all right." He is planning to issue tickets and to make doubly sure that every one is "all right," he intends to search all entering the court room for weapons, the deputy added.

Resent Defense Tactics.

Another county official, who refused to permit the use of his name, insisted that the accused Negroes received fair treatment at their first trial, and asserted they would "get the same kind of treatment here."

He remarked a little regretfully that "if this thing had happened twenty-five years ago there wouldn't have been any trial." When he was asked if he thought the trial might be interrupted by violence, he said: "I don't know. If any Niggers come around the courthouse and start acting up, something might happen. But if the Niggers and the outsiders mind their business, there won't be any trouble."

Then he added:

"Most of our officers and a lot of people in Morgan County were raised in Jackson County."

The defense, by raising the question of the right of Negroes to serve on juries in its motion to quash the indictments has aroused considerable resentment among citizens of this community. Court officials and old inhabitants affirm that they cannot remember a time when any one hereabouts even suggested that a Negro might be qualified to serve as a juror.

The Jury Commissioners, Arthur Tidwell, J. A. Briscoe and John W. Tomlinson, were chosen because they were regarded as men of discretion and discernment, and that in a Jury Commissioner of the South means a man who cannot be convinced that a black man has that "sound judgment" which the Alabama statutes prescribe for veniremen.

In this community of 16,000 persons there is a Negro population of between 2,500 and 3,000. It is a separate entity, with its own storekeepers and school teachers. There are eight colored preachers, three doctors and a dentist. Several Negro families own their own homes, but only a handful qualify to vote.

Court House in Public Square.

The court room in which the trial will be held before Judge James E. Horton is on the second floor of the court house, which stands in the centre of a public square. Outside on the lawn is a statue of a Confederate soldier, with these words engraved upon the stone:

"Lest we forget. This monument was erected to the memory of those who offered their lives for a just cause, the defense of States rights."

The court room itself is a spacious room with four sections of seats for spectators and a jury box facing the judge's bench. Three of the sections are generally reserved for white witnesses and spectators, while the fourth is generally filled with Negroes. Present plans are to admit only white men and women for the trial.

Mayor James A. Nelson, proprietor of the leading jewelry store, said he did not look for trouble when the trial started, the citizens of Decatur being "peaceable and level-headed."

He did not believe it would be necessary to ask for militiamen. For his part, he would rather deputize a dozen members of the American Legion, who he thought could be relied on to keep their heads in an emergency because of their "training under fire and more advanced age."

SCOTTSBORO CASE

The case of the eight Negro boys formerly convicted of criminal assault in Scottsboro, Alabama, and given a new trial by the Supreme Court of the United States, is now under way the second time in the little Alabama town. Nine were tried and eight were given the death sentence.

A rather notable array of counsel is found in the court room this time. The International Labor Defense of New York is interested in the case and has a battery of counsel. The State of Alabama is represented by her Attorney General and the Assistant Attorney General.

The defense is relying on a peculiar piece of testimony. It is a letter scawled with pencil on rough paper which the defense claims was written by one of the girls assaulted. The defense claims the letter is genuine. In the letter the girl repudiates her testimony given at the first trial. The State contends that the girl was made drunk by agents of the defense and while in that condition was induced to write the letter. A great lot of money has been put at the command of the defense by the New York organization above mentioned.

The Supreme Court of the United States in reviewing the case held two justices dissenting, that the youthful prisoners did not have adequate opportunity to consult with counsel appointed to defend them. This primary and fundamental right of a defendant, the highest tribunal said, must be protected.

In the first trial eight of the nine were convicted and given the death sentence. It was the first time in the history of Alabama that one judge had pronounced the death sentence on eight individuals at one time. On appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court, the verdicts of the lower court were affirmed for seven and a new trial granted one of the defendants. From this an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court and that court ordered a new trial.

It looks now as if the trial will develop into the same sort of notoriety of the two Italians in Massachusetts and the Mooney case in California. Alabama has no desire to require the shedding of innocent blood but at the same time Alabama is not to be bluffed or frightened from doing her duty to protect her women. And if this outside group with money are attempting some conspiracy to carry their point there is abundant reason for the belief that they will not succeed.

The only ground on which a new trial will be given by the Supreme Court of the United States has been used. Alabama will not allow that same ground to exist again. This time the courts of Alabama will have the final word in the matter.

HATRED UNDER THE MAGNOLIA BLOSSOMS!

The hired pens of the International Labor Defense League, it seems to us, have taken to writing their little hyms of hate in faded violet ink.

Not that the paid hack writers are altogether lacking in imagination and sulphuric splutters. Nothing of the kind! They still show gifts for grinding out fiction and always they can repeat "Legal Lynching," "Legal Murder," and "Boss Control," not to mention the other half-dozen words of the American Communist Party vocabulary.

But the dirty-collared, long-haired young men who sit in New York offices of the International Labor Defense League and write "news" dispatches of what is happening in Scottsboro, Ala., have not been earning their daily bread. Or at least, they are failing to make good on a job which any mediocre hate-propagandist should succeed.

Unembarrassed by questions of truth, and unhampered by any prejudices in favor of facts, which they might feel if they actually were on the scene, it seems to us that these gentlemen at least should make the poison more painful than they have of late.

Now since these paid scrubs of journalism are trying to make a case and are not embarrassed by numerous flights of fancy, and are not concerned with justice in either direction, there is no complaint to make against the phrase, "nine innocent Negro boys," and "Attorney General Knight's legal lynch plans," which flower in nearly every piece of literature coming from the League's Hate-Hokum factory.

They make no pretense that they are not painting the prisoners lily-white in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" fashion. And they make no pretense that they are not trying to picture the State of Alabama and its law enforcement agencies, its courts and its people as red-eyed monsters with blood-stained, spurred boots, horsewhips and noosed ropes, up to God knows what, plans for making existence more unbearable for pig-stuck Workers.

But former experiences with these literary gentlemen had taught us to expect more from them.

Take the following paragraphs which were culled from one of the latest "dispatches" manufactured in the I. L. D. workshop, mailed to newspapers, churches and not a few of the Do-Or-Die "liberal" organizations.

It seems that the defenders of the Scottsboro rapists object to Decatur as a trial site. They write:

> Decatur, I. L. D. officials pointed out, is a town of 20,000 population, only about 50 miles from Scottsboro, and about the same distance as that from Huntsville, the center from which the organization of "vigilance committee" to make sure of the lynching of the boys, has spread.
> It is also the center for gangs of criminals who infest the railway lines of Alabama, and make a special practice of terrorizing and beating Negroes. Described by Northern Alabamians as a "big Saturday town," it is another Scottsboro on a larger scale. By the expression, it was explained, is meant that it is a town whose normal population is swelled on Saturdays, holidays, and court days, by a huge influx of white farmers, who come in armed and ready for a lynching or any other form of excitement that might present itself.
> The population being about nine times that of Scottsboro, and of much the same composition, Decatur on court day would present much the same aspect as Scottsboro did on the April, 1931, day when a band played "There'll Be A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," as the lynch-verdicts were handed down against the Negro boys.

Decatur, the quiet but kindly little North Alabama town, doubtless is surprised to learn of its lawlessness. The citizens of Decatur do not care to stage the Scottsboro trial in their city. And if the trial is held there, they will endure it as an expensive duty just as Scottsboro did. (And Scottsboro, a victim of geographical circumstances, is downright sick of the mess.)

But we should like to help the weary hate-hacks.

Why not go the whole hog and spread some real hatred toward Alabama and Alabamians?

We submit to them that:

There is an unwritten law in this State that every male white Boss in Alabama must practice bird hunting first on the down-trodden white and Negro workers, before reaching the age of twelve years.

The police departments of all Alabama towns have been ordered to remove corpses of Workers from the streets every 24 hours, except on "court days."

And on "court days" as all good I. L. D. public relations advisers know, the entire Boss population appears in spangled uniform to serenade jurors who have promised before-hand to send a batch of innocent Workers to the electric chair.

But by far the greatest gala occasion in Alabama is the mid-Winter festival at which the wealthy Boss class, (of which nine-tenths of Alabamians are members) gather in the court rooms of their respective counties to enjoy the wholesale scalping of the children of the Worker classes.

But why go further? We extend a personal invitation to the New York typewriter-snipers as sportsman to sportsman to visit Alabama and take part in the Anti-Worker Field Day, marking the beginning of the annual open season on the proletarians.

No guns are necessary in this sport as the State Government furnishes specially-trained native Alabama jaguars and laughing hyenas (abundant in this State) with which to track down innocent Workers.

We Alabamians thoroughly enjoy our native sports!

The Scottsboro Case

At first blush the change of venue granted in the case of the Scottsboro Negroes in Alabama does not look like much of a change. The defendants whose conviction was overthrown by the Supreme Court, instead of being re-tried in the place where they were tried before, will have their haring in another county 50 miles away, and there is no reason to believe that sentiment there, other things being equal, is any different from that in Scottsboro.

However, this is to be considered—that the shift makes it easier to deal fairly with the accused. A community, no less than an individual, hates to confess error under pressure. In this instance the pressure comes in the form of a Supreme Court decision that is irresistible. By the change of venue Scottsboro will save its face, and Morgan County, having no face to lose, will be free to do justice without admitting any previous failure in that respect.

NEGROES' DEFENSE MOTION TO QUASH DENIED BY HORTON

Judge Rules On Plea Made By Patterson Counsel In Attack Case

MORGAN COUNTY VENIRE HELD LEGALLY DRAWN

Stage Is Now Set To Proceed With Trial Started In Decatur Court

DECATUR—(AP)—Judge James E. Horton, presiding in Morgan Circuit Court Friday, denied a motion to quash the venire for the trial of Heywood Patterson, 19, Chattanooga Negro, setting the stage for the new trial of the youth on charges of attacking a woman two years ago.

BY RALPH E. HURST
Staff Correspondent The Birmingham News

DECATUR—Enough evidence has been offered to support the allegation that Negroes have been systematically excluded from the Morgan County jury roll to make it incumbent upon the state to prove that the allegation is not true, Judge James E. Horton ruled in Circuit Court here Friday during hearing on a motion to quash the venire drawn for the trial of Heywood Patterson.

In making his ruling and announcing that the burden of proof is now upon the state to show that the Morgan County Jury Commission has properly administered the state's jury laws, Judge Horton was asked by Defense Attorney Samuel Liebowitz if the court meant that the defense had made out a prima facie case.

Judge Horton answered affirmatively and said he had heard enough evidence from witnesses and in the examination of the jury roll to justify such a ruling.

The ruling was a decided victory for the Scottsboro defense, which has not disguised the fact that it is building up a record of proceedings to be used in an appeal to the United States Supreme Court if convictions result.

Presentation of the defense's case on the motion ended with Sheriff A. W. Davis' examination of the jury roll. Like Capt. Joe E. Burleson, of Hartselle, and J. A. Tidwell, jury commissioner, Sheriff Davis went through the big red book that is the jury roll and said that all of the names of those he knew were of white men.

Before making his ruling, Judge Horton ascertained that a check of names of Negroes given the court Thursday and represented as being eligible jurors, had been partially made and that none of the names had been found on the roll. This was made a part of the record.

Judge Horton dismissed jurors until the afternoon session was reconvened at 1:30 p.m., and ordered Atty. Gen. Knight to proceed with his proof that the jury commission had properly administered the state laws.

Commissioner Tidwell was then placed on the stand and testified he had never considered race or color of any person whose name was put on the jury roll. Knight gave him lists of the Negroes whose names were introduced in court Thursday and Tidwell said he though he had considered "almost all" of them for jury duty.

These Negroes, together with a dozen that appeared as witnesses in Friday"s proceedings, are leaders of their race in this county and are claimed by the defense to have every qualification for jury service that the law requires.

Heywood Patterson was the only one of the defendants in court Friday, he having been separated from the others for trial first and alone, and it is the venire called to supply his jury that is under fire.

In the beginning of the proceedings, it was incumbent upon the defense to show not only that Negroes were not on the jury roll but that their exclusion had been systematic in an improper administration of the state's jury laws.

Tidwell Examined

Tidwell was subected to a rigorous examination from Liebowitz, but was dismissed when court was recessed at noon for lunch. Knight frequently objected to Liebowitz's line of cross-examination, which included questions as to Tidwell's knowledge of jury qualifications and of the Negro citizens alleged to be eligible as jurors, and most of the objections were sustained. Knight complained that Liebowitz was arguing with instead of cross-examining the witness.

Liebbowitz asked the court to have all three jury commissioners go through the book together and eliminate those they knew to be white, but on objections of the state Judge Horton ordered calling of witnesses in the usual manner.

The judge's decision makes it almost certain that selection of a jury for trial of Heywood Patterson, first of the Scottsboro Negroes who will face trial on a severance, will not be started before next week.

Following its contention that the jury roll contains no Negroes, defense attorneys offered evidence of 12 of Morgan County's most highly educated Negroes, who were placed on the witness stand and claimed by defense attorneys to be able to meet requirements for jurors.

Many of these Negroes, representing several professions, testified they are voters of this county and practically all named colleges they had attended or from which they had been graduated.

Most of them in turn read from lists names of other Morgan County Negroes who, in their opinions, were eligible.

Their cumulative testimony was halted after the twelfth witness and the jury roll admitted in evidence over protest of Atty. Gen. Knight, Judge Horton expressing opinion that sufficient evidence had been shown to justify going no further into the issue.

When the jury roll was admitted, Jury Commissioner Tidwell was called to the stand by the defense and asked if he knew whether all the names were of white men.

Replying that he did not and resenting a defense attorney's query as to whether he was making an honest answer, Tidwell was then instructed to go through the list and check off the name of each person he knew to be white.

Tidwell, whose testimony had not been completed when court recessed Thursday afternoon, was interrupted Friday morning to permit the defense to put Capt. Burleson, commanding the National Guard unit of Hartselle, which is doing duty here, on the stand. Burleson was called on to show that names of Hartselle citizens on the jury roll are all white.

When asked by the defense to take the stand, Capt. Burleson replied:

"If the court orders, sir."

The court so ordered, and opposing counsel clashed over a state objection to permit the officer to go through names in the big red book, but an examination was permitted by the court.

Presiding Judge Horton cautioned the attorneys after Defense Attorney Samuel Liebowitz had referred to Atty. Gen. Knight as a "wise-cracker."

" Ithought all the wise-crackers were in the North, but I see there is one here," Liebowitz said as he pointed toward Knight.

Knight asked the court to show an objection to every question Liebowitz asked Burleson.

The jury roll went into evidence as the first victory for the defense simultaneously with the revelation here that a commonwealth's attorney of Virginia had been faced with a challenge to his jury system on the same grounds as alleged here and had requested state attorneys in this case to furnish him with any briefs they had on the question.

This was seen by some observers here as the start of a general assault on the white jury principles of Southern states.

John Galleher, prosecutor of Loudoun County, Virginia, wrote from Leesburg that a Negro indicted for slaying two white women had been arrested in Boston, Mass., and that his attorneys were pressing habeas corpus proceedings on the grounds that the indicting Grand Jury contained no Negroes, which was the first line of attack for the Scottsboro defense lawyers. Galleher, who addressed his letter to the Jackson County solicitor, said he would be faced with the same issue at the subsequent trial in Virginia. John K. Thompson, Jackson County solicitor in attendance at the proceedings here, received the letter dated March 28.

Negroes Witnesses

All but two of Thursday's witnesses were Negroes. John Green, clerk of the Circuit Court here started the parade by testifying on direct examination by defense that he had never seen a Negro on a Morgan County jury. Jury Commissioner Tidwell, last witness of the day, was the other.

The 12 Negro witnesses included physicians, preachers, teachers, an undertaker, bill poster, billiard hall operator and a medical director, and a notary public.

"Communist Party" was heard for the first time Thursday afternoon when Atty. Gen. Knight asked the Rev. W. J. Wilson if he was a member of that group and received a negative answer.

"Do you know that this county has a jury commission?" Knight asked one Negro physician.

"I know it is supposed to have one," the witness replied.

Two of the Negroes testified they had held commissions as lieutenants in the reserve officers' corps of the army; one named four colleges he had attended; several of them named more than one college, and one testified he was a graduate of Alabama graduate schools, Shaw College at Raleigh, N. C., Fiske University at Nashville and the University of Illinois medical college, where he received a degree.

These witnesses were unusually intelligent in appearance and employed good English. In questioning them on their fitness as jurors, Atty. Gen. Knight asked them all if they were habitual drunkards, which is a bar from eligibility under the state law.

Not Drinkers

One of the Negroes testified he had never taken a drink, one answered that he was a "total abstainer" and another replied that he did not "drink to excess."

These witnesses were Dr. Frank Sykes, dentist; Dr. N. E. Cashin, physician; H. J. Banks, bill poster; the Rev. L. R. Womack; J. J. Sykes, notary public; the Rev. W. J. Wilson, minister and school principal; J. D. Pickett, high school principal; Robert Bridgeforth, poolroom operator; George H. Reynolds, undertaker, who named four colleges; Dr. Willis James Wood, physician, and Dr. N. M. Sykes, physician and medical director for an insurance company.

When the defense concluded with them it was entered on the record that more than 400 other Negroes were available and ready to substantiate the testimony.

With the assistance of certain leaders, defense attorneys had prepared a "blue book" or "social register" of Morgan County Negroes and it was these whose names were given to the court.

Admission of the jury roll was a decided victory for the defense, which had lost its move to get Jackson County's jury roll entered in support of its motion to quash the indictments, which was overruled.

Liebowitz questioned Jury Commissioner Tidwell closely as to when the last name had been entered in the roll and was assured that no names had been added since February.

NEGROES STAGE FIGHT

Two of the Scottsboro Negroes staged a fist fight in jail Thursday night, according to Sheriff W. A. Davis, who said they were separated by their companions after several blows had been passed, with neither seriously hurt. The fight grew out of an argument, details of which were not learned, the sheriff said.

A New Turn

THE Scottsboro case becomes more nauseous. There are the customary "rumors of threatened lynchings" which prove such toothsome morsels of news for the Northern newspapers, and for European papers, which like to picture the South as the last frontier of barbarism.

Is there basis enough in these rumors to justify the press services in giving them the prominence they have already been given? We seriously doubt it. One can always stir up a "threat of lynching" to make a news story.

The most unpleasant part of the trial, however, concerns the principal witnesses.

Ruby Bates, supposed to have been one of the women attacked by the Negro defendants, now testifies that her story was utterly false. She says she was not attacked. She was working in New York recently, and Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick seems to have persuaded her to come back and testify.

She tells of spending the night in a box car with another woman and two men, and planning a "hobo" trip. She tells of hopping a freight train, of meeting one "Carolina Slim" in Chattanooga, and going with him and another woman and a man to "hobo swamp," in Chattanooga, and spending the night there.

She tells of the quartet swinging another freight the next day to return to Huntsville. They were not even in the car where the fight occurred between the Negroes and seven white youths, she declares.

When one of the Negro defendants testified on the preceding day that he had not even seen a woman on the train, we were amazed. We thought his counsel had committed a blunder in letting him so testify, so obviously unbelievable did we regard his statement. And now, in the light of Ruby Bates' testimony, we see that the Negro might have been telling the truth.

At any rate, the foreign newspapers will have something to print now. What becomes of the South as a land of chivalry? Women hoboing! Women sleeping in box cars to plan hobo trips! Women sleeping with tramps in hobo swamps! What have our Southern cavaliers to say about that?

THE SCOTTSBORO VERDICT

The twelve "good men and true" who acted as jurors in the Scottsboro case, after twenty-one hours, returned a verdict of guilty against the Negro defendant, Patterson, with a recommendation that he be electrocuted. This, it appears, is the privilege of juries in Alabama.

The conduct of the case by Judge Horton was eminently fair. Judge Horton made every effort in his charge to the jury to instill into the minds of the jurors that prejudice and racial hatred must not sway their minds. But the jurors, being human, succumbed to the atmosphere of prejudice and racial hatred which pervades that part of Alabama.

The verdict is not unexpected. It has been felt all along that fear of local vengeance would prevent the jury from acquitting the prisoner. The present trial, like the previous one, was unfair. The verdict was contrary to the evidence. This, we submit, will be the opinion of those who have followed the case in the columns of the New York "Times," and it will be the opinion of practically every Negro in the United States. In recent years, a great many Negroes have turned to Communism as a protest against their mistreatment in the South. The Scottsboro verdict undoubtedly will increase the number of Negro Communists. It will also have the effect of greatly adding to the Negro population in the North, particularly in this city.

That the case will be appealed is certain. That the verdict will again be reversed is also certain.

DECATUR, Ala., April 9.—Death for an attack upon a white woman was the fate meted out today to Haywood Patterson, a colored boy, by an all-white jury which entered the courtroom laughing. Alabama had again affirmed its resolve to exact the supreme penalty in the now internationally famous Scottsboro case.

It was almost 11 o'clock (noon, New York time) on Palm Sunday morning and the God-fearing folk of the Alabama hills were congregated in their houses of worship, when the jury, which had been closeted for twenty-one hours, announced that its verdict was ready.

Patterson, the first of the seven Scottsboro colored youths to be re-tried for attacking two white women on a freight train in 1931, was brought into court. His eyes travelled rapidly about the chamber—Morgan County's ancient and picturesque temple of justice. One hundred white men

Alabama National Guardsmen, armed with riot guns, ringed him round, as he sat beside the jury box smoking a cigarette and staring at the floor.

No one thought to tell him to stan' when the Judge dismounted from his motor car and, entering the courtroom, took his place on the bench. Verdicts are rendered informally in this jurisdiction.

The jury was summoned from its room. The Judge apologized for the delay he had caused. "Have you reached a verdict, gentlemen?" he asked.

Jurymen Curb Laughter.

The twelve men, now gathered before him in a loosely-formed group, indicated they had. They were no longer laughing.

"Let me see it, then," the Judge directed, and the foreman handed him the slip of paper.

"We find the defendant guilty as charged, and we fix the punishment as death in the electric chair," the Lincolnesque magistrate read.

If the Court felt any emotion—he had been threatened during the trial—his face did not display it. He thanked the jury gravely, and remarked that he believed they had rendered a verdict that they thought was just and fair.

Samuel S. Leibowitz, famous York criminal lawyer, who had come to Alabama to conduct the defense without cost to anyone save himself, was transparently astonished. The gayety in the jury-room had given him hope of an acquittal—or at worst a disagreement.

But justice in Alabama works differently than in New York.

The prosecution had appealed both to sectional feeling and to pride of race. It had derided the defense witness who had taken the stand in "New York clothes"; it had branded Leibowitz "a Greek bearing gifts," and it had charged that "Jew money from New York" was attempting "to buy Alabama justice."

The first jury, which condemned Patterson to death, took just twenty-one minutes to write his doom. The second jury took but little longer to find him guilty. The first ballot was unanimous. But the second ballot revealed one dissenter from the death penalty. For twenty-one hours this juror insisted life imprisonment should be Patterson's fate, and then he capitulated to the opinion of the majority.

Verdict Stuns Counsel.

One of the two women involved in the purported attack testified in the second trial for the defense. She is Ruby Bates. The other, Mrs. Victoria Price, testified for the prosecution. On the witness stand the Bates girl said that Mrs. Price had accused the colored man when she was taken from the freight train by peace officers and was confronted with the charge of being a vagrant.

"This is a black page in the history of American civilization!" Leibowitz declared, as he and his stunned associates heard the verdict.

"For the second time, twelve citizens of Alabama, swayed by bigotry and prejudice, have rendered a verdict that mocks justice.

"You must know this place, where mobs burn crosses at night, to understand that the verdict is merely a judicial lynching. This remark does not apply in any respect to the jurist who presided over this trial. His calm and judicious warnings to the jury could not have fallen upon deafer ears.

"We will appeal to the highest court that once before hurled this mess back into Alabama. It will be back again."

Attorney General Thomas E. Knight Jr. made no comment.

After the jury's verdict Patterson was rushed to Birmingham jail by guardsmen with riot guns.

Formal sentence will be passed by Judge Horton April 17, when the retrial of Charlie Weems, another of the defendants, begins. The colored youths were granted new trials by the Supreme Court of the United States on Nov. 7, 1932 on the ground they had been denied the right of counsel in the original trial.

So high was feeling here that Judge Horton indicated he may be forced to exclude the press from the remainder of the trials.

50,000 Colored Folk To March to Capital.

Colored residents of Harlem started making plans yesterday for a huge demonstration protesting the Scottsboro case verdict.

A march of 50,000 colored persons to Washington to plead with President Roosevelt was the first move planned. William Davis, publisher of the Amsterdam News, put a notice on the bulletin board outside his office, asking signatures by those willing to go to the Capital.

Within four hours 17,000 had signed and more than 5,000 more were waiting in line outside. Davis said he had not decided whether to have the petitioners march to Washington or go by bus or train.

Telegrams have been sent by Davis to publishers of all the leading colored newspapers throughout the nation calling upon them to organize similar protest marches.

An appeal will be taken immediately, the International Labor Defense announced. The case will be fought to the United States Supreme Court if necessary.

The verdict was characterized by William L. Patterson, national secretary of the organization, as "a monstrous lynch-verdict brought in the face of the most indisputable proofs of Patterson's innocence."

Case Aroused World As 8 Boys Were Doomed.

Scottsboro, Ala., April 9 (AP).—The Scottsboro case that echoed around the world started two years ago aboard a freight train—Alabama-bound from the hills of Tennessee.

Two white girls—Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates—said a gang of nine negroes assaulted them as they were returning home after looking for work.

Some white boys who had been riding the train said the colored boys threw them off and then attacked the girls, both of Huntsville, Ala.

The colored boys were taken from the train at Paint Rock by a posse on the afternoon of March 25, 1931. Officers brought them here to jail. A crowd milled about the Courthouse Square and when it had dispersed, the colored boys were taken to Gadsden and soon were indicted for criminal assault.

Sentences Set Aside.

National Guardsmen maintained order as they went on trial. Charlie Weems, 21, was convicted first and sentenced to die. Then Haywood Patterson, 17, was convicted. Eugene Williams, 15; Andy Wright, 17; Ozie Powell, 16; Olem Montgomery, 17, and Willie Robertson, 17, followed. Judge A. E. Hawkins pronounced the death sentence on eight of them at the same time. A ninth colored boy, Roy Wright, 14, was given a mistrial.

The International Labor Defense intervened and a long legal fight was started to save the boys. On March 25, 1932, the Alabama Supreme Court affirmed the death sentence of all except Eugene Williams, who, it held, was a juvenile.

The other cases were taken to the United States Supreme Court where the sentences were set aside and a new trial was ordered.

Protests against the sentences flooded the State.

The International Labor Defense employed counsel for the colored boys and Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York volunteered his services. A change of venue from Scottsboro to Decatur was granted for retrials.

National Guardsmen again stood watch as the first retrial—that of Haywood Patterson—was started.

Swore Again to Assault.

Ruby Bates disappeared a few weeks before the retrial, but Mrs. Price appeared against Patterson and swore he assaulted her. Then Ruby came back and surprised the courtroom by repudiating her testimony at her first trial. She swore she was not molested by the colored boys.

NEW YORK ATTACKED IN SCOTTSBORO TRIAL

Prosecutors Also Hint at Perjury in Its "Surprise Testimony."

MISTRIAL MOTION FAILS

DEFENSE ARGUMENT OPENS

Leibowitz Will Conclude This Morning and Case Is Expected to Reach the Jury Today.

By F. RAYMOND DANIELL.
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DECATUR, Ala., April 7.—The issue of Alabama against New York City and the clothes, manners and customs of its people was brought up here today before Judge James E. Horton and the jury which is trying Haywood Patterson, a Negro, for his life.

Summing up for the State at the close of the first of the new "Scottsboro trials," Wade Wright, circuit solicitor of Morgan County, made a frank appeal to local pride, sectionalism, race hatred and bigotry.

"Show them," he said—pointing at the counsel table at which were seated Samuel S. Leibowitz of New York, chief defense counsel, and Joseph Brodsky, counsel for the International Labor Defense, a Communist affiliate—"show them that Alabama justice cannot be bought and sold with Jew money from New York."

At this remark, Mr. Leibowitz arose and asked the judge to declare a mistrial.

"Conviction now, after what he has said, will not be worth a pinch of snuff," he asserted.

The court denied the motion and Mr. Wright continued along the same line, while Attorney General Thomas E. Knight, the chief prosecuting officer of the State, fidgeted in his chair.

When the circuit solicitor finished, Judge Horton told the jury to disregard Wright's statement about "Jew money from New York."

Mr. Leibowitz then began his appeal, urging the jurors to give the Negro defendant the benefit of the "reasonable doubts."

The New York attorney had not finished when the court declared a recess until tomorrow morning. Mr. Leibowitz will then conclude his final argument and Attorney General Knight will say the last word for the State. After that Judge Horton will charge the jurors, and they probably will begin deliberations by noon.

"New York Clothes" a Target.

Circuit Solicitor H. G. Bailey opened the State's argument. In his address there were several references to the "fancy New York clothes" which Lester Carter and Ruby Bates were wearing when they appeared as surprise witnesses for the defense, the girl repudiating her former story of an attack and the young white "hobo" charging Victoria Price, the other alleged victim, with a "frame-up."

His remarks were of such a nature, however, that Mr. Leibowitz took no exception to them. But when Mr. Wright, whose voice has raised him to pre-eminence among local all-day singers, began to speak all the hatred and prejudice that these cases have aroused bubbled to the surface.

Mr. Wright spoke of the reversal of the Supreme Court of Alabama by the United States Supreme Court after Communist sympathizers took up the cudgels for the nine Negro defendants, all but one of whom had been sentenced to die in the electric chair.

But it was New York City, "its sinister influence," and the Jews on which he dwelt and upon which he turned the full flower of his oratory.

Defending the story of the Price woman, Mr. Wright asked the jury:

"Did you ever hear of a more damnable effort to destroy and break down this girl? How did they do it.

"That man Carter is a new kind of a man to me. Did you watch his hands? If he had been with Brodsky another two weeks he would have been down here with a pack on his back a-trying to sell you goods. Are you going to countenance that sort of thing?"

From a front-row seat among the spectators there came a resonant "No!" uttered with the fervor of "Amen" in church.

Woman's Testimony Attacked.

Saying that Carter's rent in New York had been paid by Mr. Brodsky, Mr. Wright went on:

"Don't you know these people, these defense witnesses, are bought and paid for?

"May the Lord have mercy on the soul of Ruby Bates!

"Now the question in this case is this:

"Is justice going to be bought and sold in Alabama with Jew money from New York?"

Mr. Leibowitz interposed here with a mistrial motion and after it was denied Mr. Wright continued:

"It was Brodsky, too, who brought in Ruby Bates. The same Brodsky who put the fancy city clothes, New York clothes, on Lester Carter, and I tell you, gentlemen, that Ruby Bates was guilty of perjury right here in this court room. And there is such a thing as subornation of perjury."

The Bates girl "couldn't tell you all the things that happened in New York because part of it was in the Jew language," he said.

Mr. Wright then attacked the testimony relative to Ruby Bates's presence in "hobo jungles."

He referred to Carter as "Mr. Carterinsky, as he is now," and Mr. Leibowitz again asked for a mistrial, this motion also being denied.

Mr. Wright concluded with the statement that a verdict of guilty in this case "will resound around the world as a victory for law enforcement."

When he had finished Judge Horton said:

"The court rules that the statement regarding Jew money from New York was simply improper and unjustified, and the court asks you members of the jury to disregard it and put it out of your minds."

In opening his argument, Mr. Leibowitz explained that "all New Yorkers do not have horns."

"The least said about sectionalism and prejudice the better," he declared.

"Now, I'm not going to assault your ears with any such ranting and raising the roof as you have been forced to hear from the gentleman seated over there. I shall appeal to your reason as logical, intelligent human beings, determined to give even this poor scrap of colored humanity a fair, square deal.

"What is the argument of the learned solicitor? Change the charge and you would hear the same stereotyped phrases. 'The fair State of Alabama, foreigners,' and all the rest of that claptrap.

"What is it but an appeal to prejudice, to sectionalism, to bigotry? What he is saying is, 'Come on, boys! We can lick this Jew from New York! Stick it into him! We're among our home folk.'

"It was the speech of a man taking an unfair advantage—a hangman's speech."

Not There as "Consoler."

Mr. Leibowitz surveyed the court room crowd. He has been threatened with tar and feathers, with whipping and with gunpowder and lead.

"Now, as for the Jew money from New York, let me say this: That when the hour of our country's need came there was no question of Jew or gentile, of black or white—all, all together braved the smoke and flame of Flanders Fields.

"Now, I'm not getting any fee in this case and I'm not getting a penny of expenses for myself and my wife, who was here with me.

"Mobs mean nothing to me. Let them hang me; I don't care. Life is only an incident in the Creator's scheme of things, but if I can contribute my little bit to see that justice is served, then my mission is fulfilled."

Mr. Leibowitz said he was not here as a crusader nor to ask social equality for Negroes, "but to see that the law guaranteeing equal protection to all races in our courts is observed."

In rebuttal evidence Attorney General Knight sought to introduce the testimony of a white inmate of Kilby prison, whose death sentence for murder has been commuted by the Governor to tell the jury that while Patterson was in the death house he expressed the wish that he "had killed those girls." Judge Horton refused to allow the witness, Burtus Frost, to testify and the lifer left the court room with a prison guard.

The Bates girl was recalled but quickly excused by Mr. Knight after Judge Horton ruled that her cross-examination had been concluded and that if she were to testify at all it would be as the Attorney General's witness.

W. H. Hill, the station agent at Paint Rock, where an armed posse stopped the train on which the attacks are alleged to have taken place, testified that the Bates girl, who declares now that she "only told what Victoria told" at the first trials, was the one who told him the Negroes had attacked her.

Wire Roosevelt of "Klan Mobs."

A statement that Ku Klux Klan mobs were being organized to lynch the Scottsboro defendants was telegraphed to President Roosevelt yesterday by William L. Patterson national secretary of the International Labor Defense.

The message urged the President to "guarantee the safety of these people in Alabama, where law enforcement is non-existent, so far as protection to Negroes or any one interested in preventing murder of Negroes is concerned."

The International Labor Defense said that protest demonstration will be held all over the countr today under its auspices "against the attempts to lynch the Scottsboro boys."

The New York demonstration will start with a mobilization at 110th Street and Fifth Avenue at 2 P. M., followed by a march through Harlem, it was announced.

First Scottsboro Defendant Gets Extreme Penalty

Jury Returns Guilty Finding In Patterson Case After 21 Hours' Deliberations

Appeal Is Probable

Negro Hears Death Verdict Read On Anniversary Of Same Sentence In 1931

By T. M. DAVENPORT
Associated Press Staff Writer

DECATUR, ALA., April 9.—(AP)—On the second anniversary of his first sentence to death, Heywood Patterson, first of nine negroes indicted in the Scottsboro attack case to face a new trial, today heard a jury return a verdict of guilty with the extreme penalty.

With head bowed, Patterson, showing nervousness for the first time, heard Judge James E. Horton, in Morgan Circuit Court, read the verdict reached by a jury after 21 hours of deliberation.

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged and fix his punishment at death," read the verdict handed to Judge Horton and the first of the new trials granted seven of the negroes by the U. S. Supreme Court had ended.

To Be Sentenced April 17

Patterson will be formally sentenced April 17. At that time the defense will have opportunity to make a motion for a new trial. If the motion is overruled by the presiding judge, the defense then would be able to appeal to the State Supreme Courts.

Fewer than 100 persons were in the courtrooms as the verdict was returned and it was greeted with silence, broken only by the rush of messengers to telegraph offices to send dispatches.

Worldwide interest has centered on the trial and throughout the week Judge Horton and Atty. Gen.

Thomas E. Knight, Jr., have been bombarded with telegrams protesting "attempts to lynch" the defendants and their attorneys.

These telegrams followed the many rumors floating about during the week that mobs were forming either here or in nearby towns, but officers said no evidence of such feeling could be found, except once when a mass meeting was held here.

It was just two years ago today that Judge Alfred E. Hawkins, in Jackson Circuit Court, at Scottsboro, pronounced sentence of death on Patterson and seven of his companions. They were convicted of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Miss Ruby Bates, of Huntsville, aboard a Southern Railway freight train as it rumbled through the Sand Mountains in Jackson County.

"I think the verdict was a miscarriage of justice," Samuel S. Leibowitz, of New York, chief counsel for the defendants, said.

"I don't," replied Atty. Gen. Knight, who directed the prosecution, "not beyond a reasonable doubt."

In a statement after the verdict was announced, Leibowitz said the fight had just begun.

Leibowitz's Statement

His statement follows:

"This verdict is an acts of bigots, spitting upon the tomb of the immortal Abraham Lincoln.

"We would have been more than delighted to have left it in the hands of Judge Horton, but it is a pity the law prevented that. We will fight with every drop of blood in our veins to free these men, because they are innocent, as every reasonable human being that sat in the courtroom hearing the evidence must have felt. It is only a pity that, amid these beautiful surroundings and glorious country, where there is on every hand hospitality and courtesy, such race hatred and bigotry should live.

"I think the prosecutor of this county (Solicitor Wade Wright) when he resorted in his bombast to the mud gutter in hurling villification on the great people of New York and its vast body of Jewish citizens, perhaps represented in his way a cross section of what the defendants and lawyers representing them were faced with."

George W. Chamlee, Sr., of Chattanooga, one of the first attorneys employed by the International Labor Defense in behalf of the negroes after they were convicted, said "I still have an abiding faith in the good citizens of Alabama and I am coming back for another trial."

Leibowitz May Not Return

There have been reports that Leibowitz would not return for the other trials and today he said he would not know until after he had returned to New York. He entered the case at the invitation of the I. L. D., but stipulated that he would receive no compensation and would pay his own expenses.

Shortly after the verdict against Patterson was returned, he was taken under military escort to Birmingham to join his eight companions yet facing trial, who were removed there last night.

Patterson was tried on an indictment charging him with attacking Mrs. Price, who took the stand as the principal witness for the State and pointed to him as one of six negroes who attacked her in a gondola car of a freight train after throwing six white youths off the train.

The evidence hinged largely on the testimony of the two women. Knight and Leibowitz addressed their arguments to this question at length.

"This is a damnable frameup by two irresponsible women," Leibowitz said as he charged that the story of the attack was invented by Mrs. Price, as the Bates girl had testified, saying "I said what Victoria did," in explaining her testimony in the first trials.

Ruby Bates sold out, lock, stock, and barrel," Knight said as he tore into her testimony before the jury.

In the two years the case has been pending in the courts, demonstrations have been held and subscriptions taken in all parts of the world in behalf of the negroes.

Thousands Of Protests

Thousands of protests signed by individuals and organizations have been sent to Gov. B. M. Miller at Montgomery and to other State officials connected with the trials, demanding changes of venue and "imedmiate and unconditional release of the defendants."

Once, while the cases were on appeal to the Alabama Supreme Court, guards were on duty at the Capitol and twice in Washington guards have been placed over the U. S. Supreme Court building to prevent demonstrations.

The outcome of the trial added a new chapter to the strange case which has aroused international interest since Patterson and seven other young negroes were convicted of attacking Mrs. Victoria Price and Ruby Bates and sentenced to death at Scottsboro two years ago. The present retrials, which were brought here on a change of venue, resulted from a discussion of the U. S. Supreme Court setting aside the original death sentences.

Late yesterday, after the jury had taken Patterson's case, Judge Horton granted severances for the other defendants and the trial of Charlie Weems was set for April 17 after counsel had entered a plea of not guilty for him. Only seven of the original group of nine negroes charged with the attack are involved in the retrials. The other two were held to be juveniles and their cases await further investigation.

After the spreading of numerous rumors that mobs were forming here, for which authorities insisted there was no foundation, members of counsel for the negroes asserted yesterday that fiery crosses had flamed on Alabama's hills the previous night and that they believed their lives were threatened.

A joint statement by Joseph R. Brodsky, of New York, a defense attorney, and Leibowitz asserted that the burning of the crosses followed a remark in court Friday by Solicitor Wade Wright, of Decatur, that witnesses for the defense were being "bought with Jew money." The statement added that "only the presence of the National Guard prevented a mob from entering Decatur."

Ruby Bates Appeared Suddenly

The latter part of Patterson's trial also was featured by the dramatic appearance of Ruby Bates, who had been missing from her home for some time. Saying she had just arrived from a hitchhiking trip to New York, Ruby repudiated the testimony she gave in the original trials two years ago. She denied that she had been attacked and said she had not seen Mrs. Price molested by the negroes as they rode through North Alabama aboard a freight train on which the two women were hoboing their way home after seeking work in Chattanooga.

Prosecuting attorneys, headed by Atty. Gen. Knight, charged immediately that Ruby had perjured herself and spoke of "sinister influences" in New York, which they said were responsible for the fact that she appeared in court smartly dressed in contrast to the inexpensive attire of Mrs. Price. Judge Horton took cognizance of this development in his charge to the jury when he said: "The law has a stern duty to perform, and when women of the underworld come before it, the jury must consider that fact."

Judge Horton also said there should be no thought of color, race, or sectionalism in the jury's deliberations.

Alabama Self-Convicted.

Not the Scottsboro Negroes but the State of Alabama was on trial at Decatur. To the regret of all fair-minded Americans, Alabama is self-convicted. There is one commonwealth in this Union where the judicial murder of innocent persons can be forced on a jury by an outside mob loudly threatening lynching.

Doubt in many minds as to the legalistic innocence of the accused was common enough before the Supreme Court of the United States set aside the earlier conviction. That doubt was strengthened when one of the alleged victims of outrage, Ruby Bates, having come to New York was persuaded by the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick to go back to Alabama and tell the truth in court. She explained under oath that the Negro youths had been "framed." That she faced possible conviction for perjury in the first trial can hardly be denied.

It is fair to say that Judge James E. Horton who presided at this trial, showed no prejudice in his rulings or in his charge to the jury. Under Alabama law the jury decides for or against the death penalty. That is why the jurymen were out 22 hours. They agreed on a guilty verdict on the first ballot, but one juror held out for life imprisonment. The accused men are being tried separately. Technically, the verdict only affected the defendant Patterson.

There is a strong probability that the other defendants will be convicted as this one was. There is a vague possibility that the Governor of the State may prevent judicial murder by his power of commutation. The Brooklyn lawyer who headed the defense, Samuel S. Leibowitz, seems to have done all that was possible for his client up to date and is likely to use tact and discretion in appeal proceedings. And, though he received many threatening letters, he appears to have been treated with courtesy and respect by the court and by the prosecuting attorney.

THE SCOTTSBORO JURY ISSUE

The question raised in the case of the Scottsboro negroes on account of the failure of the sheriff to include negroes in the venire from which a jury will be selected is not new. The supreme court of the United States, and the supreme courts of states, have passed upon it a number of times. The states of the South have not attempted, by law, to exclude negroes from jury service, for that is not allowable under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

In Alabama, as in other Southern states, the law provides for the summoning and selection of citizens for jury service. The law prescribes the qualifications of jurors. The negro is excluded in this state, not by law, but by practice, by jury commissioners and sheriffs. It is a perfectly lawful practice. There is nothing in the law of this state that would force a jury commissioner or a sheriff to select jurors from any particular racial group, and ought not to be for obvious reasons, for such a rule would be dangerous and subversive of reason and justice.

If we had a rule of law under which members of particular races could be tried only by juries composed of members of the same races, we would have an unwholesome condition; or if we had a rule of law, more limited, under which a person accused of crime could force the courts to summons as jurors members of his own race to sit in judgment upon him, the situation would be equally unwholesome from the standpoint of the administration of impartial justice in Alabama.

No such laws are to be found on the books of this state, or on the books of any other state, and it is safe to assume that the supreme court, if the court should again have to pass upon this Scottsboro case, will not pay a great deal of attention to the point raised by the attorney for the defense so far as this particular issue is concerned.

THE JURY WHICH LAUGHED.—This is the jury which condemned Haywood Patterson to the electric chair. Although the defense had completely shattered the frame-up case against the Negro boy, the jury voted that he was "guilty" in 20 minutes. Because one of the jurors held out for life imprisonment instead of electrocution, the jury remained out for more than 18 hours. One of the members of the jury was a banker, connected with the Tennessee Valley Bank, of Decatur, Ala.

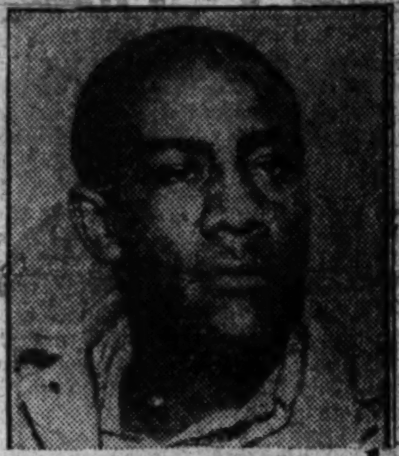
Concrete Actions Are Proposed by I.L.D.

In a stirring call to action issued today by the National Executive Committee of the International Labor Defense, Negro and white workers, intellectuals and all interested in the freedom of the Scottsboro boys and the fight against national oppression are called upon to join in a Scottsboro March to Washington. Friday, April 28, is the date suggested for the arrival of the delegations to the capitol to present to President Roosevelt the demand for the immediate liberation of the Scottsboro boys.

Conference Sunday

An important step in the mobilization of this march is the united front Emergency Conference called by the Scottsboro Unity Defense Committee for Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the Harlem Masonic Temple, 310 Lenox Ave., near 126th St. This will be a broad, city-wide conference which will have representatives from many Negro and white organizations, labor unions, churches, lodges, political groups, etc.

Sponsors of the Scottsboro Unity Defense Committee include Sherwood Anderson, Franz Boas, Countee Cullen, Waldo Frank, William M. Kelley, Dr. Kelly Miller, Louise Thompson, William L. Patterson, John L. Spivak, and others. W. C. Handy, famous composer, is honorary chairman.



Charlie Weems, Scottsboro boy, due to go on trial in Decatur on Monday.

The I.L.D. call for the Washington march and other actions follows:

To All Workers, Black and White:
To the Oppressed Negro People:
To All Willing to Struggle for the Freedom of the Scottsboro Boys and Against the Oppression of Negroes:

The murderous verdict of the all-white jury—the tool of the Southern white rulers—that pronounced the death sentence upon Haywood Patterson in Decatur, serves to destroy every remnant of the illusion that Negro people and the working class can receive justice in capitalist courts. At the same time it points out to the American workers, black and white, the clear path that they must travel in the further struggle to free the nine Scottsboro boys, free Tom Mooney and all victims of ruling class terror—the path of mass action supported by legal action, as resolutely followed by the I.L.D.

Masses Aroused

The toiling masses are aroused to the deepest indignation by the brazen decision of the Southern white ruling class that Haywood Patterson must die in the electric chair on framed-up charges of "rape." The spontaneous response of the Harlem population, nearly 30,000 protest signatures within three days, the impromptu demonstrations of remarkable militancy by 5,000 black and white workers upon the arrival of attorney Leibowitz and the reception to Mrs. Patterson, the spontaneous movement for a march upon Washington and similar actions from other centers indicate that the Scottsboro struggle has now reached the stage at which it involves millions of black and white people, revealing the tremendous scope of the mass movement.

It is through the correct policy of the I.L.D. in the Scottsboro case that the attention of the whole country and many parts of the world has been focussed upon the sore spot in the fabric of American capitalist society—the brutal social, political and economic oppression of the fourteen million American Negroes.

Forces of Reaction Gathering

Already the forces of reaction are gathering in an attempt to crush this movement, to stem this mighty upsurge. The Democratic Party, through its Tammany Hall agents among both Negroes and whites, is forming alliances for this purpose. In answer to this effort all honest elements who sincerely wish to fight for the freedom of the Scottsboro boys must unite their forces.

The I.L.D. welcomes every moral and material aid from all who wish to support the struggle, but at the same time the masses must be on their guard and fight with every means at their command against anyone who seeks to hamper and divert the clear purpose of the masses—to smash the whole system of brutal national oppression of the fourteen million Negroes in the United States—a system which breeds Scottsboro frame-ups, lynchings, and Jim Crow, and which violates their every fundamental human and democratic right.
